The Chairman said a fifth missionary was appointed last year, and the Ladies' Committee had worked nobly in obtaining funds for his support. But it is desired that yet another worker may be provided. He exhorted the men to loyalty in personal service to Christ, and perseverance in spreading among their fellows a knowledge of the great salvation.

Cheery words from Col. J. F. Morton met with evident appreciation by those who listened. He dwelt in simple terms upon the Gospel message of rest—rest from sins forgiven for Christ's sake, in a surrendered will, and in God's strong arm to lean upon.

Mr. F. Portsmouth, deputation from the London Coal Porters, gave strong personal testimony to the value of God's provision in Christ. "Lost Opportunities" was the solemn subject of some remarks by Mr. A. H. Gamble, local superintendent.

Brief addresses were given by the treasurer, Mr. F. Tite; Mr. H. Barton, missionary to South London coalies; Capt. Thom, general superintendent of the mission; Mr. T. G. Nevill, local superintendent of missionaries, and others.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

THE Divine blessing has signally rested upon the manifold efforts put forth for the temporal, spiritual, and eternal good of seafaring men by the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, which held a series of meetings all day long on Wednesday week in the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. and at Exeter Hall. Sir Geo. Williams presided over the evening gathering in the latter place.

Some points of the fifty-third report were touched upon by the secretary, Rev. G. J. Hill. While the Society has missioned about forty places round the British coasts, the port of London has necessarily claimed and received the largest share of attention. The Thames missionaries have been daily occupied in the visitation of sailors' boarding-houses, and of the shipping at the various docks and wharves. A large number of English and foreign meetings have been held with crews afloat, besides many social, conversational, and prayer meetings. A vast amount of English and foreign literature, books, Bibles, Gospels, periodicals, and tracts, have been gratuitously circulated, a goodly number of loan libraries and bags of books have been placed on outward-bound vessels; and the Bible colporteur, besides much other work, has sold 465 Bibles and Testaments to foreign seamen.

How many thousands wrecked by sin have been rescued from perishing by God's blessing on the labours of the Society can be known to Him alone; but this organisation can make its boast in the Lord and tell of in the uplifting of the fallen, the reclamation of the intemperate, and the salvation of the lost. Receipts have amounted to £2,729, and expenses to £2,724, with an adverse balance due to the bank of £722. It may be added that at the new and commodious head-quarters, in the very centre of the old Ratcliff Highway, there have been held 1,300 English and foreign Gospel services and other meetings. There is a considerable sum due upon this building, and there is nothing in hand to meet this month's salaries of missionaries.

THE TRIUMPHS OF GOD'S GRACE

Telling personal testimonies were given at this meeting by two seamen as to the abiding value of the Society's work. Sir George Williams, in his speech from the chair, declared that the work is too good for its promoters to be allowed to suffer discouragement on financial grounds. He told an interesting story for the instruction of sailors as to the blessed results of Y.M.C.A. work at Stockholm, which followed from personal dealing by one young man with another as to the possession of spiritual "hearts-ease." Christ's love for men of the sea, and the large maritime influence of England, make bold appeal for the support of this Society.

After a solo by Madame Annie Layton, Rev. Griffith Thomas, of Portman Chapel, gave reason why we should all love "Jack." As a nation of travellers, traders and islanders, sailors have a special claim upon us. The dangers of the sea, and those of the land—in a social and spiritual sense—demand Christian solicitude. Sailors' opportunities for wide witness to God's grace make their salvation important. The Gospel is a "sea-going craft" for the voyage of life; the Word of God is a reliable chart; the Holy Spirit is a true compass; the best "crew" is the Church of God; and, above all, Christ is the best Captain. All this the Society seeks to commend to sailors, and its work should be facilitated by removal of the debt.

Dr. Harry Guinness, from the depth of his heart, wished the Society well. The principle of sub-division in Christian effort tells in favour of this agency's specialised work among sailors and fishermen. Words of commendation were also spoken by Mr. H. W. Maynard, of the Union Line, and by Captain Wisely, R.E., Castle Line.

Presbyterian Missions.

THE flame of missionary enthusiasm burned brightly at the great meeting held on Tuesday, 16th inst., at Queen's Hall, in support of the foreign work of the Presbyterian Church of England. An interesting feature was an address in which Rev. T. Barclay, of Formosa, gave a vivid description of the work in that island. Generally speaking, the recent change from Chinese to Japanese rule was helpful to Christian work. The Japanese desecrated the temples, and the Chinese waited to see the vengeance of the gods fall upon them, but and so their heathen faith received a considerable shaking.

NO VENGEANCE CAME,

During the last few years the church in Formosa had passed through a baptism of fire. Christian people were murdered in cold blood by the heathen, but Mr. Barclay rejoiced to say that the missionaries did not hear of a single case where any of the Christians had given up their faith for fear of suffering.

After the Earl of Aberdeen, in the course of some stirring remarks, had declared that the recognition by a Church of her duty in the matter of missions might be regarded as an index to the level of the spirituality of that Church, Rev. F. B. Meyer, referring to the missions of India, said the chief difficulties were that the missionary belonged to the conquering race; that the success of missions had caused a temporary revival of Hinduism; and that centuries of oppression had robbed the native of manhood, grit, and strength of character. Nevertheless, the whole history of the Church had been one of victory, and there was no need for her to be discouraged as she looked abroad upon the great work that God had given her.

Rev. A. Connell, in a review of the work in India and Singapore, dwelt especially on the state of China, saying that although we speak of stagnant China—China is stagnant only in relation to progress; the country itself was a perfect beehive of life and industry. There were incredible masses, incredible ignorance, incredible vanity, incredible self-contentment, incredible conceit. It was not in a year, not by sending 10,000 missionaries to China that that vast empire was to be converted. It could only be done by creating among those people a native Christian Church; thus only would the thrill of the Gospel and the power of Jesus Christ be communicated.

Unquestionably, the speaker went on to say, the Chinese were laggards in the march of civilisation. As to the religious condition, all that the casual visitor could see was the evidence of terrorism or gross and ignorant superstition. It meets one everywhere, in all kinds and every form—the piles of idolatrous paper in the shops as one passes through the streets, the shrines where men burned or read their fortune through the divining stones. Once Mr. Connell saw a strange object resting upon trestles by the side of the road—something wrapped in coarse matting. On inquiring what it was, he was told that it was a coffin awaiting burial until the Taoist priest had decided upon a lucky day and a lucky place in which the ceremony might be carried through! The Chinese believed that the gods they dreaded could be deceived, and therefore the strangest commingling of terrorism and contempt is found; but the prevailing shadow is the shadow of fear. The idea of the love or of the goodness of God has not yet dawned upon un-Christian China.

INCENSE TO THE GODS,

The work of the Medical Mission was, Mr. Connell considered, absolutely beyond reproach. Certainly the doctors did not have to wait for their patients, nor did they need to emblazon their names upon the front door. The door was simply opened, and the patients came thronging in. Every man of the medical staff was an evangelist. Concluding with a stirring appeal for renewed interest and increased help, the speaker said that the churches would not stand by and allow mere political prestige or commercial gain to be the sole motives of influence. They must pray and work for the will and sway of Christ. He had told his story falteringly enough; it was for the audience to say whether they had heard in it, however brokenly, the accents of the voice of Jesus Christ. And if they had, should Christ and China call in vain?

Evangelical Alliance.

THE annual conversazione in connection with the Evangelical Alliance was held on Tuesday afternoon last week at Regent's Park College. After a season of social intercourse, friends assembled in the library for the meeting, at which Sir Wm. Muir presided.

Mr. E. P. Field, general secretary, gave a sketch of the past year's work, embracing the promotion of Christian union at home and abroad, and the collection of large sums to help the persecuted Stundists of Russia and the suffering Armenians in Asia Minor. The decisive attitude of the Council with reference to sacerdotalism and ritualism has been generally approved by the friends of the Alliance. An Evangelical Alliance Quarterly is shortly to take the place of the monthly magazine.

Reminiscences of early enthusiasm among many who engaged in the work of the Alliance were pleasantly recalled by Sir Wm. Muir, who rejoiced in the great amount of good at home and abroad which has marked the progress of the Alliance. It has been pleading the cause of others, and consequently finds increased need of financial support for its own varied and widespread operations.

Rev. F. B. Meyer said Christian unity has so entered into the life of the Church to-day that we do not need to re-affirm it, though it is as great a necessity as ever. When he went to India he found the principles of the Alliance part and parcel of daily life in Christian circles. On the Continent the Alliance seems to be more present as a fact, to the minds of Christians, than it is in our own land. The more we read the story of the French Revolution the more do we recognise that the in our own country was the safety-valve for England. We must re-affirm Evangelical truth as against Roman Catholicism and Ritualism. Behind modern negations, however, is a strong force active for evil. Would it not be possible for the Alliance to take for the key-note of its advance, as the new century dawns, some fresh aspect of the Divine purpose? Is it not imperative that we meet the incarnation of evil in men by presenting the re-incarnation of Jesus Christ, calling the Church to wait upon God until it is endued with power to meet the needs of our day?

UPRISING OF EVANGELICAL MOVEMENTS

A greeting from Christians in Paris was brought by Pasteur Ch. Merle-d'Aubigné. He hoped the Alliance would continue the work of Cromwell, in purifying the life of this country and making the nation great, not only in new territories, but by standing forward in the cause of righteousness. He stood as a representative of the union, in the best sense, which obtains between continental peoples and England.

Rev. R. J. Ward, L.M.S. missionary in Madras, said that the Apostle Paul's thanks to God on behalf of the Philippians practically recognised them as an Evangelical Alliance. Having the Gospel ourselves, and prizing it, we are wishful to give it to others. If England holds India, it is, in the purpose of God, that we may bring a knowledge of Christ to that country. The expansion of Britain as an empire is only to be justified in so far as it means the progress of Christianity. "We missionaries," said the speaker, "do thank God for this Alliance in all that it represents by its Week of Prayer, in a land where the people are drunken with a religious system which is evidently Satanic, root and branch."

A point of contact between the Alliance and missionary work was alluded to by Rev. Claude Field, C.M.S. missionary at Peshawur. Among Mohammedans it is no light thing to be persecuted for conscience' sake. The prayer promoted by this organisation to meet the needs of those under social ostracism for Christ's sake, is very valuable. The speaker earnestly sought to enlist Christian fellowship in this direction.

Country Towns Mission.

A STIMULATING story of unassuming but sound and vigorous evangelistic effort was unfolded at the annual meeting of the Country Towns Mission, held on Wednesday evening last at Exeter Hall. Many difficulties have had to be surmounted by the workers, not the least of which have been the apathy of the people and the sustained and well-financed efforts of aggressive sacerdotalism; but the devoted toil of the missionaries has been useful and effective, especially in house-to-house visitation, which is regarded as the backbone of the work.

With simple but zealous words of instruction and appeal, the workers aim to lead the masses to Christ. Great importance is attached to Bible reading in the homes of the people, and to inducing the hearers systematically to study the Word for themselves. It is satisfactory to note that in a number of instances local Bible Unions have been initiated; while has been established in several new centres in industrial towns. Gatherings are regularly held with excellent spiritual effect in the factories; special tent missions continue to prove a successful means of attracting the usually careless and indifferent; and at preaching stations in all kinds of out-of-the-way places thousands of poor country folk hear the Gospel message.

PERMANENT MISSION WORK

After Dr. Gritton had briefly dwelt on the great aim of the Mission—the salvation of souls—Mr. W. H. Seagram, who presided, congratulated the society on the many signs of all-round progress. At the same time it was necessary to deal with the fact that vast masses of people regarded religious privileges with entire unconcern. In view of this, the value of the open-air work was obviously great. Many, too, were reached by tract distribution.

Pithy accounts of work in various towns were given by Mr. Jabez Peaceful and other evangelists. Some of the very worst characters, confirmed drunkards and wife-beaters, ex-convicts and ne'er-do-wells, have yielded to Christ as a result of personal dealing in the street or the home. Special missions have gathered in large crowds; and numbers, particularly of young men and women, have been influenced for good, grounded in religious truth, and guided into joining some sound evangelical body. Hospitals and common lodging-houses have been visited, and even amid the forbidding surroundings of a tramps' kitchen have poured out a heart's repentant prayer. Nor have the old folk in workhouses and infirmaries been overlooked; some have openly confessed Christ in the course of homely talks on Bible subjects. The consolation of the Gospel has been taken to many of the sick and aged poor, who in varying circumstances of sorrow and suffering have gladly welcomed the workers. Indeed, the society's record is one of whole-hearted evangelistic effort in very many directions. Among the interesting incidents related was one concerning a number of young people who were brought to Christ, and all of whom were found, at a much later date, when scattered in various parts of the land, to be earnestly labouring for the Master.

WEEPING PRODIGALS

Mr. H. C. Nisbet added some helpful comment on the Scriptural title, "A Man of God," observing that such a person, as it appeared from the Bible, was held high in general repute for wise, sober and kindly counsel, as one who could be relied on to guide wandering feet into the paths of truth. Such men were needed to-day, and, in their humble fashion, such it was the aim of their missionaries to be. God used their simple testimony in the dark places of the land. They would hold strenuously to good, sound, evangelical truth, which, in spite of the most desperate attacks, would, the speaker believed, stand well in the day when modern "breadth" would be proved to be wood, hay, stubble. Prayer, offered by Major MacKinlay, brought this interesting meeting to a close.

London Female Guardian Society.

A RECORD of ninety-two years of rescuing those who have lapsed from virtue, training them in morality, religion, and useful occupations, and replacing them in respectable life or restoring them to reconciled friends—such was the burden of the annual meeting of the London Female Guardian Society, held on Wednesday last week at its Training Home, 191, High Street, Stoke Newington, London. It is known among such institutions as "a long home," because it has always been a cardinal feature with the committee that nothing less than a thorough moral and religious training, for from fifteen to eighteen months, is adequate really to chase out evil associations, and make habits of industry, thrift, morality, and religion permanent. The institution claims not only to confer on deceived women and girls temporal blessings by teaching them a useful occupation, and giving a new start and a new outfit in life, but first and foremost it aims at imparting those benefits of which eternity alone can declare the duration and worth. "It snatches the victim of vice from ruin . . . leads her to the Cross . . . . instructs her in the virtue of purity, and trains her to habits of reflection, subordination, and useful industry." Seventy new cases were admitted last year, of whom a large number were poor and young general servants and without one or both parents.

An heroic effort is made towards self-help by the laundry work done by inmates, who last year dealt with 440,000 articles, which produced £1,722 in receipts. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and, like the other speakers, deplored the deficit of £442 on the year. They pleaded not only for money help, but also for sympathisers to patronise the institution by sending household and personal linen to the laundry at the address mentioned. A pleasing feature of the gathering was the record of inmates who have married respectably, or been re-united to their families, put into suitable situations and otherwise re-started in virtuous careers, and many of whom have given ample proof of continuing to run well.

Native Races and the Liquor Traffic.

THE annual meeting of the Native Races and the Liquor Traffic United Committee was held on Wednesday last week at Grosvenor House. Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby presented the report, which expressed satisfaction at the Sirdar's proclamation in the Soudan. The Committee had also been concerned with the liquor traffic in the New Hebrides, Madagascar, and other parts. Smallness of income, however, had handicapped their efforts.

The Duke of Westminster, who presided, intimated that the object of the organisation was to prohibit the importation and sale of liquor among the backward races of the world, and when that course cannot be adopted they aim at the imposition of a high duty. For instance, at Lagos the total import of spirits in 1894 was £117,000; since then the duty had risen to 2s. a gallon, and the total had sunk to £58,399, while general trade had increased. In Dahomey—a French colony—the imports of spirits had risen from 1,862,000fr. in 1894 to 4,170,000fr. in 1896, showing the great increase where the duty was low, viz., 8d. per gallon. His Grace hoped the minimum duty might be raised by agreement of the Powers to 4s. per gallon, where prohibition was impossible. In Africa the native population was increasing, and this fact foreshadowed grave problems for the future; but, at least, they could prevent the people from being demoralised by the liquor traffic.

Sir Sidney Shippard, for many years resident in South Africa, as Attorney-General, Judge, and Administrator of Bechuanaland, spoke in hearty support of the Committee's objects and methods. Natives are like wild beasts when they take spirituous liquors. They have no power of self-restraint. The gaols become full, and the expenses of government are much increased. But without such liquor the natives of Bechuanaland are amenable to reason, they are well-behaved. and the expenses of government are much less. It is impossible to imagine more contented people than the natives of British Bechuanaland without spirituous liquor.

Dr. Alfred Hillier, speaking from large experience in South Africa, emphasised the importance of the work. He expressed a hope that committees might be formed in the United States and self-governing colonies to co-operate with the United Committee in Great Britain. He believed there was only one remedy—total prohibition; and he hoped the Committee would never admit that total prohibition of the liquor traffic among native races was an impossibility in any British colony.

After an address by Rev. James Johnson, a coloured clergyman from Lagos, Sir Wilfrid Lawson spoke briefly. He was delighted to hear of prohibition among the dark-skinned races, and he thought it was time to put in a plea for prohibition among the white races also.

Protecting the Children.

THE record of work accomplished by the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children may well occupy the earnest attention of all who are interested in the welfare of a suffering and helpless section of the community.

It is too frequently concluded that, with the progress of education and of the many modern means employed for the uplifting of the people, anything like the atrocious deeds of cruelty that formerly disgraced the nation have ceased to exist. On the contrary, there is still a vast need for the work of shielding the little ones, and by bringing their inhuman persecutors to book, creating a healthy fear of the terrors of the law.

The annual meeting of the organisation, with which the name of Rev. B. Waugh is intimately associated, was held on Wednesday afternoon last at the Mansion House. After a few introductory remarks from the Lord Mayor, who presided, in recognition of the service of the Society, Sir Sydney Waterlow expressed his regret that even in this Christian country it is between ill-treated children and their parents. During the past year over 75,000 children had been the subject of police-court proceedings.

ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY TO INTERFERE

The Bishop of Stepney, referring to old associations at Bethnal Green, testified to the soundness of the work. It was untrue, insisted the bishop, that the Society maligned the working class. On the contrary, it recognised the general and remarkable kindness with which working people treated their children. It aimed to put down cruelty among all classes—to deal with brutes for whom a little fear was a wholesome thing. That such folks could "do what they liked with their own" was an old heresy. The people of God were well warranted in interfering on behalf of the helpless little sufferers. They found that one excellent effect of warning a stony-hearted parent was to arouse his better instincts, while the tender forgiveness of the child-nature often completed the work of repentance. To take into court cases that could not be proved would bring any organisation into disrepute, but the record of Mr. Waugh's work in the percentage of well-justified charges was very good indeed.

After Mr. Charles Trevelyan, M.P., had recognised the humanitarian importance of the work, the practical character of its methods, and its value in forming and guiding public opinion, Lord Balcarres, M.P., said that many could testify as to the lasting efforts of child-cruelty in embittering the adult life. He rejoiced in the remarkable fact that many parents who had been prosecuted by the Society were now among its strongest supporters; so that, in addition to the children being protected,

THE PARENTS WERE RECLAIMED.

Too many people regarded the Society with suspicion, for the simple reason that they knew not of the atrocities to which the young were subjected. The British public still needed informing as to the extent and depth of what was certainly a national shame.

Following an address by Hon. A. Holland-Hibbert, a brief but strongly worded appeal was added by Rev. Dr. Adler, Chief Rabbi, on behalf of those parts of the country in which a "children's man" or society's inspector was required. He who bade them "Open thy mouth for the dumb, judge righteously, and plead the cause of the poor and needy"; these commands laid upon them responsibility of standing by such excellent work.

Irish Church Missions.

THE annual meeting of the Irish Church Missions Society was held a few days ago at Exeter Hall, Archdeacon Taylor, of Liverpool, presiding. This was also the Jubilee meeting. After united praise, and reading of Scripture by Canon McCormick, the clerical secretary, Rev. N. F. Duncan, read extracts from the annual report.

The former portion dealt with the more conspicuous events connected with the history of the Society, from its initiation by Rev. Alexander Dallas up to the present time, and showed how the work had progressed in spite of the vehement opposition of Rome. Reviewing the operations of the past year, the report stated that in Dublin the Scripture readers of the Society, forty-seven in number, had paid about 5,000 visits per month; that throughout the city mission hand-bills had been distributed dealing, week by week, with some special feature of the Romish controversy; and that there are now 956 children in the Society's homes and schools there. Much the same class of work had been carried on successfully in Belfast and Cork.

The event of the year in Limerick had been the remarkable success of the Medical Mission, commenced in February of last year by the Society's medical missionary, Dr. Lang. He had treated at the Mission dispensary no fewer than 3,458 separate cases, and 7,534 attendances were registered. The itinerating work had been a deeply interesting and far-reaching agency for good in connection with the rural population. The had visited 200 fairs and markets, and sold nearly 4,700 Scriptures or portions, and 3,500 books. The workers calculated that on these occasions they were brought into personal contact with as many as 30,000 Roman Catholics and 18,000 Protestants. The seven colporteurs of the affiliated Irish Church Colportage Society had sold nearly 10,000 books, more than half of which were scriptures, to Roman Catholics, and to Protestants 3,000 books, including upwards of 600 scriptures.

ITINERANT EVANGELISTS

The report further declared that there could be no doubt as to the substantial improvement in the moral and social condition of the people during the past fifty years. After an allusion to the fact that emigration had carried away to other shores no fewer than 3,800,000 of the people since the year 1851, it was stated that, though Rome's machinery had since then been increased and thoroughly disciplined, she had lost ground, there being in the year 1861 a percentage of 77·69 of the population Roman Catholic, whereas in the year 1891 the percentage stood at 75·40. Not only was Ireland now less Roman Catholic than she was, but also far more enlightened. National education had progressed by leaps and bounds, and the early work of the Irish Society had no doubt been one of the factors which brought the demand for education to the front. With the advance of education the degrading superstition that had so long possessed the people was now dying away. The year's receipts had amounted to £22,577, and the expenditure to £23,877, leaving an adverse balance of £1,300.

Addresses were delivered by the Chairman, by Revs. W. R. Mowll, M.A. (North Brixton), and Charles Askwith, M.A. (Carlisle), both of whom heartily commended the work of the Society, which they had personally witnessed in operation during a recent visit to Ireland; also by Rev. Philip B. Johnson, M.A. (superintendent of the Dublin Mission), and by Rev. F. W. Ainley, M.A. (superintendent of the Cork Mission), who each told an interesting and encouraging story of their year's labour.

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

ONE of the most distinctive religious agencies of our time celebrated its eighteenth anniversary last week. Much interest was evident in the afternoon and evening meetings held in Exeter Hall on Thursday by the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

The Bishop of Wakefield, who presided in the afternoon, remarked that people seldom consider at what great danger to life the fish upon their tables is procured. One hundred thousand men and boys are employed in sea fishery; and he hoped that the Mission would find full support in its two-fold work of caring for the souls and bodies of men. After an address by Rev. J. G. Train, details of the work were given by Dr. Grenfell; and Dr. Graham Aspland pleaded for adequate funds to carry on the mission work in Newfoundland. Lady Dodsworth presented good-conduct stripes and St. John Ambulance certificates to skippers and members of crews of mission vessels. Other addresses followed.

Mr. T. B. Miller occupied the chair in the evening. Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, chairman of the Spiritual Work Committee, spoke of last year as one of marked

PROGRESS IN CONVERSIONS AT SEA.

Steam mission ships now seem to be a necessity, and already one of these has been given to the Mission by a gentleman. Attacks upon the "earthworks" of the enemy are concentrated in the new jubilee building at Gorleston, the centre of the United Fishermen's Christian Association. It is hoped to found a similar Institute at Grimsby. These are only some of the points in a review which covered many places at home and abroad. The organisation of volunteer letter-writing to cabin boys and men at sea becomes increasingly important, and correspondents now number over 1,600. Forty-seven tons of literature have been sent to sea, and three or four hundred library boxes are in use. The Scripture Union numbers 240 members, and there are 1,430 pledged abstainers in connection with the temperance branch of the work.

The Mission now owns fifteen vessels of various kinds, employs six doctors, sends out as volunteer missionaries in the summer months, when alone special services can be held, clergymen and laymen of all evangelical denominations, and maintains active practical work in six fishing ports. Its sphere of work embraces the North Sea trawling fleets from the Straits of Dover to the Shetland Isles and Iceland, the mackerel fishers of the Channel and South West Coast of Ireland, the trawlers and herring-fishers of the west coast, and the cod-fishers of the Labrador, from Blanc Sablon in the Straits of Belle Isle to Hopedale in the north, some 600 miles of coast-line.

Touching instances of self-denial, showing the reality of work for God among the men of Grimsby, were mentioned by the superintendent of the branch there. Then came a characteristic trio by three of the North Sea fishermen, "The Bible my Mother gave to Me." A skipper from Milford Haven brought a message of thanks from the men of that port, for the provision of "a home away from home," where the souls and bodies of fisherfolk may be cared for. Great Yarmouth was represented among the testimonies; and hearty Christian greetings came from Lowestoft and Ramsgate. It was said of one of the missionaries: "He can tell us of the love of Jesus, and that's what we want."

THE "POWER OF LITTLES"

was illustrated by the Chairman in the production of a bag of 200 farthings sent by one donor to the Mission funds. Loving service to God therein represented was declared to be as worthy of acknowledgment as the Christian generosity which had prompted the gift from another friend of a fully-equipped steam trawler costing £10,600. All the effects of the introduction of steam trawling cannot be foreseen; but the energies of the Mission must in future be more largely concentrated in work upon shore. Among demands in that connection is the very necessary provision of dormitories for fisher boys, exposed as they are to peculiar temptations. With rapidly developing work, increasing expenditure, and a diminishing income from changed conditions in the fishing industry, the Mission needs the very best efforts of friends in its support.

An appeal to the eye, as well as to the ear, concluded the evening's proceedings, in a series of limelight views and animated pictures, explained by three workers of the Mission, who represented its operations in Labrador, in the North Sea, and on some of our home coasts. The story of what is done to mitigate spiritual and temporal destitution in Labrador disclosed a record of glorious missionary enthusiasm and devotion.

Foreign Aid Society.

THE arduous work of maintaining a vigorous Protestant propaganda in the dark, priest-ridden countries of Romanist Europe, must receive a considerable stimulus as a result of the annual gathering of the Foreign Aid Society, which was held on Thursday afternoon last, at the residence of Mr. H. Bosanquet-Smith, in Queen's Gate.

Rev. J. Gossett Tanner pointed out, in the course of a review of the work, that, whilst Ritualism was causing difficulty at home, there was found on the Continent a greatly increased spirit of resistance to Papal pretension. In Italy in Austria thousands had forsaken Romanism; while France was displaying a wide and deep interest in evangelical truth. Great good had been accomplished by means of colportage work, and the movement among the priests had so prospered as to arouse keen attention.

THE PRIESTHOOD WAS DISCREDITED;

Mr. Bosanquet-Smith, remarking on the satisfactory progress made by the various organisations aided by the Society, deprecated the callousness of many Christian people who remained unconcerned in the face of the great effort now in progress, which aimed to drag England back beneath the debasing influence of the Vatican, and to trample under foot the precious Protestant truth for which our forefathers had sacrificed their lives. Such people might well take a lesson from those on the Continent who were evincing so strong a desire to rescue their fellows from the thraldom of Rome.

After a brief but vigorous word from Captain the Hon. Hobart-Hampden, who urged the need for more whole-hearted and enthusiastic labour, Dr. Gritton, who had seen much of Protestant work in Belgium, testified to the beneficent character of the movement in that interesting land. To him it had been a cheering sight to witness hundreds of those who, having forsaken the errors of Romanism, had become members of evangelical bodies, toiling in the true missionary spirit, and used in proclaiming the Gospel message.

Some interesting testimonies were given by continental workers. Pasteur A. Brocher, of the Belgian Missionary Church at Liege, said that in that city Jesuit influence was remarkably strong, and a Protestant congregation necessarily had much to bear, but the spirit of his people was determined. The greatest difficulty had been experienced in obtaining proper premises, for even professed liberals went in fear of the Jesuits. The colporteurs' work had proved invaluable, and the more general reading of the Bible had resulted in a somewhat hidden but widespread SUSPICION OF THE PRIESTS.

He rejoiced most of all at the simplicity and industry of the converts, who invariably took to the workshop, mine, or factory a supply of helpful literature for sale or distribution, and who supported the work with a touching generosity.

Pasteur Ch. Merle-D'Aubigné, of the Société Centrale, Paris, after gladly recognising the help afforded to that organisation by the Foreign Aid Society, remarked that France had been the right hand of the Pope; but there, as in all parts of the Continent, the priesthood was losing ground. The speaker went on to picture in vivid terms the sad condition of France at the present day. There are 500,000 drink shops in the country, and the old legend that the French are a sober people must be abandoned. Immorality is making terrible ravages, the number of illegitimate births and of degrading crimes being steadily increasing. A lamentable sign of the times is that the criminality of young people under the age of twenty is twice as great as that of their elders. As to religion, the number of Protestant believers is terribly small compared with the total population. In every struggle on behalf of the moral welfare of the people, occupying as they do much more important positions than was formerly the case. In the defence of the Sabbath, in the temperance crusade, in the effort to suppress the half-million weekly copies of Parisian immoral literature, the Protestants are most zealous. Last year France sent out forty foreign missionaries, and raised from a mere handful of givers £40,000 for missionary work. These facts must needs encourage English sympathy, and call forth increased aid. The meeting concluded with a favourable report of evangelistic work among young men, given by M. Em. Sautter, of the Y.M.C.A. in Paris.

PROTESTANTS ARE IN THE FOREFRONT,

Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association.

THE thirty-second annual meeting of this Association was held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle a few days ago, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon presiding. A pleasing item in the programme consisted in the presentation, through the secretary, Mr. Stephen Wigney, of the sum of fifty guineas to Pastor Thomas Spurgeon for the rebuilding fund, which brought the total up to 200 guineas contributed by the Association.

Notwithstanding many drawbacks, and amid difficulties of various kinds, there has actually been an increase of districts occupied by the Association, fifty-eight having been occupied in 1898; and the sales for the year exceeded in value £6,000, representing a total of 610,612 publications. More than 6,000 services were conducted by the colporteurs.

"The Colporteurs' Prayer Union," which was formed last year, has now a goodly number enrolled, uniting in intercession for spiritual results in all districts. With the month of July "The Colporteurs' Messenger" was started to record details concerning the progress of the work, and to form a bond of union between the many friends scattered throughout the land.

Proposals are made from the Association to supply a colporteur to any district for which £45 a year is guaranteed, provided the funds will permit. The average cost of each colporteur is nearly £80, and the balance has to be met by such profits from sales as may be available. Interesting accounts followed from some of the colporteurs, amongst others from Mr. R. Fifield, of Horsell, Mr. J. Morey, of Sittingbourne, and Mr. R. Dodds, of Tewkesbury.

Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society.

NO region of the field of the world to-day is more woeful, blighted, and sorrowful than that of the Bible Lands. Once the light of the Gospel shone over these lands, but now they are enveloped in the dense night of Islam, and the name Christian has become hateful in the last degree to the Moslem. For pity's sake these desolated lands should be the most prayerful object of missionary endeavour to all evangelical churches throughout the earth. Much has been done in this direction by the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society, which held its forty-fourth annual meeting in "The Parlour" of Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon.

Rev. W. A. Essery, secretary, gave a sketch of the year's operations, showing that the strong hand of the Lord, who opens and no man shuts, has kept open door for the Gospel even in Asia Minor. Praise is due to God, who has prompted the hearts of his people to send their gifts in such measure that the aid for has been larger in amount and wider in distribution than in recent years; but, after all, not one-half has been done of what was open to the Society. Necessarily its efforts have been largely devoted to Asia Minor with its twofold need—provision for the orphanages, and support for the faithful but impoverished labourers in the Gospel.

DIRECTLY SPIRITUAL WORK

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, pointed out the wisdom of helping Armenians through existing organisations rather than through unattached individuals; and he held that it is a "better way" to confine the education of natives to the excellent institutions supported by Christian enterprise in Armenia.

Unity of heart in Christian work, as represented in the report, was one point of warm commendation by Mrs. G. Crosfield, of Reigate, late hon. secretary of the Volunteer Committee of the Friends of Armenia. Even were the 35,000 homeless ones who are still uncomforted, the "wards" of the Christian Church, if all these and the were cared for, the work would be but begun. There is a great call to the Christian Church to make use of its opportunities for spiritual work at a time when grand object-lessons have been given to the Sultan concerning the vitality of true religion, as displayed in its faithful adherents. Missionaries are overworked with cares attaching to hospital and orphanage work, in addition to their Gospel labours. Not only is money needed, but there is a great call for personal help.

MULTITUDES OF DESOLATE WOMEN

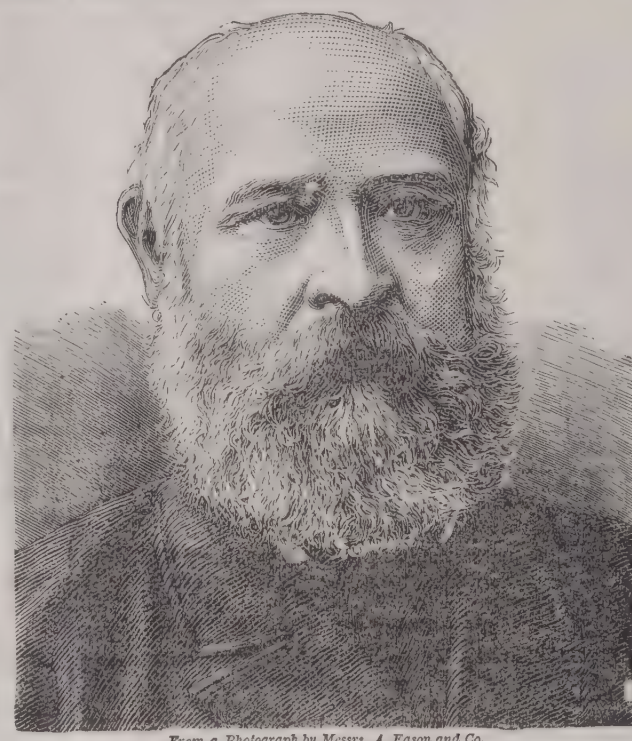
Mr. Edward C. Millard, Keswick evangelist, just home from Gospel labours in Asia Minor, emphasised the need of spiritual work in the desolated land. Interest in the things of God is replacing the indifference which once obtained among the people. It is not sufficient to feed orphaned boys and girls; but we must pray, give, and labour that the Holy Ghost may fall upon them, as it has upon many.

Another eye-witness was Rev. J. Knaggs, Stratford, who, in March last, toured in Greece, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt. To reclaim for the Lord Jesus Christ territory whence Christianity has been expelled for centuries is a noble aim; and to that end this Society should be liberally supported by Christians of all denominations.



Rev. W. M. Macphail, Presbyterian Church, Streatham, considered the very name of this Society to be an incitement to Christian gratitude, chivalry, and faith.

The Soldiers' Christian Association have furnished the lecture hall of the Wesleyan Church adjoining the Agricultural Hall as a reading and writing-room for the soldiers and sailors attending the Military Tournament. The hall will be greatly appreciated by the men. Writing material is provided free.

Death of Joseph Rabinowitz.

MANY will hear with sorrow of the death of Joseph Rabinowitz, the well-known Hebrew Christian evangelist and teacher. For some time past Mr. Rabinowitz has been in failing health, and lately his condition gave rise to much anxiety. It was hoped, however, that his life would be spared; but such was not the will of God. On Wednesday morning last week this man of world-wide name and fame, as a guide of Jews to Christ, passed peacefully away; and as the observer surveys the field, he says: "What a loss to the Jewish Mission! There is no one to replace Rabinowitz." God knows; God is able!

The story of this man is altogether singular. A lawyer in Kischineff, a scholar and philanthropist, Rabinowitz had in early life a commanding influence among his Hebrew brethren; he loved his nation, and was loved in return. About twenty-five years ago, when the Jews were suffering much from persecution in Russia, he was selected to visit Palestine for the purpose of promoting a colonisation scheme. He provided himself with guide-books for the journey, and although having no leanings towards Christianity, he yielded to the advice of someone to take a New Testament with him, as furnishing an admirable directory to the sacred places of Jerusalem and its vicinity.

From a Photograph by Messrs. A. Eason and Co.

Arrived in the land of his fathers, Mr. Rabinowitz was soon involved in serious reflections. Sitting on the brow of the Mount of Olives, he thought of the city at his feet—why its long desolation, why the scattering of its people to the ends of the earth, why the recrudescence of persecution in various lands in which Israel had found refuge? While distressed by these questions, he looked in the direction of the reputed site of the hill of Calvary, and in a flash the answers were impressed upon his heart and mind: "We have rejected the Messiah; hence our long casting off and dispersion by Jehovah." With the eye of faith he looked upon the crucified; he cried, "My Lord and my God!" and from being a Hebrew of the Hebrews, he became an Israelite of the New Covenant, a disciple of Jesus of Nazareth.

Taking the New Testament from his pocket, he found it a guide-book in a sense of which he had not dreamed. He read the first passage that met his eye: "I am the Vine, ye are the branches . . . without Me ye can do nothing." In his own words: "I saw it in the twinkling of an eye. Our Jewish bankers, with their millions of gold, can do nothing for us; our scholars and statesmen, with all their wisdom, can do nothing for us; our colonisation societies, with all their influence and capital, can do nothing for us; our only hope is in our brother Jesus, whom we crucified, and whom God raised up and set at his own right hand. 'Without Him we can do nothing.'"

Returning to Russia, Mr. Rabinowitz boldly announced, far and wide, his acceptance of Jesus Christ as his Saviour and Lord. In the synagogue and through the press he spoke with plainness and vigour, and at length persecution and obloquy were meted out to him in return. Familiar with the letter of Scripture, and now enlightened so as to discern its inner spirit, the new believer in Christ waxed bolder and stronger, and attracted the attention of many who were seeking the good of Israel.

The significance of his conversion and the importance of his work were almost at once detected by the late Professor Franz Delitzsch, who spoke of the man as "a star in the firmament of his people's history," and of the movement in South Russia as "a prelude of the end," when the remnant of Israel should return unto the Lord. To the surprise of many the Government gave permission for the erection of a synagogue in which this remarkable man could preach regularly, and to serve as a home and centre of his varied undertakings.

From year to year these have grown, and Somerville Hall and its prophet have a place in the prayers of many who remember Zion. And not only have the spoken discourses been greatly blessed, but the printed page has gone far and wide, and been the means of implanting Gospel truth in many Jewish hearts. Baptised in Berlin in 1884, Rabinowitz made continual progress in grace and in the knowledge of Christ. It is a joy to know that he has never lacked friends among British Christians, who now praise God for his testimony, and invoke his protecting and providing care upon the mourning family.

Home of Industry.

THE monthly meeting last Wednesday evening was a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The chief address was given by "a man sent from God" with a message—"The Life of John the Baptist as a Model Worker." Prayer after prayer ascended, mingled with praise and Holy Ghost breathings. These monthly meetings all through the winter have been times of blessing, and have stimulated workers to fresh efforts, resulting in the salvation of souls in our Mission. Two brethren spoke most encouragingly of the open doors in China.

One of these friends had been in north China for twenty-four years, the other in a southern province as a medical missionary for ten years. Both spoke well of the Chinese, and encouraged God's people to ask for great things.

Ere the meeting closed, there was prayed for blessing on Dr Baedeker, about to visit Austria and Bohemia. A cablegram from Mr Merry told of a safe voyage, and the sixty children well. What an exchange for them!—from former misery and neglect, to be the recipients of loving care and instructed in the ways of the Lord.

Some of them have been rescued by kindred spirits, who, whilst confiding them to our care, have continued in prayer, and sought to gather the means which gives them their start in life.

"Lacked ye anything?" Our reply is "Nothing, Lord," His unfailing bounty has surpassed our expectations.

"Not unto us, but unto thy name be the glory."

Annie Macpherson.

29, Bethnal Green Road.

A Warning reaches us from the secretary of the Bath Y.M.C.A. against an ex-Roman Catholic priest named C. de Latte, who is described as quite unworthy of help in any way.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

What is Life?

A little crib beside the bed,
A little face above the spread,
A little frock behind the door,
A little shoe upon the floor.
A little lad with dark brown hair,
A little blue-eyed face and fair;
A little lane that leads to school,
A little pencil, slate, and rule.
A little blithesome, winsome maid,
A little hand within is laid;
A little cottage, acres four,
A little old-time household store.
A little family gathered round,
A little turf-heaped tear-dewed mound;
A little added to the soil,
A little rest from hardest toil.
A little silver in his hair,
A little stool and easy chair,
A little night of earth-lit gloom,
A little cortège to the tomb. —Selected.

A Flood in Japan.

Rev. George P. Pierson, of Sapporo, Hokkaido, Japan, in a letter intended to interest young people in the spread of the Gospel in that wonderful land, says:—

Thirty years ago the Ainu, an old race, had well-nigh possession in this large island of Hokkaido. Now they are dying out. They are a fine-looking set of men, with long black beards, good-natured and always polite. The only Ainu sentence I know means, "I do not understand Ainu." That is a rather limited capital. But when I talk to them, we get along all right in Japanese, which most of the younger men and many women use freely.

The lowlands were visited by destructive floods last year. Shortly after, I visited one of our self-supporting churches there. Among the colonists is a strong Christian, Mr. Sakamoto, who gave up political prospects in the south and came to this colony. On the night of the flood, when the rapidly rising waters became too high to occupy lower floors in their new house, the family went to the attic for refuge. They were not the only occupants; rats sought security in the same place, and afterwards ate through the children's best dresses, which had been stored there for safety. The family listened to the hard rain on the roof, the gurgling of the waters outside, and the occasional shouting of the men. Morning came and the storm cleared away. They looked out from the broken roof upon a great flood that was to carry away 90 per cent. of the harvest they had expected soon to reap. Mr. Sakamoto said he thought of Noah and the ark, especially as the outcoming sun made a rainbow of promise for them.

On Sunday, the church being damaged, the people held a service in the stony bed of a stream on higher land. They were sad at heart at the prospect of the winter cold and snow, with no grain or fruit laid by. But they thought of God and took courage. Late one evening after this, I went to the house where the regular prayer-meeting was being held. As I approached, I heard them singing a favourite hymn in Japan, "God is Love." Mr. Sakamoto thought he had been sent, as Joseph was, to be a deliverer. He went to Tokyo, and through his efforts in part, and his acquaintance with the Home Minister, over half a million yen were secured for the Hokkaido relief.

Sapporo has proportionately more Christians than any other city in Japan, and yet only one person out of forty is a Christian. When I go off on a trip nine persons out of ten I meet do not know about Christ. I met a fisherman recently who had heard the Gospel about fifteen years ago, and not once since until I spoke to him. An old man in my hotel asked me how it was that other nations had known about God and the Japanese had not. I might have answered: "Because 300 years ago the Japanese Government put to death thousands of Christians in the attempt to drive out their teaching." But that is not the whole reason. To-day you can preach here almost as freely as anywhere.

A few months ago, an evangelist of the Canadian Methodist Church closed a preaching place because of an assault, but in that same place last month an audience of 500 people listened quietly to preaching in a theatre meeting. The reason why only one person out of 1,000 in Japan is a Christian is—what? Much of the fault lies with us. I answered the old man, "It is largely because Western nations have not done their duty."

A Christian Schoolgirl in China.

A little girl connected with the American Methodist Mission in China has sent to friends in this country the following account of what they do in their school on each day:—

"At 6 a.m. We get up.
"At 7 a.m. Eat our rice.
"At 8 a.m. Pray alone in our room.
"At 8.30 a.m. Go into school.
"At 11 a.m. Write characters.
"At 11.30 a.m. Eat our lunch.
"At 1 p.m. Go into our school.
"At 3 p.m. Sew on our clothes.
"At 4 p.m. Eat our rice.
"At 5.15 p.m. Sing.
"At 6 p.m. Study.
"At 8.30 p.m. Go to sleep.

"I have read The Christian Three Character Classic, the Catechism, and St. Matthew, also six Chinese classics. I thank you because you spend so much money and heart for me. I am thirteen years old.—Your loving friend, Wen Hing."

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 177).

1. What does Jesus say we are to seek first of all? (Matt. v-vii.).

2. In the eighth chapter of Proverbs what promise does God make to those who seek Him?

3. What was Mary looking for when Jesus said, "Whom seekest thou?" (John xviii.-xxi.)

4. Give the name of a man who fled away when God came to seek for him. Why was he afraid? (Genesis.)

5. In Luke (xii.-xvi) you will find the story of a man and another of a woman who had lost something. What had they lost, and did they find it?

6. Who were the foreigners who came seeking for Jesus, and did they succeed in finding Him? (John x. xv.)

7. What are the names of the following people whom Jesus sought?

(a) Two fishermen, (b) a publican, (c) two sorrowing sisters, (d) three sleeping disciples, (e) eleven lonely disciples.

8. Relate the circumstances under which the following people sought Jesus, and give book and chapter.

(a) A palsied man, (b) some terrified men in a storm, (c) some mothers, (d) armed soldiers, (e) a rich young man, (f) an anxious father.

(Children under ten, do any three; under thirteen, any five).

No. 176.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Jennie Almond, Violet Ashworth*, Dora and Ralph Aldwinckle.

B—Herbert Braddon, Mabel Birney, Mabel Bailey, Robert Beveridge, Lily*, Stanley and Gordon Boxer, Louis Berthé, Lucienne Brabandes, Henriette Bardot, Ernestine Buhl.

C—Brereton and Kathleen* Code, Ida Cole, Lydia Cleary, Lily Church*, Edith Clarence, Edith Chevalier, K. Carey-Brenton, Augusta Clark, Ethel Craigie, Anna Chanyen, Lois Craven*, Eleanor Chance, Dorothy Cooper, Oscar and Guy Cross, Edith Corrie*, Walter, Jessie* and Maggie* Carter, Daisy Clarke, Mabel Cole.

D—Kitty, Ivy and Violet Donaldson-Selby, Lucy, Mai and Violet Davidson, Ralph Daintree, Nellie Dowsett*, Hilda, Constance, Elizabeth and George Drayson, Marie Denizot.

F—Mabel and Vincent Fleet, Janet Fawkes*, Jeanne Faucon, Louise Fillol.

G—Clarice and Bertie Gale, Mary Gover, Harry Gribble, Irene and Kathleen Gough.

H—F. Harding, Eric and M. J. Hill, Beatrice Hastings, Jennie Holmes*, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewer, Beatrice Harland*, John Hay, Ruth Hinder, Ella Hake, Rose Hamilton, Georgette Hoffmann, Netta and Gladys Hussey, Edith Harvey.

I—Isabel and Ami Inglis, Daisy Iredell.

J—Emily Jones, Betty Jacobs.

K—Nellie Keeley, Stanley, Max and Eva Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Lily Kinvig.

L—Margaret Lee, Gertrude Lambert*, E. and Nellie Lockhart, Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Blanche Lindup*.

M—F. Mackenzie*, Charlotte Millar*, Dora Muir*, Kathleen McClure, Margaret, Dorothy and Daniel Morris, Lois Mewburn, Mabelle Mounstephen, O. L., Lewis, Arthur and Grace Morice, Hedley Meader*.

N—H. and Mary Neligan, Edith Nash.

O—Arabella Onslow.

P—Kathleen Pincott, Mary Plumb*, Lilian Pearson*, Lizzie Pratt*, Daisy Phillips, Mildred, Evelyn and Hattie Peters, Alice Palmer, Walter Perryman, Ruth Pledger*, Ernest Pearce.

R—Evelyn Rashley, Alice Reid, Winifred Roberts, Kate Rosenbloom, Gwennie Ravenhill, Cyril and Gordon Roberts.

S—Cicely and Marjorie Sherbrooke, Annie Shelley, Laura Standen, Amy, Dryll, and F. Stileman, Nannie Sturrock*, Solomon Stockfish, Esther Simmons, Mervyn, Wilfred, Undine*, Gladys Llewellyn, Eric and Gwendoline* Shaw, Jessie and Ethel Snowball, H. Stalker, Joseph Stephens, Lucy Soltan, Evelyn Shaw, Marie Sleigh, Bessie Symes.

T—Derwent and A. P. Turnbull, Alice and Frank Thompson, Olive Taylor*.

V—May and Edwin Vickers.

W—Dorothy White, Digby Watson, Agatha Ward, Pringle Wilson*, Thomas and Robert Weddell.

Y—Gladys Young.

No. 175.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Ambrose Adams, John Adams, Enderby Anderson, Muriel Annesley, Gladys Allan, Victor Armstrong, Percy Allen, William Aston.

B—Eva Browne, Mary and Suzette Beck, Dorothy Butcher, Ashley Bowker, May Barker, Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Buhl, Dorothy Benson, Mary Bryant, Stanley and Lily Boxer, Robert Browne, Ella Berryman, Alcina and Leonard Bentall, Teresa, Frank, Avory, and Lilian Blackie, Dorothy Billings, Florence Blackman, Douglas and Robert Beveridge, Mabel Bailey*, Mabel Birney, Alan, Charlie, and Maggie Banks, George and Colin Brown, Evelyn Barrett, Edith Badham, Dorothy Berry, Edith and James Barker, Rhoda Braithwaite, Louis Berthé, Dorothy and Walter Bass, Allen, Massy, and Conyers Baker.

C—Dorothy Clarke, Nellie Crawford, Dora and Daisy Clarke, Richard Cornthwaite, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, Ethel Craigie, Millicent and Cicely Craven, Joan Clarke, G. B. and Kathleen Code, Nora Clarke, Walter Carter, Willie Charles, Edith and Dora Corrie, Bessie Cheale, Maggie* and Jessie* Carter, Isabel Candlin, Daisy Clarke, Duncan Campbell, Henry Cheney, Dorothy Cooper, Alice Crang.

D—Agnes Darke, Dorothy and Marjory Dyks, William Dilly, Ernest Davies, Marie Denizot, Faith and Phyllis Duncan, Violet and Mai Davidson, Constance Devenish-Meares, Blossom Davis Vera Dickinson.

E—Helen Eardley-Wilmot.

F—Janet Fawkes, Constance Furlong, Jeanne Faucon, K. M. Fausset, James and Marian Freegard, Helen Forbes, F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Bessie and Mary* Freeman, Nessie and Muriel Fry, Maggie and Flossy Fullarton, Kate, Maggie, Mabel and Eva Fletcher.

G—Margaret, Jack, Dorothy, Edith and Stuart Gray, Harry Gribble, Henry Gibson, Thos. Groombridge, Edith Grieve, Alfred Gibbs, Dorothy Garfit, Alfred, Daisy, Mary and Ethel Greenacre, Gracie Grout, Aileen Gardner, Daisy, Hedley and Ernest George, Evelyn Giddings, Nancy and Dorothy Grove, Mary Glass.

H—Theodora Hill, Edith and Winifred Harvey, Ella Hake, Gladys and Netta Hussey, Freda Hunton, Florence, Stanley, Julyan and Francie Hoyte, Violet Holford, Dorothy Harris, Georgette Hoffmann, May Handasyde, Helen Hunter, Ruth Harrison, Edith Holmes, Bessie Hope, Kathleen and Rosy Hamilton, Ethel Hutchings, Charlie and Ronald Haig.

I—Daisy Iredell, Nellie Irving*, Isabel and Ami Inglis.

J—Sinclair Jackson, Lizzie Johnstone, Norman and Kate Johns.

K—Dorothy, Grace and Philippa Kerr, Agnes*, Willie, Alex., Thomas and Isa Kay, Lily Kinvig, Flossie Key, Jeanie Kyle.

L—A. D. Light, E. and Nellie Lockhart, Arthur Lamb, James, E., Harry, Linda and Norah Lowe, Grahame and Murray Lloyd, Carrie Livingstone-Learmouth, Ethel Larwell, Elsie and Guinifred Leigh, Hannah Lovell, Harriet Lynham.

M—W. C. Mallinson*, Lois Mewburn, Dorothy, Margaret and Daniel Morris, Christina Marshall*, Ian and Eliza McGregor, Harry and Bruce Malaher, L. R. McGregor, Mildred Morgan, Owen Morice*, Margaret Macphee, Mabelle Mounstephen, Bella Mack, Marie Meek, Winifred and Daisy Martin, Bessie Millar, Evelyn and Howard Moir, Hilda Medill, Dora Marples, Annie Macnair, Nellie, Annie and Daisy Mackenzie, Frank and Charles Medcalf, Ethel Mackenzie.

N—Maude and Amy Nottage, Edith and Ernest Nash, John, Cissy and P. Nicholson, Herbert Newton.

O—Benjamin Onions, Eva and Maude Oakes, Sidney Oliver.

P—Winnie Page, Isabel and Gladys Phipps, Rhoda Partridge, Gordon and Leo Pibel, Daisy Phillips, Walter Perryman, John Pearce, May and Vera Petrides, Ruth Patient, Winifred, Ada, Willie and Jessie Palmer, Edith Purkiss, Laura Percy.

R—Gussie and Marion Roach, May Reed, Sydney Robertson, Gwennie Ravenhill, Gordon Roberts, Isabel, Jessie, and Elmina Roe.

S—Mabel Stembridge, Maudie, Arthur and J. Speed, Hilda Schaeffer, Violet and C. R. Salvesen, Nannie Sturrock, Ivy, Rosetta and Muriel Sherwin, Gwendoline*, Gladys and Eric Shaw, Bertha Stocker, Florrie Smith, Edgar Stocker, Mary de Spiganovicz, D. D. and T. M. Stanier, Evelyn Shaw, Janey Sinclair, Herbert Stuart, McLeod Staight, John Smith, Susie and E. Sutton, Bessie Scantlebury, Elsie Siark, Ronald Studd.

T—Herbert Tomkins, John Thomson, Olive Taylor*, Olive Trench, Alice Truelove, Frank and Alice* Thompson, Ethel Taylor*, Eileen Tomlinson, Frances Trotter, Nannie Tibbits, Marjorie Tracey, Harry Thompson, G. Taylor.

U—Queenie Upton.

V—May Vickers, Kenneth Vining, Dorothy Vigers.

W—Ruby and Edith Wilkins, Myra Webb, Sydney Wallace, Connie Wood, Dorothy Woodforde, James Wilson, Helen and Fred Webb, Amy and Charles Wingrave, Leonard Wall, F. and Madge, Wilson, Charles Williams, Evelyn Wood, Violet, Lissa, Arthur and Louisa Walker, Sydney Wisdom, Lilian and G. Willoughby.

Y—Maurice, Gladys, and Gwendoline Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

Prize Competition.—Queenie and Llwellyn Dale (India), 1st Certificate, Div. III. Eliza Scott (Canada), 2nd Certificate, Div. III. Jean Scott, 2nd Certificate, Div. IV.

No. 171—Ivan St. George. No. 173—Nettie*, Kate*, Willie* and Ina* Thomson.

Personal.

Many thanks for the kind little notes which have been sent acknowledging prizes and certificates. There are so many, it is impossible to answer all personally.

Louisa Walker.—Thank you very much for your long and interesting letter, and also for the enclosure.

Ethel Larwill.—I am glad to welcome you back as a "Searcher," and hope you are better.

Fan Trotter.—Thank you for your letter. I hope you will persevere and succeed with your music.

Norah Lowe.—I am sorry you have been ill, and hope your knee will soon be better. Did you have an accident?

Uncle Tom's Cot—M. and S.H., 2s. 6d.; A.S.B.L., 1s. 2d.; S.A.C., 2d.; D.B., 6d.; Collected, L.W., 10s. 9d.; S. W. and R.F.H., 2s.; Leytonstone, 1s.; per H.L.B., 2s. 6d.; F. and F., 6d.; Dawkee, 1s.; Children, Shilow Hall, 6s. 9d.—Total, £1 8s. 10d.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Pershore and neighbourhood, to May 25 Leominster, May 26; Malvern, May 27-28; Derby, June 1, 2 Hawkestone Hall, June 6; Mr. J. S. Tyler, West Horsley, May 27-30; Worthing, June 4; Ventnor, June 11, 12; St. Lawrence, June 13-15; Mr. Hankinson, Homerton, May 30; Guildford, June 3, 4; Epping, June 6; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Hemyock, Devon; Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Horsmonden, Kent; Messrs. Hewlett and Harrison, with caravan, Rusper, Sussex, to May 25; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Wetheringsett.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending June 3.

Sun., May 28	Acts v.	1-16	Thurs., June 1	Acts vii.	1-16
Mon., „ 29	„ v.	17-32	Fri., „ 2	„ vii.	17-29
Tues., „ 30	„ v.	33-42	Sat., „ 3	„ vii.	30-43
Wed., „ 31	„ vi.	1-15

Dunoon Training College.

A year ago the founder and principal of Dunoon College, Rev. Duncan McGregor (pastor of Dunoon Baptist Church), met with a serious accident, which for a time was expected to have a fatal termination. He slowly rallied, however, and by October was able to take up his duties to some extent. Having gradually gained strength, Mr. McGregor has resumed his work, and a series of meetings was recently held in thanksgiving for his recovery.

At the morning meeting, the Principal gave an account of the way he had been led to take up the work, not because he desired it or felt himself specially fitted for it, but because it had been forced on him by circumstances in which he could not fail to see the leading hand of God. The work had always been carried on in the spirit of dependence on God for all that was needed, and he rejoiced that he had been spared to continue his work, and that he had been enabled to train so many young men for work for the Lord. The key-note of the meetings was thankfulness to God for his great mercy.

Obituary.

MRS. GRUNDY, OF KUMAON.

NEWS has been received this week of the death by consumption of Sister Jivee Bai, wife of Mr. Ishwar Das (F. Grundy), of the Indian Christian Realm Mission. She latterly laboured among the hill people in a hitherto unevangelised part of Kumaon, and God used her there in bringing souls to Himself. She was a native of Gujarat, and her husband of Croydon. Twelve years ago, she left the Ahmedabad Government College to share the life and labours of Ishwar Das, and of her missionary career all of the following portion of Paul's experiences might be quoted:—"In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by her own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness." Prayer is asked for the little ones left with the sorrowing father.

REV. PREBENDARY DANIEL MOORE.

Rev. Prebendary Daniel Moore has just gone in to see the King in his beauty, at the ripe age of ninety. It was at Camden Church, Camberwell, where Mr. Ruskin attended this gifted preacher's ministry.

To follow such a pulpit orator as the famous Canon Melvill was a great distinction, and for twenty years he was one of the most popular and powerful preachers in South London. From 1856 to about three years ago he was the Golden Lecturer at St. Margaret's, Lothbury. When, in 1865, Bishop Tait secured him for Holy Trinity Church, Paddington, he soon filled an empty church. He was ultimately appointed Chaplain in Ordinary to Her Majesty; and in 1880 Bishop Jackson gave him a prebendal stall in St. Paul's Cathedral.

Some of his most useful sermons were preached before the University of Cambridge, where, for three years, he was Select Preacher. Since 1895 he had been almost entirely laid aside with paralysis.

REV. THOMAS RUDD, B.A.

For thirty-five years the late Rev. Thomas Rudd, B.A., was head master of the School for the Sons of Congregational Ministers. The home of the School at the time of his appointment, in 1859, was at Lewisham, and for many years Mr. Rudd was a valued deacon of the Church under the ministry of Rev. Morlais Jones.

In 1884 the School was removed to Caterham, where a handsome pile of buildings had been erected. A number of "old boys" held their late head master in much esteem, as the cheque for £105 presented to him on his retirement in 1884 testified. Other public testimonials had been received by Mr. Rudd.

In 1892 failure of health necessitated a voyage to the Cape, but the return of robust health was not permanently secured. He suffered from repeated attacks of paralysis, and recently succumbed to one of them. He was a graduate of the London University.

DR. JOHN MOIR, EDINBURGH.

The death is announced of Dr. John Moir, at the ripe age of 91. He was seven years old when the news of the Battle of Waterloo rang through Europe, but he had an additional good reason for remembering the stirring times amid which he was born, for it was in the French prison of Verdun that he first saw the light. There his father, a naval surgeon, taken prisoner during the Napoleonic wars, was joined by his mother, and they remained in captivity until such time as an exchange could be effected. In Edinburgh, where his father afterwards settled down to practise, most of Dr. Moir's studies were undertaken, and in 1828 he graduated as Doctor of Medicine. For many years he enjoyed an extensive and high-class practice in the city, and retained a few of his patients until some months before his death. Dr. Moir was a leading member of the Obstetrical Society, of which he was at one time president—a position he had also held in the Medico-Chirurgical Society and the Royal College of Physicians, of which he was the father. In many philanthropical institutions he was warmly interested, notably the Royal Infirmary, Chalmers Hospital, and the Medical Missionary Society, of which he was the only surviving original member. For more than fifty years he was an elder in Free St. Andrew's congregation, and to his efforts largely was due the transference of the Church to Drumsheugh Gardens. Dr. Moir was an earnest advocate of the tithe principle in the support of Gospel work; and whenever that subject was suggested in our pages, letters of encouragement and supplying reasons for systematic giving came from him. Dr. Moir, who was twice married, is survived by a widow, two sons, and two daughters. The names of his sons are familiar to all who take an interest in mission work in Central Africa.

Open-Air Preaching in Cork.

AT a recent meeting of the Cork County Council the following resolution was adopted unanimously:—"That this Council pass a bye-law under Section 16, Local Government (Ireland) Act, prohibiting street preaching in this county, and directing the solicitors to this Council to take all proper legal steps to have said bye-law carried into effect."

On this an Irish correspondent writes to us:—"Cork people, since Wesley's time, have been notorious in their hostility to the street preachers. It is also remarkable that in Cork Wesley and subsequent open-air workers have had splendid success in casting the Gospel net. Although at times compelled to fly for their lives from hostile crowds, the preachers invariably returned to the work and gradually wore down the opposition, thus gaining repeated victories for liberty and freedom of speech. Above all, bright gems were picked up here and there, almost from the gutter, that have shone brilliantly in Ireland for a few years, and will shine as the stars for ever and ever. Ireland at present is a land of 'open doors;' the common people hear the Word gladly, and one fears lest other counties may follow the lead of Cork in closing these doors."

The O.A.M. at Epsom Races.

DEAR SIR,—This great carnival is once more upon us, and from Sunday, May 28, until Friday, June 2, will present an opportunity for Christian service not to be excelled in all England. For more than forty years the Open-Air Mission has laboured in this difficult field. Our company this year will probably exceed sixty evangelists, including the fine male choir of the London City Mission, and will be employed in arduous toil every day on and around the race-course, preaching, singing, warning, pleading, and distributing vast quantities of specially-prepared literature.

May I plead for immediate and liberal help? We need at least £100 towards the expenses, which, in conjunction with Miss Alexander, we incur. Not least in importance is the need for earnest prayer that many may be saved and God may be abundantly glorified. — Yours sincerely, FRANK COCKREM, Secretary,

Open-Air Mission, 11, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C.

The Y.M.C.A.

ON June 1, the handsome new building of the Bedford Association, which has been erected in a central position opposite the Modern School, will be formally opened by Sir George Williams.

In connection with the extensive effort being put forth by the committee of the Anglo-American Y.M.C.A. of Paris, Mr. James Forrester Anderson, the hon. sec., is now in London. Communications may be addressed, 104, Hereford Road, Bayswater, W.

The Totterdown (Bristol) Association is proceeding with the erection of a new building, which, including furnishing, will cost £2,400. Of this sum £1,100 is still required. The Mayor of Bristol occupied the chair at a meeting recently held in support of the scheme.

Letters to the Editor.

"The Lord Reigneth."

DEAR SIR,—The prayers of the Lord's people for Paris are evidently being answered—there is a growing spirit of prayerfulness and unity which betokens subjection to the Lord's way and trust in Him. Several are beginning to see "the Lord reigneth," and that in proportion as we are in communion with Him, we must be "in all these things more than conquerors." As "Head over all things," He is given "to the Church which is his body." In coming to England, one feels the need of much prayer. So many in their zeal for truth seem to forget that a fleshly zeal is the greatest hindrance of the work of God.

It is so easy to detect false doctrine in others, and yet all the while to scatter the sheep instead of "restoring such an one" "in the spirit of meekness." I am hoping to be in the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, Sunday, May 28, and in June and July, and would be thankful for prayer for that very worldly neighbourhood.

May I mention that believers' meetings have been going on every Friday at 8 for many years, and that, waiting "only on God," we have never once failed to realise his presence and blessing?—Yours for Christ's sake,

RADSTOCK.

Mayfield, Woolston, Hants.

Leased-Out Convicts in the Southern United States.

SIR,—In a letter in THE CHRISTIAN of May 18 from Mr. C. Cook, he suggests that the Howard Association should take up the subject of the horrible treatment of many negroes in the leased-out convict gangs of some of the Southern States of America. If he had read the last annual report of the Association (issued in October, 1898), he would have seen that the committee have already been in correspondence on this matter with the governors, the press, and the philanthropists of all the Southern and some of the Northern States, and that in consequence a greatly increased amount of public attention has been directed to this subject on both sides of the Atlantic.

The Howard Association has received from persons of both races in America grateful acknowledgments of the utility and influence of its efforts, and during the present year it has circulated thousands of papers on the subject, and has procured much notice of the question in American journals.

But two immense difficulties in the way of a more humane treatment of the coloured race by the whites consist: firstly, in the very general apathy of the American churches towards the negro; and, secondly, in the helplessness and ignorance of the coloured people as a whole. They seem powerless to combine for mutual help. As to the attitude of the churches, what more typical example could be given than the sadly prejudiced utterances of the noted Southern evangelist and "revival preacher," Sam Jones, as reported in Mr. R. C. Morgan's interesting communication to THE CHRISTIAN of April 20?

However, some progress is being made in the South, both in reference to the lease system and also as to a growing expression of disapproval of the atrociously savage lynchings which from time to time disgrace that portion in particular of the United States. When the American churches do their duty in this direction, they can hardly fail to secure a much more rapid improvement. And even the British churches might usefully stimulate their American brethren in this matter.—Yours respectfully, WILLIAM TALLACK.

Howard Association, 5, Bishopsgate-st., Without, London, E.C.

The Working Men's Mission.—The work carried on in Collingwood Street, "New Cut," continues to prosper. A "parlour meeting" has been started for crippled children, and the recent meetings in connection with the extensive children's work were times of much blessing.

Evangelistic.

Awakening in Ireland.

A REMARKABLE religious awakening is going on in Portadown. It commenced about a month ago in connection with a fortnight's Gospel Mission, conducted in the Methodist Church by Mr. Billy Spence of Belfast. During that time the whole town was moved as it has not been for years, and night after night there were not only overcrowded congregations, but many professed conversions. Since then the meetings have been kept up daily by the local ministers, who hold dinner-hour services in the open-air for the workers in factories, and also open-air services in the evenings, followed by a march through the streets with a singing band. The work is spreading and deepening, and the hope is expressed that the summer of 1899 may witness a similar manifestation of God's Holy Spirit to that which was experienced in 1859.

Miss Glover at Plumstead.

MAY I add to what has already appeared in your paper concerning Miss Glover's ten days' evangelistic services at the Cage Lane Mission Hall, Plumstead. It is very long since there has been such an awakening in the mission, the character of which was in some way indicated at the closing meeting on Monday evening, the 15th inst. After Miss Glover had delivered a soul-stirring address, between twenty and thirty rose and testified that they had received special blessing during the mission. Many of the testimonies were from those converted during the special services. It was a most impressive and helpful meeting.

There were two marked characteristics about the young evangelist which were productive of good results—viz., the lack of excitement and the untiring patience displayed during the after-meetings. She fully realised that the work was the Lord's; and we had the pleasure of seeing one after another rise from the audience and walk into the inquiry room before the assembled company. The workers in connection with the Mission have been greatly stirred, and no one can estimate what good will result from the Mission.

(Mrs.) Kate Anderson.

The Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

PROBABLY never have the churches of a great city banded themselves together in a spirit of more perfect unanimity than is being manifested in Glasgow at the present time, in connection with the evangelistic campaign planned for next winter. The fire and enthusiasm of the central committee have now spread into all the nine districts, and the same interest and expectation is being shown over the whole area.

A very large number of ministers of all denominations have agreed to take part, and engagements have been fixed with a good many evangelists, while negotiations with others are still in progress. Mr. D. L. Moody has not yet replied to the invitation, but strong hopes are entertained that he may see his way to come.

According to present arrangements, the work will be preceded by gatherings of Christian people—at different centres over the whole city and district—during the first fortnight of October, for the deepening of spiritual life, and for united waiting upon God for blessing on the work. These will be followed by communion services in at least the Presbyterian churches on Sabbath, the 15th, and thereafter the aggressive effort will be immediately and systematically proceeded with.

Gospel Work in South Wales.

IT is some time since we sent you word of the mission work in this part of the country, but we feel sure Wales has a warm place in the hearts of the Lord's people. It will encourage further prayer and effort if a little of what is being done is made known. Some of God's chosen servants have been helping us in the work. Their names include Mr. George Dent, of Rev. F. B. Meyer's Church and Cheshunt College; Evang. R. Parson, of Sudbrook; Mr. Frank Penfold, of Brighton; Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, and Mr. Thomas Payne. These and others have all visited the Gospel Tent Mission, and their earnest addresses have been owned of God in the blessing to his people and the conversion of sinners. Though the effects of the past terrible strike are still felt among us, and will be for some time to come, yet the meetings have been well sustained. Some seventeen meetings weekly are held in Barry Dock alone, including children's services and mothers' meetings, whilst Gospel meetings are held nightly. At Brynmawr blessing has been given. One poor fellow who had tramped into the town, after serving a term in prison, was cared for until work could be found. A.B., who was a notorious character and purposed committing suicide, was saved on his way to the water three years ago. He can now be seen praising God for his wonderful salvation with others who had been saved from terrible depths. We want to put up as soon as possible a new tent for Barry Dock—the old one is hopelessly destroyed. Sailors are easily attracted inside a tent who will not even come to a mission hall. The summer is upon us, and we ought to start the latest in June. £45 is wanted.

Gerald R. Coultas,
General Superintendent.
Mission House, Barry Dock, South Wales.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith, Evangelisation Society, has held a second mission at Shaftesbury, and is now conducting a tent mission at East Kenoyle, Wilts.

Mr. James Sprunt has been conducting a mission at Cootham, Sussex. Lectures were given on "The Tabernacle," illustrated by coloured diagrams and a beautiful model. Believers were blessed, and some professed conversion. F. M.

Mr. B. W. Jackson, evangelist, of Belfast, has conducted two weeks' evangelistic services in Clonavon Congregational Church, Ballymena, with encouraging results. There was a good attendance throughout. The Gospel was preached with simplicity, earnestness, and power.

A twenty days' mission has been conducted by Mr. J. B. Anderson in the Baptist Church, Hartlepool, with much blessing. An interesting feature was that some of those who yielded to Christ were the children and grandchildren of the converts of a mission held in Hartlepool by Mr. Anderson some twenty-five years since.

The Mission at Hamilton, N.B., by Messrs. Weaver Brothers, had to be prolonged a week owing to the great blessing that followed their labours. The meetings were held in the Baptist Church, and scores professed conversion. One feature of the Mission was the number of families that experienced blessing. An urgent request for a return visit of the evangelists was presented to them.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till June 4, Motherwell; 18-30, Bethany Hall, Glasgow.
Mr. W. R. Lane.—May 27-June 5, Brockley.
Mr. E. P. Telford.—Till May 28, Bromley. During June, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End.
Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—June 18-July 3, Annan.
Mr. Jas. Sprunt.—Till May 28, Billinghurst; during June, Sundays and Thursdays, Walthamstow; Wednesdays, Wimbledon.
Mr. Newton Jones.—May 27-29, Bedford.
Mr. Henry Thorne.—May 27-June 5, Ramsden Road, Balham; 11 and 12, Wimbledon; 18-25, Bromley.
Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—May 28, Tunbridge Wells.
Brothers Weaver.—Till May 26, Paisley.
Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday, May 28, at 7, Mr. P. H. Thompson; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sunday, May 28, at 7, Mr. J. G. McVicker.
Mr. John Elliott.—Till June 4, Puddington; June 8-25, Central Hall, Pokesdown, Bournemouth.
Mr. J. S. Tyler.—(Children's Special Service Mission) Southsea, May 26.

Personalia.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has been elected to preside over the National Convention of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour in 1900. The election took place on Monday last at the annual Convention at Belfast.

Rev. George Wainwright, who is returning from Tasmania in restored health, hopes to reach London early in June. Communications to receive first attention may be addressed to the care of Mr. Millard, 17, St. Michael's Road, Stockwell, S.W.

Mr. Tennyson Smith, of the Society of Temperance Ironsides, has been ordered by his medical man to take a complete rest from platform work for some time. He has lectured nearly every night since early in September last, and in the midst of a mission at Stourbridge (which concluded on the 15th) he was compelled to rest for a few nights. Mr. Smith is now at his home in Deganwy, Llandudno.

Pastor Fr. Coillard, by recent intelligence, has made a satisfactory journey inland from the Cape. When writing on March 28, the veteran missionary was about a week's journey from Bulawayo, en route for the Zambesi. The great caravan of twenty-one waggons doubtless reached Kazungula some days ago, and there a conference is to be held and arrangements made for the location of the reinforcements.

"Too Old at Forty."—With reference to the useful conference recently held with the interesting and pathetic object of assisting those who are discharged from situations for being "too old at forty," we understand that a number of sufferers have already been aided. Particulars of the movement, which is being organised on a religious basis, may be obtained from Mr. A. E. Clarke, the C.B.A. Office, Earlsfield, S.W.

International S.S. Lessons.

June 4, 1899.

Christ Crucified.—John xix. 17-30.

Golden Text.—Gal. ii. 20.

Explanatory.

READ the parallel passages, and some keep their Bibles open there for reference (Matt. xxvii. 31-66, Mark xv. 20-47, Luke xxiii. 26-56).

Verse 17. Picture this sad procession. First walked a soldier, holding up a white board on which was written the crime for which the prisoners were to be killed, then four soldiers with the hammer and nails, and a Centurion to guard Jesus carrying his own cross; after Him the two robbers, each bearing his cross, and four soldiers with each; thus they left the gorgeous palace and were followed through Jerusalem by a great multitude. "Golgotha," in Latin Calvary, a small eminence outside the city gate. Jesus, exhausted by the cruel treatment and mental agony, faints under his burden, and a black African man is compelled to carry it for Him. Many women kept as close to Jesus as they could, to whom He spoke tender words (Luke xxiii. 27, 28). When Jerusalem was besieged and destroyed, the suffering of the women and children was too terrible to relate.

Verse 18. About nine o'clock, the very hour of the morning sacrifice of the lamb. Jesus the Lamb of God (Explain the full meaning). The prisoners were nailed to the crosses as they lay on the ground, then they were raised and jolted into holes dug out for them. Stupefying drinks were offered to them, which Jerusalem ladies prepared in order to assuage the sufferings. Jesus in the midst, the Saviour of sinners.

Verses 19-22. Pilate wrote this to annoy the Jews: "Latin" for the Romans, "Greek" for the visitors and learned people, "Hebrew" for the Jews.

Verses 23, 24. Criminals were crucified naked, their clothes the perquisites of the soldiers, turban, outer robe, girdle, sandals, and the tunic, which reached from neck to foot; it was this that was without seam.

Verse 25. Only a few of the women and one disciple were near the Cross. Jesus could easily speak to them, He was only raised a little from the ground. Note his words of forgiveness to the robber.

Verses 26, 27. Saving others while dying Himself; care for his earthly mother, who doubtless now was a widow, and her other children did not believe in Jesus as the Messiah, and did not sympathise with their mother. A sermon on the Fifth Commandment preached from the Cross. (Press this on the scholars: duty to mothers.)

Verses 28, 30. Every Scripture concerning the Messiah was fulfilled in Jesus. (Give the scholars the exercise to find the passages and their fulfilment.) Jesus died at the time of the evening sacrifice. Darkness was over the city from 12 to 3 o'clock; the moment that his spirit left the body there was a great earthquake; the veil, which shut out the holiest place in the temple from men, was rent in half; the rending began at the top. This veil was about 60ft. long and as thick as the palm of a man's hand. (Ask for the other wonders that happened, and point out their significance.) Crucifixion did not kill Jesus. He "gave up" his life when He knew He had done everything needed for our salvation. He did not die of exhaustion, for He cried, "It is finished," with a loud voice. The physical cause of death was a broken heart. These facts are all corroborated by history.

Christ's Seven Sayings from the Cross.

Get the scholars to give these in their order, and point out the cause for each and the meaning (Luke xxiii. 34, Luke xxiii. 43-44, John xix. 27, Matt. xxvii. 46, John xix. 28, John xix. 30, Luke xxiii. 46).

Seven Lessons to be Impressed.

Explain the need of atonement for sin.

What is sin? Every sinner is under God's curse (Gal. iii. 10-13). Refer to the curses and blessing in Deut. xxviii.

The price of our redemption shows God's love, God's feelings about sin. It should teach us to hate sin and love the Saviour. Not only all prophecies about Christ, but every Scripture will be fulfilled.

Christ's example of unselfishness in suffering. Are we like Him, or absorbed in our own troubles?

What did Jesus say about bearing his cross? (Matt. xvi. 24, Mark viii. 34, Luke ix. 23.) What am I doing?

What does all the sad story mean to me? Can I treat this Saviour with scorn? In which group of people should I have been found?

(673)

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Newcastle has licensed a number of miners as lay-readers.

The Bishop of Bristol has appointed Rev. W. J. F. Robberds to succeed Canon Cornish as vicar of St. Mary Redcliff, Bristol.

Mr. F. C. Rollin and Mr. J. B. Thompson, of the Yorkshire United College, are sailing for the Cape, in connection with the Colonial Missionary Society, to take joint charge of the churches at Ophirton and Braamfontein.

Rev. George Denyer, of Didsbury, has accepted the vicarage of Christ Church, Blackburn. The appointment has been received with general satisfaction in the parish, which is strongly evangelical, and where some uneasiness had been caused by a report that a High Churchman would be selected.

Sir C. R. Lighton writes to the papers, that "a very large part of the laity decline to support, as formerly, diocesan appeals. Let the bishops and clergy be true to their vows, and reassert the principles of the Reformation, and I have no doubt they will not appeal to the public in vain."

Archdeacon Sinclair has issued a long letter on the subject of the spiritual wants of the diocese of London, in which he refers to the position of the Bishop of London's Fund. He says that "we are doing very little indeed;" as only three churches were consecrated last year, while at least forty are needed.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, preaching at Westminster Abbey, remarked that the Religious Tract Society, as the unwearied helper of missionary work at home and abroad, was deserving of the most liberal support, and all should bear in mind that not a penny of their contributions was devoted to the Society's trading purposes, but to the strengthening of its missionary work.

The Southport Clerical and Lay Conference is to be held on May 30 and 31. Among the subjects to be discussed are: "The Influence of the Pulpit on Modern Life;" "The Ornaments Rubric: its Judicial Interpretation;" and "The Responsibility and Duty of the Laity in the Present Crisis." The speakers will include Archdeacon Taylor, Canons Robson and Sutton, and Revs. A. R. Buckland and H. J. R. Marston.

The C.M.S. Centenary services and meetings in the provinces are being attended with great blessing. Very notable was the great meeting held in the Drill Hall, Derby, when an impression, that could scarcely be exceeded for solemnity, was left upon the largest missionary gathering known in the town by the special deputation, Rev. James Johnson (of Lagos) and Mr. Eugene Stock.

The Archbishop of Canterbury held a reception on the 18th inst., in the Great Hall of the Church House, on behalf of the Boards of Missions of the Provinces of Canterbury and York, of Colonial and Missionary Church workers. Although this was the first time that such a reception had been held, it was a great success. The Primate spoke of the importance of, and the need for, missionary effort, the progress that had been made and what still remained to be done, and urged all present to do everything in their power to carry out the Lord's command to preach the Gospel to all nations.

Congregational.

At Ebenezer Chapel, Dewsbury, Rev. M. Anstey is preaching a special series of Sunday morning services on the Reformation.

Rev. Dr. Parker has forwarded a cheque for £500 to the committee of the Union Church Children's Home, Sunderland, to buy their present building, or to erect a new home, in perpetuation of the memory of his late wife. Mrs. Parker, whose family live in Sunderland, had up to the time of her death taken an active interest in the institution.

Baptist.

Special services have been held in connection with the first anniversary of the Baptist Mission at Ringwood. The mission was commenced with cottage meetings; then a public room was taken, and the gatherings have been much blessed.

A special and interesting gathering was held at North Kelvinside Church, Glasgow, on the occasion of the visit of Alderman Cory and Rev. E. A. Carter. Addresses were delivered by Rev. John Horne and other friends.

As an outcome of the mission gatherings that are being held in the Opera House, Blackpool, extensive premises have been secured for week night and Sunday school services, and a movement is on foot for the erection of a new chapel to be called the Blackpool Tabernacle.

At the Annandale Road Church, Chiswick, Mr. William Olney has conducted special services with great blessing. At the close of the morning service some young men confessed Christ. In the evening a number of the elder Sunday School scholars also yielded. The day will long be remembered.

Stimulating services were conducted at New Road, Oxford, by Rev. J. Dann, in connection with the Century Fund. In the evening a large number of persons who had professed conversion at the Free Church Mission conducted by Rev. Thos. Cook, were received into the membership.

A stimulating sermon was preached by Rev. T. Spurgeon, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, specially addressed to the workers in the Colportage Association. The preacher, alluding to the seed, its multiplication, and its fruitfulness, said he desired to speak a word of cheer to the colporteurs—he was going to say, to give three cheers, not for them, but to them.

Methodist.

The nett increase this year in church membership in Irish Wesleyan Methodism is 281. Last year it was only sixteen.

At Gospel Oak, a district which has greatly developed of late, between Kentish Town and Hampstead Heath, the Great Queen Street Wesleyan circuit is building a much needed new church.

The Wesleyan Central Sussex Mission reports progress. In connection with services which were commenced at Hayward's Heath in a hairdresser's saloon, a chapel is to be built immediately. A month ago, services were begun in a tent at Burgess Hill, where a chapel must also be provided at once.

Bishop Hartzell, the missionary Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America, is paying a short visit to England. He was present recently at the examination of candidates for the ministry which took place in Wesley's Chapel. It is stated that the Bishop has little difficulty in gathering workers of a high order for the missions of his society.

The anniversary meetings of Bowron House Institute (Free Methodist) were held at Exeter Hall on Monday. The secretary, Rev. T. J. Cope, reported thirty-four sisters, or deaconesses, now on the list, and gave interesting accounts of the many and much-blessed evangelistic missions which the sisters had conducted.

In connection with the recent outrage at Johannesburg when Mrs. Appelbee, wife of Rev. R. F. Appelbee, was murdered, the British Agent in the South African Republic reports: "There can be little doubt that outrage is an act of deliberate revenge on part of liquor dealers for efforts made by these ministers to expose their nefarious trade." The ministers referred to are of course Mrs. Appelbee's husband and Mr. Wilson, the latter of whom was also attacked. No arrests have been made.

Speaking at the anniversary of Oxford Place Wesleyan Mission, Leeds, on "Who say the people that I am?" Dr. Clifford said that at no time since the close of the first century was there a greater sense of the historical reality of Christ, while He was respected as never before as a perfect example of living. Diverse witnesses like J. S. Mill and C. M. Sheldon testified to this. Another and more important thing was that He was looked upon more than ever as the Saviour alike of the lost individual and of lost society.

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. M. Wilson, of Hexham, has brought his ministry to a close after forty-three years' service. A large congregation assembled to hear the farewell sermon, and the service was of a most impressive nature.

Dr. Marcus Dods preached the anniversary sermons at Derby to large congregations. Speaking in the morning on "The rich young man," and in the evening on "The impotent man," the speaker delivered the Gospel message with simplicity and weight.

An effort is being made by the Bermondsey congregation to raise funds for the erection of new buildings, which have become urgently necessary by the prosperity which has attended the work. Principal Dykes speaks highly of the work as a centre of Christian activity open in one of the most necessitous parts of London.

In the Free Church Assembly at Edinburgh, the Moderator, Dr. James Stewart, delivered an inaugural address, which dealt largely with foreign missions. He urged the adoption of a forward missionary policy, suggesting that it should be the settled aim of the Church to direct a larger amount of attention and effort to the work of foreign missions.

Speaking at the U.P. Synod on the Union question, Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh, said: "When this Union is accomplished, Scotland will see a sight which she has never yet seen—a Church with a world-wide horizon, yet rooted in and filling with a wonderful influence the whole land: strong in the city and in the country, in the Highlands and in the Lowlands, among simple and cultured, and above all, and through all, and in all, mighty in her preaching of the Gospel of God's grace to men."

Society of Friends.

The annual report of the Friends' First-day School Association is now issued, and contains many helpful facts and suggestive hints for workers.

The Dukhobortsi on the Lake Superior, from Cyprus, have landed at Quebec, and are reported "all healthy." The emigrants from Russia sailed from Batoum on the Lake Huron on the 11th inst., the party numbering 1,540 adults and 738 children.

Lucy E. Wright, in an address at the Dublin Women's Yearly Meeting, said: "If we are to be of any service to others the things we do and the words we say must bear the stamp of reality. In this somewhat superficial, diffusive age, let us not rest satisfied without going to the very root of, not so much in the sense of knowledge, which may be imperfect and incomplete, but in faithfulness, in sincerity of purpose, and in humility, without which we cannot fulfil our responsibility to the Church."

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. ELISHA SMITH, of Liverpool, who for nearly fifty years had been a member and deacon of Great George Street Congregational Chapel.—Rev. HENRY LEWIS, a retired Congregationalist minister, dropped dead during the singing of the opening hymn in the Baptist Chapel at Chelmsford on a recent Sunday morning.—Rev DONALD MURRAY, senior minister of the Tarbert Free Church, Ross-shire.—Rev. JAMES RITCHIE, senior minister of Stromness Free Church, in his 80th year.—Preb. DANIEL MOORE, one of the most venerable and highly respected of the London clergy, in his ninetieth year. He was ordained by Bishop Blomfield, of London, became Prebendary of St. Paul's in 1880, and was doyen of the Queen's Chaplains-in-Ordinary.—Bunyan Baptist Church, Norbiton, has sustained a heavy loss by the death of Mr. SILVANUS BROWN, one of its most esteemed members.—Rev. J. SHORTT, vicar of Hoghton, near Preston, in his seventy-fourth year. He had held the living for the past forty-six years.—Dr. ROBERT RYLAND, among the most widely known, as well as probably the oldest Baptist minister in America, at the age of ninety-four. He kept up preaching and pastoral work until a few months ago.—South African Methodism has just lost Mr. THOMAS W. GARLAND, of Natal. He emigrated to the colony at the end of 1849, and grew up with it, and was one of the foster fathers of its now vigorous Methodism.—The Epworth Wesleyan Circuit has just sustained a great loss in his removal by death of its beloved superintendent, Rev. SAMUEL SHEARD. For some years he struggled with impaired health, but bravely continued his work until, overtaken by a sudden attack of hæmorrhage brought on through exposure to cold and fatigue, he was compelled to cease from active work.—Rev. WM. CLOSE, senior minister of Loughmorne Presbyterian Church, near Carrickfergus, Ireland, aged seventy-seven. Originally the deceased had been a minister of the Eastern Reformed Covenanting Church, but about five years ago both he and his congregation united with the Presbyterian Church, of which he continued to be a highly respected minister up to the time of his death.

A New Home of Rest.—In connection with the North-East London Gospel Mission, a new and capacious home of rest for working men and youths was opened at Lancing-on-Sea on Whit-Monday by Mr. John McCall. The building, which stands in its own grounds, commands a fine sea view, and is well fitted with modern appliances. Mr. W. Chorley, superintendent of the Mission, while mentioning that a large sum was required to be raised, indicated the advantages of the institution to the enfeebled poor of Metropolitan slumdom. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Chorley, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N.

About Books.

A PREACHER'S HANDBOOK.

BOOKS of seed-thoughts and outlines for Christian workers are becoming legion. There is undoubtedly a place for them, as supplying suggestive matter ready to hand for the use of the preacher and teacher, and as affording assistance to such as, at short notice, sometimes leave home and business cares to address gatherings of men and women on Gospel themes. We have from time to time called attention to the compilations in this line of Mr. J. Ellis; and we now welcome another product of his industry and research—Gospel Seed for Busy Sowers, a compact little book, well described on the title page as "furnishing materials for preachers, evangelists, Sabbath-school teachers, and lay workers." A glance at the pages shows the work to consist of outline addresses, sermonettes and talks for young and old, Bible readings and telling points, missionary incidents, and hints to workers. Rev. Mark Guy Pearse says in the introduction:—"Pointed, concise, and thoroughly practical are these outlines—so arranged as to be easily remembered. Though the spring be full, yet there are times when the pump needs a little water to be poured down in order to fetch much water up. They who lack a subject, and have little time to seek one, will find here something for which to be thankful," (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

Great Thoughts half-yearly volume (October-March) is marked by all the familiar features of that well-known repository of thought. Few will fail to find, amid a little that fails to carry the judgment, much that is stimulating and serviceable in the work of Christian instruction. The illustrations are excellent. (4s. 6d. A. W. Hall.)

Comparatively few persons are aware that Rev. Augustus Toplady's immortal hymn, "Rock of Ages, cleft for me," first appeared in 1776 in the Gospel Magazine, of which he was at that time the editor. The fact is recalled by the issue of a "Toplady Number" of the magazine named, which was established in 1766, and therefore is the oldest religious magazine in the country. There are, besides a paper on the "Rock of Ages," which is reproduced exactly as it originally appeared, several articles and numerous illustrations, with four portraits of Toplady. (6d. Collingridge.)

An interesting missionary sketch is Sophia Cooke; or, Forty-two Years' Work in Singapore, by E. A. Walker. (Eliott Stock.) A native of Norfolk, Miss Cooke went to the Straits Settlements in 1853 under the auspices of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East; and she was privileged to witness much blessing upon her devoted life and labour. There is an introduction by Rev. B. Baring-Gould, of the C.M.S., on the influential character of Miss Cooke's educational work, and a reminiscent postscript by Miss Webb, whose privilege it was to be intimately associated with Miss Cooke in friendship and correspondence during the whole of her long term of service abroad.

Church records have an interest peculiarly their own, but they are rarely presented to best advantage in memorial volumes. A thoroughly successful piece of work in this line, however, is Union Chapel: The Story of a Hundred Years: 1799-1899 (2s. 6d. Hazell, Watson, & Viney). Though a full hundred years old, this Nonconformist Church, the influence of which has extended much beyond the borders of Islington, is yet under the care of its third minister. Rev. Thomas Lewis was pastor for fifty years; Rev. Dr. Henry Allon followed him, being succeeded by Rev. Hardy Harwood, the present pastor. Portraits of these worthies, with their church officers and others, embellish this admirably digested story; and there are excellent engravings of the present chapel and its predecessors.

The issue of another volume of Dr. Alexander Whyte's Bible Characters (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier) is a welcome event in the publishing world. This third instalment completes the survey of the leading figures in Old Testament history, and embraces the study of such men as Elijah, Job, Jonah, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, &c. What a wealth of biographical treasure is here, and what an unfolding by a master mind of the eternal principles that lie at the foundation of all true living! This is the sort of exposition that perpetuates the power and gives undying zest to the study of the Bible. In Dr. Whyte's hands it is the most modern and up-to-date of all books; if it is full of comfort where that is needed, it is also full of stinging reproof and self-revelation—things more needed still for most of us. Let no young man or woman, who wants to be told the truth and to face it, neglect the perusal of these priceless chapters.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

IN the interesting "Revival" sketch, which appears on page 15 of this issue, occurs an important paragraph, the truth of which few will essay to deny :—

Probably the chief hindrance to spiritual life at the present day is the worldliness of so many professed followers of Christ; and this again is traceable to the inadequate views of the nature of sin held by so many, and which is largely fostered by much of the religious literature of the day; and it is not at all likely that any great movement will take hold of the souls of men, as the revivals of last century did, unless the destroying power of sin, and the clamant necessity of deliverance from it, is made a prominent feature.

Those who have found pleasure and instruction in the Standard Life of C. H. Spurgeon will be glad to know that Vol. III. of the Autobiography, published this week, is as rich as its predecessors in information regarding the man and his teaching. The illustrations are numerous and good. (10s. 6d. Passmore and Alabaster.)

Rev. C. New, of Hastings, is delivering on Sunday evenings a series of discourses on Priesthood according to Scripture, on the one hand, and Priestcraft according to Romanism and Romanisers, on the other. Last Sunday we listened to an admirable exposition of the Holy Priesthood, the Royal Priesthood of believers, and to a caustic exposure of the Christ-dishonouring claims of self-styled priests who arrogate to themselves not only functions which are common to all believers, but those which belong only to our Great High Priest, Jesus, the Son of God. Would it not be well for all evangelical ministers to make themselves accurately acquainted with both sides of the subject, and diligently to instruct their people in it? The next generation will be enslaved or free, according to the action of the present one.

In the current Evangelical Magazine, Professor Adeney has an interesting article on present-day neglect of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress." There was a time when every cottage had at least two books—a Bible and "Pilgrim's Progress." Professor Adeney (we fear rightly) doubts whether it is so now, and says, "It really looks as though before long a generation will have grown up that knows not Bunyan." He suspects that this is partly due to the fact that the book is a product of Puritan theology.

Those who condemn Puritanism will condemn Bunyan. He went to Bedford jail for his religious practices. Those people who join in the Catholic reaction that is sweeping over England in the present day will find more to sympathise with in the views of his persecutors than in those of the Baptist preacher. Parents who desire their children to grow up in pure evangelical faith should encourage them to read the great Puritan classic.

Very cheering to Her Majesty must have been the loyalty and enthusiasm of her people at the attainment of her eightieth birthday. Congratulatory messages poured in from foreign sovereigns and the Colonies, as well as the homeland. It is no ordinary event which the nation has rejoiced to commemorate. Prayer rises from millions of hearts that God may still more abundantly bless Her Majesty as the years pass away.

It is fortunate for the opening of the Peace Congress at the Hague that just at present the world is in a state of profound and unbroken peace, without a cloud to darken the sky. The eightieth birthday of our beloved Queen is also a link in the chain of influences which ought to help on the cause of international fraternity. It has called forth a splendid outburst of goodwill from all quarters of the world. Her personal influence for good on the Courts of Europe has ever been great; just now she is able to use that influence through the many family ties that bind her to the leading Sovereigns of the Continent in a way that is unique. The prospects of the Conference under these circumstances are brightening day by day, and there is now every probability that some valuable and permanent results will be the outcome of its deliberations.

Although the sittings of the Conference are held in private, the results arrived at seem to be very regularly and faithfully given to the world. According to one correspondent, Baron de Staal, the President, has remarked that henceforth war, and not peace, would be regarded as Utopian. The proceedings of Friday last constituted it, to quote the words of Mr. W. T. Stead, "a memorable day in the history of mankind." The principal British delegate formally proposed the appointment of a permanent arbitration tribunal, and his action was fully endorsed by the Russian representatives. A special committee was at once appointed to formulate the proposal. This step would, of itself, justify the holding of the Conference, and is fraught with hope for the future peace of the great nations. Jealousies and factions seem to be absent from the Conference; delegates are getting to know and appreciate one another; and, above all, the great purposes indicated in the Czar's rescript are assuming a definite shape in their minds. To those who are outside, the Conference is assigned the task of aiding the whole work by prayer and wisdom of speech.

It is much to be regretted that difficulties continue to arise in the way of a satisfactory conclusion of the Anglo-American Commission. "Retaliatory Measures" do not make for peace, nor produce good feeling. Surely, while the masses of England and America regard each other in so friendly a manner, it ought to be possible to adjust all differences happily and satisfactorily. The situation suggests the suspicion that the interests of certain commercial magnates, who have influence with the Government in either Canada or America, or both, are responsible for the deadlock. If the wrong is on the Canadian side, with all deference to Colonial rights it is to be hoped that the British Government will refuse to allow the speculative investments of a handful of men to jeopardise the peaceful relations of the two branches of the Anglo-Saxon race.

The surrender by the Daily Telegraph of its Sunday paper, in deference to the continued pressure of public opinion, has brought a daring experiment to a summary issue. It has been a great victory for Christian sentiment. The result has furnished an impressive proof of the power of the Christian public in voicing and giving effect to national feeling. Of late years there had been a distinct set-back in the general estimate of the place held by religious principle in the country. This had been partly the result of efforts towards reform, which were badly led and so failed to be fully carried out. In this instance the crusade was based on broad and incontestable principles, and the appeal was made on grounds that appealed to the best instincts of the people. This distinct triumph of the cause of Sunday observance should hearten all Christian reformers, and teach them the resistless power of united Christian testimony.

But we shall make a mistake if we now go to sleep and let things take their course, dreaming that all peril is over. There is need for constant vigilance. And there is still more need for Christians to turn the Sunday to the best possible account for bringing all classes under the influence of the Gospel. Should the recent struggle produce any effect in the way of rousing the churches to renewed evangelistic exertion, it will have proved a boon. Its influence can also hardly fail to be felt on the Continent and in the United States, where the evil we have escaped is one of the greatest curses. There are hosts of Christians in America who probably have it in their power, were they once aroused, to sweep the deadly thing out of the land.

In fact, the failure to start seven-day newspapers in this country has made a deep impression in America. The Boston Congregationalist, while commenting in a leader on the advantage enjoyed by the Christian public in England in having to fight the battle at a period of profound peace, asks whether the time has not come for the marshalling of the Christian forces of America against the evil which has had such disastrous effects on the religious life of that country, and which is doing more to vulgarise the common life and undermine the habit of reading good literature and the habit of religious worship than any force cognisable.

An appeal is made to the churches to join in fighting evil rather than each other. Not till then will an enemy "whose conscience is its purse" give up the field. It would be a grand issue of the present happily-ended crusade if it stirs up a similar crusade across the sea. There are other Sunday papers—of a much lower standard than the ones that have been attacked. For the most part they are printed during the week and published on Saturday; but they are sold everywhere on Sunday. Surely the crusade ought not to end until these are compelled to cease their Sabbath distribution.

According to an article in Truth, the Sunday concerts at the Queen's Hall during the winter months have resulted in a nett loss to their promoter of £500. From this we are supposed to draw the absurd conclusion that these concerts have not been held "for the sake of profit." The fact that a venture has been unsuccessful from a financial point of view is no proof that gain was not its object. But that by the way. The question, however, is pertinent—Whose profit? The amount of receipts from the sale of tickets at these and other Sunday concerts must be considerable, and someone profits by them. The lessees of the Alhambra, with their £30 or £40 rental for the hall, and the owners of other halls, are to that extent profited by these concerts. The singers and the orchestra do not give their services from philanthropic motives; and while such entertainments involve such a large amount of Sunday labour, those who believe in the day of rest must continue to oppose them on principle.

Few things have done more to foster the good feeling between England and America than the growing habit in the last few years of exchanging pulpits. Every year a number of Americans are preaching in England and Englishmen in America. This year the International Congregational Convention meets at Boston, and many of the delegates propose seeing something of the country. Next year the International Convention of the Y.P.S.C.E. will bring crowds of Americans to England; while in 1901 the Ecumenical Conference of the Methodist Churches, to be held in London, will also bring a large delegation. This mingling of Christian workers of both countries in large numbers and in three successive years should help materially to strengthen the bonds of friendship already formed.

The news came last week of the death, while speaking at a meeting in Philadelphia, of Mr. Aaron M. Powell, of New York. He was one of the old anti-slavery party, a friend of Garrison and Wendell Phillips, once editor of the Anti-Slavery Standard, an earnest temperance reformer, and latterly a prominent worker on behalf of social purity. A member of the Society of Friends, his spirit and character were greatly influenced by their doctrines and life, and his forms of service by their philanthropy. He was one of the first to see the danger to his country from the repeated attempts made to legalise and regulate vice, and he organised a Vigilance Committee t keep a sharp outlook on the doings of the enemy.

Measures promoted by the State legislations throughout the country, municipal bills, police regulations, and all the means so craftily used as doors for introducing the immoral system, were eagerly and narrowly scrutinised, and so far "regulation" has made no headway in the States. For many years Mr. and Mrs. Powell have edited the Philanthropist as an anti-regulation paper. They were often in Europe attending conferences on the subject of purity, the last being the one in London in 1898; but now the quiet, faithful, patient worker rests from his labours.

You must either falsify or obliterate history if you are to maintain that the National Church of the English people is any other than a Protestant Church. . . . The people are completely deluding themselves who suppose that this is a mere question of the lawlessness and the disobedience of a very small number of the clergy. It is nothing of the kind. It is a contest against a very large, enthusiastic, and learned school, and we are engaged in that which is neither more nor less than a battle for life or death for the Church of England and its true Protestant character.

So spoke Rev. Prebendary Wace at the Church House on the Ritualistic movement. We perfectly agree with him that what is needed now to combat the insidious Roman practices in the Establishment is the preaching of positive truth. The Confessional, the Mass, incense, priestly vestments, prayers for the dead and to the saints, will be compelled to yield to the preaching of the great Evangelical doctrines which Luther and the Reformers revived, if accompanied by the Spirit of the living God.

The pronouncement of the northern bishops on Fasting Communion has drawn forth the bitterest criticisms of the Church Times, who, in declaring that it was the practice of the Church since the Reformation, actually claims Bunyan as an advocate of this unscriptural custom. The proof is drawn from a passage in the second part of the "Pilgrim's Progress," where Christiana's son has to take some medicine ex carne et sanguine Christi. This he has to take with some salt, fasting, in a quarter of a pint of the tears of repentance. At this rate it would be possible to prove any doctrine from any premises whatever. To treat an illustration or a chain of imagery as a logical proof in an argument is one of the oldest pitfalls of commentators of the Bible. But an advocate must be sorely put to it when he has to fall back on such flimsy deductions from irrelevant matter. We can readily imagine Bunyan's attitude towards such a treatment of his matchless allegory.

Dr. MacColl's book on the Reformation Settlement is an attempt to prove that the Protestant movement in its inception was political rather than religious, and that the Church of England, before and after its separation from Rome, was practically identical in doctrine, ritual, and officers, with the sole difference that the headship of the Pope was then renounced. Whatever may be the issue of this much-disputed controversy, it does not touch the fact that later on the Protestant movement was at heart a thoroughly religious one, and that it was and is essentially inconsistent with sacerdotal claims. The establishment of the English Church depends to-day not on any doubtful historical conclusions; it is "broad-based upon the people's will" in the very nature of the case; and if the people become convinced that it is unscriptural and wrong in principle, no amount of "historical continuity" can justify its continuance. Legal arguments do not touch a question that goes to the root of things as this one does.

Temperance reform is hampered by many difficulties, but there is one that is becoming more and more accentuated. The conversion of most of the brewery businesses into limited liability companies is continually increasing the number of shareholders, and many of these are drawn from among the members of Christian Churches. It is clear that, so long as this is so, there will be more and more difficulty in carrying out any method of reform drastic enough to do much damage to the "trade." As the Edinburgh Evening News put it, in commenting on the recent vote of the Free Church Assembly against "Threefold Option:"

As long as ministers are found among those who use strong drink, as long as church members are found among brewery and distillery shareholders, the moral influence exercised will be weak and fitful. Until the churches purge themselves thoroughly of all connection with the drink interest, they have no ground for dictating to the community at large that it shall not touch the traffic, even when its interference is in the direction of regulation and good order.

The loss of the Paris close to the Manacle Rocks, near Falmouth, adds another to the list of vessels recently wrecked through being miles out of their true course. Fortunately no lives were lost, as was the case when the Mohegan went to pieces not far from the same spot, and when the Stella struck on the Casquets at Easter. These terrible incidents strike the imagination with terror. But what of the innumerable bands of souls that are yearly wrecked on the shoals and rocks of passion through being out of their course? Those who perish on their voyage across the Atlantic are as dust in the balance compared with the multitudes of misguided and wayward people who, having abandoned the "narrow path," wander in the perilous ways of sin. There is no earthly danger so awful as to lose one's way on the voyage to the eternal shore. Only by "taking heed to one's path," under the guidance of the chart of the "Word" and the compass of conscience, can we reach our desired haven.

Among the apparent contradictions in human nature and in human life is the fact that humble means are frequently a source of confidence in anyone who is appointed to be a leader of men in the highest walks of life; while money disqualifies for the purest influence, for the most responsible office, and for the noblest service. It is said that one cause of the respect that was felt by all parties for Senor Castelar, just deceased, was that he left power as poor as when he entered it. He went back from the palace to the modest flat which he shared with his sister, and to his chair of philosophy and of history in the University of Madrid. It has been pointed out that the United States never elects a rich man as President. Luther was poor, and so were Whitefield and Wesley. Many others have wielded an influence over their fellow-men which was largely due to their modest means and simplicity of life.

According to the confession of Father J. E. Sherman, a Jesuit priest, the result of priestly rule in Porto Rico, during the dominance of Spain over that island, has been to make them hate Roman Catholicism—the only form of faith tolerated there—and so to deprive them of religion altogether. Fifty Spanish priests left the island at the outbreak of war, and no one regretted their departure. There will now be an open field for the Christian churches of America to show another side of Christianity, and to win back the population into an attitude of sympathy with and respect for the true faith. It is a curious but general fact that it is only in Protestant countries that Romanism is able to win anything like a hearty enthusiasm from its adherents; and that is because it is only when it is unable to show its true spirit of tyranny and intolerance. Wherever its sway is undisputed it at once shows its unconquerable hatred of the principles of civil and religious liberty.

The religious destitution of South London has been often dwelt upon. Seldom has its alarming extent been more forcibly emphasised than in an appeal just issued by fifteen incumbents of parishes of more than 10,000 people to the English Church, in which it is pointed out, among other facts, that for a population of over 2,000,000 souls, increasing at the rate of 26,000 every year, with only one "priest" to every 4,000 people, with sixty-one of its parishes numbering over 10,000 persons, only £12,000 is provided from extra-parochial resources. This, of course, represents the case only from the Church of England point of view. The case is no better, probably worse, from the standpoint of the other churches. The poverty, and crime, and destitution of this "metropolis of poverty" is as bad, or worse, than even the East End. While we send away missionaries to foreign lands, it is imperative that something more adequate should be done to meet the needs of this teeming heathen population at home. The call is for personal service quite as much as for funds.

The Church.—I.

A Study for the Present Time.

By Rev. F. C. SPURR.

NEARLY all the great religious words which stand as the symbol of fundamental Christian truths have been subjected in the course of centuries to singular treatment at the hands of Christian men. There are few of these words which are not historically associated with storm and controversy. At the present hour the verbal symbol which above all others is the occasion of strife is that which appears at the head of this column—"The Church"! It is upon the lips of Romans, Anglicans, and Free Churchmen as never before.

Some arrogate to themselves the exclusive right to the use of the term, declaring that they and they only belong to that body which alone can claim the symbolic title. Others claim to belong to the Church who deny every Christian verity. Others will have no Church at all, pleading that religion is merely individual, and that every man must please himself as to what body of people he chooses for religious association. Again, we have the spectacle of rival Churches, in which doctrines and practices diametrically opposed to each other are proclaimed, each as being the truth.

It seems a tangled skein. Is it possible to discover the end of it, and to reach the point of order and of truth? Let us try. We must begin with

WHAT IS INCONTROVERTIBLE.

1. The word, "church," is merely a translation of the Greek word, ecclesia, and so far as words are concerned, the one word is as good as the other. But as the word ecclesia is the primary word, we must, of course, demand its meaning. It was in common use long before the Christian era. According to the dictionaries, the ecclesia amongst the Greeks was an assembly of citizens proclaimed by the public crier. All legitimate citizens of full age were compelled to attend the assembly, or in default be subject to a fine. Any person entitled to attend the assembly might speak upon any subject which affected the life of the commonwealth. If the subject demanded a vote, this was afterwards taken, and so the matter was settled.

In our English New Testament the word ecclesia is used once or twice in the general sense of an assembly—for example, in Acts xix. 41 and in Acts vii. 38, in both cases the idea being that of a congregation only, without reference to the purpose of its meeting, or to the religious views of the assembled people.

Now this word ecclesia, like so many other words, was consecrated by our Lord and his Apostles to a new use. The congregation or assembly of regenerated souls was called his ecclesia; it was a new society of men and women belonging to a spiritual commonwealth. In its widest meaning then the Church, or ecclesia of Jesus Christ, consists of those citizens of the kingdom of God who, by the blood and grace of that same Lord, have been "made fit to partake of the inheritance of the saints in light."

THE FOUNDER.

The Founder of this new ecclesia is without doubt Jesus Christ Himself. He announced this truth in an unmistakable manner. In that very hour when Simon Peter saluted Him as the Son of the living God, our Lord said, "Upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it" (Matt. xvi. 18). But did He, after having founded it, abandon it to its own proper evolution? No! Creator of the Church, He remains its permanent head.

At the hour when He finally quitted the world, after having commissioned his Apostles to evangelise the entire globe, He said to them, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age" (Matt. xxviii. 20). Did the Apostles understand Him to mean that He would be with them as their Director, as He had been during his earthly sojourn with them? They did. Hear St. Paul: "Christ is the Head of the body, the Church" (Eph. v. 23). Did Jesus leave behind Him a vicegerent, a temporal head of his Church? He did not. Jesus lives, and, according to his promise, acts incessantly in the life and conscience of his people, directing his affairs as really as He did when upon earth. He has no need of any vicegerent; He said that He Himself would remain with the Church unto the end.

2. There are two distinct uses of the word "Church" in the New Testament. Chiefly it signifies that inner and incorporate company of souls which are "in Christ," belonging both to the militant and to the triumphant wings of the spiritual body. This Church is viewed as "his body," of which He is the vital Head and Director, and it ought to be obvious to all that no person can possibly belong to this spiritual body who has not a real and vital relation to its Divine Head. The figure of a body, so frequently and so emphatically employed, carries with it as a fundamental notion the idea of a living organism. The Church is also advertised as the general assembly and church of the first-born which are enrolled in heaven" (Heb. xii. 23). Obviously in this place also the Church is regarded as the company of men in true relations with God and his Son.

But there is a second signification of the word in the New Testament. In several places the word "Church" can only mean believers who make the formal profession of faith in Jesus Christ. Thus St. Paul speaks about the shame of certain persons speaking "in the church" (1 Cor. xiv. 35). Again, the same Apostle writes to Rome about a church in a private house (Rom. xvi. 5); and later he speaks of having "persecuted the Church of God" (1 Cor. xv. 9). In these cases he evidently means the visible body of believers, apart from any question of their inner life, which was known alone to God.

THE VISIBLE BODY OF BELIEVERS—

The visible Church was "scattered abroad" amongst all nations. Yet the Church never became the Church of a nation. Wherever it was planted it remained the Church of God, and it had nothing whatever to do with political intrigues. The Church, because it is God's Church, can never become the Church of a nation; it is the Church in a nation—separate from the nation, a protest against all that is evil in the nation, and a perpetual invitation to every member of the nation to ally himself individually, and according to the Divine method, with the Church.

Neither is the Church the Church of a doctrine, or of a policy, or of any one man, however eminent and saintly he may be. We need a new nomenclature to replace the misleading terms which are in use amongst us. It is a pity that men have come to speak of themselves as belonging to the Church of England, or to the Baptist Church, or to the Wesleyan Church, or the Presbyterian Church. The Church is the Church of GOD, and any other name applied to it for purposes of distinctiveness ought to be severely secondary to the true and Divine appellation given by our Lord and his Apostles.

3. Now there are certain popular errors concerning the Church which need ruthlessly sweeping away. The first of these is that the Church is wholly spiritual, and does not therefore possess an authoritative visible organisation. Many good people hold this singular view, which, alas! has had a disastrous effect, during the last twenty years in particular. This notion is really a revolt against the worldliness of many church-members, and the good people who withdrew from the fellowship of all other Christians, to form themselves into an exclusive sect, thought, without doubt, that in so doing they were approaching the New Testament ideal But the rebound went too far, and the world knows the result.

THE CHURCH IS NOT WHOLLY SPIRITUAL.

It has a soul, but it must also have a body. Organisation is necessary to it, because it is a living thing. Organisation is the necessary outcome of life, and the life must shape the organisation. Because there is an inner and invisible Church, there must also be, in mortal conditions, a visible Church; it is here that the true Church is seriously menaced. For it is not possible to guard the visible body from the presence of unworthy and unconverted members. The strictest scrutiny will not keep out Simon Magus or Judas Iscariot or Ananias. Certainly the severest tests should be applied before members are received; but it ought to be recognised that even these may fail.

Our Lord distinctly taught that in the visible Church there would be an admixture of good and evil, which would only finally be separated at the Judgment. And the experience of the Church has only confirmed our Lord's prediction. The presence of the mixed element, therefore, however much we deplore it, gives us no right to deny the truth of the Church's organisation. Accretions will gather round it which are no part whatever of the true life.

A second error is that which practically regards the Church as a body only, a humano-religious society which may be entered mechanically by the magical door of priestly sacraments, and in which membership is sustained by the same magic until the final exit from life, which is still assisted by more magic. Against this falsehood every true Christian ought with redoubled vigour to protest to-day.

A third error is that which regards any ethical or religious society as a Church. We have the "Unitarian Church," the "Labour Church," the "Brotherhood Church," the "Humanitarian Church," and I know not what else. In fact, it is becoming a fashion to appropriate the name "Church," and affix it to any company of people, independently of its beliefs. To speak moderately, such a proceeding is reprehensible in the last degree. Words have a recognised meaning, to tamper with which is a kind of verbal housebreaking. There is nothing more hateful than the present fashion of using recognised and historical Christian words in a sense other than that which honesty demands. No society which denies the fundamental verities of the Christian faith has the least right to the use of a word which in every way protests against the doctrines which its purloiners hold.

The final error is that which believes that one body and one body only is the Church. This brings us to the heart of our theme, with which the next article will deal.

Lewisham, S.E.

Spurious Sports.—The record of last season's "sport" of the royal buckhounds is described in a leaflet issued by the Humanitarian League. Pithily put in the form of a diary compiled by Rev. J. Stratton, these accounts of the sufferings of the unfortunate tame deer are strong in a simple and unexaggerated recital of fact.

Temperance Reform.

WE are still waiting for the report—or reports—of the Royal Commission on Licensing, and there is little guarantee, we fear, under existing circumstances, that much of a beneficial and positive kind will result from them. Governments in these days are not very heroic, and the unhappy, though not surprising, differences that have revealed themselves among the members of the Commission, will afford an excuse to the Cabinet for postponing any adequate legislation to a more convenient season. The ably compiled and comprehensive work by Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell (The Temperance Problem and Social Reform. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton), which has recently been published, comes therefore at an opportune moment. We venture to think also that its statements, statistics, and conclusions will carry more weight with thoughtful and earnest students of the ills now afflicting society, than any recommendations of a body so curiously constituted as the Licensing Commission.

The thing that has impressed us most deeply in reading this book is its perfect candour, and freedom from bias of any sort. The authors are of course genuinely strong and ardent temperance reformers; their investigations would have compelled them to become that, if they had not already been so. They have aimed at presenting facts, not only as to but as to the comparative value, experimentally considered, of the various remedies that, from time to time, have been suggested and tried. And it is on this latter point, we imagine, that they will fail to carry completely with them the conviction and co-operation of some other workers in the same field of sociology. In his recent speech before the B.W.T.A., Dean Farrar spoke highly of the book under notice, but added that he did not agree with all its recommendations. Doubtless there are others of the same mind. The most unfortunate thing in the history of modern social reform is that while all reformers are at one with respect to the magnitude of the evil, they are much divided as to the most effective remedies.

THE EXTENT OF THE DRINK CURSE,

Our chief purpose in this article is not to criticise the positions taken up by Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell, but to indicate the nature of them. So much pains and labour have been bestowed on the work, that fairness demands a calm and thorough of their effort, before serious adverse comment is attempted. The book contains six lengthy chapters, dealing respectively with (1) a statement as to the extent of the evil, (2) its peril as a social and political menace, (3) the history of "Prohibition" as a remedy, (4) State monopoly and high licence, (5) the Scandinavian systems, and (6) those solutions of the problem that commend themselves to the writers. There are also valuable appendices relating to various aspects of the subject, which extend to nearly 200 pages. It will be seen from this outline how far-reaching and exhaustive the book is, and how indispensable it will be to the reformer of the future.

STUDY OF THE RESULTS

We need not make many references to the chapter detailing the nature and extent of the drink evil; surely no reader of these lines requires to be convinced on the point. A few brief sentences will serve to show the impressive nature of the well-ascertained facts and figures here presented:—

Of the £154,000,000 spent on drink in the United Kingdom in 1898, more than £100,000,000 must have been spent by 30,000,000 persons belonging to the working classes (p. 9).

In London, nearly one and a third million of persons, or 30·7 per cent. of the entire population, are "in poverty" (p. 22).

Either we must grapple with the forces that undermine our national strength and weaken our industrial efficiency, or be content to fall behind in the struggle for commercial supremacy (p. 54).

While temperance workers have been steadily endeavouring to reduce the number of public-houses, the publicans and brewers have been busily intent on increasing their size. . . The smaller and least profitable houses have been largely replaced by huge gin-palaces capable of much more extended mischief (p. 83).

It appears that while the ratio of mortality from alcoholic excess has increased 43 per cent. among males, during the last twenty years, among females it has increased by no less than 104 per cent. (p. 90).

Capital amounting to from £250,000,000 to £300,000,000 sterling is invested in the liquor trade of this country (p. 93).

The startling facts of the first chapter are powerfully supplemented in the second by a description of the strongly-organised character of the drink trade, for purposes of mutual defence, rendering it a serious peril and menace to the social well-being of the people.

Chapter III is devoted to a searching record and analysis of the various experiments made in America and other parts of the world in dealing with the drink evil by the agency of total prohibition. The authors give it as their verdict that with respect to the prevalence of drunkenness, crime, pauperism, thrift and administrative efficiency, prohibition has, to put it briefly, conspicuously failed, especially in the crowded urban centres of population. At the same time it is admitted that in rural parts, and in certain city wards or suburbs, local option has justified itself.

"STATE MONOPOLY AND HIGH LICENCE" are dealt with in chap. IV, their advantages and disadvantages being impartially sketched, with the result that they are not deemed worthy of commendation for trial in the United Kingdom. Very interesting indeed is the account of the Swedish and Norwegian systems, given in the next chapter. The authors conclude, in this survey that in order to success the trade must be taken out of private hands, and that the control of the traffic must be local—not worked by the State or municipality, but on the company system under the supervision of the State.

The final chapter, after a brief historical allusion to past proposals, takes up "the problem of the towns," and considers the various aspects of it in a masterly way. The need for constructive as well as restrictive reform is urged, especially in view of the sad, social, and economic condition of the masses of the people, in poor, crowded, and insanitary districts. Counteractives to the gin-palace are strongly recommended, and suggestions are made as to the adoption of the Scandinavian system, in so far as that eliminates the element of private gain out of the misery of the people, and replaces it by local restriction and control, in the sole interests of the community.

The problem has become a vast one and as intricate as it is vast. But surely it is not beyond the wit and sanctified wisdom of man to solve it, in a way that will preserve society from the evils that now threaten to engulph it in ruin. For this contribution to the study of the question Mr. Rowntree and Mr. Sherwell certainly deserve sincere thanks. We must remark in closing that to our own thinking the great defect in the book is the total absence of any reference to the supreme value of evangelistic effort among the masses as a cure for the drink evil. It may be that this was not regarded as within the scope of the work. We should have thought that, as Christian men, both the compilers would have been fully alive to the comparative futility of purely legislative and ameliorative agencies, apart from the regenerating force of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Letters from America.

I REMEMBER that my first letter from the Cape three years ago was entitled "Black and White." It also appeared in The Cape Times, by whose readers I was twitted as "a new-comer" who would imbibe the views general among the colonists after a few months' residence. To which I replied, in the wisdom of our fathers, that "lookers-on see most of the game," and that "in matters of prudence second thoughts are best; in matters of right and wrong, and of conscience, first thoughts are best."

But the antipathy of white people to coloured (whom they euphoniously call their "brethren in black," though they may be seven-eighths or nineteen-twentieths white) is even more accentuated in the Southern States of America than in South Africa.

One of the straws upon the surface which show how the tide flows, is that, while the whites acknowledge the improvement in the coloured race from the training and education given in Christian schools, teachers from the North are generally ostracised, so far as social intercourse is concerned, by the white people, who, nevertheless, share the advantage of that improvement. There are some grateful exceptions, but few are strong enough to stand against the general boycott.

The present good accord between the United States and Great Britain is being used to discourage any discussion of this subject in this country, lest we should offend the susceptibilities of our friends across the Atlantic. But it is a very poor compliment to good and influential people in the North and West, or even in the South, to think that they do not wish to end such a ruinous condition. The Southern States cannot advance or even maintain their ground, commercially or religiously, so long as it exists. Not commercially, for capital is too sensitive to enter where the mob rules; not religiously, for the hands of God are restrained from blessing by hatred of others on account of the colour which He has given them.

Think of this, from Rev. Sam Jones, in his interview with Dr. David Macrae:

The Democrats (who are running the South politically) are very tractable ordinarily; but put a Negro in ahead of them, and I imagine that the devil himself could go to school to them and learn some new tricks.

Yet that Negro may be whiter than a sunburnt white, and morally, intellectually, and religiously, the manifest superior of those politicians who could out-trick Satan.

BARBARIC LAWLESSNESS.

The unmitigated barbarism of the recent lynchings is a flagrant instance of the lawlessness of these last days. It cannot be too strongly urged that lynching affords white criminals a means of charging their evil deeds upon innocent black men, by hanging or burning whom they appear to have executed the guilty parties, while they, the real criminals, go free. In some cases the murdered blacks are the witnesses whose evidence would have convicted those who murdered them.

During the riots at Wilmington, S.C., last November, promoted by the "tricky" politicians, three ministers were out on the side-walk with shot-guns, to protect their people against the Negroes charged with being armed for riotous purposes. Yet another minister challenged the real rioters to produce a hundred weapons of any sort taken from the Negroes whose houses or persons they had searched for arms.

One would think that any real improvement in the attitude of white to coloured must be brought about by the Christian people, led by their ministers, "the angels of the churches." But they must give up fishing with straight pins instead of hooks. The quality and quantity of steel may be the same; but the one is ineffective, the other succeeds. Nathan's parable to David would have been as a straight pin if he had not applied it with "Thou art the man." That was a barbed hook and secured his royal fish.

We heard two remarkable sermons in different cities, one on Good Friday eve, the other on Easter Sunday. They were both admirable as expositions of the truth of man's fall and redemption, and of the victory over sin through the Spirit of life in the risen and glorified Christ Jesus. I asked the second preacher if such discourses, pressed home upon the conscience in the power of the Spirit with reference to race-hatred, would not lead Christians at least to a better mind. He replied, "The prejudice is stronger than the Holy Ghost."

THE NEGRO NATION'S CALL TO FASTING AND PRAYER

The National Afro-American Council has issued a proclamation calling upon the coloured people of the United States to set apart Friday, June 2, as a day of fasting and prayer, and has called upon all coloured ministers to devote the sunrise hour of the following Sunday, June 4, to special exercises, in order that "God, the Father of mercies, may take our deplorable case into his own hands, and that if vengeance is to be meted out let God Himself repay."

The proclamation invites all the prominent coloured clergy of all denominations to co-operate, and consists of a lengthy statement setting forth the present "indescribable barbarous treatment" of the negro in this country. Reference is made to the loyalty of the negro in foreign wars, and the recent lynchings of coloured persons in the South are denounced in the most strenuous language. The circular says in part:

"We pay out millions of dollars yearly to ride in 'Jim Crow' cars, some of them scarcely fit for cattle, yet we are compelled to pay as much as those who have every accommodation and convenience. Indians, Chinamen, and every other race, can travel as they please. Such unjust laws make the railroads highway robbers. In some sections of the country we may ride for thousands of miles and are denied a cup of tea or coffee, because no provision is made, or allowed to be made, to accommodate us with something to eat while we are ready to pay for it. Waiving hundreds of minor inconveniences, we are practically outlawed by many States and also by the general Government in its endorsement of silence and indifference.

"We are dragged before the courts by thousands and sentenced to every form of punishment, and even executed without the privilege of having a jury composed in whole or in part of members of our own race, while simple justice should guarantee us judges and juries who could adjudicate our cases free from the bias, caste and prejudice incident to the same in this country.

"In many sections we are arrested and lodged in jails on the most frivolous suspicion of being the perpetrators of most hideous and revolting crimes, and regardless of establishing guilt; mobs are formed of ignorant, vicious, whisky-besotted men, with whose approach the keys of these jails and prisons are surrendered, and the suspicioned party is ruthlessly forced from the custody of the law, and tortured, hung, shot, butchered, dismembered, and burned, in the most fiendish manner.

"Nor is this dreadful fate limited to a few unfortunate and monstrous wretches, which we, like other people, doubtless have among our race; but instances have multiplied into hundreds, thousands and tens of thousands. And horrible to conceive, these mobs no longer conceal themselves in the shadows of night, but in open day plunder the prisons for the victims of their lawless vengeance, and defiantly walk into courts and rob the sheriffs and judges of their prisoners and butcher them without even time to commune in prayer with God, a privilege that no barbaric age has ever denied a soul about to be ushered into the presence of his Maker.

"Owing to these and many other calamitous conditions which time forbids a recital of, unhistoric, unprecedented, and dreadfully abnormal, we are impelled by a sense of duty and the instincts of our moral nature to appeal to the Afro-Americans in the United States to put forth some endeavours by ceasing to be longer silent and to appeal to some judiciary for help and relief. If earth affords none for our helpless and defenceless race, we must appeal to the bar of infinite power and justice, whose Judge holds the destinies of nations in his hands."

More of this next week. Is it too much to hope that Christian men and women in large numbers will heartily unite with their brethren in mourning, for such a deliverance as will constrain the Church and the world to say, "This is the finger of God"?

R. Cope Morgan.

Howard Street Gospel Mission.—The annual May meeting took place on May 25, and was a most successful gathering. The secretary read a highly encouraging report of the past year's work. The meeting was presided over by Mr. W. Vale, and Mrs. Grimes and others gave cheering addresses.

Christian Endeavour Convention at Belfast.

(From an Endeavourer.)

THE ninth annual C.E. Convention was held last week at Belfast. Ireland had no mercy as far as weather was concerned, but joined with England and Scotland in trying to damp down the spirits of the enthusiastic Endeavourers by continuous rain. It made little difference, however, in the attendance, and Belfast, as well as other towns in past years, has had a good time.

The Convention began well with the Junior Rally on Saturday, May 20. The usual Welcome and Reply also took place. It cannot be said that Belfast, as a city, did much to welcome the Convention; one was all the more glad therefore to hear the encouraging words of Mr. T. F. Shillington, J.P., who spoke on behalf of the citizens. When we say that replies were given by the presidents of the Irish and Scottish and South Wales Unions, besides Messrs. Chas. Waters, of London, and J. Willis Baer, of Boston, U.S., it will be clear to all that a good beginning was made.

On Sunday we had seven prayer meetings at seven o'clock. The Convention sermon, by Rev. Geo. H. C. Macgregor, at 9.15, was not neglected. It was not, however, all taking-in. About fifty children's services were held in the afternoon, and at eight o'clock in the evening were arranged. No amount of work seemed too great for the Convention.

A DOZEN EVANGELISTIC SERVICES

One disadvantage of the arrangements arose from the fact that two halls had to be taken, and the same subject taken in each. At the Grosvenor Hall, Rev. D. F. Mackenzie, of Glasgow, was chairman. He struck the right key-note when he maintained that they should be in the forefront of the van of the great army of Christ, fighting against all the moral evils in their land.

Miss Jennie Street's paper on "The Influence of Pernicious Literature upon the Young," was a timely effort. It was eminently practical. "You must have no shares in companies who sell such publications. You must not sell them. Instruct your fellow-workers and friends. Create a thirst for good reading by starting reading circles." A paper by Rev. J. R. Fleming, of Glasgow, in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, was no less interesting. He deplored the fact that so many of our leading novelists pandered to the lowest instincts.

It was the papers dealing with conversion, however, that won most attention and thought. It is one of the most hopeful signs of the Christian Endeavour that it has taken up root questions.

THE CONVERSION OF THE YOUNG

was one subject. Why children were not more frequently professed followers of Jesus Christ was owing to the fact that parents had no family worship, and therefore the children had no chance of being instructed in the things of God. This was the chief thought of the paper by Mr. Alex. McKeith, of Glasgow. Rev. Charles Davey treated the subject in another way. The Lord requires the young people for his world-wide purposes of mercy. He requires their intelligence, their energy, their enthusiasm; and He must have these.

If these papers brought before us the importance of the matter, the papers by Revs. J. Robertson and James Mursell brought home

OUR RESPONSIBILITY.

"God had done his best for man, and the winning of every soul to Him was a blessed possibility," said Mr. Robertson. "We must therefore never so act as to be the least hindrance to a soul entering the kingdom." "In soul winning," said Mr. Mursell, "there are two things, the revelation of the charm of Christ in Christlike character, and the presentation of the truth and claims of Jesus in personal search for that which was lost. There must be personal dealing, but there need not be the aggressiveness of the pugilist."

By this time we were ready for the next question, "Evangelistic Work." Is not this one of the great ways of winning souls for Jesus? When we had agreed on our methods of work, only one other thing sought for an answer. Am I fit to be a vessel of mercy to others? This was answered by an able paper on "Consecration," by Rev. J. F. Horsefield, Vicar of St. Silas, Bristol. Two quotations may be given: "There are many clockwork Christians, as they have been called, who get wound up at certain seasons, perhaps even C.E. Conventions, and consecrate themselves afresh time after time; but they, alas! gradually run down and slip back into a selfish, idle life, until some other spiritual clock-winder meets with them, and they start off again."

"THE FIRST STEP IN CONSECRATION

is separation—separation from the world and separation for service. Salt is not of much use when it is in the salt-box with the lid shut; it needs to be used. We must be separate in our pleasures: carrion may suit a certain class of birds, but to feed upon it the eagle must leave his flight in the open heavens in the face of the sun and descend to earth. We cannot afford to do that for the sake of what the world can offer."

The afternoon saw an immense gathering in the Ulster Hall, where Rev. Carey Bonner conducted a service of praise. This service was unique. Perhaps a large part of the animation of the meeting was the speech of Mr. J. Willis Baer, of Boston. It was real American in character, and given by a soul that felt keenly the warmth of the reception given him as he rose to speak.

The evening meeting, also in Ulster Hall, had the same enthusiasm as was manifested in the morning, although the subjects were not of the same living interest. Yet no Endeavourer could be listless when "Our Endeavour," "Home Missions," and "Foreign Missions" passed under review. Many were glad to get to rest, for the day had been one of great excitement.

Tuesday, however, found ready audiences for the papers of the day. Let it rain outside, there was no gloom in the hearts of the Endeavourers. The entrance of Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, evoked thunders of applause. "Our Personal Relation to the Holy Spirit" was Mr. Meyer's subject, and his words touched all our hearts by their tenderness. Miss Sutherland's paper on "What can we do to Advance the Temperance Cause?" showed that the C.E. is destined to lead the Church to victory on

THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

The afternoon was taken up by a Denominational Rally. It was with feelings of intense regret that we met in the evening for the last time. Rev. A. Streuli, of Manchester, took for his text Psalm civ. 34 (R.V.): "Let my meditation be sweet unto him." Meditation, he said, is a lost art. And yet there is nothing so absolutely essential to the religious life as secret meditation with God. It is not a luxury, but a supreme necessity. Failure on the contemplative side of Christianity is at the root of much of the inconsistency of believers to-day. Earthly possessions are increasing, but men and women are neglecting to possess their own souls. To regain this lost art three things are necessary. 1. Make time for fellowship with God. 2. Unto the place which the Lord thy God shall choose, thither shalt thou come. 3. The spirit of our meditation must be one of expectancy or reverent love. "The Lord be with you and bless you" was the note with which we parted, and we went home thanking God and taking courage.

Rev. F. B. Meyer was elected president for 1900. He will, therefore, have the privilege of presiding at the World's Convention of the C.E. to be held in London. An important announcement was made by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, that the Council now recommend the following addition to the pledge:—"I will support my own church and its services in every way within my power." This is a modification of what has hitherto been known as the "revised pledge."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 4. Judges xiii.

THIS chapter should be carefully pondered by mothers. It is full of deep and solemn teaching for them, based as it is on the recognition of profound natural relationships and laws. What the mother is, the child is apt to become. Not invariably, of course, but appreciably. And it is therefore of prime importance that the mother should see to herself first, that she is in all particulars what she would wish her child to be. A celebrated Frenchman, on being asked what was the best way of winning children, said aptly enough, "You must begin with their mothers, when they are still girls."

There are two ways of looking at everything,—the hopeful and the despondent, the optimist and the pessimist. Some, by the force of natural temperament, are always looking at the dark side of things, as Manoah did, and crying, "We shall surely die;" whilst others are full of strong common-sense, and detect the one chink of light in the darkened sky. "If the Lord were pleased to kill us, He would not have told us such things as these." It is right to reason about God on principles derived from the study of our own nature and of other men. This is what Jesus constantly did. "If," He said, "earthly fathers do thus, how much more your Father in heaven?"

We are told that the Spirit of God began to move Samson, and it is said that the phrase might be rendered "began to strike on his soul as on an anvil," or "began to sound in his heart as a peal of bells." Either of these will yield a beautiful meaning. Happy are those in whom God's hammer rings, and bells of holy melody resound.

"Plying their daily toil with busier feet,
Because their secret souls a sacred strain repeat."

MONDAY, June 5. Judges xiv.

Does not the young lion still come out and war against us? Too often our foreboding fancies it can detect his roar, when there is none. The sluggard and the coward say, "There is a lion in the way." But, quite often also, the lion of the pit, the lion of ungodly antagonism or hatred, the lion of formidable difficulty, roars against us. And how blessed it is when the Spirit of the Lord comes mightily upon us, so that we turn on the deadly assailant and rend it as though it were a kid! Yes, my friend, where the foe is strong, God's Spirit is stronger: where sin abounds, grace over-abounds: where heart and flesh fail, God becomes the strength of the heart and the everlasting portion. "The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid? When my enemies and my foes came upon me to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell."

It is out of such conflicts that life's true sweetness comes. As Samson put it: "Out of the eater came meat." Instead of being eaten, you eat. You are not devoured, but you devour. What appeared inimical and hostile to your welfare, is made to promote it. You rise on your dead self to a higher level. Let us never forget this, and when next the young lion comes leaping and bounding towards us, let us turn immediately to the supply of the Spirit of God, that He may give us the spoils of the fight, making the eater furnish us with meat.

And as it is with the food of life, so it is with the sweetness. Out of the strong trials and persecutions, to which God's saints have been exposed in all ages, they have extracted the sweetness of patience and long-suffering which have abashed their persecutors and made men admire the grace of God shining through them. So let it be with you.

TUESDAY, June 6. Judges xv.

There is an affecting collect of the Book of Common Prayer which complains that we are tied and bound with the chain of our sins, and this is an all too common experience, even among the children of God. But, let us notice that when the Spirit of the Lord comes mightily on a man, the ropes upon his arms become as flax burnt with fire, and his bands drop off. When the Spirit in his Pentecostal fulness is given to the eager emptied soul, He lifts it into a region where the power of the flesh is unable to claim victory, and drops off.

But the Spirit which delivered Samson from his chains also gave him power against his foes. The jawbone of an ass in the hands of a mighty man can do what none could have foreseen. And if we yield ourselves into the hand of the living Christ, what shall He not be able to achieve? When shall we learn that the work of life is done best, when we let God work it through us, when we are his weapons and instruments, and when the excellency of the power is of Him and not of us!

That incident of the water gushing where the rejected jawbone lay is very touching and beautiful. How often God causes refreshing influences to enter our souls from the scenes of our most terrible conflicts. Holy and heaven-born thoughts, Divine consolations, glimpses into new regions of truth, often accrue to us as we sink fainting on the battlefield. Then our spirit comes again, and we revive.

WEDNESDAY, June 7. Judges xvi.

This is one of the most tragic chapters in the Bible, and so true to life. Surely Tennyson borrowed from this source his conception of Merlin and Vivien, and the way in which the wily temptress wormed his secret from the sage, and fled laughing down the woodland path. Delilahs have wrought their evil work in every age of the world, and reduced to ashes the strength and peace and usefulness of God's foremost servants. Their work has been burned, though they have been saved as by fire.

No temptation springs on us without some preparatory warning. And if only Samson had been warned by the obvious treachery of the first attempts against him, he would have escaped his ultimate fate. But he would not be warned. The watchers on the prow of the noble vessel cried out, "Land ahead, breakers ahead!" but he refused to alter his course, and presently found himself on the rocks and the mighty waves breaking up his life.

The most tragic touch in the whole story is his evident unconsciousness of what he had lost. "He wist not that the Lord had departed from him." It was bad enough to lose the mighty presence and help of God, but worse indeed not to have heard the voices that cried, "Let us depart." Some day, if you do not take care, you will go out to do your accustomed work for God, and become aware that the Lord has departed from you.

Yet for backsliders there is hope, as for the imprisoned, enslaved Samson. In solitude and silence, the hair begins to grow again, new strength returns, new vows of consecration are made, new feats of heroic might are done. Peter, who denied, is the Apostle of Pentecost.

THURSDAY, June 8. Judges xvii.

This chapter contains the favourite expression, so characteristic of this book, "Every man did that which was right in his own eyes, because there was no king in Israel." Is it not always the case, that when we do not recognise the absolute kingship of our Lord, we are apt to set up for ourselves a religious system after our own ideal? We make our own ephod and teraphim, and set up a worship of God out of our own heart. It is a very important thing to ask ourselves from time to time, Am I giving God the love and worship which He claims, and in the way that He has enjoined? There is nothing better for us than to come back again and yet again to the Bible, which is the supreme directory of what God asks of his children.

Micah's personal character does not appear to have been of the highest order, for the earlier verses of the chapter suggest that he had stolen his mother's money, and it seems strange that such a man should have been anxious to have a domestic chapel and chaplain. But strange as it is, it has its counterpart in the present day. How many men there are who are defrauding those who are dependent on them, and deceiving others, who, nevertheless, are great sticklers for religious observance, and make for themselves an ephod and teraphim! Nay, are there not some who make a god out of the proceeds of unlawful gain? They think that God will overlook their faults, and do them good if only they are lavish in the maintenance of his cause.

The paltry wages, together with his board and vestments, induced the Levite to renounce his share in the service of the tabernacle. Given to change, and eager to gratify his ambition, he commenced a course which shortly afterwards culminated in still further declension, as we shall see. Beware of yielding to the first solicitations of evil.

FRIDAY, June 9. Judges xviii.

It is said that brigands in Sicily will ask the blessing of the priest before starting on an expedition, and will come to give a share of the proceeds afterwards. Even in the worst of men there is a religious instinct, which cries out for the living God, amid much inconsistency and ignorance. It was thus with the Danites. They had no scruple in robbing Micah of his gods and priests, and in slaying a defenceless people; but they must have some religious emblem and worship. We cannot count all Israel to be of Israel, nor suppose that all who profess religious interest are really religious.

It seemed a good stroke of policy on Dan's part when a part of the tribe moved from the plain of Sharon, where it was constantly subject to the inroads of the Philistines, and settled in the fertile valley which their spies discovered. But the division robbed the tribe of its cohesion and strength, and the distance secluded them from the rest of Israel. In addition to this, the introduction of Micah's images, prevented them from participating in the annual feasts at Jerusalem. As one sin leads to another, it was at Dan that Jeroboam set up one of his calves. When the national and religious spirit decayed, the tribe itself dwindled, and its name ultimately died out of the commonwealth. It is actually omitted in the enumeration of the tribes in the Apocalypse (Rev. vii.).

Amid other sad features of decadence and declension, in this chapter, notice that the R.V., with the best authorities, reads Moses instead of Manasseh in v. 30. So greatly had the family of the great law-giver deteriorated. The heart of the nation was corrupted indeed. So is it with the soul that does as seems good to itself, and refuses Jesus as King.

SATURDAY, June 10. Judges xix.

An awful story. It is necessary that the Word of God should hold its impartial mirror to human nature, that man may know what is in his heart; and that the necessity of God's interposition should become manifest. What a contrast between the state of society as revealed here and the glimpse of the New Jerusalem, which is the result of the Redeemer's blood and tears! Look on this picture, and on that. See what man is by nature, and what he may become.

One murdered life may rouse an entire nation, as in the present case. Why then is it that our people are so impassive, whilst every day tens of thousands are being ruined, not only in body, but in soul, by the iniquitous sale of strong drink, which is legalised in our midst, and by the many other methods of vice and crime which flourish almost undisturbed! Oh that men would consider of it, take advice, and speak their minds!" From all the horror of these scenes we turn to the Lamb of God—holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners. How wonderful that He should love us, whose nature is capable of such things, and that He should be willing to take our nature on Himself! Blessed Lord, Thou hast made grace to abound over the sin that so terribly abounded, that grace might reign unto eternal life!

Historical Revivals.

WHITEFIELD IN SCOTLAND.

IN the May issue of the United Presbyterian Magazine, Rev. Robert Dick, of Colinsburgh, writes the fifth of the current series of articles on "Historical Revivals." He narrates the story of Whitefield in Scotland, and describes the Cambuslang revival. Between 1741 and 1768 Whitefield paid fourteen visits. Mr. Dick says:—

"The revival movement spread itself widely over Scotland, though it was strongest in the west; and it culminated at Cambuslang, then a country parish in the near neighbourhood of Glasgow. Mr. M'Culloch, the minister, was an earnest, godly man, in no way distinguished for learning or eloquence. He was a faithful pastor, deeply concerned about the spiritual well-being of his people, and anxious for a revival amongst them. He was greatly interested in the revivals going on in England and Wales, as well as in America, and he not only kept his people informed about the movement from the pulpit, but issued a weekly sheet giving full details of Whitefield's preaching and the remarkable success that attended it. He had preached for more than a year on the subject of Regeneration, showing the necessity of conversion and the radical change it produces in the heart and life, when

SOME OF THE FRUIT BEGAN TO APPEAR.

"A spirit of serious concern about religion manifested itself in the congregation. Meetings for prayer were frequently held by the people themselves, and in January, 1742, a petition was presented to him, signed by ninety heads of families, asking for a week-day service. This was at once instituted, and the attendance was nearly as large as on the Sabbath days. By the middle of February as many as fifty anxious inquirers had come to him; and for some months after this he was engaged every day exhorting the people, or dealing with individual cases in the manse. At the end of April he had reason to believe that about three hundred persons had been awakened, and that of these two hundred had been hopefully converted and had found peace and joy in believing, and that the remainder were earnestly seeking Christ as their Saviour.

"The attendance at public worship on the Sabbaths had immensely increased. The church was small and out of repair, and for months Mr. M'Culloch preached in the open air; and at the evening services in the summer great crowds came from Glasgow and the neighbouring parishes, no doubt attracted, in most cases, by curiosity about the spiritual experiences of which so much has been heard, though many came in the hope of getting a like blessing for themselves. The place was well adapted for the purpose. It has been described as a green brae on the east side of a deep ravine near the church, hollowed out by nature in the form of the level tract of ground in front of the tent being capable of containing many thousands, and being well adapted for sitting and hearing; and on several Sabbath evenings in the early summer of 1742 the attendance was computed at 9,000 to 10,000. For some time there was a sermon every day, and Mr. M'Culloch was assisted by many of the evangelical clergy who came to see the work for themselves, and who readily took part in it by preaching and conversing with the anxious in private.

AN AMPHITHEATRE,

"The annual observance of the Lord's Supper took place in July, at which Whitefield was present, along with many other ministers. This was the first occasion on which the popular evangelist had preached at Cambuslang; the Revival had attained great dimensions without his personal presence, though undoubtedly it was largely owing to his work, as many of the Cambuslang parishioners who were most eager in furthering the work had been converted under his preaching at Glasgow and elsewhere. On the preceding Tuesday, Whitefield preached three times to vast audiences, and, in giving an account of it afterwards, he said that the commotion far outdid anything he had seen in America. To quote his own words, 'There was much weeping, and the people were smitten by scores. They were carried off and brought into the house like wounded soldiers taken from the field of battle.' On the Sabbath two tents were set up, and from these preaching was carried on the whole day. The Sacrament was observed in the open air; the tables accommodated about a hundred communicants at a time, and these were filled and emptied seventeen times; and at night Whitefield preached for an hour and a half to the entire audience, which he computed to consist of about 20,000 persons. He again preached on the Monday morning, and the excitement was even more pronounced than on the earlier days. 'Thousands were bathed in tears—some wringing their hands, others almost swooning, and others crying out and mourning over a pierced Saviour.' The services had been preceded by much prayer on the part of the people. Many of them, in little companies, spent practically whole nights in prayer, praising the Lord for what He had done for them, and seeking further blessings for themselves and others.

MANY FALLING INTO DEEP DISTRESS,

"A few weeks afterwards, on the third Sabbath of August, the Communion was again observed. This was unusual, but the special circumstance attending the former celebration seemed to warrant it. The was very great; many had found it a blessed experience, and longed to enjoy it again; others had shrunk from communicating on account of their distracted condition, and now wished a further opportunity; while not a few who had not been present on the first occasion desired to attend. The proposal was made by Whitefield, and supported by other ministers, and M'Culloch consented to it, having learned from his kirk session and the praying societies in the district that the desire for it was very general. No fewer than twelve ministers assisted him on this occasion, of which Whitefield was the chief. Three tents were set up, from which the various ministers preached in turns. Three thousand persons communicated, as was ascertained by the number of tokens distributed, and the attendance was estimated at 30,000, many having come from England and Ireland, and even from the ranks of the secession. On the Sabbath Day public worship began at half-past eight in the morning, and the serving of tables continued till sunset, the people crowding in so fast that often there was only time to sing one verse of a psalm after serving one table before beginning another; and the day's services were concluded by Whitefield preaching to an immense audience in the churchyard amid the falling rain.

EXCITEMENT THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY

"It cannot be doubted that the whole movement was the work of God—a Pentecostal effusion of the Holy Spirit. Mr. M'Culloch of the more noticeable cases, and from his observation of the subsequent manner of life of these converts, he satisfied himself that the great majority of them were truly the subjects of Divine grace. There were hypocrites and impostors among them, but these cases were exceptional. And many of the ministers who had the opportunity of taking part in the revival, and of seeing it for themselves, testified to the wonderful reformation in the lives of multitudes. Similar revivals, though on a less extended scale, were experienced elsewhere, as in Kilsyth, where Mr. Robe was frequently assisted by Thomas Gillespie, of Carnock, afterwards the founder of the Relief Church; in Edinburgh and Glasgow, and in many places in the northern counties of Scotland which Whitefield had never visited; and although the excitement and the abnormal manifestations soon died out, the effects of the revival were abiding.

KEPT A MINUTE ACCOUNT

"The peculiar phenomena that accompanied this revival in many places, but especially at Cambuslang, formed no necessary part of the movement, and furnished no evidence of its genuineness, being rather an excrescence on it. The cries of terror and the falling down in fainting fits, the bodily contortions, the penitents, or as they were called, sitting together in a prominent place, with white napkins on their heads, were all to be deprecated, and cannot be desired in future revivals. Yet it is not hard to suggest some explanation of the excitement, excessive though it was. When a crowd of some thousands is gathered together, the contagion of fear readily spreads from one to another. Many of the addresses were of an awe-inspiring nature. The awful condition of lost souls was often vividly pictured, and the preachers besought sinners with intense earnestness to be reconciled to God. Then the people attended these meetings, not as the performance of a formal duty or as a matter of custom—as it is to be feared is the case with many church-goers at the present day—but with ardent expectations, and prepared to have their feelings strung up to the highest pitch; and when a strong conviction of their sinfulness and unpreparedness for the Day of Judgment fastened itself in their consciences, it is not wonderful that their feelings found expression in cries of terror.

'WOUNDED SOULS,'

"As we think of the great blessing that came to the Scottish Churches through Whitefield's preaching, one cannot help uttering the prayer of the Psalmist, 'Lord, wilt Thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in Thee?' No doubt future revivals will be different in many ways from those of the past, yet some features of former ones will never be absent. For one thing, they must be prepared for beforehand by earnest and widespread prayer for the descent of the Holy Spirit, for the gifts of God always depend largely on human expectations. The great Gospel facts of sin and salvation, the setting forth of the death of Christ on the Cross as an atonement for the guilt of men, and the need of a new spiritual force in the soul of man to produce a higher life, must occupy a large place in pulpit teaching. Probably to spiritual life at the present day is the worldliness of so many professed followers of Christ; and this again is traceable to the inadequate views of the nature of sin held by so many, and which is largely fostered by much of the religious literature of the day: and it is not at all likely that any great movement will take hold of the souls of men, as the revivals of last century did, unless the destroying power of sin, and the clamant necessity of deliverance from it, is made a prominent feature. It is much to appropriate the fatherly love of God, and to seek an imitation of the life of Jesus, but these can have no sure foundation unless they are built on the regenerating influences of the Holy Spirit, and the personal surrender of the will to the commands of God. It was the preaching of the Gospel with heart-searching power, and with direct forceful application to the consciences of men, that wrought such wonders in Cambuslang and other places; and such preaching adapted to the needs of the age may lead to a revival at any time. The Lord hasten it in his own good way!"

THE CHIEF HINDRANCE

Dr. Stewart on Missions.

We append extracts from the opening address by Dr. Stewart, of Lovedale, Africa, as moderator of the Scottish Free Assembly in Edinburgh. Dr. Stewart has laboured long and with singular success as a medical missionary, and his words come therefore with the greater weight. A few years ago we gave his portrait and an account of his work at Lovedale. We reproduce his portrait on this page.

AFRICA is that land of mystery and magnetic attraction into which he who has travelled will travel again. It has been called the dark Continent, and the neglected Continent, and the long-lost Continent, and was long generally regarded as a part of the world not worth attention. It is undoubtedly a strange Continent with a strange history—a land of mystery—historical, geographical, and moral. To what purpose have its countless tribes come and gone like the leaves of autumn, after having been born to an inheritance with so little in it of what makes life worth living to us? This idea, also, about the African Continent being worth nothing has, within the last ten or fifteen years,

UNDERGONE A STRANGE REVERSION.

Nothing more remarkable has ever been witnessed than the great struggle of all the European Powers to obtain large areas of that Continent, which they formerly refused to take as a gift. No more stupendous partition of the earth's surface, within the same time and by the same means without war, amongst the partitioners at least, has ever taken place in history. And of this vast Continent—5,000 miles long by 5,000 broad, and stretching through seventy degrees of latitude—only one and a half millions of square miles now remain unappropriated.

Under the old régime, or the power of hereditary chiefs, Africa was a land where all things continued always the same, without change or improvement of any kind, except that, when the strong man arose, he enlarged his little territory by devastating and destroying the territory of his neighbour. Under a rule of this kind, progress and civilisation were impossible, and a fixed condition of barbarism and the despotic rule of individual chiefs was perpetuated. Their government contained not a single element of an elevating or humanising kind. Cruelty, torture, death were the methods of procedure, and the punishment inflicted on districts which fell under the ban was to sweep the people and the villages out of existence.

In the first rough regeneration of the African Continent, this country has taken a conspicuous part; also in many other forms of activity. In exploration, in the spread of commerce, in the planting of Christianity, no other country in the world has expended money, life, and effort so freely. The great partition which has taken place lately means a rapid change of government, with a correspondingly rapid change in the social state of the people. In some regions we could wish the method had been different from what it is. We have to make some unfortunate admissions. If all is true that we hear of the administration of the Congo Free State, and even some parts of German territory, the natives must be much puzzled at the ways of white men. At times they may also think that the old barbarism was as good as the new civilisation. A great deal has been done that is simply deplorable, discreditable, and inhuman. But out of all this there will gradually emerge a better and more human administration.

There is no doubt that the African Continent will now rapidly be civilised. A great deal of its future, however, depends on the kind of civilisation now to be introduced, and whether with or without the Gospel. Let us turn to the general subject of missionary work, present and future.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

The future of Christian missions is nothing less than the future of Christianity. Any doubt cast upon the one becomes reflected upon the other. And in what I may say I shall attempt to show that Christianity is the one remaining remedy for the world's ills, the one last hope of humanity, and that it is more likely than any other means to make human life a happier, better, completer thing—the ideal thing we want it to be, and feel that it might be. If this can be shown, it will afford a strong reason for missions. I put it this way because there are many whose hope lies in the future of modern civilisation. They are inspirited with its marvellous progress as that appears at the present day. They say civilisation, or all that is comprehended in that complex term, has something to show as having helped mankind.

WHAT HAS CHRISTIANITY DONE?

Those who take this view and are unfriendly to Christianity, illustrate and defend their view by pointing—to take only one instance—to the condition of the world at the close of this century, and say that when the twentieth century begins, nothing like or approaching to what will then exist as the armies of the Christian nations of Europe has ever been seen since the world began. Is this, they ask, the reign of the Prince of Peace and the fulfilment of the angels' song? This is but one instanceof many forms of objection; and it is also an instance of the subtle fallacy and perverse reasoning current enough at all times, and certainly current at the present time, which confounds the thing itself, namely Christianity, with imperfect representations of it. And, from an erroneous and confused opinion of this kind, they drop down to a total disbelief in Christian missions, and even to disbelief in the work of the Church at home, and go over to the other side, to a region of life in which practical religion is a shadowy belief or a pallid ghost. There is nothing wrong with Christianity, whatever there may be with Christians—that is, with our good and worthy, noble or humble selves. Our impatience, our prejudice, our narrowness, and our frequent misconceptions of God's ways of working in his own world have often led to entirely wrong conclusions.

But there is no need to be down-hearted, nor is there the slightest reason for any decay of hope, or paralysis of effort. Neither the world of humanity, nor the cause of Christianity is exactly in the same position as when He came. With all its unrighted and countless wrongs, with all its vast misery, and with all its immeasurable iniquities, the world is a better world since Jesus Christ began his teachings. And that being so, it is well that these teachings should go on, and that

CAN ONLY BE DONE BY CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

In offering a statement on their behalf, or an argument in support of them, we require to take into account the opinions that are held about missions; to consider what rival forces they may have to contend with, for the favourable opinion of the world generally, and to ask what the probabilities are of their final and complete success.

If we can start with a conviction that the two following statements are sound in substance, and true in the reasoning or process by which they have been reached, then our way will be so far clear. First, that the religion of Jesus Christ is the religion best fitted for all mankind in all countries, conditions, and climates. Second, that no other influence, not even the great influence of modern civilisation, can be substituted for Christianity, or do the work which Christianity does in the world's regeneration. The proof of these two points would be rather a long process, and I must ask you to assume that both statements are fairly correct, whatever objections might be formally brought against them. . . .

To those who are always advising missionaries to civilise first and Christianise afterwards, and thereby betray their doubt in the power of Christianity, it is enough to reply that man as man—the nineteenth century man in this country, or the Central African man as we find him to-day—can never be completely served or entirely satisfied with what civilisation can give him or do for him. Man himself created civilisation; he knows that he will outlive it, for he has a suspicion that he has come from the Eternal, and is going back to Him who alone is Eternal; and, therefore, though the wonders which civilisation has to offer may please him for a little, they cannot satisfy him. He needs something more.

PROGRESS OF MISSIONS.

There is also the slow progress of missions on which some found objections. The causes of this slow progress are so far explainable. Some are due to the methods, some to the agents, and some to the nature of the work. We have not yet discovered all the best and most necessary methods of missionary work, and from the very progress which the world has made, that work is more complicated and difficult to-day. These methods will, however, be discovered; and a science of missions will no doubt gradually emerge. Then there are the mistakes which missionaries themselves make. I know I myself have made mistakes enough to make my days uneasy, and to fill my nights with evil and troubled dreams. There is also belonging to this cause the fact that I suppose most missionaries will admit, that the work requires more moral strength and spiritual force than most of us naturally possess, and that here is our greatest failure.

As affecting the work itself, there seems to exist an expectation on the part of many Christians, of some great and sudden intervention of the Divine Power on behalf of missionary effort; or if not that, at least the appearance of an undoubted, steady influence producing marked and rapid progress, such as will gladden the hearts of all Christians, encourage all missionaries, and demonstrate to the world that Christianity is of God and not of man.

THERE ARE TWO ANSWERS TO THIS.

The first is, men are not aware—that is, the Christian Church is not aware—of the magnitude of the change that is going on all over the world at the present time where missionary effort exists. Another answer to it is this: if human history or that of Christianity teaches us anything, it shows this, that human progress is mostly slow, that human nature changes from worse to better with great reluctance, with many aberrations and returns to the old condition.

If I may give my own observation of more than thirty years over my own field, and of what I have gathered from other fields, it is this, that slow organic change is the law which rules in missionary operations as well as in the realms of nature, of God's providence, and of human society. There is only one point where a new and different element comes into missionary work. It is the point where the direct interference, addition, or intervention of God's power becomes apparent—that is, when the action of God's own Spirit, moving the human will without destroying its liberty, results in the conversion of an individual soul, and by this influence a new man emerges out of the old, a totally different man—in other words, a converted man or a Christian. When this happens, the missionary has to stand by and look on, and, with awe and wonder, admit that more than human agency or slow organic change is there. Except for this, all else, the education of intellect, heart, conscience, brain, and hand, proceed as if it were an ordinary human process, in which no spiritual element or aim is involved. But this is no reason for diminishing missionary effort, or standing idly by, waiting for some great interference or help from God Himself. It only shows the need of multiplying the agency by which divine help becomes possible. No heathen becomes a Christian without having Christianity presented to him.

A MISSIONARY POLICY.

I have now, with all deference and humility, to submit to you a proposal for the future. It is that the Free Church proceed to work out the idea that Christ is King of the world as well as King of the Church—the real and ideal King. In Him alone, now and always, and in all that concerns humanity and its destiny, the real and ideal truly, fully, and eternally meet. This means the adoption of a missionary policy. We all know what a policy is. It is a dominating idea that insinuates itself, or that rules a great variety of action with a definite end in view, whether it be the action of a Government, or nation, or Church. It is a spirit rather than an act. Let no one be unduly alarmed. I am not proposing a centenary fund; but the adoption of a missionary policy; that is, that the settled aim of this Church shall be to direct a larger amount of attention and effort to the work of foreign missions, and that this shall regulate a large amount of its activity. It would mean a certain amount of re-organisation, distribution of information, and the interesting of every individual member, adherent, and minister of the Church in this great work; and that not as an occasional or spasmodic effort, but as a continuous work carried on day by day and year by year. It would also touch the missionary finance of this Church in a beneficial way.

THE FOUNDATIONS OF SUCH A POLICY.

The policy I am referring to is a more serious, more important, and more difficult matter than to raise £100,000, or even a larger sum. It would need to rest on a broad foundation, and be well planned with statesmanlike grasp; and later on made public as an intention, or, better still, silently and earnestly begun without much formal proclamation, except within the Christian constituency, on whose support it must depend. For a foundation there must be strong conviction, a simple desire to obey a command not yet fully obeyed, a strong belief in the power of Christianity to help the world, as the chief and most important power in that process. This is the true basis of missions. The sentiment of missions will not do, because sentiment is to missionary work what colour is to any substance or fabric. The enthusiasm of humanity won't do, good as that is; for in such work, enthusiastic humanity as a missionary force is apt to be shocked and driven off the field by that other humanity, or portion of it, on which it works, and which is enthusiastic about nothing except its own evil and foolish and wicked ways. The enthusiasm of denominationalism will do still less. Its air is too close, its horizon too narrow, and its aim too temporary.

With the utmost deference I repeat, I submit this proposal to the representatives of this Church, and beg for it, at least, a consideration and a deliberate and not hurried judgment. Of it, and about it, I could say that no higher, safer, or sounder policy lies in the coming century for this Church or any other Church. It is as safe as duty itself, than which there is nothing safer at all times and in all circumstances, and for all sorts and conditions of men and churches. I suggest it because I believe it contains within itself the means or idea of considerable consolidation of our work and many other advantages. I believe it would be acceptable to the members of this Church, and to most of the ministers. I believe its immediate effect on congregations and individuals would be to take them out of themselves, to make them value more highly the blessings they already possess, to elevate the various activities of every well-ordered congregation, to widen their religious interests and sympathies, and to give them the happy consciousness of a performed duty. It might be the direct road to a new spiritual revival, provided the motive were right and the work properly done.

It may be said that this work is already being done. That is true, but proper consideration will show that more is meant than a mere sudden and temporary effort. It may also be said that since the work is being done, why should more burdens be laid on a Church that is already doing its duty? The reply is, this is the way God rewards us when we do our duty. It is always thus—promotion to something higher and more difficult. To rule ten cities is more difficult than to trade with ten talents; and so He draws us on from one level to another, upwards till we reach the shining table-lands where God himself is sun and moon.

One proviso only is necessary, and that must be secured beyond all doubt or danger. That is, that all home interest must first be entirely safeguarded, that the home mission is not to be sacrificed to the foreign mission, and that the present missions be not allowed to suffer in any way. Who is to do the work of raising the money which this new policy of extension will in the course of years involve? The contributors themselves are to raise it. Let him who believes in this policy, and who wishes it were adopted, add a little to what he has already given. It is surprising how great a difference the addition of a very small amount would make to the funds of the Foreign Mission Committee.

STRATEGIC POINTS.

Now that the African Continent is opening up, there are points which are called, in common phrase, strategic points, which it is not wise in missionary churches to neglect, or to be behindhand in occupying. I say this from personal knowledge and observation of what I see going on in that continent. By the adoption of this policy, some of these points could be occupied ere it be too late, and if the Free Church public and the committee approve, and after full consideration agree to launch out on this new course, I am willing to go and see such points taken possession of and the work commenced. I have, however, no special field to propose to the exclusion of any other. I do not say Africa to the exclusion of Asia, with its multitudinous millions, but if a new field is wanted, I can suggest one. In it we can try a new departure by an inexpensive and humble beginning.

Some preliminary inquiries have already been made. Capital is powerful in South Africa, and has certain well-known representatives. Some of these are in this country now, or were, till the sailing of the last steamer for the Cape. One or two of the great men of that order have been approached. The request was a perfectly modest one. It was simply for £10,000 and 100 square miles of land for the new mission. In these days, when millions are required to connect the Cape and Cairo, that amount is entirely a negligeable quantity. For the regeneration of a continent more is necessary than even so great and useful a work as the connection of the Cape with Cairo by an iron road, important as that really is. The reply to this inquiry was not encouraging. The best lands of a vast region were said to be in the hands of companies, which is unfortunately true; and about the £10,000, they would see later. From capital, then, we turn to Christianity, for Christianity and not capital is the one hope of the world's future.

At a Wayside Station in May.

A spirit divine hath touched thee,
Thou wondrous sleeping earth,
Flushing thy cheeks with colour,
Flooding thy lips with mirth!
The clouds seem touched with a great surprise,
And a golden rapture holds the hill,
And a ripple of dancing butterflies
Makes sunny silence sunnier still.
And the nightingale listens, then sings again
Of the love that skirts the haunts of men.
And the lark hath caught a wingéd thought
Of joy he dare not discover,
Till he mounts on high through depths of sky
Right over his listening lover,
Tearing the blue, as he struggles through,
With an ecstasy for ever new,
An ecstasy all fire and dew—
Melting the Heaven with bliss, God-given,
And the love of one little heart all true!

Charles A. Fox.

World-Wide Evangelisation Prayer Union.

About the beginning of 1897 my mother, Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe, invited friends to join a Union to pray for the advancement of our Lord's Kingdom throughout the whole world, without restricting the members of the Union to time or place. From many far-away countries warm and loving acceptances came, and the chain of prayer thus formed almost surrounds the globe.

On April 30, 1899, my beloved mother was called to enter the presence of the Saviour she loved so well. Though she had been ill since January, I did not know she was dying until Friday, April 21, when suddenly she took a bad turn, and rapidly grew worse and worse until the end.

The Prayer Union was very dear to her heart, and many hours she spent over it trying in some measure to carry out my father's last recorded words, "I want — I want — the Christians to go all over the world spreading the Glad News."

Now that both my parents have gone to glory, will you allow me the privilege of trying to carry on the Prayer Union,

IN MEMORIAM
Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe, so that I may be specially linked with all the members over the wide world in prayer for all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues?

A meeting for this object my mother started at "The Strangers' Rest," 24, Park Lane, Liverpool, and many bags containing Bibles, books, tracts, &c., in different languages, are sent by sailors and foreigners over the world. On Sunday, May 14, twenty countries were represented by men at "The Rest."

But bitterly do we miss the leadership, advice, prayers, companionship, and love of both my parents, who started "The Rest" about twenty-two years ago, and it is with sorrow and tears the workers now meet.

Those Christians whose hearts God has enlarged to pray for world-wide evangelisation would be welcomed to this Union if they would kindly send their addresses to me. There is no subscription.

(Miss) Catherine E. Radcliffe.
Inglewood, Waterloo, Liverpool.

Bible Defence Union of Scotland.

A circular has been issued by this organisation, opening in these terms:—"There never was a time when it was not beneficial to direct attention to the only Book in all literature which sheds God's full light upon man's heart and life. But the need of such work to-day is urgent. The faith of our young people in the Bible is being silently but powerfully assailed. What it will mean to send out these with the basis of moral conviction in ruins, we need not say. No wise man can contemplate such a prospect without alarm, and no lover of his kind will fail to do what he can to avert such a catastrophe. The assault and the panic are alike unjustified by any fresh facts. These, as they have been disclosed by recent science and discovery, have brought to the Bible some of the most extraordinary confirmations which it has ever received."

In view of these things, the Union has made arrangements with Rev. John Urquhart, whose work during recent years in connection with the Bible League is well known, to serve the cause of truth by meeting the special needs of the hour. The circular proceeds: "Mr. Urquhart will be pleased to preach at the ordinary Sabbath services in churches throughout the country, and to arrange for week-night lectures or drawing-room meetings, wherever these may be desired. He will begin his work in June, and applications for services and lectures should be sent in as soon as possible. Funds, of course, are required for the work, and we feel sure that they will be gladly contributed."

The treasurer of the Union is Mr. Thomas Niccol, 93, Hope Street, Glasgow. Further information may be had from the secretary, Mr. A. B. Munro, 129, Bath Street, Glasgow.

Chinese Converts.

By Mrs. G. C. NEEDHAM.

AFTER ten months' wandering in heathen lands, the Lord has graciously brought us to our own home in peace. Often during these past days we proved what it meant to be "strangers and foreigners, yet fellow citizens with the saints." Observation has confirmed what we long held in theory, that the foreign missionaries, wherever you find them, are the noblest types of Christian character upon the face of the globe. We saw everything to admire among these devoted heralds of the cross, and almost nothing to deplore.

Our most pleasing experience just before leaving the interior of China (the region of literal and spiritual graves) to take the boat for Shanghai, was to visit the neat little home of a converted Chinese young woman. I want to tell a bit of her history, with the hope that thereby I may provoke someone to take up a line of charity for which we saw much need.

Lu Weng was put to a mission school when quite young — a little betrothed maiden promised to a man she had never seen by an ambitious and unloving step-mother. Her unusual beauty and gracefulness and brightness attracted the affection and prayers of all the teachers. After six years, when her education was finished, she left the school an earnest Christian convert. Very quickly she found a great gulf bewixt her and her relatives. The man had no use for a Christian wife, and her cruel stepmother tried to beat the "foreign" notions out of her.

In her distress she hastened to the kind ladies of the school, and begged them to take her back. But what could they do? Scores of similar cases are constantly presenting themselves to the missionaries. The boards at home make no provision for such extra charities. The meagre salaries allowed them are barely sufficient to meet their own domestic wants. How can they buy rice for every convert, starving and ostracised by relatives? Yet their hearts bleed over these poor creatures, whose souls may be lost if their bodies be not attended to, and so everywhere we found the dear missionaries pinching their own expenses a little tighter each year, that they might have wherewith to help the native converts.

After much trial to poor Lu Weng's faith, and much prayer by the ladies, her relatives came to the school and offered to sell her for the high-sounding sum of 40,000dols. The missionaries pleaded, "Slavery is wrong; we cannot buy girls." "Very well," said the indifferent relatives, "then we sell her to an opium joint, and she bring us plenty of money."

It was a time of crisis for all concerned. There was a long and anxious season of parleying. But the dear girl must be saved from the dreadful life of compulsory sin that threatened her. And so, waiving all theories about establishing a bad precedent, one of the noble ladies decided to take the risk of buying her, and for the girl she paid in gold, out of her own salary, all that she had been saving for a year to give herself a much-needed outing during the heat of summer.

A fine young native pastor was deeply in love with Lu Weng. But so long as she was betrothed to another he kept his preference a secret, while Lu Weng herself, and the ladies thought his choice was for another girl. So it was an utter surprise when he asked her hand of the lady who had redeemed her, and received it amid such romantic emotion and joy as is rarely manifested by the dignified, undemonstrative Chinese.

It was their pretty home I visited. The missionaries urged me to visit it in order that the history of Lu Weng might be more deeply impressed upon my memory. Together this young couple, both of them well-educated and speaking English, are preaching and teaching the Gospel of Christ.

Where would Lu Weng have been to-day but for the self-denial of one lady missionary? In all places the need grew upon us for the placing by the different Home Boards of some discretionary fund, which the missionaries could draw upon in such a contingency to tide over similar cases. There is now in Yokohama a noted fortune teller, converted in one of my husband's meetings last November, who is tempted to go back to heathenism because his employment is gone; he is starving, and the missionaries cannot assume his support.

Preaching and teaching is only half the missionary's daily service. Practical doing is the other half, and in this their hands are sadly crippled by want of means.

Philadelphia.

Soldiers' Home at Cairo.

THE readers of The Christian who have so kindly contributed towards the purchase of the Alhambra will be glad to know we got possession on May 8. The delay in the transfer has been unavoidable, some of the owners being minors and not residing in Cairo. The property is a valuable one; it is in the centre of the city, and near Shepherd's Hotel, just behind the American mission.

I have had the building examined by the chief of the sanitary department under the Egyptian Government. He reports:—"After my examination of the building known as the Alhambra, I have to inform you that the existing sanitary arrangement will have to be entirely suppressed and a new system devised more in accordance with accepted hygienic conditions, before it would be fit for occupation. I can also state that in my opinion the walls, after a little consolidation, are sufficiently strong to bear another storey. The price you are paying for the premises, compared with the price of similar property in Cairo, is very reasonable."

We are paying for the Alhambra £3,300 (English); court dues, brokerage, legal expenses, &c., will bring the cost up to about £3,750 sterling. But we have been assured by a competent authority that the value of the ground alone is £4,100, and the house more than £4,000. Messrs. Hamilton and Grant, sanitary engineers and builders, are giving me an estimate of the cost of a new sanitary system, building a storey as apartments for our workers, with painting and putting in order the whole house. This does not include furnishing and fitting up. They estimate roughly this will cost £2,500 to be in keeping with the rest of the house. We are asking for £5,000; of this we have £465.

The Cameron and Seaforth Regiments are in Cairo. In October the 1st Battalion of the Camerons go home and the 2nd Battalion comes out. They have, as regiments, been recruited from the Highlands of Scotland, and "many of them never tasted drink until they enlisted." The leader of our tract distribution band, a young Highlander, said to me last night, "There are so many young lads in my regiment who have Christian parents, sisters, and sweethearts, and they want to be right. I visit the bazaars on Sunday night to try and bring my comrades to the meeting, and they tell me they long to be different. And the poor women in the bazaars are glad to get the French and Italian tracts I give them. One old woman has asked me for a larger book about Jesus. So I am going to get a Bible for her."

God has given us this place as a centre for Christian work among the soldiers and a true home, and we believe He will use this house for his glory. Could our friends hear our soldiers plead for the money now needed to complete our Cairo Soldiers' Home, I feel sure their hearts would be stirred to send in at once what is required so as to enable us to open it early in the autumn free of debt.—Yours, &c., (Mrs.) Alice Todd Osborn, Hon. Treas., &c.

Rysland, Newton Mearns, N.B.

Tangier.—Writing with respect to a second visit to Tangier, after an interval of seventeen years, Mr. George Holmes remarks thankfully on the growth of the work of the North Africa Mission. He also noted the more friendly feeling that exists on the part of the natives and the willingness with which they now hear the Gospel message. Mr. Holmes testifies to the universal esteem in which the late Miss Herdman was held, and he urges prayer that greater freedom may be granted by the authorities to those who confess Christ.

International S.S. Lessons.

June 11, 1899.

"Christ Risen."—John xx. 11-20.

Golden Text.—1 Cor. xv. 20.

Parallel passages: Matt. xxviii. 1-20, Mark xvi. 1-20, Luke xxiii. 56, xxiv. 1-12.

Lesson Connection.

WE left Jesus hanging on the cross dead. He died much more quickly than most who were crucified. The soldiers, to make sure that he was really dead, pierced his side with a spear (John xix. 34, 35). Then Joseph, a rich man, took the body, and, with the help of Nicodemus and the women, laid it, wrapped in linen cloths, in a new tomb. The stone was sealed, and a band of soldiers set to watch. Jesus' body was hurriedly buried because the Sabbath was nigh; that began at 6 o'clock on Friday evening. The body remained in the grave till Sunday morning. Christ then by his own power left the grave (read Matt. xxviii. 2-4, John x. 18). Only the Roman soldiers saw it, and they were terrified. Very early on the first day of the week the women returned with the spices they had prepared for embalming the body. Mary of Magdala reaches the tomb first and hastens away to tell Peter; the other women follow, afterwards Peter and John; and Mary of Magdala finally is left behind alone. (Picture all this in detail and make it real.)

John xx. 11-20.

Verse 11. Mary of Magdala must not be confused with the woman who was a sinner (Luke vii. 37, viii. 1-3). She loved Christ so much she must linger and look again.

Verse 12. Our eyes cannot see spiritual bodies unless by the special power of God. Quote other times when men were allowed to see angels. These angels waited to give God's message of comfort. What did they look like? (See Mark xvi. 5; Matt. xxviii. 3, 4.)

Verse 14. As she talked, a shadow of some one, perhaps, fell across the entrance, and Mary turned. Jesus was there in his resurrection body, a spiritual body, which could only be seen when He chose to make it visible. Why did she not know Him? Not expecting Him, perhaps her eyes blinded with tears, or something different in his appearance. Note how brave Mary was, how determined to find her Lord. To all who thus earnestly seek, He will be found.

Verse 16. The love and power in the voice of the Saviour (John x. 3, 27). It was like saying, "Don't you know me?"

Verse 17. The word here does not mean to touch or handle, as verse 27, Luke xxiv. 39, but do not hold Me or cling to Me now. I am not going to ascend directly; hasten and tell the disciples. If Jesus is our own Lord and Saviour, then his Father is our Father, his God our God. The Son of God honours women specially.

Verse 18. Mary's love and faith prompted her to obedience. How was her message received? (Luke xxiv. 11).

Verse 19. Jesus made Himself seen five times on the first day after his resurrection, and appeared many times afterwards. He remained on earth for forty days, and then in the presence of his disciples ascended up to Heaven (Acts i. 1-11).

The Resurrection of Christ is the best attested fact in history, and is the crowning proof that He is the Son of God. It shows us that death is not the end: the spirit lives after the body dies. We have a living Saviour up in heaven, who hears our prayers and intercedes for us. Stephen saw Him (Acts vii. 55, 56), and so did Paul (Acts ix. 3-6). It assures us of our resurrection, and takes away the fear of death. Death is only the gate of glorious, sinless life. Paul wrote four of his letters within thirty years of Christ's death, and said then that there were more than 250 people living who had seen Jesus after his resurrection (1 Cor. xv. 6, 35-58).

Recorded Appearances of Christ after Resurrection.

1. To Mary Magdalene. John xx. 14.
2. To other women. Matt. xxviii. 9.
3. To Peter specially. Luke xxiv. 34.
4. To two disciples. Luke xxiv. 13-15.
5. To the ten Apostles. John xx. 19.
6. Again when Thomas was present. John xx. 26.
7. In Galilee. John xxi. 1-4.
8. To disciples on a mountain. Matt. xxviii. 16.
9. To 500 people at once. 1 Cor. xv. 6.
10. To James specially. 1 Cor. xv. 7.
11. At the Ascension. Luke xxiv. 50; Acts i. 9, 10.
12. To Paul. 1 Cor. xv. 8

Christian Instruction Society.

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS presided at the annual meeting of this Society, which was held at the Hampstead Congregational Church, of which Dr. R. F. Horton is pastor.

Miss Neuman, the secretary, in presenting the seventy-fourth annual report, rejoiced that there had been an increase of the income, and that no districts had been closed, as it was feared would have been the case from the prospects at the last annual meeting. At the same time she had received many letters from ministers in south, east, and central London beseeching the Society to send deaconesses to visit in their district, but owing to the limited means at disposal all such appeals had of necessity been refused.

Mr. T. Dence, the treasurer, remarked that there were now some thirty deaconesses continually at work, and that the income and expenditure were gradually equalising themselves. The total income last year amounted to a little over £1,400. Sir George Williams, in a few words, explained the Mission of the Deaconess to carry the Gospel into the poorest home and make glad the hearts bowed down by sin and misery. He showed how the more wealthy churches could share in the spoils of these labourers by assisting such a Society as this to send forth an increased number into the poorer districts.

Dr. Horton sincerely trusted that, as the outcome of the Society's visit to his church, they would make an effort to provide at least for one such worker amongst themselves. Rev. Andrew Mearns pointed out that any church needing the services of a deaconess could have one on raising half the expense, that is, £20. Interesting incidents were given by a few of the deaconesses as to the encouragements as well as the difficulties of their work.

Strangers' Friend Society.

A PUBLIC meeting in connection with the 113th anniversary of this Society was held a few days ago in the lecture hall of the City Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, when several speakers testified to the great good effected by the Society's 167 voluntary and unpaid agents, who are engaged in ameliorating the condition of the sick poor of London, regardless of creed or nationality.

One gentleman related how, after visiting a poor sick woman on behalf of the Society, at the building in Drury Lane (where recently a man was murdered by being thrown from one of the windows), he was arrested by a detective as a "suspicious" character, and was obliged to accompany the officer to Bow Street before the blunder was discovered.

The treasurer of another district referred to the sad case of a lady visitor sacrificing her life in the Society's work by contracting small-pox from a poor sufferer whom she visited. His thirty-six years' experience as one of the voluntary agents was, that the visitors were always prepared courageously to do their duty in face of all dangers. On an average fifteen thousand visits, exclusive of those necessary to investigate cases which prove unworthy or outside the Society's rules to assist, are annually paid to the sick and sorrowful, and relief is given at each.

The administrators of the charity have ever striven to be guided by the principles and teachings of Christ in their solicitude for the less fortunate of their fellow-creatures. Every district in London is defined, and each has its local committee, consisting of representative residents whose intimate knowledge of the poor of the district is most valuable, and every case is visited within a few hours after attention has been called to it. The visitors are frequently made channels for the bestowment of the private bounty of subscribers.

The claims of this, like some other old charities, are in danger of being overlooked, and an increase in the income was pleaded for by the speakers.

The treasurer is Sir Joseph C. Dimsdale, 50, Cornhill, E.C. The office of the Society is at 52, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

Armenian Boys' Home.

A MOST interesting occasion was the annual meeting of this Home at Exeter Hall on Thursday last, when Mr. F. A. Bevan, the treasurer of the Home, presided. One special attraction was the presence of some of the boys in native dress and the singing of Armenian hymns in their own language and tunes.

Professor Thoumaian, who, with his wife, manages the Home, presented a most interesting report of the work done. The Home, which is at Chigwell, Essex, has completed two years' work. Its object is the rescuing and training of Armenian boys by teaching them the love of Christ, and then sending them forth to preach in their own country. This could be done only in a free Christian country like England. The boys are now attending the Board school, and the masters speak most highly of the progress they have made. Up to the present, God has sent kind friends to assist in finance, and there is a small balance, but increased funds are greatly wanted.

The Chairman spoke in high terms of the Home and its management. He had received letters from many parts making inquiries about the institution, and it was a pleasure to him to advocate the faithful efforts of the Professor and his wife.

Dr. J. T. McGaw, Rev. Alex. Jeffrey, and Mr. Edwin H. Kerwin also spoke from personal knowledge of the work.

Gray's Yard Ragged Church.

THE friends and supporters of the Gray's Yard Ragged Church and Schools met a few days ago for the annual meeting, at the hall of the Mission, 23, Duke Street, Manchester Square, W.

The Secretary, Mr. Alister G. Fraser, gave a summary of the report. He stated that the work was commenced sixty-four years ago, and that during the whole of that time it had been steadily going on amongst the poor of the neighbourhood. More than a thousand persons came under the sound of the Gospel every Sunday. Three-quarters of these were the homeless poor who attended the services every Sunday morning and afternoon, and the remainder were the children in the Sunday school and their parents. He described the different kinds of "casuals" who attended the meetings—the confirmed loafer and criminal, the man who longed to be freed from the power of sin, the comparatively respectable man, who through misfortune had been brought to destitution, and the man who gave evidence of accepting the Gospel message. With such an audience the workers felt very keenly their utter helplessness, and had proved that the Gospel of the Grace of God was the only power.

He also enumerated the various agencies at work amongst the poor of the neighbourhood —the mothers' meeting, the club for boys and girls, and the meetings conducted by the City Missionary. He stated that the cost of the work annually was about £700, and that the funds were about £100 behindhand.

The chairman, Colonel the Hon. Francis Bridgeman, heartily sympathised with the work, and spoke of the importance of sowing the seed, and urged all to spend their lives in thus scattering it, that they might reap a harvest by and bye.

Rev. F. S. Webster, vicar of All Souls', Langham Place, described his visit to the afternoon service on a previous Sunday, and the distribution of bread and tea that took place after the meeting. Whilst entering into the difficulties of the work, he warmly commended it to those present. His experience of the needs of the poor in the West End of London led him to feel that in many ways their lot was harder than that of the poor in the East End and in the manufacturing centres, for they were surrounded by wealth and luxury, and their own want seemed all the greater by contrast.

Rev. Dr. George Hanson, of the Marylebone Presbyterian Church, had also recently been to Gray's Yard for one of the Sunday afternoon services, and had addressed the usual audience of about 400 "casuals." He sympathised heartily with the mission, and encouraged the workers to labour on.

The Peace Society.

THE anniversary of this Society was held at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate Without, on May 23, Canon Benham, D.D., in the chair.

In presenting an abstract of the annual report, Mr. W. Evans Darby noted the coincidence of the opening of the Peace Conference at the Hague, and congratulated the Society on the success of the principles which it has so long proclaimed. Resolutions adopted at over 1,200 meetings during the recent Peace Crusade had been received. Promises of about 8,000 sermons and addresses on Peace Sunday had come to hand. A dozen instances of arbitration were in progress or initiated during the year, and special reference was made to the Treaty of Arbitration concluded between Italy and the Argentine Republic. The regular work of the Society had been carried on with vigour throughout the year, and the recent agitation had afforded the members and agents opportunities of which they fully availed themselves. The total expenses amounted to £2,538, with a balance in favour.

The Chairman said the cause of peace is to-day stronger than it has ever been, and the outlook is more hopeful. Canon Barnett moved a resolution referring to the Peace Conference at the Hague. He protested strongly against the enormous expense of war material, and against the war spirit in general. The Peace Conference is a sign of the times, and not merely a sign of goodwill on the part of one highly placed young man, and we are encouraged to hope that it will create a greater desire for peace. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, M.P., said the difficulty in the way of the proposals of the Czar is that we have in Europe four millions of men always in readiness for war, and 200 millions of money annually spent on armaments. Talk about old-age pensions! A splendid system could be established with half the money that we spend in England on our army and navy. This is essentially a question for the working man. Although we have not seen the Anglo-American Treaty ratified, we hope something even better will come of the meeting now being held at the Hague.

Dr. Benjamin Trueblood (secretary of the American Peace Society) said he had just returned from the Hague, where two or three things impressed themselves upon him in connection with the conference there. First, the tremendous seriousness of the delegates and their profound sense of the responsibility resting upon them. They have on their hands a very big contract. It is also a foregone conclusion that this will not be the last, but the beginning of a series of such conferences, out of which may come a permanent tribunal of arbitration and congress of nations. He was also struck with the profoundest respect felt for the friends of peace by the members of the congress. War is not only contrary to the spirit and teachings of Jesus Christ, but it is contrary to the best interests of humanity.

Mrs. Sheldon Amos firmly believed the future of this movement lies in the hands of the women. For herself she did not believe in the glory attached to a red coat: women have got to turn that idea quite round, and they must do it in the nursery and in the schoolroom. She did not believe in military toys, or in Methodist ministers writing stories of "Life under the Flag."

Midnight Meeting Movement.—The Committee have just held another mission in the borough of Portsmouth. Meetings were convened in the most frequented districts. Much help was rendered by the officers of the Salvation Army. Captain Key, R.N., Mr. Denning, and Mr. M'Cree, secretary of the Society, with other friends took part. Several young girls availed themselves of the offer of help held out to them. Aldershot, Gravesend, Chichester, Winchester, and Ryde, were likewise visited in the interests of the Society.

Protestant Women in Conference.

THE present is a time for conference as well as action on the part of Protestants, and it is in every way fitting that the women should not be behind in the great and urgent movement. Accordingly, Thursday and Friday last were given up to conference on Romish error and Evangelical truth, by members of the Women's Protestant Union and their friends, at Exeter Hall. On each day there were three gatherings, at which helpful words were spoken by ladies and gentlemen, organisers and workers, representing many lands and Christian societies. On the eve of the earlier day a conversazione was held, followed by a meeting at which Mr. T. A. Denny occupied the chair, and Rev. Dr. Hanson delivered a stirring address on "Rome and the Ministry." From first to last a spirit of prayer was shown at the meetings, and a survey of the whole encourages a conviction that the influence and result will make for the good of the great and blessed cause.

The morning meeting on Thursday was devoted to addresses by those who had seen

ROMANISM IN THE MISSION FIELD.

Mrs. Robert Scott presided, and spoke of the evil results of patronage, which is the door by which many unspiritual men enter the service of the Church.

Mrs. George Kelly, who for ten years has laboured in Calcutta, spoke of Roman Catholic methods of work in India. School accommodation is provided on a large scale, and many Eurasian and other children are well and cheaply educated; thus thousands of girls and boys are drawn within the sphere of Roman Catholic influence. Though not doing much among the population in general, the priests show much diligence in attending to the hospitals and orphanages, with which the Clewer Sisterhood is intimately associated. The general method of the Romanists, as well as the agents of the High Church S.P.G., is to follow Protestants, rather than do pioneer work among the people. As a consequence, mission efforts are greatly hampered, and by various practices the progress of the Gospel is hindered.

Rev. Henry E. Benoit, for some time co-worker with the late Father Chiniquy, spoke of the great losses of Romanism in America. Taking the figures of Romish authorities as to immigration, and putting them side by side with the facts of the last census, the Papal system has lost many millions of members during the present century. Confining his attention to the speaker told how, about fifty years ago, there was hardly a convert to Protestantism from the French Roman Catholic community. Now, as the outcome of devoted labour, there are hundreds of French Protestant churches, also schools in which many thousands of children of Roman Catholic parentage have been educated in the principles of the Gospel.

THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC,

The third speaker was Mr. G. B. Michell, of the North Africa Mission at Tunis. Some years ago the French Government expelled the Italian priests, so there is to-day a measure of opportunity not previously known. The French priests, however, hinder the Gospel in many ways, and, by a law against scurrilous papers, the circulation of tracts and scriptures is being obstructed. This law does not specify the Bible, but through the exertions of the priests it is being directed solely against Protestant publications. The speaker added that the Roman Church does no work among the Mohammedans, and those who would labour for their enlightenment it hinders.

The afternoon meeting dealt with the work of the Women's Protestant Union. During the past year upwards of 1,700 new members had been enrolled, bringing up to between ten and eleven thousand. It was pointed out that the Union is concerned not so much with the political as the spiritual aspect of Protestantism. The speakers included Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot, president of the Union; and Mr. G. W. Lonsdale Barraclough, organising secretary.

THE STRENGTH OF THE UNION

The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. W. H. Seagram, who thanked God for the advance of Protestant principles in the country during recent years, and for the many praying women who are promoting Gospel truth. Mrs. Arbuthnot explained, with reference to the movement for the inspection of convents, that the next course of action is at present the subject of thought and prayer. The memorial, which was so largely signed a few years ago, was duly presented to the Queen, but no notice beyond acknowledgment was taken of it. Possibly, when it becomes clear that the agitation is not a mere "fire of straw," more serious attention will be given to such an expression of Christian opinion.

Pastor Charles Faithfull, of Madrid, spoke as a witness of Romish practices in continental lands during the past thirty years. He contrasted Romanism in England with the same system in Spain, and maintained that the enslaving practices followed there, where Rome is "at home," would be pursued here, "abroad," if circumstances allowed. Though consistent in principle, Rome modifies her tactics in different countries. In Spain, her claws are seen; in England, only the gloves that cover them. Yet, in the midst of darkness, deadness, and ignorance there are many congregations of Protestants in Spain, and various other signs of an encouraging character.

Mr. H. Webber, formerly of Paris, spoke of the relation of Rome to the Bible. Now she blesses, then she curses; in some conditions she denounces, in others she brings the Book in with precautions; in one land she uses the Gospels to assist in counteracting infidelity, while in another, where Protestants have lost their old regard for the Book, criticising it and disparaging its claims, she exhibits the policy of a qualified toleration, satisfied that the Church will not suffer much inconvenience in consequence.

THE PRETENSIONS OF ROMANISM.

A spirit of heartiness and earnestness characterised the proceedings at Friday morning's gathering. Rev. F. B. Meyer trusted that the Government would judge the religious sentiment of the country, not from the expressions of loud-voiced priests, but by the deep feeling of the Protestant laity. With a note of gratitude for the evangelical sympathies of Her Majesty the Queen, the speaker passed on to sketch, in vivid terms, the world-wide pretensions and power of the Romanists. In this country the atmosphere that gathers round the priest seems to attract a certain class, who respond to what seems refined and sensuous. Mr. Meyer protested against auricular confession; what might exist as the sacred confidence of a friend was twisted by priests into a condition of forgiveness and absolution. Travellers noted the blasting influences of Romanism, easily distinguishing, by the condition of the people, between, for instance, the Protestant and Romanist Cantons of Switzerland. As to the familiar phrase, "the decadence of Latin races," the speaker contended that they were decadent, not on account of their race, but because they were Romanist-ridden.

The imperial position of this country was threatened by the insidious power of the Jesuit, while the peace of our homes was endangered by the introduction of the priestly

SWAY THROUGH THE CONFESSIONAL.

Again, for the sake of the souls of men, energetic ction was necessary, since beneath the rule of the Rome spiritual progress was impossible. In facing difficulty they should not deal in mere negations, but should endeavour to construct as well as destroy. The best possible answer to sacerdotal effort was the presentment of the living Christ.

Surgeon-General Partridge subsequently related some personal experiences of Romanist superstition in Brittany. Miss M. Wardrop spoke of the deplorable state of Algiers under Jesuit influences, and Mrs. Blamire gave a pithy description of Protestant work in Spain.

At the afternoon meeting Canon Christopher, who presided, urged his hearers, in the course of a breezy and conversational address, to exercise both love and firmness in the present crisis, and to make a practice of conversing about the Gospel. God would give the needed grace, and enable them to correct error. The evils of sacerdotalism would fall like a pack of cards before the breath of elementary facts. Quoting Bishop Lightfoot, that no priesthood is to be interposed between God and man, the speaker went on to advocate an increased use of sound evangelical literature, and to urge a more thorough acquaintance with Scripture teaching the more complete would their victory be.

A large and enthusiastic audience assembled in the evening. Dr. Barnardo delivered a scathing attack upon the evils of the confessional, quoting a well-known Romanist, who had said, "Take away all else, but leave the confessional, and I have the key to the nation's heart." The speaker made a pointed appeal for a general uprising of the Protestant womanhood of England, and gave incidents demonstrating how prayer and persevering work rout the most subtle Ritualistic workers.

Rev. Lindsay Young, in a telling speech, reviewed the history of the confessional as a comparatively modern growth, and, meeting the arguments of Ritualism with common sense and acuteness, declared it to be obvious from the Scriptures that Mrs. Arbuthnot was as much a priest as the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Gospel and the Racecourse.

MUCH blessing attended the meeting held at Exeter Hall, on Thursday evening last, in connection with the evangelistic campaign arranged by the Open-Air Mission and London City Mission for Epsom races. While the chief object of the meeting was a preparation of mind and spirit for the summer work, the general principles of true religion, and some important questions of personal and national righteousness were also enforced with some refreshing and stimulating results.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, after indicating the necessity for a deeper realisation of the horrible character of Sin, and a more thorough and widespread effort to cope with it and its dreadful consequences, pointed out that while sound doctrine was absolutely essential, it was possible to lose the spirit in the letter, and to preach about doctrinal matters to the exclusion of a living Christ. If a man wrote a book in which there did not appear to be enough about the Atonement, what a shout of objection was raised! Nevertheless, in these important days, when we could almost hear the wheels of the chariot of the coming Christ, it was surely our business to be most concerned, not so much in criticism and discussion, as in a whole-hearted, world-wide proclamation of the Gospel.

After a helpful address from Rev. R. Dawson, who, taking an illustration from the methods of the recent Soudan campaigns, dwelt on the necessity of keeping in touch with our heavenly base of spiritual supplies, Mr. Charles Cook appealed for hard hitting against sin while declaring the message in love. Quoting a "whaler's" testimony that a certain address "had no harpoons in it," the speaker dwelt on the need for that solid preaching which resulted in solid converts. After Mr. Frank Cockrem had outlined the plans to be followed, Dr. Gritton, in a few choice words, emphasised the truth that the kernel of all matters lay in a personal fitness for the work, wrought by the grace of God.

Ratcliff Strangers' Rest.—The usual meetings were held here on Whit Monday. Open-air addresses were followed by gatherings inside, where tea was provided for the sailors. Some bright testimonies by the men themselves showed what a continuous centre of blessing the Rest is.

Spitalfields Lodging House Band.—The annual report of this energetic body is excellent reading. Aiming chiefly at evangelistic work among the inhabitants of the common lodging-houses which abound in squalid Spitalfields, the efforts of the society, which works in connection with the London City Mission, have greatly developed, and many meetings, varied in character according to the needs of the various classes, have been maintained. Much blessing has attended the devoted labours of the workers. Hon. secretary, Mr. J. Gilchrist. 87, Montague Street, Whitechapel, E.

The Scottish Assemblies.

THE Supreme Church Courts of the two largest Presbyterian bodies in Scotland have just held their May meetings in Edinburgh, amid the customary signs of large public interest. Nothing very exciting has emerged during the proceedings of this year, if we except the public reprimand administered by the Moderator in the Established Assembly to Rev. Jacob Primmer for "disturbing" a service at St. Giles', and the "scene" in the Free Assembly when Rev. John McNeill drew a hornets' nest about his ears by some candid remarks on Highland pastors who had refused him the use of their pulpits. Neither "offender," we may add, was very penitent. Mr. Primmer said he deemed the reception of the reprimand an honour, while Mr. McNeill remarked that the protests of his sensitive brethren made no impression on him.

THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

In the older Assembly Dr. Pagan, of Bothwell, was Moderator, and the Assembly opened with all the usual éclat that attaches to the presence of the Lord High Commissioner, the Earl of Leven.

From the report on Christian life and work, it appeared that the committee had arranged for evangelistic missions in twenty congregations during the past year. Rev. D. L. Francis and Mr. Ninian Hill have been set aside for the carrying on, during a period of six months each, of "mission weeks" throughout the Church. Arrangements have also been made for the holding of a series of local conferences on matters affecting the life and work of the Church at different centres. It is hoped to make a beginning with these at Kirkwall and Inverness during the autumn. A hopeful report on Indian churches was presented; the Government have been asked to sanction an addition of four to the number of Presbyterian military chaplaincies. Dr. Marshall Lang said they desired to have chaplains who would not be mere mess-room men, but would exercise a helpful influence on the young fellows in the army.

As to work among the Jews, Dr. Thomas Nicol reported that the Church has now twenty-nine missionary agents. The work is mainly educational: at the five stations ten schools have over 32,000 children under instruction, of whom two-thirds are Jews.

The Sabbath School Report, presented by Rev. John Smith (Partick), showed 2,200 schools, with 20,834 teachers and 227,452 scholars. The Home Mission Report was presented by Dr. Donald Macleod in an address of great earnestness. There are now at work 223 home missionaries and 29 parish sisters. Mission churches have grown in number from 76 to 82, and mission stations from 83 to 91. Emphasis was laid on the necessity for church extension to meet the needs of the people, and on the evils arising from the ever-widening gulf between rich and poor.

Thursday last week was Foreign Mission Day, and Dr. McMurtrie had an excellent story to tell. A thousand baptisms were reported. The gift of a church by the Rajah of Chamba is believed to be without a parallel in the history of Christian missions. Dr. Mitford Mitchell declared his conviction that even yet foreign work is far from getting its right place in the Church.

THE FREE CHURCH.

In the Free Assembly, the new Moderator was Dr. James Stewart, of Lovedale, a portion of whose remarkable opening address we give on preceding pages.

Dr. J. G. Cunningham presented a full and interesting report on Jewish missions, showing that at six stations seventy-nine Christian agents are employed in the work. Considerably over five hundred Jewish girls are under instruction in the homes.

When reporting on the college work, Dr. Stalker referred to the diminution in the supply of Divinity students over all the churches. What would crowd the divinity halls would be a true revival of religion.

In submitting the Home Mission report, Rev. Robert Howie (Govan) called attention to many expressions of gratitude for the excellent work of the Assembly's evangelists. The spiritual need of larger centres of population was pressed home. The evangelists had held missions in connection with ninety-nine congregations, the meetings numbering nearly 1,500. Summer services at popular resorts and work among the fishing are being carried on with vigour.

In connection with the temperance report the Assembly pledged itself to do everything in its power to prevent the three-fold Option Bill from passing into law. Warm tributes were paid to the value of the work done in the Highlands and islands, by Rev. John Mackay, Rev. John McNeill, Principal Rainy, and Dr. Whyte.

It was appropriate that, with a missionary moderator, the Foreign Mission report should arouse even more interest than usual. From Livingstonia especially Professor Lindsay had a wonderful tale of fruitfulness to unfold. Beginning with 557 communicants, the year closed with 871, and no fewer than 2,746 candidates were under instruction.

On Thursday, the interest of the Assembly culminated in the report on the proposed union with the United Presbyterian Church. Principal Rainy was listened to with deep attention as he dealt with the many points which had to be considered. Lord Overtoun contradicted the common argument that there is no enthusiasm for the union. On the vote being taken the dissentients were found to number only 38 against 565.

The religion and morals report stated that gambling must now be placed alongside drunkenness and impurity, as an open enemy of religion, its demoralising effect being no less serious. Dr. John McEwan submitted on Friday the report on Romanism and Ritualism, and was warmly supported by a number of speakers, including Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. The Sabbath observance report was hopeful in tone.

Protestant Outlook.

ONE would have thought that the "Pilgrim's Progress" would be regarded as good reading for workhouse inmates, no matter what their religious relations. But according to a letter in the Marylebone Mercury, the guardians of that great London parish have declined to allow a copy of Bunyan's famous allegory to be presented to some two hundred inmates who had attended services conducted in the workhouse under the auspices of the Free Church Council. The refusal was made on the ground that "it was a Protestant book." It would appear that the guardians do not deny to Roman Catholic inmates the use of the books issued under the auspices of their teachers!

The Bishop of Sodor and Man, in the course of his charge at the annual convocation of the clergy of his diocese, referred to the High Church claim for the determination of ecclesiastical disputes by so-called "spiritual Courts," and said he was satisfied that:

If the clergy in convocation, or otherwise, chose to follow leaders who, in the final decision of causes ecclesiastical, refused to recognise the authority of the Queen, as advised by her Council, or proposed that cases submitted to that Council should be prejudged before they reached it, or demanded that disputes in the National Church should be decided by untrained judges instead of trained ones, they would find that such attempts to disestablish the State from the position which it had held for centuries, at a time when the State appeared free from any desire to disestablish the Church, or to interfere with the course of things which had prevailed since the Reformation, would destroy the concordat by which their position as a Church, established by law, was secured, and sever the union which had so long and so happily existed between Church and State.

A bill has been introduced into Parliament by several Roman Catholic members under the title, "The Roman Catholic Disabilities Removal Bill, 1899," which aims at the repeal of certain "safeguards" inserted into the law of the land to protect the rights and liberties of British citizens. In brief, permission is sought:—1. For Jesuits, monks, and other religious orders to reside, and also acquire real and personal property, in the United Kingdom. 2. To evade the "registration" of their places of worship with the Registrar-General, necessary for churches of other denominations. 3. To hold religious services and meetings with locked doors! 4. To wear Roman Catholic Vestments (the livery of a foreign power) publicly, and hold public processions in the streets. 5. For Roman Catholics to hold Masterships in Colleges and Schools of Royal Foundation, and in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. 6. To abolish the penalties attaching to all Jesuits entering the kingdom. 7. To abolish the penalty and imprisonment inflicted on those who admit persons to the Jesuit or any other religious order. 8. For Roman Catholic ecclesiastics to adopt and use territorial titles for their hierarchy. In a striking leaflet issued by the National Protestant Federation, 50, Imperial Buildings, Ludgate Circus, E.C., eloquent facts are given in support of an appeal to the British people to resist this demand. Seeing that the Jesuits have been expelled from scores of Roman Catholic States, a Protestant country should hesitate before giving them freedom to work mischief and intrigue at will.

A recent booklet is "Sermons to Churchmen," by Rev. G. P. Bassett Kerry, M.A.; it contains discourses on the Church, the Ministry, Confession, and Absolution, and the Holy Communion, preached by the Author in Ventnor Parish Church, and published by request. Evangelical positions are asserted with charity and maintained with bold sincerity. (9d. nett. Knight's Library, Church Street, Ventnor.) Nonconformist utterances on the controversy include "Romanism in the Church of England," a lecture delivered in the Edgworth Congregational Church by Rev. Thomas Hadfield, M.A. (1d. Heywood, Manchester); and "The Duty of Nonconformists in the Present Crisis in the Church of England," by Rev. H. H. Carlisle, M.A., of Maldon, Essex. (1d. H. R. Allenson.) The "Free Church Tracts for the Times" already issued are:—"Anglican Romanism and National Character," by Dr. John Clifford; "The Claims of Apostolic Succession," by Dr. John Brown; and "The Priesthood and its Theological Assumptions," by Dr. Forsyth. (1d. each. Thomas Law.)

Sunshine.

The fragrance of the summer flower,
The rose's richest dye,
Through dewy morn and sunny noon,
Are borrowed from the sky.

So comes the Christian's life sublime—
A bounty from above;
A healing dew, a quickening breath,
A living light of love.

What is the earth? a barren waste
Beneath the wintry skies;
And what our hearts? but dark and dead
Till Jesus says, "Arise!"

Oh! beauteous is the summer sun,
In myriad wreaths entwined!
Oh! glorious is the love of Christ,
In human heart enshrined!

Cheer up, O soul, however sad,
There's sunshine for your gloom;
The power of God can give you life,
And make the desert bloom.

Stay in the sunshine of God's love—
Your heritage by grace;
Dwell in his light, and you shall shine
In brightness of his face.

Donegal. J. K.

Sunday in Paris.—Commenting on a note on this subject in our last issue, Mr. W. Soltau, of the McAll Mission, Paris, states that the closing of shops on the Lord's day only applies to the centre of the city. Elsewhere the great majority of the shops are open all day long. Of course, all the places of amusement are in full swing on the Sunday. At the same time, Mr. Soltau sees decided improvement in Sabbath observance since he went to reside in Paris, fifteen years ago.

Prof. Newell's Bible Lectures.

A GOODLY number of friends came together at Exeter Hall on Monday evening to welcome to this country Professor Newell, of the Chicago Bible Institute, who is to conduct Bible lectures in London for the next two months. After tea Lord Kinnaird took the chair, and earnest prayer for blessing on the forthcoming series was made by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas.

Rev. F. B. Meyer briefly explained the circumstances under which Professor Newell had come to England, mainly at the invitation of himself and Dr. Harry Guinness, to give Bible lectures at Harley College. It was thought that a wider scope should be given to the Professor's special gifts, by arranging for him a course of general lectures in different parts of London. The programme of these lectures will be found at the end of this report.

The Chairman having given our American friend a very cordial welcome in the name of London Christians,

Professor Newell responded in a modest, but most interesting speech. He said he was glad to bring the news that Professor W. White is rapidly recovering from his recent nervous breakdown. Proceeding to notice his own special mission amongst us, he told in outline the story of the Bible Study movement in Chicago as follows:—

"About three years ago Mr. Moody, in a conversation regarding the religious conditions and opportunities in Chicago, said to me: 'I wish you would begin a popular evening Bible class in our institute lecture room, and carry it on this winter. Our regular institute students have enough Bible study in their daily lectures; but there are hundreds of Christian people in this city who are not doing systematic Bible study just because no opportunity has offered itself. I am confident that such a class would be a success.'

"We had with us, at that time, Dr. James M. Gray, of Boston, who has been very much used of God in New England in arousing interest in Bible study. I went to him and said: 'Dr. Gray, will you give to a popular audience in the Moody Church the lecture you delivered recently to our students on "How to Master the English Bible"?' Said he, 'Certainly.' Announcements were sent out, and Thursday evening found about eight hundred people gathered in the church. Dr. Gray detailed his own experience as a minister, seeking for many years to know the Word of God, and yet not finding how to enter upon its study. 'The secret, so easy,' he said 'that a child of ten years might have known it without asking, was discovered to me at last by a layman. He told me to take the books of the Bible one by one, and simply read each of them over and over and over again until its contents were mastered. I took this brother's advice, and thus, with great delight, I mastered the contents of the entire Bible. I began to read it where God began to write it. I mastered one book before I took up another one.' Dr. Gray gave that set forth his method:

FIVE SIMPLE RULES

"1. Read the book to be studied.

"2. Read it continuously; that is, at a single reading.

"3. Read it repeatedly.

"4. Read it independently; that is, aside from all helps, however good.

"5. Read it prayerfully.

"As the speaker proceeded, I saw that his words went right to the hearts of the people, and I felt that they were eager to take up such a simple plan of study, if only they were rightly directed in it. When Dr. Gray had finished, I asked all those who were ready to pledge themselves, as before God, faithfully to undertake the course of study described, to arise. About 400 responded. I then cautioned them against mere impulse in the matter, saying that they would be expected to read the Bible during that winter at the expense of every other line of reading, be it newspapers, magazines, fiction, history or philosophy. I advised all who were not prepared for such a régime to take their seats. No one wavered. I then assigned the lesson: The Book of Genesis, to be read twice, and the first eleven chapters to be read ten times more—two hundred and ten chapters for the week, thirty chapters a day! (I have since found that about a dozen chapters, to be read once each day during the week, is a fair lesson for busy people.) My class drew a long breath, but they had committed themselves, and there was no escape.

"On the next Thursday evening our Institute lecture room began to fill up long before the appointed hour with the most enthusiastic people I ever saw. The very atmosphere was surcharged with Genesis. There was a conscious air of fulness and expectancy on every hand. The people had read the chapters faithfully, and teaching them was the easiest of tasks. I seemed borne along like a skiff on the crest of dancing waves.

"The facts of the first chapter were called for and quickly given, and the name 'Creation,' unanimously chosen, by which to remember the chapter. The second chapter we christened 'Eden;' the third, 'Fall;' the fourth, 'Cain;' the fifth, 'Seth,' &c. In twenty minutes we had reviewed the facts of the eleven chapters, and had named each chapter.

"The delight that arises from a sense of intellectual mastery had fully seized upon the class, and they were most intensely interested. Eleven chapters of the Bible were the possession of 500 people.

"After looking at other divisions of the section than those given by the chapter, we proceeded to the spiritual lessons found in the material we had mastered. This consumed the last part of the hour—

A MOST PROFITABLE TIME.

"I could only praise God, who had brought us to the simple method of 'searching out in the Book of the Lord, and reading.' I saw that the great secret of teaching the Word of God lay in inducing people to read and re-read, and read yet again, in the simplest manner, the lesson assigned to them. The material they had read lay in their minds, so that all that was needed on the part of the teacher was to lead them carefully into the proper arrangement and interpretation of the facts they already possessed.

"The weekly class was attended most remarkably all that winter. Nothing could keep the most of them from the Thursday night Bible Class—inclement weather, outside attractions, and even ill-health proving unavailing. In fact, some of the gayer young people, who had not entered the class, complained that they could not carry on their Thursday evening church socials at all because of the Bible class.

"When Mr. Moody returned to Chicago, in the spring, he was more than delighted with the interest the class had shown in the Bible study. After consulting on the subject, we determined to organise two other classes—one on the west side and one on the south, in two very prominent churches in these parts of the city.

"I then adopted an expedient to which I am confident the Lord directly led me, and which I would recommend as of the very first importance to any one who may anticipate such work as this. I secured from each of our Bible Institute students the name and address of that Christian who, more than any other person of his acquaintance, he believed to be a man or woman of prayer. I sent out letters to about 400 such persons, beseeching them to pray that God would pour out here in Chicago a spirit of desire after his Word, and that he would grant us at least 3,000 members in the Bible classes that we were about to organise. Very soon replies began to come in to me, PROMISING SUCH CO-OPERATION IN PRAYER.

Persons from Great Britain, Australia, and New Zealand, as well as from all parts of this country, wrote us that they would pray for this movement. I felt very much encouraged.

"Calls had come meanwhile for two other classes—one in the extreme south of the city, in Englewood; and the other away north, in Lake View. When finally the regular classes opened. I found that God had given us upwards of 4,000 members, instead of the 3,000 that we had asked for.

"The enthusiasm in all the classes was similar to that which had been manifested in the class the year before. The faithfulness in attendance was even more remarkable in some instances.

"Our course ran from October through April. The classes began at the Book of Genesis, and finished through the Second Book of Samuel. There were members in the classes who at the close of the course could give the contents of every chapter studied. The spiritual lives of hundreds of the members were transformed, Stories of most remarkable spiritual quickening and blessing from the simple but constant reading of the Word required in the classes were constantly reaching me, and, indeed, are yet coming almost daily. Time previously spent in reading light, trashy matter was now given with the utmost delight to poring over the Word of God. In some instances members of these classes themselves began other classes, and so the work was spread. Cities and towns in the vicinity of Chicago began to write to us, asking us to send them teachers, or to come out personally and inaugurate similar movements in their midst.

"It is my humble hope that these classes have been of service to the pastors and Sunday-school teachers and many others in the city. Included members of about 325 churches, representing some thirty denominations, besides perhaps 400 who gave no church-membership, doubtless many not professing Christians at all. Several in some instances from rank infidelity, were reported as the result of the year's work.

REMARKABLE CASES OF CONVERSION,

"There are two secrets of the success of this movement which, I am firmly persuaded, practically explain it all. First, the specific, believing prayer that was offered in its behalf; second, the simple, patient reading and re-reading of the Word of God that was constantly demanded, and faithfully fulfilled, by the members of the classes."

Cordial words followed from Mr. A. A. Head, Mr. R. C. Morgan, and Mr. T. A. Denny. All expressed their deep sense of the importance of revived Bible study at the present time and tendered a hearty welcome to Professor Newell. His visit to London is but a brief one and the season of the year is perhaps not the most propitious for such a movement. We earnestly trust, therefore, that London Christians will use their utmost endeavours to attend the lectures and to make them known to others. We append the programme of the series, and are asked to state in addition that the Monday afternoon meetings at Exeter Hall will be specially designed for earnest Christians in attendance at all the other centres; the theme on these occasions will be, "The Church, the Body and Bride of Christ, as revealed in Paul's Epistles, and what this involves for Christians."

PROGRAMME.

Lower Exeter Hall.—Monday afternoon, 4.30, Evening, 8: June 5, 12, 19, 26.

Conference Hall, Stratford.—Tuesday evening, 8: June 6, 13, 20.

Morley Hall, George Street, Hanover Square.—Wednesday morning, 11.30: June 14, 21.

Mildmay Conference Hall.—Wednesday afternoon, 3.30: June 7, 14.

Morley Hall.—Thursday evening, 8.30: June 1, 8, 15, 22, 29.

Professor Newell proposes to take for study the Gospels, Genesis, I. and II. Samuel, and Daniel.

A Missionary Rally of a most impressive sort was held at Christ Church, Westminster Road, on Monday evening. After a conversazione in Hawkstone Hall, Rev. F. B. Meyer presided over the public meeting in the church. A very interesting preliminary function was the presentation of illuminated addresses to Dr. Harry Guinness and Rev. A. W. Evans for services rendered to the church during the chief pastor's absence in India. Thrilling missionary recitals were given by Rev. Charles Jukes about events in Madagascar, and by Mr. Broome P. Smith descriptive of his experiences in the Congo region. These narratives were supplemented by a very rousing Gospel and missionary appeal to the young people present from Dr. Guinness.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

A Visit to "Mrs. Ginever's Homes."

"HURRAH!" cried twenty little tots, "we's got the flag, hurrah!"

It was the Queen's birthday, and the loyal tinies of Mrs. Ginever's Homes, waving a big red flag printed with Her Majesty's likeness, went out into the big play-ground to "march, march, all in good order," to prattle and play under the lilac bushes, or watch the big trains flash past the palings at the end of the garden.

It was a half-holiday, and everybody was in good spirits; the girls had their skipping-ropes and dollies; and the little boys, in their plain holland pinafores, their box of bricks and those two large rocking-horses on which it is such a glorious thing to "ride to Banbury Cross" five or six at a time. Even chubby little Polly, who had tumbled down and almost broken the skin of her knee, tying it up with her "hanterstief," wiped away her tears and shouted with the rest.

The kind lady who looks after this large family of little orphans has, you will understand, plenty to do to keep them in order; but, then, she just thinks they are and nurses and plays and "mothers" them, so tha their lives are bright and merry indeed. Many of them have no parents; others have a mother who is very poor, earning her living and keeping her other children by washing perhaps, or by artificial flower-making. For instance, there were Louie and Ada, two little sisters, aged respectively eight and six. Their father died from tumour on the brain, leaving the poor mother in delicate health with seven children quite unprovided for. Is it not nice for them to be so comfortable housed and cared for?

ALL HER VERY OWN,

Two others were Caroline and Alice, two little sisters, aged four and two. The father was stricken with paralysis when only twenty-seven, and left his young wife and children with only a few shillings in the house. The poor woman struggled on for eighteen months, when kind friends mentioned her sad case, and the two little ones were taken in.

The boys are kept until the age of ten, when other arrangements are made for them. At fourteen those girls who have mothers living can join them; but most stay until they are sixteen, when they are placed in situations with good people who love Jesus and who will be kind to the orphan for His sake.

And really the girls must make splendid servants, for they have such a practical training. Each big girl has the special charge of a little one, whom she washes, puts to bed, dresses, and is responsible to tend. Upstairs, in an airy room, is a child suffering sadly from whooping-cough, but an older girl props her up with pillows, gives her drink, and comforts her. Then, they learn the useful art of stocking-darning, while their plain needlework is good to see. Down in the kitchen a few of the bigger girls show how deftly they can pare potatoes, mix batter puddings, or with plenty of good gravy, such as little boys and girls like to have a second helping of. No wonder everybody looks so plump!

MAKE A SAVOURY STEW,

There is thorough schooling too, so that minds, as well as bodies, have earnest attention. In the old days, before good Mrs. Ginever died, it was her constant aim to make the Homes places of blessing, where the lambs should come to know the great Shepherd of the sheep. "God buries his workmen, but carries on his work," and, under the newer name of the Kingsdown Orphanage, in Pemberton Gardens, Upper Holloway, the chief object of the Homes is still to teach the way of salvation and peace and joy. The little ones are well remembered by the young people of the Christian Endeavour, who come from a chapel near by and have beautiful meetings; while the young men come on Sunday evenings to tell of Jesus and his love, in a nice interesting way, you know, so that even chubby Polly sits open-eyed and grave, taking it all in, and pondering on the wonderful story.

A touching side of the work is that of the Cripples' Branch at Broadstairs, where those who develop hip or spinal diseases, as many poor children do, or those who are sickly and delicate, rest amid comforts and kindly soothings and Christian care, or are wheeled under the speckless sky, where they can rejoice in the beauty of gleaming sun and crested wave, breathing the sweet fresh air and the odour of the blossoms of the under-cliff, "wet with Channel spray."

Best of all features, perhaps, in connection with these useful Homes, is the fact that very many of the former boys and girls have on leaving continued to follow hard after their Saviour, and are helping, in their various positions, to lead sinners to Him.

Giving for Missions.

(Recitation by a Little Girl.)

I s'POSE I must give to the heathen
A part of my money—O dear!
My Hildah's best dress is so faded,
Her hat looks old-fashioned and queer.

'Tis strange how that somebody always Needs something I wanted myself.
I think I will hide my dear dolly
Away on the uppermost shelf.

(Recitation by a Little Boy.)

That's just what I thought, little sister,
Till mamma was saying one day
That children, as well as the big folks,
Must give just as well as to pray.

But if they begrudged ev'ry penny,
The Lord for their gifts would not care.
I'll wait for my bicycle longer;
Can't Hildah her faded dress wear?

(Recitation in Concert.)

Our hearts we will give to the Saviour,
Our feet all his errands to do,
Our voices, our hands, and our pennies,
That others may come to Him too.

—Selected.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 178).

1. Say in which verses the appeals given below occur.

2. From the other chapters given, select a verse in similar words to form a response to each of the several appeals and write it out.

(a) Cast me not away from thy presence (Psalm li., response in Psalm xxxi.).

(b) Choose you this day whom ye will serve (Joshua xxiv., also response).

(c) Keep me as the apple of the eye (Psalm xvii., response in Deuteronomy xxxii.).

(d) Seek ye the Lord while He may be found (Isaiah lv., response in Psalm lxiii.).

(e) Why hast Thou cast us off for ever? (Psalm lxxiv., response in Lamentations iii.).

(f) Give ear O Lord unto my prayer (Psalm lxxxvi., response in Psalm lxxvii.).

[Children under ten any two; under thirteen any four.]

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 177).

I. The "Kingdom of God." Matt. vi. 33.
II. They shall find Him. Prov. viii. 17.
III. The body of Jesus. John xx. 15.
IV. Adam. Because he had done wrong. Gen. iii.
V. The man had lost one sheep, and the woman had lost a piece of silver. Yes. Luke xv.
VI. The Greeks. Yes. John xii. 21.
VII. (a) Peter and Andrew. (b) Matthew. (c) Martha and Mary. (d) Peter, James, and John. (e) Peter, Andrew, James, John, Philip, Bartholomew, Thomas, Matthew, James-the-Less, Lebbæus, Simon the Caananite.
VIII. (a) Matt. ix. or Mark ii. or Luke v. (b) Matt. viii., or Mark iv., or Luke viii, (c) Matt. xix. or Mark x., or Luke xviii. (d) Matt. xxvi., or Mark xiv., or Luke xxii., or John xviii. (e) Matt. xix., or Mark x., or Luke xviii. (f) Matt. ix., or Mark v., or Luke viii.

No. 177.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Violet Ashworth*.
B—Mabel Birney*, J. and Edith Barker, Ella Burton, Rose Butler, Phyllis Boyd, Herbert Braddon*, William Berwick, Gordon* and May* Bligh.
C—Brereton Code, Henry Cheney*, Daisy Clarke, Edith Chevalier, Lydia Cleary, Eleanor Chance, Anna Chanyen, Ida* and Mabel* Cole, Carl and Kitty Cope, Richard Cornthwaite, John* and David* Colville, Rosemary Cairns.
D—Ivy, Kitty and Violet Donaldson-Selby, Violet Dodsworth, Lucy Davidson, Hilda, Constance and Elizabeth Drayson, Stanley Drew*, Pelognia Daws*, Mai and Violet Davidson.
E—Muriel and Miriam Ecroyd.
F—Constance Furlong, Kitty Fausset, Vincent and Mabel Fleet.
G—Constance Gabbett*, Mabel Golding, Olive Grandy*, Tom Garfit.
H—Evelyn* and Dorothy* Hewer, Hotty Hill*, Elsie Hatcher, Beatrice Hastings*, Eric Hill.
J—Betty Jacobs.
K—Lily Kinvig, Eva*, Max*, and Stanley Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Nellie Keeley.
L—May, Sidney, Henry and Edward Law, Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Edith and Nellie Lockhart, Blanche Lindup*, Gertrude Lambert, Margaret Lee.
M—Margie Marston, Elsie and Annie* Moule, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, Lois Mewburn*, M. Mounstephen, May Mills.
N—Mary and H. Neligan, Valerie Noel, George Nash.
P—Alice Palmer, Walter Picknell, Kathleen Pincott, Ruth Pledger*, Mildred*, Evelyn, and Hattie Peters, Lilian Pearson*, Mary Plumb*, Grace* and Gladys* Palmer.
R—Gwennie Ravenhill, Evelyn Rashley, Alice Reid, Kate Rosenbloom.
S—Frances Stileman, Florrie Smith, Joseph Stephens, Flora Simmons*, Esther Simmons*, Solomon Stockfish, Douglas and Kathleen* Shepherd, Annie Shelley*, Laura Standen*, Betty Stooks*, Margery Smart.
T—A. P. and Derwent Turnbull, Theodora Thorn*.
W—Sarah and Annie Wood, Florence Wild, Dorothy White Phyllis and Noel Wright, Sydney Wisdom, Edith and Edward Wheeler.

No. 176.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

B—R. G. Browne,* Mary Bryant, Maud, Dorothy, and Sylvia Barrett, Frank and Avory Blackie, Massy*, Conyers,* and Allen* Baker, A. H. Bowker,* L.*, Herbert and Dorothy Berry, Gladys and Godfrey Bates.
C—Gladys and Beryl Calvert, Henry Cheney, Alice Crang, Millicent and Cicely Craven, Arthur Cox.
D—Dorothy and Marjory Dyke, William Dilly, Constance Devenish-Meares, Agnes and Catherine Darke.
E—Maud Eddey, Muriel Edwards*, Helen Eardley-Wilmot.
F—Marian Freegard*, Maggie*, Agnes*, and Flossy* Fullarton, Muriel and Agnes Fry, Aileen and F. A. Figgis, Mary, Bessie and Blanche Freeman.
G—Dorothy Garfit, Thos. Groombridge, Margaret*, Edith,* Stuart, Jack, and Dorothy Gray, Alfred*, Mary, Daisy,* and Ethel* Greenacre, Mary Glass.*
K—John Harkess, Freda Hunton, Helen* and Harcourt Hunter, Marjorie Hogge, Francie, Florence, and Stanley Hoyte, Violet Holford, Ethel Hutchings.
J—Norman* and Kate* Johns.
K—Philippa*, Dorothy*, and Grace* Kerr, Flossie Key*, Jeanie Kyle*, Willie*, Alex., T., and Isabella* Kay.
L—Hannah Lovell*, Grahame and Murray Lloyd, Guinefred Leigh*.
M—Barbara* and J. Maconchy, Margaret Macphee, Olive Mewburn*, Harry Malaher, T. H. Mather, Marie Meek, Eileen and George McClure, Valerie Maitland-Kirwan*, Charlie Medcalf, Daisie and Tita Mackenzie, Gwendoline and Evelyn* Moir, Lewis McGregor*, Francis McClure, Bella and Abraham Mack.
N—Maude and Amy Nottage.
P—Muriel Patten, Winnie Page,* Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Laura Percy*, Willie, Jessie*, Winnie, and Ada Palmer, Myrtle Perry*, Violet Philips, M., W., and Louie Penny.
R—Jessie, Elmina, and Isabel Roe, Nora Read.
S—C. R. and Violet Salveson, Binford Sellwood, D. D. and T. M. Stanier, Muriel and Ivy Sherwin, Herbert Stuart, Elsie Siark, Mabel Stembridge, Bessie Scantlebury*, Dollie Salt, Mildred*, Gertrude, and Constance* Scott, Emma* and Susie Sutton.
T—John Thomson*, Florence, Eileen and Ruby Tomlinson, Louie* and Nannie* Tibbits.
V—Kenneth Vining.
W—Queenie, Kenrick, and Ernest Wakeford, Fred and Helen Webb, Connie Wood*, Blanche Warren*, Violet*, Louisa*, and Arthur Walker, Leonard Wall.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 165—Grahame, Mary, and Christine Pearson. No. 166—Christine, Grahame, and Mary Pearson, Theodora Guinness. No. 168—Ruth Sprigg*, Maria and Cuckoo Lister, Janet Garrett*. No. 170—Launcelot Knight, Charlotte Cane, Queenie and Llewellyn Dale, W. B. Henderson. No. 171—Queenie Dale, W. B. Henderson, Charlotte Cane. No. 172—Eliza and Jean Scott, Vera Sjöström, Charlotte Cane, Lottie, Rotha, and Ivan St. George, Frank Sjöström. No. 173—Jean and Eliza Scott, Vera and Frank Sjöström. No. 174—Kate Thomson*, Frank and Vera Sjöström.

My young friends may be interested to know that the following have been regular "searchers" since the commencement of the "Bible Searcher," on January 2nd, 1896:—

A—Violet Ashworth.
B—May and Daisy Bligh, Allen and Conyers Baker.
C—Susie Cumbers, Gladys Calvert.
D—Llewellyn and Queenie Dale.
F—Hyacinth FitzSimons.
G—Minnie Giddings.
H—Evelyn and Dorothy Hewer, Freda Hunton.
J—Sinclair Jackson.
M—Hilda Medill, Barbara Maconchy.
O—Lottie Orr.
P—Myrtle Perry, Mary Plumb, Isabel and Gladys Phipps, Ada and Willie Palmer, Winnie Page.
S—Florrie Smith.
T—Louie and Nannie Tibbits.
V—May Vickers.

Personal.

Flowers are still very acceptable. But only one box has been received this week, for which many thanks.

Violet Walker.—Thank you very much for your interesting letter. I should think little Hannah would be very pleased to have a letter.

Mabel Stembridge.—On comparing papers I find your answers to 173 had no name attached.

Bessie Cheale.—You gave wrong verses to question 7.

Dorothy Berry.—The "star" is only given for a neat and tidy paper, or one that shows great care has been taken.

Katie Picknell.—You omitted to give chapter and verse to your texts.

Uncle Tom's Cot.—A. and W.B.C., 3s.; A.B., C.B., M.B. and L.P., 2s. 3d.; E. and W.H., 2s. 6d. Total, 7s. 9d.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Derby, June 1, 2; Greenwich, June 3; Hawkestone Hall, June 6; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Worthing, June 4; Ventnor, June 11, 12; St. Lawrence, June 13-15; Mr. Hankinson, Guildford, June 3, 4; Epping, June 6; Whitchurch-Hants, June 13; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Churchinford, Som.; Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Horsmonden, Kent; Messrs. Hewlett and Harrison, with caravan, Slaugham, Sussex; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Wetheringsett.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending June 10.

Sun., June	4	Acts vii.	44-60	Thurs., June	8	Acts ix.	1-16
Mon., ,,	5	,, viii.	1-13	Fri., ,,	9	,, ix.	17-31
Tues., ,,	6	,, viii.	14-25	Sat., ,,	10	,, ix.	30-43
Wed., ,,	7	,, viii.	26-40

Uncle Tom's Cot.—Since writing you a fortnight ago, it has been suggested that, instead of waiting until little Hannah is released from her cot before doing good with the surplus money you have so generously subscribed, it should at once be put to service. So I am glad to say that another cot has been set apart in the Ragged School Union Home at Southend that other poor crippled children, who would be benefited by a holiday, may be sent away for a fortnight or three weeks each. I feel sure that all of you who have interested yourselves in this good work will be pleased to know that, in addition to the £12 originally asked for to defray the expense of little Hannah's stay in the Home, sufficient has been provided for another cot to be occupied for about twelve months by poor pent-up cripples who are greatly needing a change of air.

F. T. Watt

Obituary.

MR. ROBERT GURNEY HOARE.

ONLY just past the prime of life, this servant of Christ entered into his rest quite suddenly. While out riding, he was seized with a fainting fit and expired before medical aid could be secured. Mr. Hoare occupied a foremost place among the evangelical laity in Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was deeply interested in foreign missions, and well acquainted with the work of the C.M.S.

REV. C. R. THOBURN.

A telegram from Bishop Thoburn to The Indian Witness announces the sad news of his eldest son's death at Portland (Oregon, U.S.A.) of apoplexy. This is indeed a grievous blow to the Bishop. Up to a short time ago Mr. Thoburn was serving as chancellor of Puget Sound University, a young and struggling institution on the western coast, having recently accepted the pastorate of a church in Portland. His brief period of missionary service in India, cut short by complete breakdown in health, will long be gratefully remembered by many fellow workers, especially in Western India.

REV. SAMUEL HENRY KELLOGG, D.D.

At Landour, Mussoorie, on May 3, Dr. S. H. Kellogg, of the American Mission, met his death as the result of a bicycle accident. One of the most cultured of the missionaries of the American Presbyterian Church, and a superior Hindi scholar, Dr. Kellogg for several years past has been engaged in Bible revision and translation work, residing mostly at Dehra Dun, and at Mussoorie in the season. Quite recently he accepted the invitation to deliver the annual course of lectures on missions at Princeton Seminary, New Jersey, U.S.A., next year. Dr. Kellogg has contributed to English and Vernacular literature several important works, and was the author of the valuable Hindi Grammar, well known to missionaries and others in the north-west.

REV. JOHN SMALL.

Details have come to hand of the death of Rev. John Small, of the Free Church of Scotland Mission, Poona, on May 9. He died of heart disease after a painful illness of three days. Appointed to missionary service by the Free Church of Scotland, Mr. Small arrived in India in December, 1863, and for some time laboured in Bombay. He was afterwards transferred to Poona, which was his station up to the time of his death. His work was educational and evangelistic. His last important public effort was a powerful appeal for the removal of all hindrances to the work of Christian missionaries in the feudatory states of the empire. The funeral was largely attended by residents of all denominations, foreign and Indian, and a great number of natives, many of whom were former pupils of Mr. Small.

REV. R. BALGARNIE.

A large circle of friends will regret the death of Rev. R. Balgarnie, who was for thirty-six years a Congregational minister at Scarborough, and one of the most public-spirited and philanthropic citizens of that popular health resort. Eleven years ago he retired from his pastorate to take up the wider field of mission preacher, and up to last January he was traversing the country holding special services. He was a director of the board of the London Missionary Society, and of the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, and the author of several biographies and religious pamphlets. The funeral service was to be conducted by Dr. Newman Hall and Rev. Alfred Rowland, at Park Chapel, Crouch End, on Wednesday last.

REV. DR. WILKINSON.

A familiar figure in Christian work in Birmingham for thirty-one years, Canon Wilkinson won for himself the high regard of all who knew him. Like a shock of corn, fully ripe, at the age of eighty-three, he has been gathered to the garner. Dr. Wilkinson was a strong evangelical, but sympathetic with all true workers for Christ. He found opportunity to co-operate harmoniously with men of various shades of religious thought. He went to Birmingham with a reputation for earnest and fervent work, and that reputation was maintained till his retirement in 1897. On the passing of the Elementary Education Act in 1870, Canon Wilkinson was elected a member of the first Birmingham School Board. In 1871 he was appointed Honorary Canon of Worcester Cathedral. Until the last year of his ministry his activity and energy had been little impaired; in fact, he had been never laid aside through illness for a single Sunday since his ordination.

REV. H. J. ELLIS.

The information was cabled by Reuter on Saturday week that Rev. H. J. Ellis, Chairman and General Superintendent of the Gold Coast District, had died of fever. Mr. Ellis was accepted as a candidate for missions at the Wesleyan Conference of 1890. After two years at Richmond College he received an appointment to Jebu Remo Mission. He was the first "white man" permitted to reside in that part of the Lagos hinterland. He remained in the district until he received the appointment at the Gold Coast. Subsequent events have justified the appointment. Matters requiring the utmost tact and firmness have been dealt with by the skill of a veteran missionary, and Mr. Ellis has won the love and esteem of the missionary executive and the Europeans and natives of the district. During the last three years Mrs. Ellis—better known as "Sister Clara," of the London Central Mission—has nobly aided her husband.

Carrubbers Close Mission.

THE eighteenth annual demonstration of the Carrubbers Close Mission Gospel Temperance Association was held in the Synod Hall, Castle Terrace, Edinburgh, on Monday, May 22. Professor A. R. Simpson presided over an audience which filled to overflowing the large hall. Mr. G. A. Barclay gave in the year's report, which exhibited very gratifying results, and illustrated how this Association combined the proclamation of the Gospel with the principles of total abstinence, with the best of results.

Addresses followed by Rev. Dr. J. G. Cunningham, Rev. Dr. Wells, Glasgow; Dr. D. Duncan Main, Hangchow; Lord Overtoun, Mr. Jas. Guthrie, Brechin, Dr. John Smith, Mr. F. J. Loudin, and others. A most attractive programme of sacred music was rendered by the Fisk Jubilee Singers, and by the Carrubbers Close Gospel Temperance Choir and Orchestra. Among those present were prominent Christian workers from many parts of the world.

Sandymont, Dublin.—The annual meeting of the work carried on in Gifford Hall has been held recently. During the past year Christ has been lifted up and souls have been blessed. Rev. W. Newman Hall held a mission in February last. The hall is lent freely to all evangelical Christians for good and useful purposes. Help is much needed. The hon. secretary is Mrs. Emerson, 1, Prince Edward Terrace, Black Rock, Dublin.

Leysian Mission.—We have opened a Home for young men in connection with this Mission. Such a home we feel to be a great boon to many, especially those coming up as strangers to London from the provinces. The Home is named after the late Dr. Moulton. If you can note this the fact might meet the eye of some young man who would be glad to avail himself of the advantages it offers.

(Rev.) J. Ash Parsons.

Leysian Hall, Errol Street, Whitecross Street, E.C.

Poor Ministers' Clothing Society.—At the annual meeting of the Poor Ministers' Clothing Society, on June 19, Mrs. Spurgeon will be present to receive parcels of clothing from friends to enable the Society to continue this excellent work. Fifty-five poor ministers' families had parcels sent to them during the year. New or partly-worn garments or material for making up are very welcome, and contributions for purchase of new blankets, boots, &c., are also gratefully received. Address Hon. Sec., Poor Ministers' Clothing Society, Metropolitan Tabernacle, London.

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. DAVID McCONAUGHY, Secretary of the Madras Association, writes giving encouraging particulars of Association effort in India.

Mr. James Montgomery, of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, has been recommended to the vacant post of secretary to the Aberdeen Association.

Mr. Herbert Kinsley, general secretary of the Anglo-American Association, Paris, having resigned, all communications should in future be addressed to Mr. H. H. Shepper, President, 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris.

The Bible School, which is being organised by the London Central Association, will commence in October next. The committee have secured the help of Rev. Hubert Brooke, who will deliver two lectures weekly from October to December.

The annual report of the Dublin branch is very satisfactory reading. A band of earnest workers have devoted themselves by prayer and personal effort to the maintenance of the evangelistic work, and many encouraging signs of spiritual blessing have been forthcoming.

The annual public meeting of the Adelaide Y.M.C.A. was lately held. Lord Tennyson, Governor of the Colony, congratulated the Y.M.C.A. on the excellent work being done by that institution. Mr. J. J. Virgo presented the annual report, which showed that the number of members and associates on the roll at the present time is 667. During the year 151 joined, but 206 names were erased from the roll through resignation and removals.

Personalia.

Mr. A. Welsh, of Emgwali, Dohne, leaves Cape Colony for Scotland, early in June, for a season of rest and change.

Pastor Paul Besson, of Buenos Aires, after passing a somewhat laborious "vacation" in France and Switzerland, has embarked for his much-loved sphere. In addition to the diligent use of his pen in various Protestant and Evangelical publications, Mr. Besson has been collecting money with which to build a chapel in Buenos Aires.

Dr. Baedeker writes from Wart-Eck, Weston-super-Mare, on May 24:—"It is my intention to take an evangelising tour to Bohemia and other parts of the Austrian Empire and Hungary, leaving England on June 8. I would lay claim to the sympathy and prayers of God's servants that I may be guided and guarded day by day, and that I may have the joy of serving the Lord in ministering to the people of various nationalities and languages."

The Mission Ship "St. Paul," connected with the Sailors' Rest Aid Society, of Naples, is now ready for its first annual cruise. A former sailor helper, Alick Macleod, has volunteered to act as mate. The funds given for the Rests cannot be used for the ship. Friends of seamen are earnestly invited to relieve me of the money burden, that I may be able to devote more time to the spiritual work of the society. Communications may be addressed to Captain T. V. Forrest, Local Marine Office, Hull.

Stephen Burrowes.

7 Vico 2° del Piliero Naples.

Missionary Breakfast.—For the past twenty-two years it has been the custom at the Talbot Tabernacle to have a missionary breakfast on Whit Monday morning. At that held on Monday week the attendance was a record one, and the addresses were full of interest. Pastor Frank White presided. Mr. Tomalin, of the C.I.M., spoke of the 1,200 walled towns in China still without a missionary. Mrs. Goslin represented the South Africa General Mission, and Mr. Michell the North Africa Mission. Mr. H. S. Ridings pleaded for South America, and Mr. Fanstone, who has just returned from Brazil, added a few earnest words. As a result of the breakfast, about £40 will be distributed among foreign missions.

Homes for Working Girls in London.—The "Thanksgiving Day" of these Homes was held on May 25. The inmates of the various Homes were present at an early morning service, at six o'clock (to the number of between 500 and 600), at Holy Trinity Church, Marylebone. The Rev. Marcus Rainsford, vicar, St. James's Holloway, preached the sermon. In the afternoon, at Garfield House, 8, Fitzroy Square, W., the annual praise and prayer meeting was held, at which Mr. John Shrimpton presided. The meeting was purely a devotional one, and Colonel Oldham, Rev. E. G. Gange, Rev. J. C. Elliott, Colonel Griffin, Mr. Daniel Wellby, Mr. William Barlow, and Mr. Edward Unwin took part. In the evening the inmates were invited to attend a "musical evening" at Portman Rooms, Baker Street, W.

Evangelistic.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Newcastle.

MRS. BAEYERTZ, the Christian Jewess, has conducted a sixteen days' mission in Newcastle-on-Tyne. In the afternoons, Bible readings were given in Blackett Street Presbyterian Church, and in the evenings Gospel addresses were delivered in Trinity, of which Dr. N. A. Ross is pastor.

Notwithstanding inclement weather the meetings were well attended, especially during the second week. The spiritual results were most marked. No sensational methods were adopted, but God's Word was honoured, and there was an evidence all through of dependence on the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. Many of God's children received help and quickening. On the last Sunday evening the address was specially blessed to the unconverted. More than a hundred persons, in the after-meeting, professed to have received the Lord Jesus Christ.

Many churches must have reaped spiritual blessing, and the effect of the work in the city was of the most real and abiding character. We join in rendering thanksgiving to God for having sent his servant amongst us, and pray that in other places she may be similarly used and blessed.

One of the Ministers.

A Minister's Holiday.

THE question of how to help the weaker country churches is constantly being discussed. Money is not always needed, and even when it is, every need cannot be met with pounds, shillings, and pence. An interesting experiment has just been carried out by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of New Court Chapel. He organised a party of twenty-two persons, mostly from his own congregation, for a week's holiday at Torrington, Devonshire.

The object was not merely physical recreation, but spiritual also. Mr. Morgan took advantage of the occasion to conduct a week's mission in the local Congregational Church, of which Rev. Edward Wilkins is pastor. The party met for worship every morning at 7.30. The townspeople were invited, and the average attendance at this unusual hour was just seventy. Every evening at eight the Gospel was preached in a very definite and practical manner, the congregations being large from first to last.

The members of the party are unanimous in their testimony that the week was one of the most enjoyable holidays they had ever spent, while the people of Torrington are equally hearty in asserting the profit and help that have been derived from the mission—the preaching and the bringing into the town of such a company of earnest, sympathetic workers. The results of the week will only be revealed in eternity. Cannot other city pastors do likewise? A. S.

Mr. Payson Hammond's Meetings.

MR. HAMMOND has been holding meetings in various parts of Chicago. The Lord has blessed them. In the short space of ten days a large number have professed conversion, and the joy among Christians has been very great.

Mr. and Mrs. Elderkin, well-known singers, were at his meetings last week. In fact, nearly every day someone has come from a distance, and told of their conversion years ago in Mr. Hammond's meetings. Mrs. Elderkin stated that she was converted in a meeting of Mr. Hammond's conducted in Elmira, N.Y., many years ago. Rev. David Creighton, the pastor of Christ Church, and his people entered heartily into the work.

Since Mr. Hammond held meetings in Minneapolis he has been in nearly thirty different places in Nebraska, South Dakota, and Kansas. Rev. J. B. Currans went with him to most of the places. They remained only about three days in a town. Between one and two hundred, on an average, professed conversion in each place. The work was largely among the young, and this is the greater reason for thankfulness.

At the closing meeting in Chicago, while many were thanking the Lord for some one thing, a young girl said she was thankful that her dear mother had found the Saviour in the meeting. Her mother, sitting by her side, arose and said: "Yes, I am thankful that my daughter, when she came home, said with tearful eyes, 'Mamma, I have found Jesus, and I want you to come to Him too. If you will kneel down and pray, the Lord will give you a new heart as He did me.'" She did so, and before long her heart was also filled with joy and peace in believing in Jesus.

Mr. Hammond is to hold meetings in Millbank, South Dakota (as well as in New Albany, Indiana), where most of the pastors have united, and the meetings will be held in a large tent. Will Christians pray for blessing on all these services?

Minneapolis, Minnesota, May 12. J. R. C.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till June 4, Motherwell; 18-30, Bethany Hall, Glasgow.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Till June 5, Brockley.

Mr. E. P. Telford.—During June, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—June 18-July 3, Annan.

Mr. Jas. Sprunt.—During June, Sundays and Thursdays, Walthamstow; Wednesdays, Wimbledon.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Till June 5, Ramsden Road, Balham; 11 and 12, Wimbledon; 18-25, Bromley.

Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday, June 4, at 7, Rev. Jno. Tuckwell; Thursdays during June, at 8, Mr. A. C. Burley; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sunday, June 4, at 7, and Thursday, at 8, Mr. P. Garrioch.

Mr. John Elliott.—Till June 4, Puddington; June 8-25, Central Hall, Pokesdown, Bournemouth; June 11, Gerston Hall, Paignton.

Mr. George Clarke.—Till June 6, Southampton; 11-21, Langholm; July 2-17, Ipswich; 23-Aug. 2, Teignmouth.

Mr. Newton Jones.—June 14, Bloomsbury Chapel; 18, Sittingbourne Baptist Chapel; 25, Lower Norwood Baptist Chapel.

Evangelisation Society.—The following missions, among others, will be in progress on Sunday night:—Pattiswick, H. Collins; Birmingham, J. B. Rochfort; Birch Grove, James Lovell; Linstead, A. E. Knight; Twyford (Leics.), F. Holmes; Kingston Deverill, H. S. Smith; Wenhaston, James Clark; Shelly, J. Harris; Stanstead, J. Whiting; Catsfield, N. Taylor; South Wraxall, W. F. Davies; Ravensden, K. Lambert; Crick, C. Noakes; Elmsett, J. Stanger; Marston Green, F. W. Pascoe; Stathern, G. Pell; Biddestone, C. B. Jolliffe; Damerham, H. Bray: Fownhope, R. Williams; Woolmer Green, G. Attwood; Silecroft, T. W. Canning; Tillicoultry, D. M. Bayne: Cowdenbeath, J. W. Galletly; Dreghorn, H. Young; Stranraer, H. Laughland; Skelmorlie, J. W. Moodie; Alyth, C. G. Roger; Glasgow, C. Galletly.

Dublin Notes.

THE past ten days have been busy ones in Dublin. The C.M.S. Exhibition, held in commemoration of the Centenary, in the Rotunda Buildings (May 17 to 27) was a great success, not only from a financial point of view, but in interest, and spreading information on the subject of missions. The whole exhibition cannot fail to have proved a mighty, spiritual, and intellectual blessing to Dublin. Miss Gordon-Cumming's lectures, and her beautiful paintings of foreign scenes, were a marked feature in each day's programme.

The Eleventh Annual Convention for the deepening of spiritual life was held May 24-26 in the Antient Concert Rooms. The well-known names of Revs. J. Brash, F. S. Webster, G. H. C. McGregor, and J. Sloan will testify to the usefulness of the meetings, which were well attended by all classes. A praise meeting was held on Friday morning.

A Church of Ireland Labour Yard and Home are about to be opened in Dublin, where rough work will be given to all willing to do it. In the home a limited number of men will be boarded, and will thus be put in a position to earn their own living.

Dublin has many charities, and in order to prevent these overlapping, a committee, representing the various Protestant denomination has been formed.

Blackdown Hills Mission.

IN a recent circular-letter, Mr. W. H. Brealey, of this mission, who writes from 10, Albert Road, Clevedon, Somerset, dwells on the need of faithful Gospel work in the district. After thankfully rehearsing something of what God has done in the past, he says:—

"Reports from the various stations speak of continued encouragement and blessing, and of souls being saved. Already the Gospel Tent Work has commenced, and Mr. Glover—who is now residing at Clayhidon, and is again taking charge of the tent, as on two previous years—writes of very good opening meetings. May we ask your earnest prayers for this branch of the work, and also for the workers all over the Blackdown Hills. During the past six months our faith and patience have been very much tried as regards means to sustain the work; and at times I have felt as though for this reason very serious curtailing must take place. Many of our most liberal helpers have during the past year passed away to be with the Lord, and we have sorely missed their succour. We are praying that their places may be filled by others, who shall be 'baptised for the dead.' Daily, and almost hourly, our cry has been to the Lord that He would come to supply the need, so that the work might not cease—and many most gracious and signal answers have been given, enabling us to go on day by day.

"The present time is very critical, and I mention the fact that our friends may not only pray, but also be ready to 'come to the help of the Lord' in the succour of his work. It would be a serious calamity that such a mission should be permitted to collapse for lack of the comparatively small amount annually required."

A Call to Consecration.

DEAR SIR,—Though I have only just returned to London, I have heard with deep concern how in several places there seems a growth of worldliness and godlessness. Pleasure-seeking and self-indulgence seem in many places to be "choking the Word" in God's people and making it "unfruitful." While zeal for God and prayerfulness in Paris seems to be growing, in London in many places, I hear, there is a going back.

Will not the Lord's people see a call to a more earnest devotedness and separation unto God, that they may be "men of war fit for the battle"? There seems special need of consecrated soul-winners in the West End. We have a weekly meeting of believers at the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street (side door), on Fridays, at 8. Will not the Lord's people in that neighbourhood rally for his service? Will you ask for special prayer for blessing on meetings held there, at 3.45 and 7 on Sundays?—Yours for Christ's sake. Radstock.

4, Park Square West, N.W.

Cornwall Hall.

DURING the last twenty-two years a good Gospel work has been carried on in the Cornwall Hall, supported mainly by the offerings and efforts of the Church worshipping in the Talbot Tabernacle. For some time, however, the conviction has been deepening that a change was desirable. In view of the lease expiring in June, we have been prayerfully waiting and watching for a site on which to build a new hall. When a little since we heard that the freehold of St. Michael's Club, North Kensington, was for sale, we felt that it was for this we had been kept so long waiting. Originally built for a public-house at a cost of £2,000, the building occupies an excellent corner position at the junction of Faraday and Portobello Roads, in the centre of a district thickly populated with working people, amongst whom there is little Gospel effort. The structure, which has a frontage of 40ft. by 50ft., lends itself admirably to our requirements. There is an extensive cellarage which will fit up splendidly for our soup kitchen. By clearing the ground floor and bar we shall have a hall to seat 200 persons, beside a good-sized class-room. On the first floor we shall be able to accommodate 160 people, besides having two large rooms suitable for classes. Then there are six capital rooms, including a kitchen on the top floor, which will serve us well for classes and caretaker's apartments.

We have bought the property for £1,750, towards which we have already received £1,100, while a sum of £250 has been loaned to us for eighteen months without interest. This leaves but £400 to be obtained to enable us to complete the purchase. The necessary alterations to the new premises will entail an outlay of at least £600 to £700 in addition. The property will be immediately put in trust on the same Undenominational, Evangelical and Protestant lines as those of the Talbot Tabernacle.

Frank H. White,
7, Burlington Road, Bayswater. Pastor.

The Co-operative Congress at Liverpool decided last week to urge all co-operative societies, in districts where housing conditions are below a right standard, earnestly to consider the possibility of safely using capital in the erection of good houses, to be let to members at the lowest possible rents. They would thus be brought into effective competition with bad houses at exorbitant rents. It is believed that the surplus capital of the societies will be fruitfully employed in a new form of investment, and will, if so employed, help to mitigate one of the worst evils of city life, the fruitful parent of some of the darkest of our vices.

Famine in Africa.—The Church Missionary Society has received deplorable news from East Africa concerning the famine. The secretary of the Society at Freere Town, Rev. H. K. Binns, writing on April 20, says the state of things is "worse than ever." There was a little rain in March, and practically none in April; the crops, which had commenced to grow, are now perishing from drought. The locusts have appeared in myriads. Mr. Binns gives a melancholy picture of the effect of the famine. "We are supporting here," he says, "over a thousand people every day. They only get enough to keep body and soul together. Numbers of little children are left fatherless and motherless. Many are mere living skeletons; numbers have died and are dying of starvation and dysentery." The authorities of the Society at home have opened an East Africa Famine Fund.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, May 29th, 1899.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd."; this will effectually prevent loss.

Birmingham—Please say what P.O. Is. is for.

	£	s.	d.
Church of England Zenana Missionary Society—A Friend, £5; (Blind at Amritsar) A.I.C., £5	10	0	0
Blind Chinese (Mr. Murray) A.A.W.	0	5	0
North Africa Mission—A.A.W.	0	5	0
Armenian Sufferers' Relief—H.H.H.	0	1	0
Women's Armenian Relief Fund (Van), A Wesleyan	1	0	0
Friends of Armenia—(Marash Orphanage) Alpha ...	0	10	0
Poor Jews, Jerusalem—Elitta	0	5	0
Mission to Lepers of India—Elitta, 2s. 6d.; V.W., £2; H.C.H., £2	4	2	6
Church Missionary Society (Famine, E. Africa)—T.O., 10s.; (Centenary) S.H., £5	5	10	0
Moravian Missions—St. Clair, £1; Unit, £5... ...	6	0	0
Deacon Abraham's Work—St. Clair	1	0	0
Bible Lands Mission (Central Kurdistan)—St. Clair	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Innes Wright's Work, Nepaul—J. and A.S....	0	10	0
Baptist Missionary Society—Victoria Park, 5s.; Unit, £5	5	5	0
Cantonment Work in India—F.R.F.	5	0	0
London Missionary Society—Unit	5	0	0
Barcelona Protestant Hospital—Alpha	0	5	0
Gospel in North Italy—Alpha	0	5	0
Famine in S. Russia—Alpha, 2s. 6d.; (Jews) B., 2s. 6d.	0	5	0
Strangers' Rest, Zanzibar—Thankoffering (Special Mercies)	10	0	0
Tibetan Pioneer Mission (Miss Taylor)—S.A. ...	0	10	0
Zenana Bible and Medical Mission—V.W.	2	0	0
Mount Lebanon Mission Schools—V.W.	1	0	0
Meth. Episcopal Mission, Tientsin (Day Schools)—Mrs. M.A.E.	5	0	0
Soldiers' Home, Cork—A.I.C.	5	0	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—A Wesleyan, £1; A.F.R., 10s.; M.E.B., 5s.; E.G.S., 10s.; R.U.S.T., 2s. 6d.; Thankoffering, A.B., 10s.; V.W., £2; (Parcel of clothing) M.E.B.	4	17	6
Mrs. Wilkes' Rescue Work, Poplar—Elitta, 5s.; H.C.H., £2	2	5	0
Flower Girls' Mission (Blind and Crippled Children's Holiday)—Elitta, 5s.; A.F.R., 10s.; St. Clair, 10s....	1	5	0
Day in Country Fund—Elitta	0	5	0
St. Giles' Christian Mission—Suie, 2s.; Daughter of Toil, 10s.; V.W., £2; (Prison) H.C.H., £5; M.S.C., £1	8	12	0
London Society Promoting Christianity among the Jews—St. Clair, 10s.; R.U.S.T., 2s. 6d.	0	12	6
West Green Hall—M.S.	1	1	0
Railway Mission—H.C.H.	2	0	0
National Anti-Vivisection Society—H.C.H. ...	2	0	0
Gratuitous Circulation of The Christian—H.C.H.	2	0	0
Rescue Society—H.C.H....	2	0	0
London City Mission—M.S.C....	5	0	0
Jewish Work—London City Mission—M.S.C., £5; (Holiday Fund)—G.T., 10s.	5	10	0
R.N. Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—M.S.C.	1	0	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes—M.S.C., £1; Alpha, 2s. 6d. ...	1	2	6
Tram Car and Scripture Text Mission—M.S.C. ...	1	0	0
Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society—M.S.C.	1	0	0
Uncle Tom's Cot—See page 23...	0	7	9
Bristol Orphan Houses—A.F.	1	0	0
Barbican Mission to Jews—J.K.K., 5s.; Spes, £1...	1	5	0
Met. Tabernacle Colportage Association—Unit ...	5	0	0
Welcome Mission (Portsmouth)—Alpha	0	5	0
Open Air Mission (Epsom Races)—Alpha, 5s.; E. J. A., Hastings, 5s.	0	10	0
N.E., London Gospel Mission—Alpha	0	5	0
Union Hall Mission—Alpha	0	5	0
James Grove Baptist Chapel, Peckham—M.S. ...	0	10	6
Rev. Isaac Levinsohn's Work (Jews)—Mrs. E.K.N.M.B.	1	1	0
Sufferers from Explosion at St. Helens—Mrs. E.K.N.M.B.	1	1	0
Shipwrecked Mariners' Society.—Thankoffering (Special Mercies)	10	0	0
National Lifeboat Institution — Thankoffering (Special Mercies)	10	0	0
Seamen's Christian Friend Society—Thankoffering (Special Mercies)	20	0	0
Strangers' Rest (St. George's)—Thankoffering (Special Mercies)	10	0	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—E. J. A. Hastings, 5s.; V.W., £2	2	5	0
Dock Labourers' Mission (Children)—H.P.T. ...	1	0	0
G.W.R. Widow and Orphan Fund—M.V.C.	0	5	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—For His Sake, 10s.; V.W., £2	2	10	0
Salvation Army (Slum Work)—V.W.	5	0	0
Home of Industry—V.W....	2	0	0
Total	£185	19	3

(ADVERTISEMENTS.)

Dr. Barnardo's Homes—A.S., 5s.

St. Giles' Christian Mission—Havant, 5s.

Kensit Crusade—Mrs. Fairless, £10; Dr. J. L. Vardy, £1 1s.; J. G. Haworth, £1 1s.; C. R. Grimm, £1; Mrs. Frederick Rutherfoord, £1; Miss. Ewart, £1 10s.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, 98, High Street, Homerton, London, N.E., beg to gratefully acknowledge the following donations for Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent, and for the relief of the poor:—T., £1 1s.; E.S., £1 10s. 3d.; E.P., £1; M.P., 5s. 6d.; G.R., £5 5s.; T., 2s. 6d.

Temperance.—Friends in London who are willing to entertain provincial members of the National Association of Temperance Advocates from July 1 to 6 are invited to communicate with Mr. F. Adkins, 60, Old Bailey, E.C.

(709)

INVALID CHILDREN'S AID ASSOCIATION.

Founded 1888. President, The Earl of Aberdeen.

Was formed for the purpose of helping, supervising, and, if possible, curing the SERIOUSLY INVALIDED and CRIPPLED CHILDREN of the London Poor.

FUNDS ARE VERY URGENTLY NEEDED to enable the Committee to carry on the work, which consists chiefly in supplying a Visitor for each Child, Admission into Special Hospitals, Nursing Homes for long periods, Convalescent Homes, Training Homes, Homes for Incurables, supplying Surgical Appliances, Dressings, Clothing, Crutches, lending Invalid Chairs, Spinal Carriages.

Over 6,000 names are on the books of the Association.

Subscriptions will be gratefully received by the Secretary, 18, Buckingham St., Strand, W.C. (from whom all information can be obtained), or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE

DUCHESS OF ALBANY

Has consented to receive Purses of not less than £5, on behalf of "JANE BARCLAY HOUSE" (Miss Meredith Brown's new Deaconess House), in the

STATE DINING ROOM of the "SPEAKER'S HOUSE,"

FRIDAY, JUNE 23rd, THREE O'CLOCK.

The Right Hon. LORD REAY Presides.

Will those intending to present a purse communicate at once with Miss Meredith Brown, Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson Grove, when a purse and invitation card will be forwarded.

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE.

THE NIGHT SHELTER.

THE REFUGE.

EIGHT CHILDREN'S COTTAGE HOMES.

Every bed is occupied all the year round.

AT THE PRESENT TIME WE ARE QUITE WITHOUT FUNDS.

Mary H. Steer.

28, Betts Street,
St. George-in-the-East,
London, E.

A Fortnight at Seaside FOR BLIND AND CRIPPLED CHILDREN.

Among the large numbers of Slum Children who are sent to the various Holiday Homes every year none have such a strong claim upon the practical sympathy of the charitable public as the who, unfortunately, are found in such incredible numbers in the stifling and pestilential courts and alleys of the Metropolis.

BLIND AND CRIPPLED,

We have at Claction-on-Sea, connected with the Flower Girls' Mission, a suitable Holiday Retreat for these suffering little ones, and will meet the entire cost of each child for a Fortnight.

TEN SHILLINGS ONLY

I feel sure it will give pleasure and joy to the readers of The Christian to subscribe to the necessary funds for this effort.

Our Treasurer is F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

JOHN A. GROOM,
Secretary of Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission,
8, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY

14, BLOMFIELD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Now in its second century of work. Distinguished for its Catholic basis, its famous Missionaries (Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison, Ellis, Gilmour, &c.), its Pioneering successes, its enterprising Native Agents, its self-supporting Churches, its Bible Translation Work, its Contributions to Christian Literature, its Preaching to the Masses, its Women's Work for Women, its Schools and Orphanages, its Training Institutions, its Medical Missionaries, its Hospitals and Dispensaries, and its Leper Asylums.

Funds greatly needed. Special contributions for support of "Own Missionaries," or for Native Helpers gladly received.

Home Secretary: Rev. Arthur N. Johnson, M.A.

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

THE FIVE HOMES and OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE

carry on a continuous work all through the year, and are in daily need of support from the Lord's Stewards.

One Hundred and Eighty young women are maintained, instructed, and trained in the Homes.

WE ARE VERY GREATLY NEEDING HELP AT THIS TIME.

WILLIAM J. TAYLOR, Secretary,
200, Euston Road, London, N.W.

NATIONAL WAIFS ASSOCIATION

(INCORPORATED).

Help is Urgently Needed for Dr. Barnardo's Great Family of 5,000 Orphan and Waif Children!

Contributions will be gratefully received and acknowledged if sent to the Chairman of Committee, HOWARD WILLIAMS, Esq.; to the Treasurer, WILLIAM FOWLER, Esq.; to the Founder and Director, Dr. THOS. J. BARNARDO; or to the Bankers, London and South-Western Bank, and Messrs. Prescott, Dimsdale & Co.

JOHN ODLING, Secretary.

Head Offices:
18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

"FIRST PURE, THEN PEACEABLE."

LA VIA DELLA FELICITA,

THE WAY OF HAPPINESS.

Address delivered by SAMUEL JAMES CAPPER at Turin, November 18th, 1898, on occasion of First World's Congress of University Students. Reprinted from the Tampa Newspaper with English Translation in parallel columns, 28 pp.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

Any Sunday School Teacher will receive a copy post-paid upon sending a post-card to the Publisher.

"La Via della Felicità" has been brought before Three Hundred and Fifty Thousand Readers in Italy.

The Record writes:—"The address is marked by great simplicity and directness. It is the utterance of a man with a 'concern' that dominates him until able to deliver his soul of its message. In the Society of Friends such half-prophetic strains are not rare, and, with something of hopeful doggedness, a man or group of men in such a mood stand before kings, inspired by the overpowering impulse to seize or make a great opportunity."

Mr. HODGSON PRATT, President of the Sunday Society, the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, International Arbitration and Peace Association, and Vice-President of the Labour Association for Co-operative Production, writes:—"I think your address to young men admirable. The things you say are more important to every young man living than all the arts and sciences in the world. There is more failure in life from neglect of these truths than from any other cause whatever."

Dr. J. B. PATON, of the Training College, Nottingham, writes:—"I am delighted to read your address on 'The Way of Happiness.' It is wonderful that you have been able to give such an address in such flowing and vigorous Italian. It cannot fail to be most useful if very widely distributed among the young men of our country."

THE TSAR'S MANIFESTO.

IS IT ALL HUMBUG?

See Copy of Rescript and Answer to this Question given by the DEAN OF RIPON and SAMUEL JAMES CAPPER at great Town's Meeting held at Harrogate, September 15th, 1898, or exactly three weeks after Tsar had spoken.

ISSUED TO DATE—84,000.

Of the Harrogate Speech the Christian World writes:—"In this picturesque address Mr. Capper traces in most graphic style the connection that has always existed between the Quakers and Russian Royalty, and points out, in these days of the 'gospel of the mailed fist' and of the glad tidings of violence, that Nicholas II. is now saying from his point of vantage exactly what the Society of Friends has been saying for two hundred years. It is one of Mr. Capper's greatest utterances, and will interest thousands who are similarly minded."

 Free Grants made to Adult Schools, &c., upon application to the Publishers.

The following are extracts from letters received by Mr. Capper:—

MRS. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER:—"I am thankful to think of the good work you are doing."

BERTHA BARONESS VON SUTTNER, Authoress of "Lay Down Your Arms":—"I quite agree with the views which you so eloquently express in your pamphlets. I am sure that you show there the true way to human happiness and human dignity."

The Rt. Hon. JAMES BRYCE:—"The tone and teaching of your pamphlets—that on Peace, report of speech at Harrogate—and the 'Via della Felicità' are excellent."

The Hon. CONRAD DILLON, Honorary Secretary to Army Temperance Association:—"'The Way of Happiness' cannot be too widely circulated. The liberal way in which the subject is approached will secure its consideration from many readers, to whom it will open an absolutely new light. Bold and straightforward, it does not preclude hope to those who do not adopt it in its entirety."

Rev. H. SEARLE, Master at Harrow.—Harrow School, England:—"No one can work among boys and young men without being conscious of the dangers that are around them and before them. I am sure that there are many young men who might be greatly helped by having a little pamphlet such as this put into their hands just when they are entering upon life."

The DEAN OF CANTERBURY:—The Deanery, Canterbury, April 21st, 1899:—"Dear Mr. Capper, I read your 'Via della Felicità' with great interest, and earnestly hope that it may prove useful.—Yours very truly.—(Signed) F. W. FARRAR.

Sir WALTER BESANT:—"I am, however, sincerely with you in your efforts to persuade young men especially that strong drink is not necessary for them."

Sir WILFRID LAWSON, Bart, M.P.:—"I am very glad that you still fight away as hard as ever for the good cause."

GEORGE FREDERICK WATTS, R.A., Limnerslease, April 24th, 1899:—"I cannot think my opinion can be of any value or have any weight. I must applaud the unusual and noble movement and the work of yourself and all who have laboured in so right a direction—earnestness and work that will, I think, bear more fruit in the future than the present.—Very sincerely yours.—(Signed) G. F. WATTS."

Monsignor SAVELLI SPINOLA, from Corsica, 58, Via Viminale, Rome, 25 Avril, 1899:—"Monsignor Savelli Spinola a lu avec grand intérêt votre brochure, 'La Via della Felicità,' étant persaudé qu'elle fera du bien à la jeunesse."

JOHN CLIFFORD, M.A., D.D., of Westbourne Park Chapel, May 5th, 1899:—"I rejoice in your good work for Italy and the Italians, and wish it great and increasing success. With kind regards, yours sincerely.—(Signed) J. CLIFFORD."

The DEAN OF DURHAM, The Deanery, Durham, May 4th, 1899: "I very much envy the bright young men of Turin, who heard your delightful address. It ought to be circulated everywhere.—(Signed) G. W. KITCHIN."

HEADLEY BROS., 14, Bishopsgate Street, Without, E.C.

The 16th ANNUAL CLAPHAM SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE

Will be held (D.V.) in the CONFERENCE HALL, 143, CLAPHAM ROAD, S.W., ON JUNE 14, 15, 16.

Meetings at 10.15 and 11 a.m., 3.30 and 7.0 p.m.

SPEAKERS—

Rev. E. BREWER, M.A. (Old Hill, Staffs), Rev. T. GEORGE, B.D. (Bromley), Pastor FULLER GOOCH, W. G. KEMP, Esq., M.D. (Dulwich), Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY, M.A., Dr. MCKILLIAM, Rev. Dr. MORRIS (Brighton), Rev. F. PAYNTER, M.A. (Guildford), Lt.-Col. ROBERTS (Dulwich), Rev. W. DARLOW-SERJEANT, Pastor GEO. SOLTAU, Rev. H. C. STURDY, M.A. (Dorking), Rev. J. GOSSET TANNER, M.A. (St. John's Wood), Rev. N. S. TAYLOR, B.A. (of Londonderry), Major FREEBY (East Surrey Regiment), Rev. JOHN WILKINSON (Mildmay), and others.

June 14th will be devoted to the "Study of the Prophetic Scriptures."

June 15th and 16th to "Practical consecration in the light of the Lord's speedy appearing."

For full syllabus and particulars, apply to MR. WM. SOUTHALL, 141, CLAPHAM ROAD, S.W.

Reserved Seats Free on Application.

SCOTTISH NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONVENTION,

BRIDGE OF ALLAN,

JUNE 12th to 16th, 1899.

Speakers:—Revs. F. B. Meyer, C. G. Moore, W. D. Moffat, J. B. Figgis, F. S. Webster, H. L. Moir, John Smith, D.D.; Wm. Wilson, Esq., Wm. Ferguson, Esq., LL.D.

ROBERT WILSON, Esq., Cockermouth, Chairman.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.

Gospel Tent

FOR THE EAST END OF LONDON.

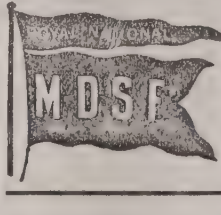
To the Readers of THE CHRISTIAN.

DEAR FRIENDS,

We are very anxious to erect a large tent in the crowded thoroughfare of the Mile End Road. Thousands of persons who never darken a Church or Chapel door will readily come in their working clothes to hear the gospel if preached within the canvas walls of a tent.

A suitable site has been secured, and we now earnestly appeal to you for funds to purchase and furnish a tent to hold over one thousand persons.

Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by



Yours faithfully,
FREDK. N. CHARRINGTON.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E.

Or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

ROYAL NATIONAL

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Patron: HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN. This Society carries on Medical Mission Work amongst the Fishermen on the North Sea and other Fishing Grounds, and in Labrador.

HELP EARNESTLY ASKED

Requires £20,000 per annum.

Treasurer: THOMAS B. MILLER, Esq. (Offices, 181, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.), to whom contributions may be sent; or to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

CAPT. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE,
Secretary and Joint Treasurer.

"I WAS AN HUNGRED; NAKED; IN PRISON."

Eight Days' Missions conducted regularly in the Prisons of England and Wales by a special staff of Church Army Prison Missioners. Many stories can be told by these missioners of lives changed, and a new world opened out to prisoners and ex-prisoners. Men, women, and lads received direct from Prison into the Society's Homes. Special Homes for First Offenders. Help is given in cases of necessity to the families and dependents of those in prison. 72 HOMES, &c., in London and in the Provinces, from Newcastle to Plymouth, for helping those who have "fallen by the way" to help themselves, without distinction of creed.

Chaplain, Pentonville Prison, writes:—"Your labour homes are simply invaluable."

Chaplain, Durham Prison, writes:—"Your work is sound and invaluable."

Chaplain, Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, writes:—"I believe the Church Army to be doing an immense amount of good, and to be the right thing in the right place."

FUNDS and OLD CLOTHES of every description urgently pleaded for.

Central Staff almost wholly unpaid.

BANKERS: BARCLAYS.

REV. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Sec.

Church Army Headquarters, 130, Edgware Road, London, W.

BEFORE SIXTY YEARS AGO.

THE SPECIAL CLAIMS OF THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST TO RECOGNITION ARE:

1. That it was the only Society for both Zenana Work and School Work existing in the Empire at the time of the Queen's Accession.

2. That it was then already carrying on Zenana Work, Harem Work, and School Work, in China, the Straits, Egypt, and India.

3. That it was the pioneer of all subsequent efforts in Zenana and Harem Work, for which it prepared the way, by encountering and, to a certain extent, overcoming the greatest initial difficulties.

4. That it still occupies a wider sphere than any kindred society in existence.

5. That by the help of God it has continued steadfast unto this day "in the Apostles' doctrine," and in the sending the Gospel to the heathen women and girls of the East.

The Committee urge these claims, and APPEAL for HELP to enable them to strengthen and extend the work of the Society.

President: THE MARCHIONESS OF NORTHAMPTON.

MISS WEBB, Secretary.

267, VAUXHALL BRIDGE ROAD, S.W.

Contributions may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The choir of St. John's Church, Alltwen, a village in the Swansea Valley, are out on strike as a protest against the Ritualistic form of services.

The vicar of St. Mary's, Newcastle-on-Tyne, is making special efforts to reach the Japanese sailors in the port, especially those on the Japanese warships that are built on the Tyne.

Bishop Tucker has ordained five more native deacons in Uganda. The Native Church of Uganda now has fifteen clergy, as well as some hundreds of lay teachers, whom it entirely supports.

The improvement noted in the condition of the Bishop of Liverpool is maintained, but Dr. Ryle is advised to refrain from public work for the present. His diocesan engagements are being taken by Bishop Royston.

The Duke of Devonshire has intimated to the vicar of St. Peter's Church, Eastbourne, his willingness to subscribe the full amount of the debt on the building fund of the church. His Grace's contribution will amount to about £850.

Speaking at a meeting in support of the Church Army, Bishop Barry said he considered the real cause of the growth of the organisation was the fact of its being an eminently evangelistic work, seeking out those who were lost.

At a meeting of the Younger Clergy Union of the C.M.S. addresses of great value and interest were given by Revs. Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe and A. E. Barnes-Lawrence. The subject under consideration was "How to arouse and sustain missionary interest in our parishes: (a) among the wealthier classes, (b) amongst the poor.

The programme for the Church Congress, to be held this year in London, states that the preachers will be the Archbishop of Canterbury (at St. Paul's), the Archbishop of Armagh (at Westminster Abbey), the Bishop of Peterborough (at St. Mary Abbots, Kensington), and the Bishop of London (at St. Paul's). The principal meetings will be held in the Albert Hall.

Arrangements have been made for the formation of a separate parish in connection with St. Augustine's Church, Bournemouth. St. Augustine's has hitherto been a chapel-of-ease to St. Stephen's. An endowment of £150 per annum has been secured for it, and a further sum is to be reserved for a vicarage house. The advowson is to be in the hands of the Bishop of the diocese.

Speaking at Canterbury, at the Congress of Church School Teachers, Dean Farrar said he did not think any occupation in life was more delightful, as well as more useful, than the task of educating the young; but he would earnestly press upon every teacher not to regard each child as merely a receptacle for so much knowledge which it could reproduce before the Government Inspector, but rather as a child to be trained up in virtue and holiness.

Congregational.

Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, is to be assisted in the mission work to which he proposes to devote time during the autumn by his daughter, who is an excellent singer.

The deacons of Castlegate Church, Nottingham, have set Rev. R. Baldwin Brindley free for one Sunday per month to give him some relief in the strain of the care of so large a church, particularly in pulpit work, and to enable him to render some service to other churches. He has declined the call to be colleague and successor of the Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers.

In the course of his Thursday morning discourse last week, at the City Temple, Dr. Parker remarked of the Queen: "Having seen her once I had seen her for ever. I shall never forget that aged and wrinkled face, with the young smile and the glance of inexpressible dignity. She sat with motherly quietness among her children, but that quietness was not weakness, it was the last expression of power."

The New Zealand Congregationalists are so pleased with the success which has followed the visit of Dr. and Mrs. Bevan to their colony, that they have drafted a scheme of visitation for the next seven years. The following is the list of those whom they have agreed to invite: Revs. Principal Fairbairn, J. Morlais Jones, Dr. Horton, C. S. Horne, J. Morgan Gibbon, J. H. Jowett, and W. J. Dawson.

Baptist.

Gratifying results of the recent Free Church Council Mission, under Gipsy Smith, are showing themselves at Stockton-on-Tees. A large number of persons have been baptized and received into membership.

At the annual gathering of the Yorkshire Association of Churches there were many cheering signs of extension. A resolution was carried "deploring the teaching of many of the clergy of the establishment concerning religion, the priesthood, the Mass and the confessional." The closing sermon was preached by Dr. J. Stalker, of Glasgow.

At the recent conference at Middlesbrough Rev. J. H. Shakespeare stated the claims of the Twentieth Century Fund, which were approved by a hearty unanimous resolution. Mr. G. D. Wilson, who presided, especially commended the fund in view of the fact that Popery was more bold in its attack upon England than at any time since the Reformation.

"One minister," says Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, "deeply loved and honoured by his brethren, writes that he followed up the sermons on the Century Fund by spending a day in his vestry to receive promises, and that he had had a "wonderful day." Promises had poured in, and there was much more to follow. This is what we want. Let every minister preach on the Fund and then sit in his vestry to receive promises."

Mr. Herbert Sutton Smith, who is sailing in a few days for missionary work on the Congo, was solemnly commended to God at Devonshire Square Church, Stoke Newington, on Sunday evening last. Principal Gould, of Regent's Park College, and Rev. G. P. McKay (pastor) conducted the service. Mr. Sutton Smith also gave an address. Devonshire Square Church has just celebrated its 251st anniversary.

Methodist.

Continued Wesleyan progress at Hull has led to the formation of a scheme to raise £10,000 for Church extension. Part of the money would be expended in the erection of a new mission church.

Nearly £1,400 has been raised for the benefit of the widow and children of Rev. G. W. Clutterbuck, who it will be remembered, when the Stella struck the rocks, assisted others into the boats and remained behind to die.

Rev. Marshall Hartley, who has returned from his eight months' missionary tour in China, Ceylon, and India, advocates increased attention, on the part of the Wesleyan body, to the medical side of mission work, and to the spreading of Christian literature.

At the New Zealand Methodist Conference, held in Christchurch, it was decided unanimously to inaugurate the opening of the new century by a Commemoration Fund of £50,000. The reports presented show advances in many departments of the work.

An interesting gathering was recently held at Burslem to recognise the fact that Mr. Spencer Lawton has served on the Burslem Wesleyan circuit plan continuously for a period of fifty years. The veteran local preacher is still gladly welcomed by congregations.

South African Wesleyan Methodism is making considerable strides; the membership has more than tripled. At the recent Conference Rev. W. Wynne was installed as president in succession to Rev. James Thompson, whose serious illness and consequent absence evoked much sympathy.

The Wesley Guild continues to be characterised, in many parts, by spiritual fervour. At Gosport much aggressive work is being done, both in the army and navy, and at Whittlesea open-air evangelistic services have been arranged to reach the village populations; while in other places Methodism has received much stimulus.

Speaking at the Macclesfield Wesleyan Convention, Rev. H. P. Hughes pointed out that the special danger to which a minister is exposed is from doing his duties professionally, as a minister must read the Bible, attend the prayer-meetings, and conduct services. Even a minister might occupy a lower Christian standard than that once held. The recent Conventions, he added, had been blessed to many of the brethren in helping them to a full consecration to Christ.

A remarkable Wesleyan forward movement has taken place in the town of Watford within the last six months. The Co-operative Hall services, which have been mostly conducted by our local preachers, have been greatly blessed. The hall is filled every Sunday evening, converts have been gathered in, a flourishing society and Sunday school have been founded, and a mission band, comprising many new converts, has also been established. A site for the erection of a new church has been recently purchased. At the Whit Monday evangelistic services a number of persons passed into the inquiry room.

Presbyterian.

It is unlikely that either Dr. Pentecost or Dr. Lorimer will be heard in Marylebone Church this season.

At the anniversary at Tunley, near Wigan, the services were times of refreshing. At the close of the afternoon service a number of young people were received into church membership.

Much interest is felt at Tooting in the completion of the new church in Beechcroft Road. The dedication service is to be conducted by Rev. J. B. Meharry, of Crouch Hill, on Thursday, June 8, at 7.30 p.m.

The jubilee of St. Peter's Church, Liverpool, which was opened for worship in 1849, has been commemorated by special services of a vigorously helpful character. The re-union of past and present members was an interesting social function.

Rev. Dr. Watson has returned from his preaching and lecturing tour in the United States, and preached to his congregation at Sefton Park on Sunday last. He is announced to take part during June in a meeting at the Crouch Hill Presbyterian Church in aid of the funds of Westminster College.

The tombstone of Rev. John Boyd, the first Presbyterian minister whose American ordination is authentically recorded, has been deciphered. He was buried in the cemetery of the Old Scots Church, near Freehold, New Jersey. It is to the effect that "the ashes of the eminently pious Mr. John Boyd, pastor of this church of Calvin, are buried here." He died August 30, 1708, in the twenty-ninth year of his age.

Society of Friends.

Lucy Standing has held meetings at several towns in the South of Ireland, and has interested her hearers with accounts of the Madagascar Missions. At Carrick-on-Suir, where there are very few Friends, the public made a good-sized meeting.

At the yearly meeting on ministry and oversight there was an unusually large attendance. The reports from the various quarterly meetings were very suggestive, and referred to many activities in which these meetings are engaged for the shepherding of the flock.

At Dublin yearly meeting Henry Stanley Newman said that on the whole there was so much vigorous religious life amongst Irish friends that a better and brighter future was opening out. There seemed to be an awakening of thought in Ireland; the people were becoming more independent of the Catholic priests, thereby affording an important opportunity of service for friends.

The concluding minute of counsel read at the Philadelphia yearly meeting contained the following:—"It is no man's learning, nor artificial acquirements; it is no man's riches nor greatness in this world; it is no man's eloquence nor natural wisdom that made him fit for government in the Church of Christ. All his endowments must be seasoned with the heavenly salt, his spirit subjected and his gifts pass through the fire of God's altar."

"It appears," remarks The Friend, "that the meetings for worship need reforming and readapting to the true edification of the body. It is probably along the lines of a wise conservatism and more active eldership in connection with these meetings that the Society will make progress. A baptised eldership watching the progress of the worship, and at times indicating the spiritual needs of the congregation, and calling forth by personal private dealing latent gifts for ministry, will, we trust, gradually lead to effectual edification."

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. J. S. RENDELL, pastor of Park Green Church, Macclesfield. He was seventy-seven years of age, and had been in the United Methodist ministry forty-two years.—Rev. JOHN CHARLES BAGSHAW, Vicar of Osbournby, near Folkingham, Lincolnshire, after a short illness. Mr. Bagshaw, who was close upon eighty years of age, was a missionary chaplain in South Australia from 1847 to 1855, and in New Zealand from 1855 to 1869.—Rev. J. F. JENKIN, vicar of St. Ann's, Lydgate, near Mossley.—Rev. Canon GRANT, vicar of Portsmouth. He had held the vicarage for thirty years. He was honorary canon of Winchester Cathedral, and had been rural dean of Portsmouth.—Rev. ELIAS OWEN, vicar of Llanyblodwel, near Oswestry, died at the vicarage very suddenly. He was highly esteemed in the Principality, and held sound Protestant views.—Ven. Archdeacon STRETCH, who was one of the pioneers of the Church in Australia, died in Melbourne on April 12, in his eighty-third year.—Mr. CHARLES WHITAKER, of Leeds. He took an active interest in religious work, and was a steward at Richmond Hill Wesleyan Chapel.

About Books.

MISS EMILY S. HOLT'S WORKS.

FOR many years past it has been a periodical pleasure to call attention to the various works written by the late Emily S. Holt. In the form of bright and readable stories, this Christian lady produced many books which were not merely interesting in character, but instructive on highest things, and directed to the defence of the faith of Christ in its purity and simplicity. Writing for the large community of "ordinary" readers, Miss Holt set herself to bring from the treasury of history, and especially English history, things new and old, as well as lessons for life and godliness. She combined the curious with the practical, the ancient with the modern, the concerns of eternity with the things of time.

Now, it is impossible to depict English life in any age without taking into account the alternation of Romish intrigue and Protestant heroism; and as one who had thoroughly studied the bearings of these great facts, Miss Holt filled her works with animated incidents, and exhibited the principles of Gospel truth and freedom in the light which our national history has so frequently vindicated with such glorious lustre.

Miss Holt wrote of the Reformation in all its stages—in its dawn and in its heyday, in its sunshine and its shadow. And as during recent years departure from Protestant integrity deepened and expanded, she was particularly careful to give definition and direction to the timely teaching of her various historical tales. Taken as a whole, these books deserve to be described as an invaluable auxiliary of present-day Protestant testimony.

To a large extent, we are sorry to say, the people have become indifferent on the many and great questions involved in the Reformation, and negligent of the privileges which we enjoy as a result of the heroism and faithfulness of our forefathers. As counteracting these evils, we cordially welcome a reissue of Miss Holt's books, some forty in number, by Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co., 48, Paternoster Row. Now for the first time the stories are published in uniform style, all at one price, 2s. 6d. each. And in order that the books may be accepted for circulation in town and village libraries, also in Sunday school and other collections, the publishers offer the entire set of forty for £3.

It is a pleasing duty to be able to commend the enterprise that brings these useful volumes within the reach of the community at large. We trust that, as a consequence, the ministry of the lamented author will be greatly extended, and that the cause of Protestantism, with which the cause of pure Gospel teaching is so intimately associated, may by these books be advanced throughout our land and wheresoever the English tongue is spoken.

JUNE MAGAZINES.

IN a judicious and appreciative article in the Free Church Chronicle on "The Free Church Catechism," Professor Banks says: "If we can instil into our Sunday scholars the clear, spiritual scriptural of the great Christian doctrines contained in this catechism, we shall have done much to counteract current errors and to sow the seed of a strong intelligent Nonconformity in the next generation." The same number has an excellent sketch with portrait of Rev. J. H. Jowett, of Birmingham. (2d. Memorial Hall.)

Personalities bulk largely in our modern serials. In the Friendly Visitor the lifework of Dr. Bowman Stephenson is sympathetically sketched and illustrated. The Family Friend has admirable notices of Lady Battersea, and of the work of Mrs. M. Gough among barmaids in connection with the Y.W.C.A. Our Own Gazette furnishes an appreciation of the late Mr. W. T. Paton. All these monthlies are issued by Messrs. Partridge.

In the Free Churchman there is a portrait and brief sketch of Rev. N. Curnock, editor of the Methodist Recorder. (1d. Memorial Hall).

The Puritan touches many subjects of urgent importance—especially the Sunday question. J. Maitland Stuart puts in a plea for a Christian daily newspaper, and C. W. Bremner contributes a singularly interesting sketch of the Friends' School at Ackworth. (6d. James Bowden).

In the Sunday at Home Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson writes on "A Sunday at Aitutaki," and the story of Rev. Fr. Coillard's journeys and labours in central Africa is well told by Rev. J. P. Hobson. (6d. Religious Tract Society).

The Boys' Own Paper has many attractions, including several articles on cricket. "A Chat about Lilies" is accompanied by a large coloured plate. Among the good things in the "Summer Number" of the

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

WE have leaped at a bound into the hottest of hot weather, and the time has come for the poor denizens of our crowded city centres to have their greatly-coveted "Day in the Country." We once more offer to our readers the privilege of helping in this good work, which affords an uncommon amount of health-giving enjoyment at a comparatively small cost.

Next Lord's Day the usual June collections will be taken in London churches for the hospitals of the city. Such a good cause really needs no advocacy, but some may require a reminder of the event. We observe that one generous friend has contributed £10,000; we hope his example may prove, in some degree, contagious. It is only needful to imagine what the condition of our poorer districts would be without hospital help, to have our warmest sympathies aroused.

Only a short time ago it was the custom of the House of Commons to pronounce its benediction upon the race-track by solemnly adjourning for the Derby Day. It must be a source of encouragement to every lover of righteousness that this year, on that particular day, one of the most beneficent reforms of the latter end of the century was discussed in the Commons. Mr. Robson's bill will not satisfy everyone, but it is a step in the right direction. England is falling behind in certain reforms; America and Germany are both pressing her hard in the commercial struggle. They are gaining ground because they have freely recognised the importance of public education, and are, in this respect at any rate, ahead of this land. Mr. Robson's measure should only be a promise of further advance.

We fear that unless Mr. Robson's Bill for the regulation of child labour is adopted by the Government, it will not become law this session. The amendments intended to obstruct its passage through the House of Commons have been defeated; but the Bill not having passed through Committee by half-past five, according to Standing Orders it lost its priority. This is much to be deplored. The question is one that calls for persistent activity of all those who interest themselves in child-life in the great manufacturing centres. So necessary has legislation been proved to be to limit excessive labour amongst the nation's youth, that we trust Her Majesty's Government will not allow the Bill to be lost. The debate showed that on this measure the House of Commons was almost unanimous, while resistance to the Bill was as unscrupulous as it was ineffective. The cry of the children must be heard and protection be secured without further delay.

The correspondence to which Lord Rosebery's recent remarks on the limitations of wealth gave rise, has been instructive from several points of view. Some rich people have confessed that they were happier, when they had little or less, than they are now with more money than they can spend. Others have asked, "Why, in that case, do they not give their money away and re-enter on the blessings of poverty?" But that is just the sorest aspect of the problem. Wealth may be disappointing to its possessor; but the loss of it, when once gained, is worse still as experience has shown a thousand times. The moral is to those who have their lives still before them. Let them beware of setting their minds on riches as a condition of earthly happiness, and they will do well. The golden rule is that enunciated in Heb. xiii. 5: "Let your manner of life be without covetousness, and be content with such things as ye have: for He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." (See Poem, p. 11.)

The Bishop of Hereford has written a splendid letter to The Times, appealing to the better nature of the wealthier classes as regards their habits of gambling and betting on races. He suggests that the conscience of the higher classes has been lying dormant in this matter, and that by their example they have been instrumental in spreading the poison through all classes of society. The appeal is on the ground of noblesse oblige to Christian gentlemen, to use their influence more strenuously to divorce the healthy sports of the people from the vices of betting and gambling. Nothing but a great revolution in public opinion will stem the strong tide that is now flowing in that direction, and the bishop suggests that this revolution should begin with those who have given the fashion.

By what means can the rich and titled owners of racehorses be made to feel and realise that they are in part, and in large part, responsible for the wave of gambling that overflows the country during the racing season? Some of them even figure among the philanthropists, and yet they appear to be oblivious to all the vice and misery and demoralisation they are helping to create. Are they victims to a traditional way of looking upon sport? Do they see nothing but an exciting struggle between a number of noble, high-mettled animals for the first place? Are they blind to the immense mass of criminality and vice that concentrates around the ring where for a few short minutes the contest is waged? And do they never think of the gambling on the event that goes on in every town and village of the land? Is there no way by which the Christian Church, which has destroyed seven-day journalism, can influence these patrons of the Turf to withdraw from their false position? Truly the Bishop's protest is published none too soon!

The Southport election seems to show that the Protestant feeling of the country is powerful, active, and resolute, and was a determining factor in the result. Politicians will observe the fact and shape their course accordingly. A general election which should turn on a point of conscience would do the whole country unspeakable good, whichever party was returned to power. While wire-pullers and professional politicians seek ends of their own, the people have it in their power to show that principle is better than policy.

The Imperial Protestant Federation has issued an urgent manifesto against the Roman Catholic Relief Bill. We hope that every Cabinet Minister, to all of whom a copy of the manifesto has been sent, has studied the grounds upon which objection is taken to the proposed measure. How it is possible to grant important temporal privileges to the monastic orders of the Church of Rome in England, and especially to the Jesuits, we cannot see. Drifting as the National Church surely is towards Rome, all Protestants should be on the alert against any action on the part of the Government that would give the faintest colour of sympathy with "the evil deeds and disloyal and persecuting tenets of the Jesuits." There should be a numerous rally of protesting members against any further facilities for the propaganda of Rome.

Last week was an eventful one for our sister country across the Channel. Surely there has been no greater triumph of righteousness over passion and race prejudice than the annulment by the highest French court of the sentence against Dreyfus. Surely, too, there has been no more heroic and pathetic figure than his in all secular history. It is true that he stands for fresh trial before another court-martial, but on the evidence now before the world his acquittal is morally certain. If justice has seemed to walk in this case with slow and leaden steps, its progress has been sure, and the French people are sincerely to be congratulated on the result. They have reason to be thankful that the judges have disregarded popular clamour, and given a verdict that not only atones for a great wrong, but affords stability to the social fabric of the nation.

It is stated, we hope truly, that the Czar of Russia has been giving serious attention to the condition of the Imperial prisons and also to the exiles in Siberia. The cruel sufferings of prisoners—many of them in bonds for the sake of religion—demand amelioration. It is well known that the Stundists, the Doukhobortsi, and others now under penalties for worshipping God according to the dictates of an enlightened conscience, are amongst Russia's most loyal subjects. All they desire and pray for is, liberty to follow Christ as they learn of Him in their New Testament. Thousands of these simple-hearted Christians are separated from their families and enduring untold hardships and disabilities for the truth's sake. To these peaceful people justice should at least restore them to liberty and their families.

The spectacle at the Peace Congress of representatives of three of the most powerful nations, vying with each other in advocating a scheme of international arbitration, is so far the most important as it is the most dramatic incident of that extraordinary body. Those who were the pioneers of the Peace crusade half a century ago would have given much to live to see their highest hopes so near fruition. It is, indeed, a remarkable instance of "time's revenges." Peace advocates have, times without number, been satirised as visionaries; the cynic and the pessimist have done their best to kill it by discouragement; and the general public, especially of late years, have been strangely apathetic. But in the result a noble lesson is given to those who are leading "forlorn hopes," that they persevere. When they think themselves furthest from the goal, they may find themselves suddenly near it.

While the nations of Europe are laying the foundation of better relations among themselves, the churches at home are carrying on the campaign of reunion with still greater results. The Free Church of Scotland and the U.P. Church have formally accepted the principle of amalgamation, and in a year or two we may hope to see the two made one. As the Free Church is the stronger in the country districts and the U.P. in the towns, this will mean a real consolidation of forces that should tell immensely for good on the religious life of Scotland. This union of two great churches is the fruit of that spirit of mutual rapprochement which in England has taken the form of Free Church Federation, and is one of the most encouraging religious features of the closing years of the century.

There is some good missionary reading in the Colonial reports on British New Guinea for 1897-8. We are informed on this high authority that the lapse of time has steadily strengthened the conviction that mission labour is of immense value and importance in the possession; and that it was more through the L.M.S. than by any other means that the way was prepared for the founding of the colony. Grateful for the past, the authorities wish that the Society should undertake a great deal more to evangelise the natives of New Guinea, and promise that the Government will do all it can to facilitate the contemplated expansion. The means of the L.M.S. have only allowed it to occupy thus far the coast line; it only longs for the power to push the conquests of the cross into the interior. Meanwhile Roman Catholicism is massing its forces for an attack.

Thankful as we are for the tributes that again and again are paid by public men and Government officials to the value of missionary effort, there is no doubt a danger of Christian workers becoming influenced by secondary motives. Trouble and persecution have been of great advantage to the Kingdom of God by purifying the motives of some helpers and by keeping away others. It has grown better in the shade than in the sunshine. It is true that the labours and influence of missionaries are one main support of British rule in India; but the missionaries have not gone to do that work, and must not be regarded chiefly in that light. They are ambassadors for Christ, and their work is, under any and every kind of rule, to beseech men to be reconciled to God.

Why is nothing being done in London for the carrying-out of the Inebriates Act of last year? The progress in the provinces is slow, but in the Metropolis absolutely nothing is being done. The question of cost doubtless bars the way, the local authorities being generally of opinion that the State should provide the funds and not burden the rates therewith. It may be that they are right, but it really comes to the same thing in the end, and the Act ought not to be "a dead letter."

The tyranny of Sunday labour is well brought out in the condition of the performers at Sunday concerts, which are controlled by men of great influence in musical circles. Were a performer to refuse work on a Sunday he could hardly expect preferment at another time. The ninety performers at Queen's Hall are all paid, and out of the 350 performers at the National Sunday League concerts at the Alhambra Theatre, seventy are professionals. It is affirmed that the audiences at Sunday concerts are practically the same as attend on other days, and that the cheapness of these concerts has led to a diminished attendance on week-days. As to museums, picture galleries, and public libraries throughout the country, the attendance has been so small that about one-third of them, after giving Sunday opening a fair trial, have closed again on that day. The great fact is that Sunday labour of all kinds means the oppression of a large number of persons, and in their interest it should be resisted.

If Sabbath rest is the heritage and right of the working classes, it should also be the interest and care of the ruling and influential classes of our land. Any disregard of this may well cause apprehension; hence our deep regret that members of the Royal Family should occasionally do on the Lord's Day things which might with greater propriety be done at other times. For instance, on Sunday week the Prince of Wales and several members of his household visited the Zoological Gardens, and spent an hour going round the grounds watching the animals. What this meant in the way of preparation and attendance we are not told; but it assuredly involved service having the character of labour rather than rest. Persons of much leisure should take pleasure in jealously conserving the rights and interests of those who have but little leisure.

A story contained in the "Dawn of Day," a parish magazine published by the S.P.C.K., throws a vivid light on the subtle effects of the sacerdotal teaching so rampant just now. A young woman engaged to the son of a Methodist chapel steward gave up her lover rather than be married in a Nonconformist church. The girl is described as "a child of Holy Church, dearly loving William, who was so good to her, but holding scarcely a single conviction with her on religious matters," which is the writer's method of expressing the chasm between the Anglican and the Dissenting forms of faith.

Under stress of the sacerdotal idea, the girl tells her lover that she would not feel married at all if the ceremony were not performed in the Church of England, and moralises thus:—"Marriage is God's holy ordinance, to which, through his appointed minister, He gives his blessing. O Will, think of the difference!" Everyone would respect the self-sacrifice of a woman who refused to be wedded to a man holding scarcely a single conviction with her on matters that were really spiritual. But where it was simply a difference on non-essentials, having no relation to the saving truths they both really held in common, one sees the infinite harm that may be done by teaching which separates those who are really at one, but are thrown apart by these foolish tenets of men. Is it the legitimate function of a Society with such a record as the S.P.C.K. to publish such stories as this?

Rev. C. M. Sheldon, the author of "In His Steps," has recently taken a sojourn at an American college, and has published his observations. Among other remarks he regards the growth of athleticism as a serious problem, but his chief concern regards the one great and serious lack of Bible study as a part of the College Curriculum. He cannot understand why so much time should be given to pagan faiths and institutions, "rocks, stars, and atoms—the peanuts of life's pabulum"—and so little to the soul of man and the most important things in life. This criticism would equally apply to English collegiate life, and not even our theological colleges would escape from the indictment. The incidentals of training are often emphasised too much in proportion to the essentials. Many students know more about Greek mythology than about Old Testament history.

The subjects on which Richard Baxter always preached were of the most important—things to be believed, things to be done, and things to be desired. Preachers who are anxious as to what their next sermons should be about may well see what subjects they have recently dealt with, and thus ascertain how far they have kept the proportion of the truth. Some things are unduly emphasised to the injury of truth in its symmetry, and others are apt to be omitted or are imperfectly set forth. Let every preacher be faithful to the fulness of the revelation he has to declare.

The dire effect of the present driving rate at which life is forced along, is beginning to show itself in two important directions. 1st, while the average of life is longer because of the improved condition of child-life, the life of men and women, but especially men, is growing shorter. The pressure to go fast is making men old before their time, and is laying many of them in the grave. Good John Woolman, the American Quaker of last century, used to say that God never meant men to toil and moil as they generally do for a living; and somehow we shall have to be brought to the conclusion "that man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." This rush all day long is not life. 2nd, with this rapidity of pace we are told that originality is becoming rarer every year, and "a casual type of mind" is being developed. The pleasures of the mind are being sacrificed, notwithstanding the diffusion of a certain type of education. We are starving ourselves in order to live. The quieter and more meditative way suggested by Scripture profits both soul and body.

It is hard to understand why Unitarians are so sensitive to their exclusion from the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches. That Council does not profess to be a federation of the Free Churches of England; it limits its scope by the word, "Evangelical." This has so clear a connotation, and is so indissolubly interwoven with a belief in the Deity of our Lord, his vicarious atonement, and other doctrines rejected by the Unitarians, that it is difficult to conceive how they themselves could possibly join in spiritual work based on these assumptions. The Federation therefore rightly declines to include those Churches in its lists. To act otherwise would be to stultify its evangelical witness and take out all heart from its distinctive work. It is neither narrowness nor lack of charity to insist upon acting in consistence with fundamental principles. Hitherto the Federation has spoken with no uncertain voice in this matter. We agree with the reasoned argument of Mr. Spurr, in which he says (p. 11):—

> It follows that no person belongs to the true Church who denies the Divinity of Jesus Christ.

The Church.—II.

A Study for the Present Time.

By Rev. F. C. SPURR.

DID Jesus Christ our Lord, in founding his Church, intend one visible body only? This, after all, is the crux of the matter. It is agreed by all that He only intended one soul of the Church—its animating principle being his own Divine life possessing individual hearts, and its goal being Himself. But one visible body—did He mean that? "Yes!" reply the "Catholics," with emphasis, "and we are that body, outside of which there is no salvation." When we demand proof of such a tremendous claim, we are referred to our Lord's word in John x. 16, and to the doctrine of Apostolic Succession. By this time, however, no person who respects his mind ought to have any doubt as to what our Lord meant when he spake of the "one fold and the one shepherd." Readers should know that Revisers reject the word "fold" as being misleading, and replace it by the word "flock." Jesus did not contemplate the gathering of all his sheep into one fold, but He did predict the creation of a universal flock—a very different thing.

Great stress, however, is by "Catholics" (Anglican or Roman) laid upon the doctrine of "Apostolic Succession." This granted, everything else follows—the one "fold," priests, sacraments, and the "Catholic Church." In fact, the doctrine of "Apostolic Succession" is the central point of the controversy. If it is true, then all outside that order are in error; if it is false—we shall see. Is it true? Let us get back to Apostolic times, and

EXAMINE THE FACTS.

Jesus ordained Twelve Apostles, the number twelve harmonising with the symbols and types of his works, i.e., the twelve elders, the twelve tribes, the twelve gates, &c. When Judas Iscariot committed suicide, the remaining eleven met together, and by ballot elected Matthias in his place. (Acts i.) It is very remarkable that we hear no more about Matthias after his election. Soon after this, God elected a twelfth Apostle in a direct and superhuman way—St. Paul. There was no ballot cast for him; indeed, the Apostles were not even consulted about him. Further, at first they refused to recognise him as an Apostle, until at last they were compelled to do so. It was Paul's life-long boast that his election to the Apostolate was not "of man" (see Gal. i.); but he strenuously maintained its reality by pointing not to any official ordination, but to the "signs of an apostle" which strewed his life. Will anyone doubt the reality of

ST. PAUL'S APOSTLESHIP?

Then what becomes of the twelve apostles? The number was deranged by St. Paul's appearance—he made thirteen, a number without typical significance. Does it not appear as if God ignored the mechanical election of Matthias, in favour of his own election of Paul? If so, then "Apostolic Succession" was stifled at the outset.

A mechanical "Apostolic Succession" is simply impossible in the spiritual kingdom. The ministry of Christ is not a succession of bodies, but of spirits. With the greatest respect, one may say that all the Bishops of Christendom cannot make an Apostle, or a servant of Jesus Christ. They may recognise and appoint men already called, but it is not theirs to call them. In the case of the Roman priests, boys are set apart by rote for the "priesthood," and they are trained for the ministry, whether fit or not. At Oxford, many a young fellow "goes in for the Church" who is no more fit for the work than is his pet dog.

The godly clergy of the English Church feel this anomaly as keenly as any. When one beholds a young man, barely out of his youth, enter a pulpit, and speak as a successor of the Apostles, while it is obvious to all that he has not an apostolic trait about him, the thing becomes a farce. The only "Apostolic Succession" in the Church of God is the succession of SPIRIT, FERVOUR, DEVOTION.

A mechanical succession is impertinent, for it excludes the active Headship of Jesus Christ. He Himself is with us directing his affairs, calling men and appointing them to his service. We are told that no man is a true minister of Jesus Christ unless he has been ordained in this succession. How God mocks such folly by choosing whom He will and honouring them as his servants! Spurgeon, Dale, Maclaren, Weaver, Moody, and ten thousand others, who have won multitudes for God, were all outside this mechanical succession. The experience of the Church contradicts the false claim.

Then since our Lord has mightily used men belonging to all churches, He seems to have approved, not of one "fold," but of one flock. His own words, too, point to the idea that He did

NOT MEAN ONE VISIBLE BODY ONLY.

His kingdom was to be like a mustard tree—one tree with many branches: or, like a fishing net, one net with many meshes. The events of the day of Pentecost (the Church's birthday) point in the same direction: one truth was proclaimed, but in various tongues. This variety is consonant with life in other departments than the spiritual. God, the Author of all life, has created it in endless variety. The differences are immense between one form and another, yet nature is one great unity, and its differing notes combine to form one perfect harmony. We may go further, and say that uniformity is never the mark of the Divine handiwork: it is unity, and not uniformity, that we perceive in his enterprise.

From all of which we may conclude that Jesus did not intend one visible body only.

IV. Are we to believe, then, that any company calling itself a church is part of the One Church of Christ? Certainly not; we have already protested against this absurdity. The churches, if they are really allied to Christ, must bear those marks of Divine unity which infallibly proclaim their right to share in the common life of the Ecclesia.

WHAT ARE THESE MARKS?

(1.) The acknowledgment of the sole Headship of Christ (Col. ii. 19). His kingdom is not of this world, and therefore the world has not the remotest right to interfere with his concerns in the way of direction. Jesus alone must be saluted as the Divine, ever-living Head. From which it follows that no person belongs to the true Church who denies the Divinity of Jesus Christ.

(2.) The acceptance of the Pentecostal programme as the rule for Church membership and life (Acts ii. 41, 47). The items here noted for our guidance are: (a) Baptism as the initial step (v. 41). (b) Continuance in the Apostles' doctrine (v. 42). That is to say, the Church is pledged to the central verities of the faith—the death and resurrection of our Lord, and the gift of the Holy Ghost, with all that is involved in these. This doctrine is to be the guide of life—to be absorbed by us, and then heralded by us. (c) Fellowship (v. 42). Bound together in community life, each member must remember and seek to discharge his debt towards his fellow members. The object of a Christian community is to enkindle and to sustain love, for the purpose of mutual help and testimony. (d) Breaking of bread (v. 42). The Lord's Supper to be prominent and permanent, with the double object of keeping before the soul both its redemption and its obligations. (e) Prayers (v. 42): that is, the "fellowship" above-mentioned is to have a real spiritual basis. Devotion and spirituality must be at the very heart of the Church, or she has no raison d'être. (f) Finally, missionary enterprise (v. 47). It is true that the Lord adds to his Church; but the Church is responsible to teach, to witness, and to spread the Gospel.

The absence of these marks means the absence of a true Church: their presence means the presence of a Church, because Christ is recognised as Head, and his will is accepted as the law of life; and Ubi Christus, ibi Ecclesia.

V. So the visible Church, possessing these marks, is really one in the highest sense of unity. This unity should be emphasised by mutual co-operation. No one branch of the Church presents a complete view of the truth, any more than one branch of a tree represents the perfect life of the tree. The ensemble makes perfection. Corporate unity is both undesirable and unnecessary, and moreover impossible; but inter-communion is absolutely essential to the well-being of the whole Church. All who hold the radical essentials of our common faith ought, not as a matter of sentiment, but as a matter of justice to others, and of loyalty to our Lord, to seek means of expressing their common life and love in Christ—then would the world believe that Jesus was sent of God (John xvii. 21). For any to refuse this is to be guilty of schism. "He is the SCHISMATIC WHO CAUSES THE SCHISM."

VI. Let none therefore make light of God's holy Church. A fashion has come to men to attack her and to belittle her; and even many Christians refuse to own the obligation to attach themselves to her. Surely all who belong to the inner Church should belong to the outer. As to the Church herself, the best of all is that God is with her. Christ has kept his word: "I am with you alway." Storms from without have swept over her, shocks from within have convulsed her; yet she survives. She has a hundred times crossed her Red Sea and sung her song of triumph, while the Pharaoh that pursued her has been submerged in the waters. So shall it be always. Even the gates of hell cannot prevail against her; for she is God's Church. And He who is with us now will remain our Guide until the consummation, when, free from all her trials, the Church shall be presented to her Lord, "not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing."

Lewisham, S.E.

Gain and Loss.

I envy not their hap,
Whom favour doth advance!
I take no pleasure in their pain,
That have less happy chance!

To rise by others' fall,
I deem a losing gain!
All states, with others' ruin built,
To ruin run amain!

No change of Fortune's calms
Can cast my comforts down!
When Fortune smiles, I smile to think
How quickly she will frown!

And when, in froward mood,
She proves an angry foe,
Small gain I found to let her come,
Less loss to let her go!

Robert Southwell.

Should China be Divided?—4.

The International Institute for Mandarins in Peking.

By Rev. J. SADLER, L.M.S., Amoy.

CHINA is in the fire to-day through the lack of capable leaders. She once had great men. Mencius in material and Confucius in moral progress, were great in their time. Indeed, Confucius reigns to-day in Chinese hearts, and homes, and national life. The remarkable point is that he is the exponent of moral truth. The Chinese always argue that their notion of true progress is moral; and they cannot understand Western nations boasting of the gospel of peace while they practise the gospel of gunpowder. A new ideal has to be forced on China, and we can only desire that the use of force may be as little as is absolutely necessary.

At present, we have to weigh the fact that China can be influenced through mental and moral means. Amongst these the proposed International Institute for Mandarins ranks high. If it can be fairly carried out, Mandarins, not only in Peking, but in the provinces, may be led into great good. Also, the myriads of the highest students, who go regularly to Peking, will reap advantage that will be spread far and wide.

Mr. John R. Mott, of the Student Volunteer Movement, has spoken out manfully as to the students of the Chinese Government competitive examination system, forming the GIBRALTAR OF THE STUDENT WORLD.

To him educational missions in China are of the greatest strategic importance. He rejoices in the fact that missionaries are the instructors of the new China, and that applications will more and more be made to mission institutions for Chinese teachers.

The leadership thus gained should be kept in the interests of the Kingdom of God. The impressive lesson taught by India and Japan should be heeded in time. The mission institutions should be kept so strong, and Christians should be brought into such close relation to any institutions the Government may form, that the forces of scepticism and rationalism will be forestalled, and prevented from having any prominent part in directing the new learning. Modern science is to-day one of the strongest weapons in the hands of the Church in China, and Confucianism cannot withstand it. This weapon should not pass from the Church. If money is wisely poured into this work during the next few years, it will do much to hasten the evangelisation of the country, and to give a truly Christian civilisation to the China of the coming century.

Mr. Mott goes on to state how the marked rising of the spiritual tide was most deeply impressive to him. The New International Institute is markedly in the line of the advice thus given. The work of Rev. Dr. Martin, and the confidence placed in him by the Chinese Government, are widely known. Not less important is it for us to consider how Mr. Gilbert Reid, as well as his co-worker, Dr. Martin, is honoured by Imperial marks of favour. The Imperial Board for Foreign Affairs have put their imprimatur on the Institute, and as much as £2,000 has been subscribed by Chinese. Li Hung Chang has written impressively, saying, "If you can give to the blind leaders of our people the light and learning enjoyed in the West, they, in turn, will lead our people out of the darkness."

MR. REID'S SCHEME

includes—(a) Library and reading rooms, literature from different countries. (b) A museum or permanent Exposition building. (c) A lyceum for lectures. (d) Class rooms. (e) A social hall or club. (f) Scope for literary work. (g) Separate reception rooms for Chinese and Western ladies.

The international programme is being filled up. The advisory council in Peking and the joint committee in Shanghai consist of broad-minded men from different countries. They represent the diplomatic, the consular, the missionary, and the mercantile sections. At present they consist of men from Great Britain, Germany, France, Holland, and the United States.

This Institute lays stress on the "harmonies" (not jealousies) of nations, and makes for peace. The institution will be permeated by the spirit of Christianity. The work is a help to the missions and in sympathy with their aims. As Confucian civilisation is based on morals, and inculcates religious ideas, so Christian civilisation should avoid being less moral and less religious. Reform in China needs greater moral stamina, and a higher spiritual vision. Above all, true, pure Christian conduct can safely characterise an international institute.

Let us pray God that this be supplied, and thus the toils of Mr. Gilbert Reid (whose words are quoted above) will be rewarded. True prayer usually leads to action. Mr. Reid is at present on the Continent, and earnest calls come to him promptly to go back to Peking and prosecute his great undertaking. A committee is being formed in London. In the meantime, seeing that Mr. Reid has asked me to do what I can in the movement, if no one else be available to answer inquiries, I will carefully answer any questions that may be sent to me.

76, Nelson Road, Stroud Green, N.

The Negro Nation's Prayer.

"THE prejudice is stronger than the Holy Ghost." This declaration of a minister in the Southern States of America, as to the feeling of the white toward the coloured people, would either be generally accepted and deplored, or else the feeling itself would be justified as a necessary and inevitable attitude, which the Holy Spirit does not condemn.

That "the prejudice is stronger than the Holy Ghost," is a very startling statement, but it is well to have truths which ought to startle us expressed in startling forms of speech. Let us pause a moment to ask ourselves whether there are in our lives any prejudices or other ills which are stronger than the Holy Ghost? When Jesus said, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life," and when his servant Stephen said, "Ye do alway resist the Holy Ghost," they each affirmed that the self-will of men is stronger than the Holy Ghost. But God is not mocked. To do despite to the Spirit of grace is to be exposed to the fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries.

Let it be observed, however, that the prejudice, the hatred, is not against the individual Negro or the Negro race as such. In families where there are Negro servants things go on as pleasantly as where the "help" is white; often far more so. So long as the Negro is a servant and accepts his position, all is well; but any attempt to raise himself, or on the part of others to raise him, out of his position as a serf is bitterly and often even violently resented. The Negro as a servant is tolerated and even valued, but the Negro as a man, the Negro on an equality with his white brothers, is an intolerable anomaly which must be put down at any cost.

With the South almost solid against them, and the North and West too busy or too indifferent to be seriously concerned about them, the coloured people are carrying their appeal direct to God. We trust every reader noted and responded to that appeal in our last week's issue. The cry of the oppressed to the Judge of all, is the assurance that their redemption draweth nigh. For no man or nation ever really prays but by the Holy Ghost. No prayer becomes vocal and audible until the Spirit hath made intercession with unuttered groanings. God moved toward Israel before Israel moved toward God. This coming boldly of the Negro people to the throne of grace is proof that God has said, "I have seen—I have seen the affliction of my people, and am come down to deliver them." Let all who fear God and love their fellow-men unite in this cry of the oppressed, to the glory of God, who "hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth."

What is true of the Amercians is true equally of our own and other nations. The history of the Dutch and the Portuguese in Africa, and of the British in Africa and India, leaves no stone to be thrown at America on the same account; but when the weaker races follow the example of their Elder Brother, and commit themselves to Him that judgeth righteously, verily their redemption draweth nigh. "The last shall be first and the first last." "Arise, O Lord. O God, lift up thy hand; forget not the helpless. . . . Thou wilt cause thine ear to hear, that the man of the earth may no more oppress." M.

We should like to commend Mr. D. E. Tobias, a coloured young man of education now in this country, as a well informed, capable, and interesting speaker on the above subject. He has written a pamphlet entitled, "Freed, but Not Free," price 6d., which may be obtained from him at 168, Hampstead Road, N.W.

Words to Workers and Others.

PREACHERS AND PREACHING.

SOME preachers prepare their sermons; others prepare themselves. It is the privilege of conscientious and God-instructed men to do both. The Christian minister should be an instructor rather than an orator: he should preach to the people as well as before them. The Apostolic definition runs—"Apt to teach."

There is a sling-and-stone style of preaching, in which truths are uttered and enforced with the set purpose of hitting somebody. John Clayton, the elder, used to say that "a letter posted without a direction was sure to reach nobody."

"COME TO JESUS!"

We cannot too eagerly or too frequently cry, "Come to Jesus!" But to make this call intelligent and emphatic, we must needs assign scriptural reasons. We must not scruple to say, "Come! for you have sinned; you are guilty. If you do not come, you will die, for the wages of sin is death." This carries the step of "professing religion" out of the region of mere sentiment; it rests it on conviction. We utter an invitation to One who is indeed "altogether lovely;" but we give it, and without disguise, to all who are altogether unlovely, and whom we are to help to this self-knowledge.

The late Dr. John Hall.

FORGIVENESS OF SINS.

Poor souls are apt to think that all those whom they read or hear of to be gone to heaven, went thither because they were so good and so holy. It is true many of them were eminently and exemplarily so in their generations; all of them were so according to their degrees and measures, for "without holiness no man can see the Lord." It is our duty to labour to be like unto them in holiness if ever we intend to be like them in happiness and glory. But yet, not one of them, not anyone that is now in heaven, Jesus Christ alone excepted, did ever come thither any other way but by forgiveness of sin; and that will also bring us thither, though we come short of many of them in grace and holiness. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. . . . In whom also we have obtained an inheritance." John Owen.

SUBMISSION TO GOD'S WILL.

It may be that thou canst refer a difficult case to God, provided He will determine it according to thy desires; but in truth that is no submission or resignation at all, but a sinful limiting of and prescribing to God. It was an excellent reply which a choice Christian once made when a beloved and only child lay in a dangerous sickness at the point of death, and she was asked, "What would you now desire of God in reference to your child? Would you beg of Him its life or its death in this extremity?" "I refer that to the will of God." "But," said her friend, "if God would refer it to you, what would you choose then?" "Why, truly," said the mother, "if God would refer it to me, I would even refer it to God again." This is the true committing of ourselves and our troublesome concerns to the Lord. "Father, not my will, but thine be done!" Flavel.

MINISTERS AND POLITICS.

Speaking as one who for many years took an active part among the obscurer members of a great political party, I think that we must often be doubtful whether political and social schemes which are full of promise may not, from causes which human sagacity is unable to anticipate, turn out mischievous. In endeavouring to draw individual men to Christ—in disciplining to Christian intelligence, to righteousness and sanctity, those who already acknowledge his authority—we cannot go wrong. Every man that has received the Spirit of Christ, and is eager to do the will of Christ, is a new power for bringing in more just and more gracious conditions of economic and social life. John Wesley and George Whitefield did more for the social redemption of England than all the politicians of this century and the last, whose names are associated with great reforms; under God, they created those moral and spiritual forces which have rendered all reforms possible. The late Dr. Dale.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 11. Judges xx.

MIZPAH, the place of this great convention, was situated on the confines of Judah and Benjamin, and became a convenient place for holding assemblies, as it was but a short distance from Shiloh. The name applied to this great convocation was remarkable. It was the assembly of the people of God, from which we gather that the religious object of the meeting was kept prominently in the foreground. It is probable that Benjamin, though invited, was not represented. For the purpose of putting away the stain of Gibeah, all the men of Israel were knit together as one man. How good it is when some common object wipes out jealousy, and unites God's people, and what a marvellous force is exerted by the concentrated determination of earnest people! We shall not easily forget the successful issue of the conflict against the seven-day papers. Would that a similar concurrence might take place with regard to the drink traffic!

It was only fair that Benjamin should have an opportunity of disavowing the sin of Gibeah. We must always make inquiry before proceeding to execute punishment. But so far from disavowing the criminals, Benjamin avouched their cause, blinded no doubt by tribal pride, like that which often has inflamed nations. Let us pray for the success of the Peace Congress, which is intended to produce a period of calm in which passion may subside.

The repeated failure of Israel did not prove that their cause was wrong, but that they were persuing it in a wrong spirit. Do not attach too much importance to failure. Success is no certain criterion of rectitude. Inquire of God before you begin your campaign, and you will be saved the tragedy of failure.

MONDAY, June 12. Judges xxi.

When the terrible vengeance of Israel on Benjamin had been executed, there was a reaction of self-accusation and grief. For a whole day the people sat before God, lifting up their voices and weeping sore. Even though they had acted under the cloak of religion, they were sensible that passion had broken from the reins of the guiding will, and had done God's work ruthlessly.

We are not unconscious of similar episodes in our own history. We have entered upon God's work with a high ideal and conscious rectitude of purpose. It has seemed to us as though there were strong religious reasons which justified our course. But, as we have proceeded, passion has crept alongside, and finally leapt on the bridge and assumed the command of the ship, overpowering the lawful captain. We need to ask God every day to cleanse the thoughts of our hearts, and the purposes of our life, lest that which began on the high level should rapidly deteriorate. And we are the more liable to this temptation, because the religiousness of our endeavour blinds us.

The expedition against Jabesh-Gilead was ill-considered. There was an effort to repair one wrong by doing another. But when once we have begun to act after our own notions of serving God and avenging wrong, there is no extreme into which we may not be hurried. Leave vengeance with God, friend. He will repay, and be thankful that the Lamb is in the midst of the throne. "Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come."

TUESDAY, June 13. Ruth i.

It would be difficult to compress into a shorter space more details of sorrow than in the first five verses of this book. We begin life as Naomi, "pleasant." It seems to us as though all our course would be over summer seas, urged gently forward by a favouring wind. And every time the hand of sorrow robs our life of its sunshine, we whisper to ourselves, "This cannot last." But after a while the spring of our life seems broken by repeated blows; all the trees stand bare of leaf, and the wintry wind sweeps through them; we despair and say, "God hath dealt bitterly; not Naomi, but Marah." Yet even then there may be a second—an Indian summer; even then, as Nature rises from her winter sleep, so the soul may come again into the light and joy of life; even then the tree cut down to its roots may yield green shoots again—as when Naomi pressed Ruth's child to her bosom, and the neighbour said, "He shall be unto thee a restorer of life, and a nourisher of thine old age."

It is remarkable that Naomi repressed the ardent purpose of the two young women, but it was well; better that they should be thoroughly tested, better that all excitement might have time to evaporate, better that they should not have time to act on the impulse of natural affection, but of true devotion to the God of Israel.

What partings there are in human lives! You can never tell of what your friends are made until the supreme test comes. Then Orpah goes back to her people; the young man goes away sorrowful; Peter denies; Judas betrays; and John Mark turns back to his mother's home. God give us grace to repeat to Christ, our Lord, Ruth's words to Naomi, and may the Holy Spirit give us Ruth's steadfast-mindedness.

WEDNESDAY, June 14. Ruth ii.

The glimpse we have in this chapter of the relations between Boaz and his men, so artless and simple, so refreshing and religious, is full of instruction. Why cannot masters and mistresses be more courteous to their servants, treating them as friends, meeting them with the religious greeting where there is a common religious life, and seeing to their welfare as heirs together of the love of God? If we more often said, The Lord be with you, we should more often get the answer, The Lord bless you.

How good Boaz was to this young Moabitess! Not for a moment did he think of taking advantage of her loneliness. As yet, no thought of love had crossed his heart. He had heard all that she had done to her mother-in-law since the death of her husband, and how she had left all to tend her. Sympathy with the lonely heart of the stranger warmed his own. He wished that her work might be recompensed, and a full reward given to her. Not content with wishing it, he set himself to answer his own prayer and fulfil his own wishes.

When Naomi heard of his kindness, it revived her drooping faith. She said unto her daughter-in-law, as though rebuking a fear which had already asserted itself in her, The Lord hath not left off his kindness to the living and to the dead. No, soul! He never will leave off his kindness to thee, because of Him who died and lives for evermore. For a little time He may hide his face, but He has graven thee upon the palms of his hands.

THURSDAY, June 15. Ruth iii.

It was the Eastern custom for the farmer to remain all night on the threshing floor, partly to protect his goods, and partly to make the most of the evening breeze for the purpose of winnowing.

There was no such indelicacy in Ruth's approach to Boaz as would appear if judged by our Western habits. In the East men and women sleep in the garments which they wear by day, and servants frequently sleep in the same chamber or tent with their master. Besides which, in the eye of Hebrew law, Ruth could account herself as bound by marriage ties to Boaz, who, as the supposed next of kin to her deceased husband, was bound to take her to wife.

Without unduly pressing the parallel, there is a beautiful sense in which the soul which has left the world behind it, and is sensible of widowhood and forlornless, draws near the great kinsman, Christ, and asks that He would spread the skirt of his redemption, of his protection and care, over it. Having died to our first husband, the holy law of God, because unable to keep pace with its demands, and therefore being done to death by its blows, we become married to another, even to Him who was raised from the dead, that we might bring forth fruit unto God. Ah! how little dost thou know to what thy present anguish is leading thee! What, though Mahlon and Chilion die, there waits behind that rampart of blue hills thy Boaz, the royal and blessed Bridegroom who is indeed a mighty man of wealth.

FRIDAY, June 16. Ruth iv.

Naomi was right in her prognostication Boaz did not rest until he had brought their matters to a conclusion. The nearest kinsman would not play the kinsman's part, because any son by Ruth would not bear his own name, and might even carry his own property into another family. How evidently God's overruling providence was here, introducing reasons which overbore natural desire, and reserving Ruth for her destined home! "There is a providence that shapes our ends, rough hew them as we may."

"All nature is but art unknown to thee,
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good."

Trust Him with your life. He is working out his own plan. He will not fail; be not discouraged. He will do as He pleases among the armies of heavens and the inhabitants of the earth.

Pharez was the ancestor of the family settled in Bethlehem. It is curious to hear his name again, and to find it appearing twice in this story. It seems as though our families stand together for evermore, for better or worse. Trees from root to quivering leaf. Rivers from fountain to sea.

So the sweet episode finishes. The door closes upon these twain. The tiny babe lies in Naomi's bosom. The women who had mourned lend themselves to the gladness of the hour and rejoice. God's stories end sweetly, if not always here, at least hereafter. And an encouragement is given to Gentile refugees to know they may have part and lot in the great heritage of the Son of David.

SATURDAY, June 17. 1 Sam. i.

Elkanah came of the Levites. He was evidently a good man, but practised polygamy, which was too prevalent in those days, when there was no king in Israel, and every man did what seemed right in his eyes. The awful anguish introduced by polygamy into the domestic circle is illustrated here with marvellous truthfulness, for the adversary of the story can hardly be anyone else than Peninnah, who hated Hannah because she was so specially beloved.

This is not the only occasion in which bitterness of soul has driven the suppliant to God; not the last time that woman's heart has cried out to be remembered; not by any means the only time when prayer has been misunderstood by those who have watched the moving, or not moving lips, and leapt to hasty and ill-considered conclusions. Pray on, though Eli misjudges thee! Pray on, though natural impossibilities appear to bar the way to success! Pray on, when the heart and flesh fail! Pray on, for God will yet raise the poor out of the dust, and lift the beggar from the dunghill! He brings thee into the dust of death, that He may raise thee to inherit the throne of princes. In all likelihood, He has permitted and ordained this very trial that thou shouldest be driven to such a pitch of prayer and faith as had otherwise been impossible. And thou shalt come again, to stand on this very spot, bringing thy answer with thee.

Glimpses of Romanism.

IX.—Saints' Days and Sunday.

By ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

I REMEMBER the late Mr. Spurgeon, when at Mentone, saying: "These Roman Catholics break the Fourth Commandment both ways. They neither work on the six days nor rest on the seventh." This observation was absolutely just, and it holds good in whatsoever quarter of the globe the Roman Catholic Church exists. And Mr. Ruskin, in one of his books, shows that the one breach of the Commandment is the fruit of the other, the one is the cause, the other the effect, for he says: "If we would keep the Sunday in imitation of God's rest, we must keep the six days in imitation of God's work."

But Roman Catholics are not allowed to keep the six days in imitation of God's work. There is hardly a week in the year that has not its saints' days, when the Roman Catholic is commanded, under pains and penalties, to cease work, and to attend the service of the mass. Festivals are constantly recurring. I myself have asked Roman Catholics why they worked on Sundays, and got this very answer, that confirms Mr. Ruskin's reasoning: "How can we observe Sunday when our time is so much broken into during the week by Church festivals?" But all this implies that the Church cares less for the observance of Sunday than of saints' days, which undoubtedly is the case.

Every traveller in Roman Catholic countries—where the Papal Church still has power—knows that on a Sunday shops and warehouses are open as usual, the smith is hammering at his anvil, the carpenter planing at his bench, the mason and labourer are engaged at their buildings, and everywhere there is the rattle of laden drays and carts. On Sunday the lottery is drawn, and bull fights are held, and the concert room and the theatre are in full swing, and if there is to be any special dissipation Sunday is sure to be the day chosen for it. On the Sunday I have frequently seen priests playing bowls and other games in their seminary gardens or on the village green, and I have seen them sitting drinking with peasants at the village inn of a Sunday evening.

On the other hand, the traveller in Roman Catholic countries also knows that on saints' days the warehouses and shops are closed, building is suspended, the workmen are all thrown out of employment, and the only open doors are those of the churches and the drink shops. And if we carry the inquiry one step further back, and ask, "How is this? Why does the Papal Church demand the observance of saints' days, and why does it not insist on the observance of Sunday, if it does not directly encourage its desecration?" we shall find that her action is

IN KEEPING WITH HER WHOLE POLICY.

In the first place, it is a tendency of human nature to exalt the laws of men above those of God—"to make the commandments of God of none effect by their tradition." And this tendency the Papal Church fosters and trades upon. Then, again, the Papal Church discourages industry. It does not want people to become great merchants and manufacturers, employing many men, because it dreads the influence that such masters might obtain in the workshop and in the community. It might become a rival to that of the priest. Besides, the intelligence required to guide a great commercial concern is incompatible with priestly domination, and must not be allowed to exist.

I had an illustration of this not long ago when driving through a part of Tuscany, the garden of Italy. This part was bare, barren, treeless, fruitless. And when I asked the driver of the carriage how this was, he said, "Oh, this part of Tuscany formed for a time part of the Papal States, and wood was cut down, and the influential proprietors were impoverished, and silk mills that were erected were stopped." It is the same the world over. It explains the difference between the Protestant and Papal cantons of Switzerland, the Protestant and Papal provinces of Ireland, the prosperity of the Protestant and the stagnation of the Papal parts of Canada. And then again, just as I showed when speaking of Mariolatry, that Mary pays in the Papal Church, and Christ does not, so here saints' days pay, and the Lord's Day does not. On a saint's day people are expected to bring their offerings in money or in kind to the church.

For example, tons of candles and barrels of oil are sometimes received in one church on the day of its patron saint. This becomes a source of considerable revenue to the church or priests. Italians have said to me, "Whenever the Papal Church wants money they 'pull out' another saint." Just as they multiply Madonnas, so they multiply saints, to make money. But on the Lord's Day it is different. I never saw a candle or a flagon of oil carried into a church on a Sunday. Who ever saw a candle or a lamp lighted before a figure of Christ? The Sabbath Day, like the Lord of the Sabbath, does not pay in the Papal Church: hence its secularisation is permitted, if not designed and encouraged.

In Italy, all this is well understood, and it is one of the things that have roused the nation against the Church. In the first place, the Italians want to WORK SIX DAYS IN THE WEEK.

The rising industrial commerce of the country demands it. Factories, where machinery is worked by steam, are being opened in every city in the land, and it is found to be impossible to manufacture goods if the whole machinery of the place has to be brought to a standstill once or twice a week. The workmen cannot earn a living wage. They have got tired, too, of the idleness and the drinking which saints' days promote. Then, working six days, they feel their need of rest on the seventh.

And so, some few years ago, societies of laymen were formed in most of the chief cities of Italy, for the express purpose of reversing the policy of the Papal Church, by the overthrow of the observance of saints' days and the observance of the Lord's Day alone, and such festivals as the State might ordain. The efforts of these societies were eminently successful. The cities were canvassed, and the signatures of those willing to accept the societies' proposals were obtained. Then vigilance committees were appointed to see that those who signed were true to their engagement. At this time there was seen in the shop windows of the leading business people of Italy a notice that ran thus: "The public are hereby informed that on Dominica prossima (next Lord's Day), this shop will be closed, and on every Lord's Day thereafter, and on national holidays." It so happens that some of these national holidays are also saints' days, but they are now observed because the State recommends them, not because of the order of the Church.

The attitude which the liberal and clerical press of Italy took up in regard to the movement was very characteristic. The liberal press, in no measured terms, approved it, and gave it its support; and as the reformation was effected very quietly and quickly, some papers, with justifiable pride, said "a change that in many places takes years to effect has been brought about in Italy in a few weeks." But what said the organs of the Papacy? Well, the Church could not for shame's sake openly oppose the movement, especially as it has more or less to play its part with a regard to the feelings of England. And so it said that, though it did not oppose the movement in itself, it did oppose the manner in which it had been started and promoted. The Church had not been consulted nor had it been asked to co-operate! One writer, I remember, said: "No speaker has ever made even a flying reference to the authority of the Church." Of course not. The authority of the Church had always been, in this as in a thousand other matters, on the wrong side, and so it was simply ignored.

Of course, the observance of the Lord's Day is not yet all that is to be desired. Many business places are only closed from midday; but in any case things are much better than they were, and the Italians are entirely on the right track in casting off the authority of the Church and in throwing overboard saints' days and in observing only the Lord's Day. They are on a fair way to the keeping of the Fourth Commandment both ways—working in imitation of God's work and resting in imitation of God's rest.

But what of Christian England? Is there not a tendency there to do the very opposite from what is being done in Italy? Are the observance of saints' days and the desecration of the Lord's Day not being promoted in England? The two evils are inseparable. They go hand in hand. And by whom are these things promoted? By Jesuits and Roman Catholics and Ritualists, who are working to bring back the Church of England to the Papal pale. It is alone the interest of such people to promote these objects.

The Papal Church, baffled in her selfish and immoral tactics in Italy, held in check by civil statutes and ignored and despised by the people, turns to England, where, thanks to that Protestantism which she hates, she and her imitators enjoy a free hand to work unfettered their evil deeds, one of the most evil of which is to strike a blow at our national prosperity, and at the sanctity and happiness of family and individual life, by promoting the observance of saints' days and the desecration of the Lord's Day, by inculcating the breaking of the Fourth Commandment both ways, neither working on the six days nor resting on the seventh.

Protestant Outlook.

NO fewer than nine churches in the Establishment—six in the diocese of London and three in the diocese of Rochester—celebrated the Roman Catholic Feast of Corpus Christi. When the day is thus kept in the English Church, it is the custom to select prayers from the Roman Missal. It is perfectly evident that the Ritualistic clergy have no intention whatever of yielding one iota of their advanced practices.

The Imperial Protestant Federation has been formed in order to provide a centre for the concentrated action of all existing Protestant bodies; and to organise the constituencies for the purpose of returning to Parliament, at the next general election, a strong Protestant party determined to uphold the Reformation settlement in the Church and constitution; and to maintain Protestant supremacy in all departments of the British Empire. The offices are at 3, Palmer Street, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.

For some years past a useful Protestant work has been done in Dartford in connection with the Martyrs' Memorial Hall. Last week an anniversary demonstration was held, at which some straight words were spoken by Mr. T. A. Denny and Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P.

Writing in the Nuova Antologia, Mr. Richard Bagot, an English Roman Catholic, long resident in Rome, expresses the belief that England can never become Roman Catholic. The Times correspondent, in a summary of the article, says:—

The truth is, he writes, that, far from progressing, Roman Catholicism in England has for several years been stationary, if not losing ground. Insuperable obstacles to the triumph of Romanism lie in the strong dislike on the part of the masses of English Churchmen and Nonconformists to the practice of compulsory confession, a point upon which the Roman Church cannot compromise; in the traditional repugnance to Papal domination, as repeatedly manifested during the last four centuries; in the object-lesson furnished by the miserable condition of Ireland under the superstitious and ignorant dominion of the priests; and in the robust Protestantism of the bulk of the English nation. Ritualism, in Mr. Bagot's opinion, gives the Roman Church little hold. English Ritualists manufacture a pseudo-Catholicism of their own, which, if not entirely genuine, is at least devoid of the political drawbacks of Romanism. On this point, says Mr. Bagot, the Vatican cherishes many illusions.

At a time when sadly misleading views of the Lord's Supper are gaining a wide currency, the Religious Tract Society has done well to issue, in chaste booklet form, a little treatise by the late Canon Hoare, THE COMMUNION AND COMMUNICANT (1s.). The tone is as spiritual as the teaching is sound and helpful.

Prayer for Revival.

By D. L. MOODY.

I BELIEVE there is much to encourage and stimulate us in God's workings among us at the present time. As I have gone about, and seen something of the movement of God's Spirit in the churches, I have come to feel strongly that there is now the sound of the "going in the tops of the mulberry trees" that is God's call to his people to bestir themselves and go forth to win multitudes of souls. If our ears are open to God's voice, and our hearts respond fully to his leadings, I believe we are on the eve of unusual revivals of religion, both in America and in England.

But if this is to be, the history of Revivals in the past shows that it must begin with a great Revival of Prayer. The whole trend of the teaching of Scripture is to the effect that in the outpouring of the Spirit God has shut Himself up to the prayer of his people. Take the case of the return of the Jews from Babylon; although God had definitely promised through Jeremiah that their captivity was to last only seventy years, it was not until Daniel found this promise and went to pleading it in that the decree of Cyrus was issued. Look at Pentecost; it was while the Church was assembled in earnest waiting upon God—and after this had continued for ten days, too—that the flood-gates were opened and the mighty blessing came. Take the revivals in Wesley's day, and you will find that they had their beginnings in the groans and tears of David Brainerd as he poured out his heart before God in far away America. I have never known or heard of a genuine revival of religion that did not begin in this way.

FERVENT, IMPORTUNATE PRAYER,

Now, in the light of this truth, I want to ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to unite in crying to God for an outpouring of his Spirit and the revival of his work. The centuries that have passed since Jesus Christ came to this earth have proved over and over again, that in the work He came to do and the message He came to bring, the deepest needs of men are fully met, and in that work and message alone. The one message of the Church in the last months of the nineteenth century is still of Jesus Christ crucified, risen, and coming again. Let us be faithful in the delivery of it, honest in dealing with our own hearts in the light of it, continue instant in prayer for God's blessing to attend it, and before this century closes there will be a sound of abundance of rain.

Ecumenical Missionary Conference.

DEAR SIR,—May I call the attention of your readers to the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions fixed to be held in New York from April 21 to May 1, 1900? The last Ecumenical Conference took place in London in 1888. Great and lasting good may accrue to the churches if all who love our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ will do what they can to promote this gathering.

Representatives of leading missionary societies in Great Britain and Ireland have been requested by the General Committee in America to co-operate with them in the arrangements they are making for the Conference. It is desired that two or more delegates be appointed by each Missionary organisation, and that Women's Societies should not omit to send their representatives. The names of all British delegates should be sent to myself, together with the topics on which they are willing to read papers at the Conference. I shall also be glad to hear from all those interested in Foreign Missions, who, whether they are appointed to represent societies or not, wish to attend and take part in this Conference.

The American Committee hope to provide hospitality for all who go to the Conference from this country.—Yours faithfully,

J. G. WATT.
Hon. Sec. to the British Committee.

146, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

Mr. Moody and Australia.

Mr. CHARLES CARTER, Secretary of the Evangelisation Society of Australasia, Melbourne, sends to us Mr. Moody's reply to the invitation of 2,000 Christian workers from Australia and New Zealand for him to visit those Colonies.

MY dear Mr. Carter,—It is with a very deep sense of appreciation that I acknowledge the cordial invitation extended by the Evangelisation Society of Australasia to visit the cities of New Zealand and Australia, and were my own personal pleasure to be consulted, I would at once have cabled my acceptance. It is a privilege to meet and work with fellow-labourers in the Master's service in different quarters of the globe, and I know that there would be real joy in the associations of such a mission as you invite me to conduct under your auspices in Australasia.

There are several obstacles, however, that seem to me to be insurmountable, and on that account I must take it to be God's purpose for me to remain in America for the present. Within the past twenty years I have been led and enabled to establish three schools, which have steadily increased in size, and now have over a thousand students enrolled. These schools alone are an important part of my life work, and I feel that I am increasingly needed in their administration and care. There is never a day but that I am in communication with the various heads of the departments, and I feel that I am needed still in the development of the work inaugurated.

The conditions in my own country also make it hard to leave for work elsewhere. Never have I received such hearty support from churches and ministers in this country as of recent years, and this I believe to be the call of God for greater labour and activity where He is opening the way. The past year I believe to be the best year of my life, and the work that God has accomplished this year so far promises to make 1899 better than any year in the past.

Still another objection to accepting this invitation is, in the advice of my doctors, to avoid a long and especially a warm ocean voyage. A few years ago I planned to visit India and China in a trip around the world, but was obliged to give it up on the urgent counsel of friends. The long ocean voyage, attended by tropical heat, has been something that I have specially been warned against.

These are the chief obstacles to my accepting the very cordial and hearty invitation which you extend in behalf of the Evangelisation Society of Australasia, and I am led to believe that they are an evidence of God's purposes for me. I would thank you for the heartiness of your invitation, and for the warm Christian fellowship which it expresses. We are indeed in one family, and with one Lord and Master labouring in a common cause, and although it may not be my privilege to meet and labour with the church in Australasia, I shall look forward with still greater expectancy to the privilege of so doing when there shall be "no more sea."—Yours in the Gospel,

D. L. MOODY.

Los Angelos, Cal., February 27.

Naval Scripture Readers.—There was a good attendance at the recent annual meeting of the R.N. Scripture Readers' Society. The chairman, Canon Fleming, spoke of how much we owe to sailors in protecting our commerce on the seas and giving us comfort and security in our homes. Therefore we ought to do what we can for their temporal welfare, and yet much more for their spiritual good. Admiral Sir Vesey Hamilton and Captain Lowry, R.N., spoke of the good done by the readers—the latter had during his nineteen years' connection with the Society watched the work very closely in our principal ports and hospitals. Bluejackets always spoke very highly of the unobtrusive work of the readers at Malta, Hong Kong and elsewhere.

International S.S. Lessons.

June 18, 1899.

"The New Life in Christ."—Col. iii. 1-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Col. iii. 15.

INTRODUCTORY.

OUR last few lessons have been on the sufferings, death, and resurrection of our Saviour and Lord. To-day's lesson is to show us what the practical results of this great sacrifice ought to be. Why did Christ thus suffer and die? What effect has it had upon ME? If I treat the sad story with indifference and carelessness, what will be the consequence to ME? (The teacher should press home these and similar questions.)

PAUL'S LETTER.

The lesson is taken from one of Paul's letters, which he wrote when he was first imprisoned at Rome, A.D. 62. Epaphras, who was the minister over the churches in Colossæ, Laodicea and Hierapolis, was in Rome, and visited Paul in his prison; he told him about these churches and their difficulties, and how Jewish teachers were leading them into errors. So Paul wrote letters to them, and one to the Ephesian Church. Tychicus and Onesimus were going from Rome to Colossæ, and they took the letters. Onesimus was a runaway slave who had been converted through Paul at Rome. Paul told him he ought to go back to his master at Colossæ, and he also wrote a little letter to the master asking him to forgive him and be kind to him. (See the "Letter to Philemon.")

COLOSSÆ.

Colossæ was a city in Phrygia, Asia Minor. (You can find it in your map, not far from Ephesus.) Paul was never at Colossæ himself, but he stayed three years in Ephesus, and travelled through Phrygia (Acts xvi. 6-19). Most likely Paul's friend Epaphras formed the church; Onesimus and Philemon belonged to Colossæ.

EXPOSITION OF COL III. 1-15.

The Apostle, having dwelt upon the greatness of Christ, and the blessings flowing from his redeeming work, enlarges in this passage upon the practical results of participation in Christ's resurrection life. All our affections and powers will receive character from our relation to Christ. Spirit and soul and body—all must be brought into subjection to their Redeemer, and be devoted to his service.

Now Paul says (verses 1-3): "If you really are dead to worldly and wicked things, and have risen with Christ into a new life, with the eyes of your mind you see God and love Him, and you do not look on and love what is wicked and wrong." We love heavenly and holy things. But this new life is not seen: it does not change our look, excepting that we have happier faces. The evidences of the new life cannot be hid.

Verse 4. When Jesus comes back, or we join Him in heaven, then we shall be like Him. (1 John iii. 1, 2.)

All the while we are in our sinful bodies, they are inclined to lead us back to sin, so we have always to be watching against temptations.

Verses 5-9. A list of the evils we are now to be dead to; to mortify means to make dead; if a limb mortifies we cut it off.

Verses 10-14. The new life.

Verse 15. The peace which Jesus gives with the new life is Master in our hearts, and overcomes pain, sorrow, strife, &c. (John xiv. 27.)

ILLUSTRATIONS.

The attractions of the world, illustrated by "Sinbad's magnetic rock." Hidden life and peace, by electric wires, we hear the sighing and wailing of the wind outside them, but running along inside may be a message of love and joy. Putting off old and dirty clothes, being washed and reclothed. The cord of love binding the rest together.

Poor in St. Giles'.—Mr. Wheatley, of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C., writes:—"Men and women, broken down with overwork and too poor to afford a brief rest from their toil, are continually applying for help. We want to give them the change and rest they so much need. We want also to give a holiday to sickly children attending our Sunday schools and children's services and to other helpless children."

THE GOSPEL ON EPSOM RACE-COURSE.

THE summer saturnalia at Epsom evidently loses nothing of its magnetic attraction for the multitude. On the recent "Derby Day" the crowds lining the course and packing the many stands seemed greater than ever. Stretching from the central gambling rings and the glaring headquarters of the racing men, that broad, ragged ribbon of humanity, intensely black in the blaze of the noonday sun, presented an imposing and moving spectacle. That thousands had come simply for a day's outing was evident, but clearer still was the fact that the great majority of these teeming masses were infected by the gambling fever.

On every hand, above the roar of tipsters, and hawkers' cries, of gibe and joke and filthy song, came the strident screams of the professional bookmakers, who, clad in grotesque costumes, strove to outvie each other in volume of voice and volubility, declaring their willingness to accept wagers from the British public. Who shall gauge the evil effect upon the nation of such a carnival of rascality?

THE FEVERED EXCITEMENT,

the passionate greed, the drunkenness, the exploitation of little children as pugilists, the revolting blasphemies of men and women alike were sufficient to make one's heart bleed in witnessing the degradation of a people for whom Christ died.

Nevertheless, "when the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him." In the centre of the fair ground gleamed the conspicuous tents of the Open-Air Mission, while that of the Race-course Mission was sandwiched in close by between a number of drinking bars and gipsy caravans. From the basis of operations a vigorous evangelistic campaign was maintained. In the most crowded part of the course Mr. Frank Cockrem gathered a strong force of workers, including an orchestra of brass and string instruments, and the male choir of the London City Mission. For some hours, without intermission, and at suitable times subsequent to the commencement of the racing, the Gospel message was delivered in testimony, exhortation, and song. Throughout the day, too, a band of spiritual sharp-shooters, scattered over the Downs, distributed with kindly words Testament portions and Gospel appeals. They had pretty text-cards, appreciated by hawkers and donkey-drivers, while the gay occupants of aristocratic equipages paid respectful attention to the tasteful souvenirs specially prepared for them.

The Racecourse Mission workers, led by Mr. W. Hodson and Mr. O. L. Heatley, pursued a similar course. Sacred song was a prominent feature. With wisdom and force the speakers made their keynote "the joy of salvation." Among them were a and racecourse familiars, whose words were peculiarly interesting and convincing to their motley audiences. The workers continued their efforts amidst the returning crowds, on the edge of the course and later on in Epsom Market-place. The prolonged labour of so much speaking and singing in the hot sun was, of necessity, wearying to the flesh; but, as the crowds melted away, the evangelists were enabled to conclude a day of blessing, "faint yet pursuing."

NUMBER OF CONVERTED DRUNKARDS

On the following evening, when the Downs were deserted by all but the gipsies, an interesting campaign was conducted by the Open-Air Mission in the especial haunt of those Bohemian wanderers among the furze-bushes and broken ground near Tattenham Corner. The scene was weird, indeed. Here and there crackled a fire of brushwood and logs, over which hung a huge iron pot wherein bubbled the evening meal. Peering from the rough canvas huts the ancient dames of the tribe, discarding the purple finery and enormous ear-rings which appear to constitute the official robes and regalia of the fortune-teller, eagerly sucked their short clay pipes or joined crooningly in the hymns.

Stalwart men threw themselves on the grass, stared open-mouthed at the speakers, or growled a reproachful side-word in gipsy dialect to a gambling circle, or chuckled at the tirades of a vigorous bare-headed virago who flourished a club and thrashed her rebellious son. Bronzed, half-naked children and handsome girls, cunning beyond their years, gathered round and listened to the story of the Cross.

BRIEF OPEN-AIR MEETINGS were held at many points of vantage, and copies of the Gospels and illustrated texts were eagerly sought after by the dusky listeners. The message was delivered with simple directness till twilight deepened into darkness, and it was time to turn homeward, praying for the welfare of the Romany tribe and all other frequenters of British racecourses.

W.H.H.

The Open-Air Mission.

YES, the "world" has its May meeting, and for numbers in attendance we fear it exceeds immeasurably anything the Church of Christ can produce, and possesses a painful impressiveness all its own. So true is it still and always that "the world lieth in the wicked one," and will not be awakened, charm we never so wisely. "Brands plucked from the burning" there may be, and thank God there are—souls rescued from the very brink of the pit and turned into burning and shining lights for God's work on earth. But the vast, apparently impenetrable, mass of humanity remains, or seems to remain, where it ever was, —on the Devil's side.

Such, at least, were some of the reflections inseparable from a view of the scene presented at Epsom Races on "Derby Day," Wednesday, May 31st, 1899. For four full days the racing continues, but this one day excels all else for numbers and for excitement, and presents to the believer's eye the greatest spectacle of Satanic power which the world itself can produce.

WHAT A CONGREGATION!

Surely 500,000 would be a modest estimate for the tremendous array of fallen humanity which swelled and surged over the Downs amid the radiant beauties of early summer, and, alas! amid appalling evidences of vice and sin, gambling and drunkenness, spiritual shipwreck and death.

On they come, by every conceivable conveyance, by every available road or railway, till the course itself is reached, and here, on this fair morning, they crowd and jostle, and laugh and bet, and utter fearful oaths till the heart is sickened and faint.

A brake arrives at length, but the behaviour of its occupants presents a striking contrast to that of the multitude. They are singing the songs of Zion as they drive up the already dusty road, and, on alighting, at once take their stand in one large company fifty strong in the centre of the course, exactly opposite the fast-filling grand stand, where they unfurl their crimson banner, tune their instruments, engage in prayer, join in harmonious praise, and thus begin a prolonged service, which carries the gospel message to the ears of multitudes of those surging around on every hand.

And who are the preachers? Men of the Open-Air Mission and the London City Mission, which latter Society lends its superb male choir, composed entirely of City Missionaries, whose songs with wonderful fulness of harmony; and among the men of the Open-Air Mission we see, gathered round the secretary, Colonel Phayre, Colonel Acklom, Major Mackinlay, Mr. H. W. Maynard, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Mr. E. P. Field (Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, and son of the lamented General Sir John Field), Rev. Frederick Sumner, Mr. B. Barry Wake, Mr. Chas. Cook, and many others. One united band these two contingents form, and for two full hours Gospel speech and song intermingle, while the crowd ever thickens, and the meeting seems inserted by the power of God among the careless multitude.

PEAL OUT OVER THE WIDE EXPANSE

LIKE A LIVING WEDGE

At length the bell rings for the first race, and the course is quickly cleared by the police. The missioners make their way at once to their large tent just off the racecourse, and in full view of the assembled throng. Hereby hangs a tale. Helped greatly by Mr. W. Hodson, the writer of these lines had, with two fellow-labourers, approached the Clerk of the Course on the previous Friday, and he, notwithstanding his expressed aversion to the presence of the Gospel on the race-course, had actually allotted to the Mission their own chosen piece of ground whereon to erect a tent at a rate much lower than the ordinary scale. Herein the good hand of God was clearly seen, and it was assuredly felt that this constituted an opening for extended service, for which much praise must be given.

To the tent, then, whereon the name of the Mission appeared in a bold red streamer.

Luncheon followed, of which exactly fifty partook, and even these did not exhaust the party, as about a dozen more, set apart specially for tract distribution, were being simultaneously entertained by Miss Alexander, the veteran lady worker at Epsom Races, in her Mission Hall down in the town. She herself, to the deep regret of all the workers, was confined to the house, having undergone a recent operation for cataract.

After a brief rest the brethren again sallied forth amid the crowds, and preached and sang all the afternoon, save when the races were in actual progress, when with one consent they dropped upon their knees and prayed!

On the previous day this new phase of things had greatly excited the racegoers, who for the first time saw a large company of Gospel preachers kneeling in prayer in their very midst! The O.A.M. and L.C.M. men had taken their stand on the hill facing the course. Here a large crowd had gathered, and the bookmakers' platforms and spectators' stands had formed a kind of square, the very heart of which was invaded by the men of God. No sooner, at the approach of the race, had prayer begun, than the attention of the whole host was concentrated on the preachers, and a yell of mingled excitement and execration went up. But God interposed marvellously: a wall of fire seemed round about his servants; quietness suddenly ensued; and with the preachers still upon their knees in the very midst of that carnival of hell, quietly and calmly offering prayer, and entreating the blessing of God upon these poor victims of the gambling curse, a sight was witnessed at which assuredly

HEAVEN REJOICED AND HELL TREMBLED.

Altogether this has been an historic occasion in the annals of the Open-Air Mission, which for forty years has upheld the standard of the Cross on this racecourse, and on many others all over the land, and borne the brunt of bitter persecution.

The evening meeting in the town on the same day was made memorable by the renewed acquirement of the "Clock Tower" base for their meetings, after many years of prohibition. Here, every night since, the Gospel has been preached.

The gipsies encamped on the Downs have not been forgotten. On Monday they were invited to a tea by Miss Alexander. About 180 attended in her Mission Room, and after the meal heard addresses from Rev. John Samuel, vicar of Epsom, and others. Sunday and Thursday evenings were also field-days of Gospel effort among them. A contingent of the missioners visited the Downs on those days and held numerous services specially for these poor wanderers, who listened most attentively and in large numbers.

Other pens will describe specific instances of blessing, many of which came under immediate notice. Let this conclude with an earnest appeal for help towards the large expenses which have yet to be defrayed, and which amount to £100.

FRANK COCKREM,
Secretary O.A.M.
11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

By CHAS. COOK.

FOR thirty-nine years has Miss Alexander, of Epsom, in conjunction with the Open-Air Mission, held the fort at Epsom races, that saturnalia of sin; but in all the twenty-seven years it has been my joy to labour with them, never have we been more encouraged. There was a time when only Gawin Kirkham and myself thought it wise to venture to preach on the course itself, where we have been stoned and pelted for our pains; whilst in the town in the evening flour was liberally used to smother our clothes, and choke up the keys of the harmonium.

PIONEER DAYS.

But all is changed; the rough pioneer work has been done, and now the Open-Air Mission, by the splendid aid afforded by the City Mission Choir, can attract and hold as orderly a crowd as one could wish to address on Epsom Downs. Certainly the magnificent singing of some forty brethren, led by Mr. Williams, their conductor, is an important factor in the work; the people are charmed by these song-sermons, and we have seen tears flowing again this year, whilst penitents have been led to the tent, where, having decided for Christ, they have afterwards joined in singing his praises with the brethren on the course.

TELLING TESTIMONIES.

Whilst handing out Gospel books, a gentleman inquired, "Who are these men?"

I told him, and he replied with a solemn manner:

"Well, this is the most impressive sight I've seen to-day on the Derby racecourse!"

Knowing by his accent he was an American, I asked him if it would do for Saratoga Races?

"I guess not, that's a pretty tony place, but it would suit Coney Island."

One of the speakers to whom he had listened had just said:

"Ten years ago, whilst on a poaching expedition, and whilst hiding from the keepers, I heard a member of the Open-Air Mission preaching in the distance; I was converted through the text, and bear my testimony that Christ can save a poacher, and if so He can save any one in this crowd."

On Thursday I noticed a gentleman listening intently to the singing and the addresses, and after I had spoken intended having a word with him; whilst closing in prayer, amid a volley of abuse heaped upon us by a few Jews, I noticed him with his hat off and eyes closed. He followed me, and pressing a coin in my hand bade me use it for God's work. Before I could reply, he had left me deeply stirred.

Our brother, William Day, has had remarkable experience with his splendid banner. At Ascot he was far too close to a Royal personage to be pleasant. Eternity! Heaven! Hell! stood out boldly before the eyes of his august Highness, and the standard-bearer for Christ was not to be tolerated; and the only way to remove him legally was to order all banners to be taken down, and every bookmaker had to drop his banner. So our brother was removed to the paddock, where in the providence of God a man who had lost all his money was arrested by the words on the banner, and eventually converted, and to-day is serving Christ.

William thought this year at Epsom he would like the Prince to see it again, and managed to raise it on the course right in front of the royal box, where it stood for a full quarter of an hour.

On the Thursday he pitched it right in front of the Grand Stand, much to the annoyance of some persons dressed as gentlemen, but whose language proved them blackguards.

"Who told you to come here?" roared one.

"My employer," replied William.

"What's his name?" inquired the irritated man.

"The Lord Jesus Christ," answered the faithful servant.

"Take it away, those dreadful words, Eternity and Hell; you are not a true man."

"Well, but the words are true—eternity in heaven or hell."

"You look well on it!"

"I feel a good deal better than I look," cried the imperturbable William.

The banner arrested the attention of a gentleman, who at last came and offered Mr. Day a beautiful bouquet of flowers.

"Are you making fun of me, or are you really sincere?" asked Mr. Day.

"Oh! yes, I am sincere. I am in the wrong, and you are right. Oh! those words are true; please accept these flowers out of respect I have for you, and your courage to bring that banner to this course."

Another striking scene was that of a lady, who, whilst passing along Epsom in her carriage, saw the banner, and exclaimed:

"Oh! how terrible, and oh! suppose it's true."

She appeared terribly upset, and could hardly leave the place, and at last sent her servant and requested Mr. Day to accept five shillings. This was in the town itself. Another gentleman asked him to come into his house and board and lodge with him, whilst confessing he was an unsaved man.

Whilst standing with Mr. Day beside the banner, a gentleman called me and said:

"Do you think you do any good here?"

I told him of men known to me who had been converted to God through our labours.

"I am not a serious man," he continued; "but I have come down from the Grand Stand, and I am pained to see you here. I hope you are not making a mockery of these things. I am an admiral in the navy, and I fear this is not the place for this banner."

"Admiral, if you gave a command to a man under you, would you not expect him to do it?"

"Certainly."

"The Lord Jesus Christ has commanded his people to preach the Gospel to 'every creature.' If we did not come here, could his command be fulfilled?"

The gentleman seemed puzzled, and very kindly accepted the Gospel race card I offered him as he went back to his seat on the stand.

One of our brethren gave another of these cards to a gentleman, who read it and exclaimed:

"This is right and I am wrong; here, take my Epsom Race Card. I'll have no more of it."

"Don't be a fool!" cried his friend.

"No, I've done with —" and throwing down the betting card, he left the place reading a card with these words:—

The Eternity Stakes.

—o—

THE START!

"BORN IN SIN" (Psalm li. 5).

THE RACE!

"All gone OUT OF THE WAY" (Rom. iii. 12)

THE FINISH!

"After DEATH the judgment" (Heb. ix. 27).

THE WEIGHING ROOM!

"Thou art weighed in the balances, and art FOUND WANTING" (Dan. v. 27).

THE SETTLING DAY!

"What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and LOSE HIS OWN SOUL?" (Mark viii. 36).

At the meeting on the course a man who was melted to tears was led to the tent, where he gave the brethren good hopes that he trusted Christ. He said, "I came from Northampton here; but, God help me, I'll never come again."

Another young fellow, at the meeting held near the tent on Wednesday, was evidently under deep conviction, and exclaimed to one of the workers, "I'm sick of this game." He also went to the tent, accepted Christ, and gave his mother's address that she might be told of the conversion of her boy.

Another was willing to let Christ save him, but what about to-morrow?

We told him "That the God who made him had not forgotten him, and the Lord who held the world in its place could manage him." Pray for him.

On the Thursday afternoon the brethren pitched on the hill, and endured a good deal of persecution, but one man was convicted.

"I have six boys at home, and I don't want them to go wrong. I do, I will accept Christ."

Mr. Redmond was greatly encouraged in his work among the Jews, and tells of several interesting cases of those who accepted and promised to read the New Testament.

Thirteen meetings were held among the gipsies, besides the tea-meeting given on Monday night, at which 190 sat down.

Three meetings were also held on Tuesday in the Epsom Infirmary, where the Gospel was sung and preached and gratefully appreciated.

What one feels at Epsom is the need of a tender heart to meet a hard one.

Mr. Holness tells of two young men who had accepted books at Epsom, and whilst sitting on the Thames Embankment were spoken to by him. They both professed conversion through reading the Gospel of John and "The Betting Man's Decision."

A young man saw Mr. Day's banner in Edgware Road, and was convicted by the word "Eternity," went into the prayer meeting at Hyde Park Hall, and left the meeting a restored backslider.

SCENE ON "THE HILL."

On the day after the Derby the Open-Air Mission took up a position on the famous hill, opposite the Grand Stand, amid the clatter of shows and roundabouts and the hoarse shoutings of the bookmakers. With the aid of our faithful allies, the London City Mission choir, we were enabled to prolaim the Gospel message in the centre of perhaps the most thronged and vice-ridden scene of all. The gambling fraternity began first to hoot and then to fling coppers amongst us, in order, no doubt, to cause a scramble by the roughs and thus upset our meeting. Then came a rush upon our ranks, and an effort to sweep us down the hill, but it was not to be, although we sustained some casualties. Our cornet player had the mouthpiece of his instrument driven heavily on to his lips, and also had his hat stolen, but we closed up the gaps made by the rushes and "held the fort," according to our plan, until 5 p.m. It is of course not possible to know how many were influenced for good by the preaching and singing, but a number of incidents served to show that a deep spiritual work was done.

BARRY WAKE.

The Racecourse Mission.

THE increased staff of Racecourse Mission workers, nearly sixty strong, found as usual an almost unlimited sphere for the distribution of over 20,000 Gospel portions besides the many cards and booklets rich in the blessed Word of God.

These were prayerfully placed in the hands of hundreds, who perhaps can be seldom if ever reached by the ordinary evangelistic agencies.

The not unusual criticism that such work is "out of season" or "out of place" must be silenced for ever by the noteworthy fact that the Scripture portions in most cases were very courteously received, and apparently appreciated on all hands. The distributors were not unfrequently called back for another copy, or "a book for my friend here."

We noticed, moreover, with no small measure of thankfulness, a certain eager listening and attentive ear to the word preached in the Gospel rings. Short, bright, pithy, salvation messages were delivered continuously by one after another of our evangelists, who were themselves, in some cases, once men of the racecourse, familiar with all the ways and tricks of the awful business. One young Jewish convert, who for the last fourteen "Derbies" had been a prominent tipster, and who was probably well known in his old profession of selling tips, or forecasts, of the winners before each race, figured for the first time this year as a disciple before his old clients and the bookmaking fraternity, as a witness for his new Master and Lord.

The amazement of many was manifest by such expressions as

"WHY THAT'S OLD BEN."

"No, but it's just like him though," and some of our friends feared bodily violence; but no harm came to him, and his testimony was most refreshing.

This makes the tenth year that the Racecourse Mission has sought throughout the racing days to witness for Christ on the course. The tent doors are closed during each race to enable all the workers to kneel in interceding prayer for the poor souls outside, who were watching events that would surely mean ruin to hundreds of them and ill-earned stakes to many a gambler.

This year our good friends of the Open-Air Mission, who for so many years past have borne such splendid testimony on the racecourse, have ranked themselves alongside of us in a tent of their own, and we most gratefully record the happy interchange of prayer morning by morning alternately in each others' tents. We must ever welcome this unbroken front thus presented to the perhaps largest congregation of the world. We are full of praise to God that we thus are privileged to work in harmony side by side, for indeed we need ten more such tents with Spirit-filled men ready to attack this stronghold of worldliness, gambling and folly.

We are quite hoping our brethren of the Police Force Mission will also rally to the front with us, and the hospitality which we were permitted to give to a few Christian police-officers in our tent, weary and tired out with the onerous duties of their work, was not the least pleasant of our varied occupations at the Derby.

During the evening, after the tens of thousands had left the course, we, as last year, again spread our tables with cold meat and hot tea to prepare for

THE MINSTRELS' TEA.

Every minstrel, male and female, with banjo or trumpet, harp or 'cello, and all kinds of music, had received an attractive card of invitation. Fifty-four of these costumed guests, black and white, painted or unadorned, joined in one lovely melody,

"The way is so delightful
In the service of the Lord," of which, alas! they knew so little.

We believe this audience is unique, and this year, as well as in previous years, we found under the blackened skin a heart susceptible to the love of Christ and appreciating a little kindly sympathy.

We have been immensely indebted again this year to the Scripture Gift Mission and other societies for the timely and liberal grants made for free distribution at these carnivals of pleasure and folly.

W.

Epsom Racecourse.

DERBY DAY, MAY 31, 1899.

HARK! a roaring and a raging
Like the tumult of the sea,
Like the rush of mighty waters
In their madden'd liberty;
'Tis "the gathering of the people"—
Not to SHILOH'S bleeding feet;
'Neath the great usurper's sceptre
Is "the world" about to meet?

Thousands! thousands! swelling, surging
On to Epsom's spreading height,
Where, 'mid fairest realm of sunshine
There is darkness, there is night;
Rising, falling, sweeping onward
Like a Bacchanalian flood,
Hither haste his leagued battalions
Owning not THE CHRIST OF GOD.

Hark! amid Apollyon's festal
There is sound of Christian hymn,
Weakness, on an Arm Eternal
Hath confronted even him:
O'er the vast, unbridled tumult
Bursts Emmanuel's peaceful fame,
Here his servants, chosen, faithful,
Lift the Banner of his name.

Yea! where Satan sits victorious
Shall the holy war be waged,
Here his reign shall be assaulted
And the wounds of men assuaged:
For the GOSPEL on the RACECOURSE
Will its ancient power renew,
Casting down imaginations,
Making lost creation new!

FRANK COCKREM,
Secretary of the Open-Air Mission.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE work of the St. Giles' Christian Mission has often demonstrated its usefulness to the community in the reclamation of criminals and the relief of misery. It was fitting, therefore, that the annual gathering, held at the Mansion House on Friday last, should be attended by a large number of public men and officials to whom the question of the lessening of crime was of especial interest.

The LORD MAYOR, who presided, testified that for many years he had been aware of the sound and practical character of the work. He had noted the efforts of the workers in their endeavours to benefit the miserable district of St. Giles. Turning to the prison work, the speaker drew a vivid picture of the orphaned or neglected lad, brought up amid vile surroundings, developing into a law breaker, and, for the first time, placed in the dock for trial. What should be done with him? Should he be whipped or imprisoned? Nay, that would surely result in confirming him in an evil career. In the moment of difficulty Mr. Wheatley solves the problem by receiving the youth into one of the mission homes, and devoting unceasing care to the labour of training him to walk in the paths of righteousness.

Mr. FRANK BEVAN, hon. treasurer, after referring to the beneficent results of turning the potential criminal into an actual honest worker, pointed out the advantages rendered to a poor struggling woman and her children by the rescue of the husband and father at the prison gate. The nation was rapidly waking to the fact that it had another duty to perform besides that of administering rigid and inflexible justice; it was learning to show mercy and to make an effort to reform the offender rather than to chastise him merely. With regard to the evangelistic and relief sections of the work, the speaker pleaded for the poor who are trying to perform the feat of living on 1s. 6d. per week. The suffering which the mission seeks to relieve is that which is borne silently and bravely—not that which placards and parades itself. The various convalescent homes and refuges at Maldon are a great blessing to the poor.

A brief address followed, by Mr. Wheatley, superintendent of the work, in which he related several cases of reclamation of "penal servitude men." Sir JOHN BRIDGE, after remarking that it was his simple but pleasing duty to say that every magistrate on the Metropolitan bench recognised the excellent effects of the Society's labours, adduced some interesting particulars of a youth who had been trained and helped into a situation, and who was now an industrious and prosperous artisan.

Mr. W. R. MCCONNELL, an old supporter of the mission, speaking as chairman of the London County Sessions, to which come probably one-fifth of the prisoners tried by jury in England, considered that the noticeable diminution of crime was largely attributable to the efforts of Mr. Wheatley and his helpers. Alderman T. VESEY STRONG and Lieut.-Col. ROTTON added some kindly words of encouragement.

Gospel Work at Southsea.—Arrangements have been made by Mr. John Denning for carrying on his Gospel campaign during the summer in two large tents, to be erected, as before, on Southsea Common. Special efforts are to be made on behalf of the military and naval men, and the good work done among the circus men who pitch close to the tent is also to be maintained.

Prof. Newell's Bible Course.

[A brief résumé of the course in the Pentateuch now being given in London by Professor Newell, of Mr. Moody's Chicago Institute, will be published in THE CHRISTIAN every week.]

LESSON I.—Genesis i.-xi. 9.

I. The Mastery of the Contents of the Lesson.—This ought always to be the first step in Bible Study; indeed, we cannot really study a passage till we have mastered it as a whole. There are three steps in such mastery:—

1. Read the eleven chapters through continuously from five to ten times, or until their contents are familiar. Nothing will take the place of this. Some one well says, "Salvation is by faith, but a knowledge of the Scriptures comes only by works."

2. Name the chapters. The chapter-divisions are arbitrary, of course, but they exist, and it will behove us to use them. Do not adopt the names here given if you can discover better ones: I. Creation—Reconstruction; II. Eden; III. Fall; IV. Cain; V. Seth; VI. Wickedness; VII. Deluge; VIII. Dry; IX. Rainbow; X. Nations; XI. Babel. Think backward and forward through the chapters by means of these names till you have not the slightest hesitation.

3. Sum up the lesson topically. By this we do not mean to "outline" the lesson, but something much simpler. Answer the question, "What great themes do these chapters deal with?" Six words will do it: 1. Creation. 2. Present World. 3. Man. 4. Fall. 5. Deluge. 6. Nations. An adequate outline of the wonderful truths in these chapters will be possible after awhile; but let us not burden ourselves with hard things in this course. A summary of is easy enough if we confine ourselve to just that.

THE CONTENTS OF A PASSAGE

Now let us fill out our six words:—

1. Creation.	Original Creation, i. 1. Subsequent Ruin, i. 2*a*.
2. Present World.	Primal Wrecked Condition, i. 2*a*. Reconstruction, i. 2*b*—31. Sabbath, ii. 1-3.
3. Man.	Man, ii. 4-7. Eden, ii. 8-17. Woman, ii. 18-22. Marriage, ii. 23-25.
4 Fall.	Sin, iii. 1-13. Promise, iii. 14-15. Curse, iii. 16-19. Faith, iii. 20. Sacrifice, iii. 21. Expulsion, iii. 22-24. The Two Seeds:— ,, At Emnity (Cain and Abel), iv. 1-15. The Two Lives (Cain and Seth), iv. 16-24; iv. 25, v. 32.
5 Deluge.	The Antediluvian Apostasy, vi. 1-12. The Ark, vi. 13-22. The Flood, vii.-viii. 14. The Noachian Covenant, viii. 15-ix. 17. The Spared Family, ix. 18-x. 32.
6 Nations.	The Earth-Nations, x., 5, 8-14, 16-20, 25, 31, 32. The United Rebellion, xi. 1-3. The Babel Judgment, xi. 5-9.

We have now accomplished the primary business of this course, the

MASTERY OF THE MATERIAL

of the lesson—that is, if we have done the work.

II. The Interpretation of the Lesson.—By the interpretation of a passage, we do not mean its possible spiritual teachings, nor the secondary applications it may have, but its exact facts in their proper setting. In the mastery of the passage, the only question is, what does it say? In interpretation, the only question is, What does it mean? Not, we repeat, what it can be made to mean, by human ingenuity or prejudice. Nor, again, what it can be used to teach or illustrate, however legitimately or helpfully. The sole inquiry of the honest heart, in the interpretation of a passage of God's Word is, What is the intended meaning of this passage in its native connection? We may mention four subjective conditions of faithful Biblical interpretation: (1) Humble submission to the Bible as God's revelation. (2) Candour, or freedom from prejudice. (3) Thorough acquaintance with Scripture. (4) The illumination of the Holy Spirit. And we may add the one great objective condition of a correct text.

These opening chapters of the Word are, of course, simple, plain narrative. "The Bible is not a riddle, but a revelation." Only a sin-warped intellect, backed by an unbelieving heart and a proud spirit, reads the first and second of Genesis into

A BLUR OF "ALLEGORY."

Creation, moreover, was by a word (Heb. xi. 3). By a simple command of God (Psalm cxlviii. 5) the material universe leaped into existence from non-existence. "What is seen hath not been made out of things which do appear," is the quiet assurance of the Holy Ghost to the children of God in Hebrews xi. "If I can believe the first verse of the Bible I can believe the whole Book," said a thoughtful man some time ago. Satan knows this and acts accordingly.

The geologic ages lie between the first and second verses of the Bible. For in verse two the earth is seen rolling in space an utter desolation: "The earth was waste and void" (R.V.). The Hebrew word for "waste" is tohu. In Isa. xlv. 18, the Spirit of God declares that He did not create the earth in this state: "He created it not a waste (tohu)." The inference seems unescapable that there was a between verses one and two, perhaps more than one, and surely a long interval. When we remember that at God's original creation of the earth it was habitable (Isa. xlv. 18), and that the very two words translated in Gen. i. 2 "waste and void," are repeated in Jer. iv. 23, in connection with God's terrible future judgment on earth iniquity, we see the probable nature of the pre-adamic catastrophe. Death and savagery occur constantly in the geologic fossils. When we reflect that death is the wages of sin, and that Satan, who was originally made the prince of this world (John xii. 31) not only sinned from the beginning (1 John iii. 8), but was a murderer from the beginning (John viii. 44), we find a clue to the dark maze of earth's history before the creation of man. Our race is comparatively a recent thing, and sin and punishment did not have their origin in Eden.

A TREMENDOUS CATASTROPHE

The six days, then, in this light, were days of reconstruction, not of original creation. God refits the earth for habitation, and places man over it as the head of a new order of things, with the significant command to "replenish" the wasted earth (i. 28, cf. ix. 1). These six days are marked by evenings and mornings and definite numerals, and were, accordingly, simple days of twenty-four hours, by the revolution of the earth. For light, and that from a definite source and direction, was brought upon the scene the first day, although it was not placed in the created or restored "light-holders," the sun and moon, till the fourth day. To endeavour with the periods in which the strata of the earth's crust were formed, is a most needless, unscientific, and really impossible task. The seventh day, hallowed as the day of divine resting in ii. 2, 3, is called to the remembrance of Israel in Ex. xx. 8, 11 as a day, not a period—as a simple day, over against the other six of a common week. This should be carefully noted.

TO IDENTIFY THE SIX DAYS

Chapter ii. gives additional details of man's creation and nature, and is not in this light at variance with chapter i. In ii. 7, man's true tripartite nature is shown. Compare 1 Thess. v. 23; Luke i. 46, 47. Ignorance of this is betraying many into paths of doubt and serious error. Eden was a region; the garden was within it, a smaller enclosure (ii. 8). The trees were real trees, and the two in the midst of the garden, no less real than the others (ii. 9, cf. Rev. xxii. 2, Ezek. xlvii. 12). The mystic meaning forced upon these things by some is horrible and very dangerous.

That man was able, with apparent readiness and ease, to name all the creatures (ii. 19, 20), is prima facie evidence of his perfect, fully developed state at creation. Here, again, is no room for the

UNPROVEN HYPOTHESIS OF EVOLUTION.

Scientists deem correct nomenclature their severest work. Adam's unfallen mind was absolutely masterful. Now comes the first dark chapter. Sin is the secret. The serpent, wisest and subtlest of all the creatures under man, as well as probably the most attractive, lends itself to the jealous guile of the great enemy of God. His place as ruler of the world had now been given to man. If the latter will but disobey his God, he will fall an easy prey to Satan's tyranny, who will usurp again his former realm. The story is short, but bitter and dire. The woman, beguiled amd flattered, doubts her God and falls; man, infatuated, follows her. The race is lost. Their probable glory-covering (Ps. civ. 2) has fled. Left naked to their shame, they make shift to cover themselves with fig-leaf aprons (wonderful picture of the self-righteous sinner!), but flee in terror from God's approaching voice, and are called forth to hear the curse pronounced. First, the serpent is doomed to be a hated alien amongst the creatures of the earth, degraded to go upon its belly, and eat dust all its life. The serpent, probably erect before the fall, is to-day universally hated, and is an anomaly in creation as to its manner of locomotion. See Isa. lxv. 25, for the serpent's future. Before pronouncing punishment upon our race, God graciously utters and prophecy of verse 15. "The seed of the woman (which is Christ, Gal. iv. 4) shall bruise the serpent's head." Then multiplied sorrow is foretold to the woman, with what fulfilment only woman knows. It is a question, who bears earth's heaviest woes? For man's sake, next, the ground is cursed to bear thorns and thistles of itself, and to yield bread only with toil and sweat.

THE WONDERFUL PROMISE

Then a significant lesson is given the sin-stricken pair as to God's way of covering sin. Beasts are slain by Him before their eyes, and after blood thus shed He clothes them with the skins. Thus death falls on substitutes, not on sinners—great picture of Calvary! Then they are driven forth from the beautiful garden, and the entrance is guarded lest man in his now wretched and fallen state should eat of the mysterious tree of life, which would set the seal of deathlessness upon his body, without changing his sinful nature. God's mercy shuts even His children out from that tree till Christ shall have destroyed sin and death for ever. We shall get back to it. See Rev. xxii. 2.

The Y.M.C.A.

A NEW Association was successfully inaugurated at Crawley, Sussex, on May 30.

The handsome new building which has been erected in Bedford for the local Young Men's Christian Association was formally opened on Thursday, June 1.

An Association has recently been successfully started at Cochin. The Hyderabad Association has completed a new building at a cost of a little over 6,000 rupees.

A Convention for the deepening of the spiritual life is being arranged by Mr. Walter Wild, secretary of the Bayswater Y.M.C.A. for October 30 to November 4. The meetings will take place in Paddington Baths Hall.

The annual summer breakfast meeting of the Bristol Y.M.C.A. was held on May 30, under the presidency of Mr. James Inskip. Among the speakers were Rev. F. B. Meyer and Mr. Frank Anderson. Since October 191 young men have joined the Bristol Association, and the work of the various departments is being vigorously carried forward.

The British Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations at Dublin, June 13-16, promises to be a large and successful gathering. The names of 500 delegates have been already returned. The Secretaries' Conference and School, which is fixed for the following week, at Llandudno, also promises to be unusually well attended. Lectures upon the history and methods of Association work will be delivered by Mr. W. H. Mills and Mr. J. H. Putterill, respectively, and a series of Biblical and expository lectures will be given by Rev. Dr. J. Monro Gibson, D.D.

Personalia.

Professor W. Garden Blaikie is seriously ill from a stroke of paralysis at his residence, North Berwick. His condition causes considerable anxiety.

Dr. G. W. Torr, the Principal of Way College, Adelaide, a sketch of whom appeared in these columns on September 15 last, is now on his way to England for a short visit. He hopes to be able to attend the Bible Christian Conference at Holsworthy at the end of July.

Mr. Robert Caldwell, of the Zambesi Industrial Mission, who has of late experienced indifferent health, is about to embark on a sea voyage. He will, however, take occasion to visit the stations of the Mission, and thus promote the work while seeking renewed health and vigour.

Rev. George Rose, a native of Sierra Leone, is on a brief visit to London. He has been to the United States, and interested some of the churches in his work in Western Africa. He will be glad of opportunities to address meetings on the cause of the Gospel in Africa. Letters to him may be addressed Pearce's Hotel, 88, City Road, E.C.

Services in Workhouses.—Since October last a Gospel service has been held in the West Ham Workhouse every Sunday afternoon under the auspices of the Free Churches of the district. The meetings, conducted by Mr. S. E. Burrow, have been greatly appreciated by the inmates, the average attendance being about 200. Mr. Burrow having removed to Wimbledon, the meetings are now conducted by Mr. Talbot, of Harley College.

The Canterbury Martyrs' Memorial.—The committee of this memorial have changed the design from a plain obelisk to a pedestal surmounted by a cross. This is said by the Church Association to have been done without any sort of communication with the subscribers, and without giving them any opportunity of expressing their wishes in the matter. Considering that the English Reformers sought to purify the Church from all the sensuous and material objects of the former idolatrous worship, it is obvious that a cross of any kind is an unsuitable form by which to commemorate their work.

Other Lands.

Armenian Relief.

SIR,—Dr. Raynolds has sent his report of work done in Van from January 1 to April 1 of this year. He acknowledges gifts from all sources amounting to £6,983 for the Industrial Bureau, orphanages, and for special relief, "thus making a rift in the overshadowing cloud, tiding the city population over the worst months, ameliorating the condition of the villages, and affording a considerable amount of seed for the spring sowing." The condition of things at Van during the last three months has been very bad indeed, and the faithful shepherds of the sad flock there, have had need of all their faith and hope. But action has gone hand in hand with faith, and not for one moment have they relaxed their loving efforts in the people's behalf.

The average number of free rations in the three months has been 998, the aggregate outlay for this work amounting to £332, and hundreds in the city would have died of hunger but for this assistance. The small portion of last autumn's very insufficient harvest, which the villagers were able to save for themselves, sufficed to keep them alive for a time, and then gave out, but there were no funds with which to assist them. Early in February Dr. Raynolds accepted the suggestion of the official head of the Armenian community, to join forces with them; he added £200 to the few hundred lires already at their disposal, and sent this money to the relief of the villages, which made a total in all of more than £1,000 distributed outside the city. These villagers were "subsisting on hay seed, flax seed (from which the oil is expressed), roots, and herbs, with sometimes even earth to fill the stomach and

STOP THE SENSE OF HUNGER."

But the general cry was for seed for the spring sowing, for which they had absolutely no provision.

The £400 remaining from the village relief fund, administered by Mr. Allen, formed a nucleus for this special seed fund, on which depended the very existence of the people; and as money continued to come in, Dr. Raynolds was enabled to raise it to rather more than £2,500. He wishes to place on record his thankfulness to his Armenian coadjutors for their faithful and efficient services. The situation in the villages is again very grave. As those suffering from the pangs of hunger could hardly be expected to put good grain into the ground, it is necessary for the worst cases to be promptly cared for. The accounts which the examiners bring from the villages are heart-rending. Instead of, as recently stated, 25,000 people wanting food, it is found that 40,000 would not be an over-estimate, and to give them even a meagre supply of food till the harvest would cost £20,000. This is an almost impossible sum to raise, but unless £4,000 or £5,000 be sent, great loss of life must follow.

The number of children in the orphanages now is 400. The new arrivals do not show the robust constitution of those received earlier, and there have been more deaths amongst them. Owing to from privation, a little sickness prostrates them. A number of the older boys give great promise of becoming most useful to their people, either as teachers or preachers of the Gospel, and Dr. Raynolds says: "We look forward with hopefulness to the time when they shall be ready to begin this work, of which the need is so great throughout the whole province." Pastor Lohmann, president of the German Aid Society for the Orient, has undertaken to furnish funds for yet another 100 orphans, and the selection was going on when the report was forwarded. This 500 is an immense family to care for, especially whilst Dr. and Mrs. Raynolds are alone at Van; and in doing so they feel that they have touched only the fringe of the misery all around them. Having placed the situation before the public, they promise, with the Lord's help, to use whatever funds are entrusted to their care in such a way as best to alleviate the misery amid which they live. The hon. treasurer of the Women's Relief Fund is Mrs. Madeline Cole, 1, Trebovir Road, Earl's Court, London, W.—Yours, &c.,

LOSS OF STAMINA

(Mrs.) Mary Hickson, Hon. Sec.

The Famine in Russia.

IN a recent issue, we stated that Rev. A. Francis, of the British-American Church, St. Petersburg, had left for the seat of famine in South Russia. Miss Elizabeth Jacobson has also gone to the starving districts of the Kazan Province. Combining excellent organising powers with large hospital experience, this lady will, it is hoped, do much to alleviate the prevalent distress. In recent letters Miss Jacobson says:

"Here I am at my destination, about seventy-five versts from the town of Tchistopol. I met Mr. Francis in Tchistopol, and we came on here together, and have just visited about one-third of this village. We have already counted 800 scurvy patients. In many houses the whole family is down with it, mother and children. There they lie, with swollen and bleeding gums, quite helpless, and almost unconscious of what is going on around them. It is perfectly heart-rending to see them. We must not only feed and look after those that are ill, but also those that are still on their feet. Many of the huts are without roofs, the straw thatches having been used for food both for men and beast.

"Though there are a good many of us lady workers, there is work more than enough for all. Many of the families require the food to be taken to them, as there is amongst them, not even anyone able to carry a glass of water. Together with Mr. Francis, I have met Mr. Stead's secretary. We hope that they will be able to collect some funds for this terrible need.

NOT A HEALTHY PERSON

"There are twelve districts in the Kazan Province; it is among seven of these that the famine is most prevalent. In some parts the crops have failed utterly. First, owing to the extreme drought and hot winds, which burnt and and then the early sudden frosts did the rest. The population was thus left without corn, potatoes, millet or cabbage. Both the large and small cattle died for want of food; the horses, who are the sustainers of the peasant families, are likewise dying. All that they could possibly sell they have sold and used for food. Only the miserable huts with bare walls and thatchless roofs remain. Last winter about 13,200 horses died.

DRIED UP EVERYTHING;

"This famine is worse than that in 1891-2; vegetables are much dearer now than they were then, and, indeed, can hardly be obtained. In some places milk is not to be had at all. Hay is likewise dear. Scurvy and typhus are the other terrible foes the peasants have to grapple with. In March there were already seventy-five villages down with scurvy in the Spessky district, seventy-two in the Tetiushinsky, sixteen in the Tchistopolsky, and seven in the Lapsheosky. In reality, there were certainly more, as many cases remain unknown. The rural medical staff is so burdened with the constant since the autumn, that its efforts are crippled for want of men, the number of afflicted villages being so great and scattered one from the other.

OUTBREAKS OF DIFFERENT EPIDEMICS

"Numbers have had no hot food since the autumn. They have existed on acorns, bark of trees, leaves, and even carrion. The need is growing daily—it is a terrible fire which can only be quenched by the united efforts of all. Help is given by the rural authorities, the Red Cross, and the Government; but that only covers the smallest half of the daily absolute necessities of the population."

Chinese in Australia.

IN Perth, Western Australia, and throughout the whole of the colony, there are settled a large number of Chinamen. They control almost the whole of the laundry work and the vegetable trade. Christian workers in Perth have realised their responsibility towards their heathen brethren, and several mission schools are now in existence. That of the Presbyterians contains thirty to forty scholars, and they now have their own catechist from Sydney; the Wesleyans number some twenty scholars, and the Church of Christ about twelve. Less than a year ago a Church of England mission school was started, and, as a teacher on its staff, I wish to write a few words about the work.

The mission began with two teachers and four scholars; now there is a regular average attendance of fourteen Chinamen at the meetings, which are held three times a week. The teaching is individual, each teacher having his own pupil, and so attached do the scholars become to their teachers that it frequently happens that if the teacher leaves the scholar leaves also. The Chinese are most persevering and earnest, and sincere in their desire after the truth. The number of scholars in a mission depends on the number of teachers, for the harvest is plentiful, but the reapers too few. It is an interesting sight to see these middle-aged men listening intently to Bible stories with which we have been familiar from childhood, or struggling with great perseverance to read them for themselves.

So much progress has been made, that the pupils of this Mission recently gave a social gathering, to which they invited their teachers and friends, and all those belonging to other mission schools. Several ladies and gentlemen contributed music, and many songs and solos were sung by the pupils from the various missions. Speeches were made by Dean Goldsmith, the President (Mr. Mackie), and Mr. Justice Stone, who has taken a great interest in the work since it was begun. Thomas Chue Hing, one of the scholars, who it is hoped will ultimately become its catechist, also spoke, and I cannot do better than quote his simple, earnest words:—"On behalf of the scholars and myself, I move a vote of thanks to all the dear friends who have come to our 'social,' and I hope it will not be the last time. I trust that by God's will we shall increase our numbers, and that more will accept the salvation of Jesus Christ before long."

Perth, W.A., April 13. Ethel F. Cope.

Austria "Free from Rome!"

BY the reports of religious as well as political papers, the movement in the Austrian Empire towards deliverance from Roman Catholicism is expanding more and more. In Bohemia alone there are reported to be 5,000 cases of secession from the Romish Church. One Protestant pastor alone is said to have received 2,300 Roman Catholics and their families into his church; and in the southern provinces the movement is gaining ground.

Whatever motives may be the cause in individual cases, the significance of the movement is undeniable, and if properly supported it may prove of the greatest blessing. In any case opportunities are given for the proclamation of the Gospel and for Bible teaching to multitudes who by the Roman Catholic system have been excluded from scriptural instruction and held bound by priestly assumption. What is needed is that the people should not only free themselves from the Roman yoke of bondage, but that they should be joined to the Lord, and thus learn to know "the liberty wherewith Christ maketh free." For this they claim the whole-hearted sympathy and support of God's servants.

Whilst Rationalists and Infidels seek to sow their evil seeds in the broken soil, it is feared that labourers are wanting to carry the liberating Gospel to the various provinces of the Austrian Empire. The Association for Christian Colportage, under the direction of Baron I. von Gemmingen, in Lichtenthal, Baden-Baden, have many open doors for supplying Scriptures and scriptural books and tracts. They receive many demands, but from lack of means they are not able to respond to the claims that reach them from very many places in Austria. Bibles, Testaments, and tracts should be sent by millions, and wisely disseminated by local evangelists and colporteurs. The Colportage Association would be thankful for any practical sympathy in such a work, and Baron Gemmingen would count it a privilege if he were enabled to be the channel of communication to the needy Roman Catholic populations, supplying them with Scriptures suitable to their present needs.

Will British Protestant Christians share in this noble effort, and help in supplying the sinews of this war against the powers of Roman Catholic superstition and darkness, and give hearty support in prayer?

F. W. BAEDEKER.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Varley.

HAVING visited between forty and fifty great centres in this wonderful land, preaching and teaching Christ, we now turn our steps homeward, and hope to reach London about the middle of June.

The unselfish and loyal sympathy shown by England with the United States during the war with Spain has wrought wonders here, and the basis for an enduring friendship between Great Britain and the United States has been well laid. God grant that it may be cemented and established in the mutual furtherance of peace, truth, and right! We have just had a very delightful stay with Mr. Moody at Northfields, Mass., and were amazed at the extraordinary growth of this honoured servant's work, of which we had seen but little in detail before. With nearly 900 students at Mount Hermon and Northfield, and more than 240 at Chicago, the work that is being accomplished is invaluable. Now that the means of travel are so abundant, I wonder that a greater number, both of English and Scotch residents, do not cross the Atlantic and see for themselves "Mr. Moody in his home." This I would earnestly press also upon hundreds of American brethren who have never been to Northfield, and know little or nothing of its great work.

Philadelphia. HENRY VARLEY.

Work in Central India.

THE Satnamies (chamars, or workers in leather, and farmers, who have left Hindooism), among whom we chiefly labour, are very accessible. We have four stations and several out-stations, fourteen schools, and five orphanages. A theological school has been established, where chiefly young converts from the chamars are prepared for work among their brethren. There are now nearly 1,000 communicants and over 2,000 native Christians belonging to our Mission; but we expect to have a much larger ingathering in the near future than heretofore, because by the preaching of the Word the hearts of the people become more and more willing to accept Christ.

Some of our Christians are poor farmers, and in the famine time they lost their all. They specially need about £20 to get seed to sow their fields and to bring them through till they get a harvest again. ANDR. STOLL.

American Evangelical Mission,
Raipore, C.P., India.

The Naples Society for the Protection of Animals is steadily extending its work, inspectors having been recently stationed in several new centres. An attempt has been made to suppress the terribly cruel custom of conveying live lambs, calves, fowls, &c., slung from poles or carts, head downwards, with their feet tied together. The poor animals are carried in this way for great distances; their legs are frequently lacerated by the cords, while they must suffer intensely from the unnatural position, as is shown by the fact that they sometimes die before reaching their destination. The Neapolitans are beginning to appreciate the work of the Society. Communications may be addressed to Miss P. H. Johnston, The Beeches, Carlisle; and Mr. Leonard T. Hawksley, 22, Piazza della Borsa, Naples, Italy.

Letters from America.

NEW YORK—MRS. BELLA COOKE.

LAST year, on May 7, we were to start for Europe, and had just finished packing when my husband remarked, "It is not ten yet; we have time to call on a lady before sailing off." "What lady?" said I. "A dear saint of God whom you will love to know; her name is Bella Cooke."

We went together to the Second Avenue, where she lives. A man ushered us into the rear of the front house across a humble court-yard, pointing to the first flat of a small house. On ascending the narrow stairs we found the door open and a sweet voice welcoming us, "Come in, I am so glad to see you." From a dainty bed our invalid sister stretched out her hand to greet us. To see her cheerful face, enframed by a spotlessly white frilled cap, one would have thought her indulging in a prolonged morning repose.

Her peaceful countenance seemed untouched by care or sorrow, and even age had left but few traces on it. As we sat at her bedside listening to fragments of her life story, we could but admire the greatness of God's grace that for so many years has been manifested in a weak and broken body. "Have you been ill long?" "For forty-two years I have been lying on my back without being able to raise myself." "Are you much in pain?" "I am not a moment without pain; but my Lord helps me to bear it." "Can you sleep at night?" "Very badly; sometimes not at all." "It must be wearisome?" "No, my dear, this is the time when I talk with my heavenly Father face to face. During day time when people come and go, I am too busy to tell Him all that is on my heart." "Too many visitors will tire you." "That is true; but it is my business, and my God wishes me to attend to it. He put me between the First and the Fifth Avenue that I may be a link between the poor and the rich."

"I could never have gone to the drawing-rooms of the rich, but being laid down on a bed of sickness, he sends the ladies to me with words of sympathy and helping hands. On the occasion of Mrs. Vanderbilt's visit some years ago, I learned that it was through an impression made upon her in a vision of the night that she had been led to come and see me. Here the rich and the poor meet together (Prov. xxii. 2). I have the same glad tidings for each of them. Jesus is a living Saviour. In realising his love, the rich are willing to give and I distribute."

As the minutes were passing swiftly, we had to say good-bye to the dear invalid much to our regret. This year we saw her again, lying in the same position, an ice-bag under her head, and the same sweet smile dwelling on her face. She recognised us at once. To our inquiries as to how she had been keeping all the time, she said, "I have been suffering from pneumonia and laryngitis. At one time I felt very close to my home, but the Lord does not want me yet, though I am 78 years old. He has a purpose in it, and I am willing to serve it." With these words she placed a leaflet into our hands, containing the following:

MY PRAYER.

Let me not die before I've done for Thee
My earthly work whatever it may be.
Call me not hence with mission unfulfilled,
Let me not leave my space of ground untilled!
Impress the truth upon me—that not one
Can do my portion that I leave undone:
For each one in thy vineyard hath a spot
To labour in for life and weary not.

Then give me strength all faithfully to toil,
Converting barren earth to fruitful soil.
I long to be an instrument of thine,
To gather worshippers unto thy shrine;
To be the means one human soul to save
From the dark terrors of a hopeless grave.

Yet most I want a spirit of content
To work where'er Thou'lt wish my labour spent,
Whether at home or in a stranger clime,
In days of joy, or sorrow's sterner time.
I want a spirit passive to lie still,
And by thy power to do thy holy will.

And when the prayer unto my lips doth rise,
Before a new home doth my soul surprise,
"Let me accomplish some great work for Thee."
Subdue it, Lord! let my petition be,
"Oh make me useful in this world of thine,
In ways according to thy will, not mine."
Let me not leave my space of ground untilled!
Call me not hence with mission unfulfilled,
Let me not die before I've done for Thee
My earthly work whatever it may be.

Eight people came in whilst we were sitting there. So we took our leave, promising to look in at a later hour. On our return we found a dainty tea-table prepared for us. Whilst enjoying a real British cup of tea, we listened to Bella Cooke's cheerful chat about her doctor, who is seventy-nine years old and still nimble, and who has attended her for about fifty years without recompense, and the gatherings she had held in her little room, sometimes twenty-seven at one time. "Yes, the Lord has been wonderfully gracious to me. Though poor and helpless, I have been permitted to minister to the needs of others, spiritually and otherwise. Friends who believe in faith-healing thought that I could be healed, if only willing to exercise my faith in this direction. I know I could if it were God's will. But is it his will? He moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. A little boy once recovered his health in answer to my prayers. His mother told me so, but it did not confuse me. I know my Father's voice, as it whispers, 'Be of good cheer. Thou shalt glorify me in thy suffering.'"

Before leaving we knelt down in prayer. The little room, hallowed with blessed memories of forty-three years past, fragrant with the sweet smell of roses, and spotlessly clean in every detail, seemed to us a heaven-like nook. We felt the Lord's presence round about us; we felt that his loving arms were sheltering the faithful child of his, and that He was the health of her countenance and her God.

The life of Bella Cooke is contained in two volumes "Rifted Clouds," written by herself, and published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton.

WILMA MORGAN.

Rome's "Toleration."

A BOOK by Dr. Balfour on Colonial Presbyterianism throws light on the persecuting tendencies of the Church of Rome, even in this enlightened century. About fifty years ago, in the Island of Madeira, Protestantism made rapid strides through the labours of a Christian physician, Dr. Kalley. As soon as the Romanists became alarmed, they set to crush the movement by force. The evening adult schools, started by this good man, were forcibly closed. The Portuguese who had received Communion in the Presbyterian Church were excommunicated, and people were forbidden to give them fire, water, bread, or other necessaries, or to pay them their debts. A Protestant woman was put to death for refusing to worship the consecrated wafer, and Dr. Kalley, after six months' imprisonment, was ultimately forced to flee from the island in disguise to save his life. Romanism, wherever it is strong enough to assert itself with impunity, means persecution.

The same tendency on the part of the Roman Church is visible just now in view of the great secession of Roman Catholics to Protestantism in Austria. An organised social persecution is being carried on, and though the engines of the Inquisition have long been silenced in European countries, its spirit is being perpetuated in other ways. The social boycott is being called into requisition, all Government officials who show sympathy with the new movement are marked men, and parents are reminded that up to fourteen years of age their children must be educated in the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church, and in cases where they act on conviction and train them in their new faith, they are publicly prosecuted. Liberty and Romanism have always been antagonistic terms, and are likely to remain so. Sacerdotalism cannot survive except under shelter of a secular law.

Home Missions.

Irish Evangelisation Society.

WITHOUT despising political remedies in cases of patent social necessity, to the Christian, at any rate, there can be no root-cure for human ills, in Ireland or elsewhere, apart from the Gospel of the grace of God. How important, then, is every organised and well-directed effort to declare that Gospel to the masses of the people! It is for this purpose solely that the Irish Evangelisation Society has been at work for the last quarter of a century, and it has amply proved itself as a channel, under the blessing of God, of untold good in all parts of Ireland.

The report of its operations for the past year has been prepared and issued by the experienced hon. secretary, Mr. Jas. Barton, of Dundalk, and a deeply encouraging record it is. Mr. Barton does not dress up his facts, and they do not need it; the bare presentation of them in the letters of correspondents is sufficient to awaken the thankfulness and suggest the sympathy of the reader. During the year 1898 meetings were conducted in eighty-six different places scattered throughout Ireland, the number of such meetings ranging variously from one to sixty, with a total of 1,663 separate occasions on which the message of the Gospel was delivered. When we recollect that the speakers at these meetings were all men of large and proved experience in the work of the evangelist, we see the possibilities of present and eternal good. Nothing is more striking in this report than the warm and spontaneous encomiums that are passed by correspondents of the Society on the personal character and zealous labours of its agents.

Of course we all hope for and look for results in evangelistic work, and of these there is no lack in Mr. Barton's statement. Again and again we read that it was almost impossible to deal properly with the anxious enquirers, so numerous were they. This is doubly significant when we remember that, in many of the remoter rural places, the audiences are necessarily not large. Publicly to show soul-anxiety in a small gathering means that it bears the stamp of reality, and is no evanescent emotion generated by the electrical influence of numbers. One little touch in a correspondent's letter reveals the genuineness of the work:

> We began second meetings ten days ago, but the people rushed out, and left us the bare seats. But God began to work, and last Thursday night, when I announced the after meeting, not one moved. I told those who wished to leave to do so, but not one left, so we had to deal with them as best we could.

Apart from mere decisions to trust Christ, there are some beautiful hints given here as to the lasting nature of the work done by the Society. On returning to a place for a second mission after a good interval of years, the evangelist finds many evidences of abiding blessing. Here is an interesting double item referring to a previous mission:

> A school-teacher's son was converted, and he is now in Trinity College, Dublin, preparing for the ministry. A publican's son then found Christ. I met him yesterday—a fine powerful fellow. He is holding prayer meetings, and is a credit to his (Christian) profession.

Once again we read that as a result of missions in County Cork a network of cottage meetings has been formed by the young men of Bandon in the districts around, and a real good work still goes on.

One is naturally anxious to learn the attitude taken by the Roman Catholic part of the population—the great majority of course in many parts of the country. In one place only do we read of overt opposition in the shape of stone-throwing at the wooden hall and those who attended it, without injury, however, to any one. Per contra, we are glad to read such statements as these:—

> The Roman Catholics attended in small numbers, either inside or outside, and listened earnestly. As a proof of their interest we were told of a young man, a R.C., who was heard repeating an address given in one of the halls to several other Roman Catholics.
>
> At —— there were sometimes nearly as many Roman Catholics as Protestants in our hall.
>
> I find the Roman Catholics here very open and willing to talk, and as I try to speak of the Saviour I receive a hearty "God bless you, sir."

Most remarkable perhaps of all in this connection is the casual statement with respect to one place that "some Roman Catholics helped towards the expenses."

This mention of the finances of the work reminds us that our brief survey ought not to close without informing the reader that the balance-sheet shows nearly £100 on the wrong side. Mr. Barton regulates his expenditure according to the anticipated receipts, and last year the death of a staunch friend deprived the Society of a wonted contribution of £150, hence the deficit. We very sincerely endorse Mr. Barton's hope that during this or any future year of its good work the Society may not be obliged to restrict its operations for want of the means to sustain them. It seems to us to do an amazing lot of work with a very limited income. Some of the evangelists, of course, are voluntary helpers.

The Houses of Rest.

MANY pretty and suggestive things, parabolical, allegorical, and otherwise, have been spoken and written, and will continue to be written and spoken, about Rest—the growing need of it in these busy days, its recreative potency for body and soul, and so forth. Indeed, there are lots of these bright sayings reported in the account of last year's anniversary which Miss Mason, in a somewhat belated fashion, inserts in her newest report; and they make good reading. But for an argument on behalf of Miss Mason's special work—if it needed any argument—we should prefer to quote two of the closing sentences from that report; they are these: "The Houses of Rest have for more than thirty years presented an open door to thousands of the Lord's labourers from, probably, every mission field in our own land and in the regions beyond. How many among these thousands have been enabled to prolong their days in the mission field, through this provision for the renewing of their physical and spiritual strength, no statistics on earth can tell."

Now we think that is admirably expressed, and puts the whole thing in such a compact nut-shell that our notice might very well stop here, to the economy of our space. But lest some unthinking reader should conclude that this work of providing rest for those who sorely need it may be lightly passed by, we must continue our remarks, and ask the reader to accompany us to Miss Mason's thirty-third anniversary on Friday afternoon, held in the Parish Room, adjoining her house in Finchley Road, St. John's Wood. The afternoon was terribly hot. The room was crowded, and the ventilation not at all excessive, so that we mentally wished our hostess could have transported us all to that breezy corner of Burlington Place, Eastbourne, where her other House is.

We have already hinted that our friend provides an abundance, well nigh an embarrassment, of riches in the way of addresses at her annual meetings. We must honestly confess that we always prefer her own statement, so frank and fresh, so thoroughly experimental, and so modestly descriptive of the good work, which, as a faithful steward of God's gifts and opportunities, she has carried on for the past generation.

Miss Mason told us that their endeavour at the Homes was, in the words used by another, "to save lives." In the course of the past year 934 workers had been received and cared for, and though all these lives were not literally "saved," they were at any rate revived, both physically and spiritually, and better fitted for the noble work in which they are spent. These helped ones are mainly sister toilers in the difficult home fields among the poor, while others have worn out their strength in work abroad. All these friends had been refreshed and refitted at a time of crisis, besides provision made for the eleven inmates of the Aged Workers' Home next door, and help privately given to specially needy cases of poor workers to the sum of £2,506. Miss Mason gave some pathetic details as to the last-mentioned department of the work, which showed that it is certainly not least in value. Reference was made also to the now familiar meetings held periodically at 10, Finchley Road, for prayer, for exhortation on the spiritual life, and for missionary advocacy. We wish we could quote from the printed report, but hope many readers will get a copy and read it carefully—they will do so all the more thankfully if they are not themselves among the weary and worn out ones.

The speeches on Friday afternoon were many, and all were to the point; we can but name the speakers—Rev. Henry Sharpe (who presided in the absence of Mr. John Cory), Dr. Monro Gibson, Rev. H. G. Thwaites, Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, Rev. A. W. Evans (as a substitute for Rev. F. B. Meyer), and Pastor W. Fuller Gooch. We must not omit the final testimony of the now venerable Rev. W. H. Daniels (well known twenty-five years ago as the writer of a life of Mr. Moody). He said that when in Agra, India, a few weeks ago he had a touch of the sun. The only thing to do in a case of sunstroke is to get away as speedily as possible; so he returned without delay to England, and found his way to the House of Rest in Finchley Road. He had not been long there when he developed pneumonia as the result of the voyage home. He was in so hopeless a condition that he actually dispatched a telegram to a friend in London to come and see him in order to arrange for his funeral. What there is about the atmosphere of the House of Rest he could not exactly say, but within a few hours of the dispatch of the telegram the fever abated, the load was lifted from his chest, and he stood there to give thanks and bear testimony to life "saved" when under its roof.

The writer of these lines desires to add a word of sincere commendation for the Eastbourne branch, where he lately spent four very comforting days. If he cannot testify like Mr. Daniel to a miraculous removal of chest trouble, he can speak of a real resting time, of a particularly happy season of fellowship with the large company in temporary residence, of uplifting through the daily gatherings for family worship, and of unfailing kindness from those in charge, from Miss Hawkes, the lady superintendent, downwards. G. R.

Mission of Help to the Suffering Poor.

WE have received a gift of furniture and household appointments suitable for use in a Cottage Convalescent Home. Encouraged by this unexpected gift, we have taken a small house at a very modest rental on the borders of Epping Forest, and there we hope that many a poor sickly woman and child may gather health and strength through the summer months before us. We do not wish to divert one penny from the general funds of the Mission to carry on this very necessary branch of the work; but we shall require the kind assistance of friends towards defraying the rental and current expenses, which we intend to keep within very moderate limits.

Meanwhile many sick and ailing ones are waiting in weakness and poverty for the chance of a fortnight's rest and change. Among these is a broken-down laundress, with two small children entirely dependent upon her exertions. Another is an afflicted little creature, gasping for breath, and torn by a racking cough by night and day. Her husband's earnings are fitful and scanty at the best of times; but when the greater part are spent upon his own pleasures, is it any wonder that wife and children are always on the verge of starvation? We long to be able, from this time till the winter is once more upon us, to put our Cottage Home to the very best service of which it is capable. Will our friends help us, without delay, to do so?

Annie F. Perram,
90, Darenth Road, Stamford Hill, N.

Friends' Yearly Meeting.

THIS year will be remembered as a remarkable annual gathering among the Friends of Great Britain. In the first place it was large and enthusiastic, and no wonder. Who could have ventured to prophesy, even a year ago, that the great Peace Movement, that has been a principle with Friends from their origin, could have occupied the place it does to-day among the nations of the earth? It was natural, therefore, that a deputation of men and women Friends should be sent to The Hague to hold up to the representatives there the highest ground and reason for Peace; and it was perhaps to be expected that that deputation should be cordially received. Herein there was no disappointment: the President gave a most courteous and gracious reception.

On Thursday, June 1, there was a splendid Peace meeting at Devonshire House, when the New Testament ideal of Peace was ably upheld, and doubtless a further stimulus imparted to the great movement. Strange as it may seem, a clear connection might be established between the great discovery of George Fox and the rescript of the Tsar on the subject of Peace. The Friends have been the backbone of the Peace Society since its birth in 1816 or 1817.

The report of a deputation on temperance deeply interested the yearly meeting. Its members had visited Great Britain and Ireland, and had been cordially received everywhere. Scientific teaching of temperance to the young, especially in our schools, was one of the recommendations that met a hearty response among Friends.

This yearly meeting will be distinguished, too, for the adoption of a report brought in by the Home Mission Committee, suggesting and providing means whereby a large proportion of the 50,000 members of our adult schools and mission meetings, who are "on the fringe of the Society," but not its members, may be brought into closer connection with Friends and become members of the Society.

The Doukhobortsi refugees from Russia have received noble help from Friends, and now thousands of them are settled in Canada, where no conscription or military service will demand the violation of their conscience. Many thousands of pounds have been spent in carrying out this great exodus from bondage to liberty, and deep gratitude to Friends and others fills the hearts of the freed people.

All the important gatherings are now held unitedly, and are composed of men and women Friends, and in all each sex has equal rights and privilege. The Friends have ever upheld the equality of the sexes, and now it finds expression in the discussion and settlement of all great questions in joint assemblies.

The Foreign Mission meeting was large and enthusiastic. There are nearly eighty missionaries in the field, but the native helpers are about seven to one European. Much blessing is attending the work abroad in the various centres of work.

Home missions, too, have prospered, and a good record was presented to the yearly meeting. Temperance and peace have their innings at the yearly meeting, and, as above stated, success has crowned their efforts.

The Society increased last year about 1 per cent., but new and wider doors may greatly facilitate enlargement of the Church. A very large amount of true unity was manifest, and harmony and concord reigned. The young men and women had, in many cases, the spirit of enthusiasm enkindled in their hearts, and increased loyalty and devotedness must be the outcome. Purity, prayer, Missionary Helpers' Union, and a variety of other gatherings, as usual, characterised the yearly meetings, and the consciousness that the Society of Friends has still a message and a mission for the Church and for the world probably stirred several hundreds of souls during the annual gathering.

Sacerdotalism certainly has no place in the Society of Friends. Profound opposition to it in every way found enthusiastic expression.

WM. HOBSON.

4, Church Road, Willesden, N.W., June 5.

Conference at Southport.

THE fortieth annual Evangelical Conference was held at Southport last week. There was a large attendance of clergy and laity. Canon NUNN, of Manchester, who presided, remarked in his opening address that neither zeal, nor devotion, nor self-denial, nor learning was any secure guarantee that a man was teaching the truth as it was in Christ. These qualifications might even make a man the more dangerous. Much less could numbers or popularity assure them that a man's teaching had the Divine sanction. It was said that Evangelicals were few in number and waning in influence, that they had only a small minority of men of learning amongst them, and that they received scant recognition from those in authority. He did not know that it had ever been otherwise. Speaking of externalism in the Church, Canon Nunn observed that many had gone back to the weak and beggarly elements of pre-Reformation days. Step by step they had been led on until they had reached the very confines of the Church of Rome, and not a few had passed the border line. They must bear in mind, then, that their difference with their Ritualistic brethren touched the foundations.

Canon SUTTON (Aston) read a paper on "The Pulpit in Modern Life," and in the course of a subsequent discussion Canon BURBIDGE (Southport) deplored that the old style of preaching, with its simplicity and directness, should be disparaged and dismissed as Puritanical and Methodistical. Archdeacon TAYLOR (Liverpool) introduced a discussion on "The Ornaments Rubric." Canon Rycroft (Liverpool) was elected chairman of next year's conference.

On the second day of conference (Wednesday), Rev. A. R. BUCKLAND, of London, spoke on the responsibility and duty of the laity in the present crisis. He said that, according to the High Church party, the laity had no responsibility, because they had no rights at all. The points at issue, so the High Church party contended, were points of doctrine and ritual, and such things were matters too high for the laity. As he understood the High Church view, the laity were to hold the purse and pay the parson. But he maintained that the laity had rights, and because they had rights they had responsibilities. It was true, doubtless, that the bishops were to blame for the present state of lawlessness and open disloyalty in the Church, but the laity were not altogether blameless in the matter; things could not have come to their present position if the laity had done their duty in the past. It was the right of the laity to have the services of the Church rendered in the simple, old-fashioned way, consistent with the formularies of the Church and her accustomed usage. Judging from past experience of "trusting the bishops," they were bound to say that it could not be done, lest, when the pressure of public opinion was withdrawn, the old laxity should once more ensue.

Messrs. W. C. Proctor (Liverpool), C. Stidson-Broadbent (Southport), and others took part in a vigorous discussion, in which it was maintained that the laity have too long been regarded as sleeping partners in the National Church. At the afternoon session Canon Robson, vicar of Claughton, Birkenhead, read a paper on "The Office of the Christian Priesthood—messengers, watchmen, stewards of the Lord."

Mr. Broome P. Smith, who, during his brief sojourn, has secured many Christian friends, concluded his public addresses on Sunday at St. Ann's Mission Hall, South Tottenham. His lengthened address was listened to by the many present with rapt attention.

Infirm Ministers.—The annual meeting of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers was held on Tuesday, May 30, at the Sunday School Union House, 56, Old Bailey, Mr. Robert Grace presiding. The report showed that £905 had been distributed among seventy-two aged and infirm ministers during the past year, and several new applications are under consideration.

Tower Hamlets Mission.

THE public meeting in celebration of the anniversary of the Tower Hamlets Mission was held in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, on Thursday evening. Prior to the meeting, Mr. F. N. Charrington entertained the members to tea. Some 1,600 availed themselves of the invitation, and from six o'clock until nearly 7.30 a continuous stream of humanity passed into the building, each receiving a handshake from the superintendent. Shortly before eight o'clock the doors were opened, and the little space remaining in the first and the whole of the upper gallery was quickly occupied. When Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P., took the chair, there was not a spare seat in the building. Supporting him upon the platform were many faces well-known in the religious world, among them being Rev. Marcus Rainsford (Holloway), Rev. John Vine (from America), Messrs. Leonard Weaver, Chas. Inglis, E. P. Telford, J. S. Harrison, and others.

Mr. E. H. KERWIN read many letters of regret from friends and supporters regretting their inability to be present.

Mr. CHARRINGTON presented the annual report. The reception accorded him left no doubt as to the loving regard in which he is held by the members. In the space at our disposal we can only quote very briefly a few of the chief items, showing the magnitude of the work carried on under the auspices of the Mission of which he is the Hon. Superintendent. The principal feature of the work, and the one which distinguishes it from the ordinary places of worship, is that the doors of the Great Assembly Hall are never closed. For twenty-three years the present and the former hall has been open night after night, the meeting held on that evening being the 8,480th consecutive one. The membership of the Church worshipping there had reached the remarkable total of 4,386; of these 191 had joined in fellowship during the past year. The largest Sunday school in London, now rapidly approaching its 2,000 scholars, is also located here. The "Children's Hall" has also been opened night after night all the year round for the past four years. During the winter season just past, a total weekly attendance of over 3,000 had been registered in that place. Acts of philanthropy having been detailed, the speaker came to finances. It was the first time that Mr. Charrington had been able to address the anniversary meeting without having to announce a serious deficit. It appeared, however, that already there was need of money for current expenses. The debt on the Children's Hall had been reduced to £300 during the year. One thousand pounds were required to complete the purchase of an adjoining site, on which it was proposed to erect a great tent in which to hold the week-night services during the summer months, and £150 to defray the cost of its erection.

Hearty addresses followed by the Chairman, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Mr. Thomas Richardson, and Major H. E. Millar; and during the evening the choir, under the direction of Mr. G. Day Winter, sang the anthems, "The Lord is loving unto every man" and "O! great is the depths" (Mendelssohn); and the Pennsylvanian Jubilee Singers rendered several of their quaint negro hymns, which the audience greatly appreciated.

E. H. M.

Colwyn Bay Institute.—The annual conference in connection with this Institute was held on Wednesday, May 24, under the presidency of Rev. B. Evans, Rhuddlan. The report submitted by the Director (Rev. W. Hughes) showed the financial condition of the institute to be satisfactory. Good progress was reported to have been made by the students in their industrial and literary training. At the close of the present academical year, two of the students will return to their native land—one to Freetown, Sierra Leone, as assistant to Rev. M. T. G. Lawson (a coloured pastor); the other to Charleston, South Carolina, as assistant to Rev. J. W. Jenkins, coloured superintendent of the orphanage for children in that state. The countries on the the West Coast, from St. Paul de Loanda to the Gambia, are now represented at the Institute, the number of students in session being eighteen.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

"At Once."

(FOR THE VERY LITTLE ONES.)

I WANT to tell you to-day about a wee laddie (younger, I expect, than the youngest of you searchers), named Marcus. He had heard about heaven from his father and mother, and seemed surprised sometimes that they did not take him there, as well as to the other places of which he had heard them speak. "When are you going to Heaven? Shall we go to-night?" he asked one evening; and when he had prayed the very simple little prayer which you, I dare say, also know and love—

In the kingdom of Thy grace,
Give a little child a place,

he suddenly added two little words which were not in the hymn, and said—

In the kingdom of Thy grace,
Give a little child a place,
At once. Amen.

Though he is only five years old, little Marcus is learning now that God does not always take children to heaven when they think they would like to go; but we know that, as another hymn says,

Around the throne of God in heaven
Thousands of children stand, and every day the happy company is growing larger and larger.

But without dying and going into heaven itself, you, and little Marcus too, may receive at once the place in the kingdom of heaven for which you so often pray, without perhaps thinking very much about it.

"Jesus called a little child unto him" long ago (Matt. xviii. 2), and He is still calling the little ones in order that in the kingdom of his grace He may give those little ones a place. The way into that kingdom is so "strait" and so low that, if you only knew it, it is far, far easier for you to enter now than it will be when you are old and loaded with all life's cares and honours, so called.

I am sure there must be a great many of you younger searchers—who send in your neatly-written answers so nicely—who would like to have a place in that beautiful, everlasting kingdom of grace. Well, it is for you. "Of such is the kingdom of God" (Luke xviii. 16). And it would not be wrong to apply to you words which were spoken to those who had the childlike spirit, though they were not all little children, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (Luke xii. 32).

But the most important thing of all is to enter now; not by dying if, as I hope, it should please God to spare you to serve Him and please Him here first, but by coming to Jesus to have your sins washed away in his precious blood, and to give yourselves wholly to Him.

Neither Uncle Tom nor I wish to hear that you are praying to die and go to heaven at once; but oh! how glad we should be to know that many of you tiny ones, who are only just beginning to search, would from the very first start aright by making your own, in that other sense, the prayer of little Marcus:

Fain I would to Thee be brought,
Gracious God, forbid it not;
In the kingdom of thy grace,
Give a little child a place—
At once!

I am quite sure the Lord Jesus would not say, "Wait till you are older." There is, indeed, one who will suggest that, very likely; but it is the voice of the tempter. Do not listen to him, for Jesus says, "Come now" (Isa. i. 18). "Ask Jesus to give you a heart to love Him, dear," I once suggested to a very little girl as she knelt to pray. The brown eyes opened widely as she looked up brightly. "What should I ask that for? Why I do love Him."

How many of you can truly say that? L. A. B.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. J. Spiers, Harrogate; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Ventnor, June 11, 12; St. Lawrence, June 13-15, Tunbridge Wells, June 18; Mr. Hankinson, Whitchurch, Hants, June 19; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Churchinford, Som.; Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Cansley Wood, Wadhurst; Messrs. Hewlett and Harrison, with caravan, Roffey, Sussex; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Wetheringsett; Mr. E. Fielden Nivin, Scunthorpe Lines, June 15-18.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending June 17.

Sun., June 11	Acts x.	1-66	Thurs., June 15	Acts xi.	19-30
Mon., „ 12	„ x.	17-33	Fri., „ 16	„ xii.	1-12
Tues., „ 13	„ x.	34-48	Sat., „ 17	„ xii.	13-25
Wed., „ 14	„ xi.	1-18

A Hymn.

Father, teach us how to sing,
So our songs may to thee fly;
Make them soar on eager wing,
Let them hymns of gladness bring
To thy throne so far and high.
Teach us Father, Lord of all,
Teach us for to Thee we call.

Cleanse our hearts, then we will raise
Sacred songs of thankfulness;
We will thank thee all our days,
More Thy holy Name we'll praise.
And we'll love the vain world less.
Cleanse us Father, Lord of all,
Cleanse us, for to Thee we call.

When dark shadows hover round,
When sad cares tie down our tongue,
We would make a joyful sound.
If thou in our hearts be found,
Hymns by glad hearts would be sung.
Hear us Father, when we call;
Keep us Father, lest we fall.

J. W. G. W.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 179).

1. Of whom was it said—
(a) "They straightway left their nets and followed Him (Matthew).
(b) "They immediately left the ship . . . and followed Him (Matthew).

2. What miracle in describing which do Mark and Luke make use of the same word immediately?

3. In the parable of the sower the word immediately occurs four times. Quote the connections (Mark).

4. "Immediately the cock crew. Find these words in two of the Gospels.

5. Who arose immediately when Peter bade him? (Acts viii.-x.).

6. Find the following texts:—
(a) "Immediately his leprosy was cleansed" (Matt. iv.-ix.).
(b) "Immediately their eyes received sight" (Matt. xix.-xxi.).

7. Give an instance where Christ did not heal immediately. How long did He tarry before going to his friends? (John x.-xii.).

8. Give a verse which urges the young to remember God early in life (Ecclesiastes xii.).

[Children under ten do any three; under thirteen, any five.]

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 178).

(a) Psalm li. 11. Response, "Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence." Psalm xxxi. 20.

(b) Joshua xxiv. 15. Response, "We will serve the Lord." Verses 15 and 21.

(c) Psalm xvii. 8. Response, "He kept him as the apple of his eye." Deuteronomy xxxii. 10.

(d) Isaiah lv. 6. Response, "Early will I seek Thee." Psalm lxiii. 1.

(e) Psalm lxxiv. 1. Response, "The Lord will not cast off for ever." Lamentations iii. 31.

(f) Psalm lxxxvi. 6. Response, "I cried unto God with my voice, even unto God with my voice; and He gave ear unto me." Psalm lxxvii. 1.

No. 178.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Violet Ashworth*, Jenny Almond, Dora, W., and Ralph Aldwinckle.

B—Ella Burton, Emily Bridgewater*, Phyllis Boyd, Lily and Florence Blackman, Herbert Braddon*, Rose Butler, Ella Berryman.

C—K. Carey-Brenton*, Kathleen Code*, Anna Chanyen, David* and John* Colville, Carl and Kitty Cope, Brereton Code, Ida and Mabel Cole, Nora Clarke, Edith Clarence, Lily Church, Edith Chevalier, Eleanor Chance, Ethel* and Susie* Cumbers, Bessie Cheale*.

D—Stanley Drew, Nellie Dowsett*, Dorothy Daintree, M. L. Duke, Ivy, Kitty, and Violet Donaldson-Selby, Lucy Davidson, Violet Dodsworth, Ralph Daintree, Pologna Daws.*

F—Kitty Fausset, Mabel and Vincent Fleet, Temperance Foskett.*

G—G. W. and P. W. Green, Mary*, Alfred, Ethel, and Daisy Greenacre, Irene and Kathleen Gough, Clarice and Bertie Gale, Constance Gabbett, Olive Grandy.

H—Hetty Hill*, Claude Hutchence*, M. J. Hill, Ruth Hinder, Beatrice Harland, Evelyn*, and Dorothy* Hewer, Willie Hooper.

J—Betty Jacobs.

K—Nellie Keeley, Lily Kinvig*, Max, Eva and Stanley Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky.

L—Henry, May, Edward, and Sidney Law, Blanche Lindup*, Margaret Lee, Cecilia Lichtenstein, F. Gertrude Lambert.

M—Margie Marston, Mildred Morgan, Hedley Meader, Elsie and Dorothy McMullin, O., Arthur, and Lewis Morice, Winifred and Daisy Martin, Mabel Morris, Lois Mewburn, Dorothy Morgan, Evelyn Moir.*

N—Valerie Noel.

O—George O'Beirne.

P—Ruth Pledger*, Winnie Page*, Lilian Pearson, Lizzie Pratt, Leonard, Walter, and Katie* Picknell, Mary Plumb*, Rhoda Partridge*, Kathleen* and E. M. Pasley*, Daisy Phillips.

R—Alice Reid, Ethel Rowe, Kate Rosenbloom, Gordon Roberts*.

S—Margery Smart, F. Stileman, Herbert Stuart*, Dryll and Amy Stileman, Solomon Stockfish, Esther Simmons, Fanny Stileman, Joseph Stephens, Annie Shelley, Laura Standen*, Mary and Alan Symon, Flora Simmons*.

T—Derwent and A. P. Turnbull, Eileen, Ruby and Florence Tomlinson, Olive Taylor*, Theodora Thorn.

V—May Vickers, Rosetta Viccars.

W—Edward and Edith Wheeler, Annie and Sarah* Wood, Digby Watson, Phillis, Noel and Cecile Wright.

No. 177.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Percy Allen, Irene Ashdown*, Ambrose and John Adams, W. and Ralph Aldwinckle, Gladys Allan, William Aston, Enderby Anderson.

B—Massey Baker, Eva Browne, Dorothy and H. C. Berry, Dorothy Benson, Maud, Sylvia, and Dorothy Barrett, Leonard Browne, Ethel and John Benger, Ella Berryman, Henriette Bardot*, Ernestine Buhl*, Lucienne Brabandes*, Lily Boxer*, Leonard Bentall, D. Billings, Susette* and Mary* Beck, Gordon Boxer, Emily Bridgewater*, Louis Berthé, Frank, Avory, and Lilian Blackie, Maggie, Charlie, and Alan Banks.

C—Dorothy Cooper, Arthur Cox, Cicely and Millicent Craven, Mabel Candlin, Ethel Craigie, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, Katie Cross, Phyllis and Olive Cotterell, Lois Graven*, Walter Garter*, Alice Crang, Willie Charles, Dunan Campbell*, Dorothy Clarke.

D—Faith Duncan, Marie Denizot, Marjory and Dorothy Dykes, Agnes and Catherine Darke, William Dilly*.

E—Muriel Edwards*, Leonard Ewin.

F—Bessie Freeman, Louise Filhol*, Jeanne Faucon, Muriel and Agnes Fry, Janet Fawkes, Hyaciathe FitzSimons, Helen Forbes, Eva, Maggie and Mabel Fletcher.

G—Gracie Grout, Mary and Daisy Greenacre, Evelyn Giddings, Thos. Groombridge, Daisy George, Norman Good*, Harry Gribble, Frank and Alfred Gibbs, Edith Grieve, Edith, Jack, Stuart, Margaret* and Dorothy Gray, Bertie and Clarice* Gale, Nancy and Winnie Groove, Dorothy Garfit.

H—Bessie Hope, Edith Holms, Kathleen Hughes, Claude Hutchence*, Gladys and Netta Hussey, Willie Hooper, Winifred* and Edith* Harvey, Georgette Hoffmann*, Charlie, Ronald, and Fergus Haig, Violet Holford, Harcourt Hunter, Theodora Hill, Rose Hamilton, W. Hopkins, Dorothy Harris, Ella Hake*, Marjorie Hogge, Florence and Francie Hoyte, Kathleen Hamilton.

I—Nellie Irving*, Ami and Isabel Inglis.

J—Lizzie Johnstone*.

K—Jeanie Kyle, Willie* and Agnes* Kay, Dorothy*, Philippa*, and Grace* Kerr, Flossie Key.

L—Ethel Larwill, Arthur Lamb, Guinefred Leigh, Norah, Linda, William, Harry, and Edith Lowe, Harriet Lynham.

M—Gwendoline and Evelyn* Moir, Annie Macnair, L. R. McGregor, Abraham Mack, Avie Mallory, Tita Mackenzie, W. C. Mallinson*, Dorothy*, Daniel, and Margaret* Morris, Bruce and Harry Malaher, Ian McGregor, Beryl Mather, George and Charles Macdonald, O. L., Grace, and Arthur Morice, B. Le Mesurier, Annie*, Nellie*, and Daisy* Mackenzie, Charlie and Frank Medcalf, Marie Meek, Mabel Mackay*, Olive Mewburn*, Hedley Meader.

N—Cissy, John and Peter Nicholson, Amy and Maude Nottage.

O—Maude* and Eva* Oakes, Katie and Sidney Oliver.

P—Winifred, Jessie, Eddie, Ada and Willie Palmer, Evelyn Pechey*, W. M., Louie and M. Penny, Gladys Phipps*, Willie Petter, J. Pearce, Daisy Phillips, Ethel Pasley*, Clarice, Geoffrey and Percy Peach, Kathleen Pasley*, Winnie Page*, Vera, May and Daisy Petrides, Ruth Patient.

R—Nora Read, Gordon Roberts*, Isabel and Jessie Roe, Herbert and Marjorie Rainey, Marion and Gussie Roach, May Reed.

S—Susie* and E.* Sutton, Dollie Salt, John Smith, Evelyn Shaw, Mary Symon, Nannie Sturrock*, Bertha Stocker, Violet Salvesen, Marie Sleigh*, D. D. and T. M. Stanier, Muriel Sherwin, Herbert Stuart, Bessie Symes*, Marjorie Sherbrooke, Edgar Stocker, J. and Maud Speed, Helen Stalker*, Undine and Eric Shaw, Binford Sellwood, Ronald Studd, B. and M. Shepherd, Hilda Schaeffer.

T—Marjorie Tracey, Ethel Taylor*, Herbert and Frank Tomkins, Alice and Frank Thompson, Olive Trench.

U—Queenie Upton.

V—Phyllis Vigers, Kenneth Vining.

W—Violet and A. Walker, George Willis, Charles and Winnie Williams, Pringle Wilson, Leonard Wall, Amy and Charles Wingrave Ernest, Kenrick and Queenie Wakeford, Greta and Ronald Watson Connie Wood*, F. and Helen Webb, Madge Wilson, Robert Weddell.

Y—Gladys Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 160, 161, 163—E. Selby Little (China). No. 170—Cuckoo and Hermina Lister, Daisy McArthur, Ezra Matthews. No. 173—Llewellyn and Queenie Dale, Dora Wallace, Charlotte Cane. No. 174—Llewellyn and Queenie Dale, Dora Wallace, Jean and Eliza Scott. No. 175—Ina, Nettie, and Katie Thomson. No. 176—Olive Millingen.

Personal.

Sydney Wisdom.—Your contribution was acknowledged in the issue of May 25, under the initials S.W. and R.F.H.

Nellie Hatchett.—Thank you very much for your lovely flowers.

Susie Cumbers.—The texts you gave in the clock were incomplete in themselves.

Herbert Braddon.—I hope you will enjoy your trip to America. Perhaps you might find time to answer the "Searcher" over there and be included in the Foreign List.

May Seed, Rose Butler.—You should have given three texts to each of the terms used. (Rose) I am glad you have passed your examination. You have now missed three times; if you are not wrong again you will still be able to enter for the competition.

Mabel Mackay.—I am sorry you will have to discontinue the "Searcher," but hope you will find time later on to resume it.

Hyacinth FitzSimons.—I could not tell the time by your clock. There were no hours marked on its face.

Uncle Tom's Cot—D.J.R.Q. and A.D., 1s. 6d.; Children of Lady L., £1; B.C., 2s.6d. Total, £1 4s.

Uncle Tom.

Naples Sailors' Rest.

REFERRING to a short paragraph regarding above Rest in last week's Christian, kindly allow me to say that in company with some friends I had an opportunity in the month of April last of seeing the arrangements made for the comfort and benefit of sailors by Mr. Stephen Burrowes. I was greatly struck with the very suitable situation of the premises overlooking the Bay of Naples. Mr. Burrowes has, moreover, a fine reading and writing room for the accommodation of our seamen, as well as sleeping quarters. His Gospel ship, the St. Paul, is a neat and commodious cutter, in which he will have frequent opportunities of visiting ships and carrying to their crews the message of life up and down the coast.

I venture to commend Mr. Burrowes most warmly to the practical sympathy of the many Christian friends in this country who are interested in keeping the Gospel flag floating in this most needy sphere of aggressive Gospel and temperance service.

Belfast, June 5. Henry Montgomery.

Holiday Homes.—Dear Sir,—The recurrence of the holiday season prompts the Ragged School Union again to ask for liberal help for their Holiday Homes' Fund. The children are expectant, the Homes are ready, and what is needed is the generous co-operation of the readers of The Christian, which has never been withheld heretofore. For the vast majority, unable to go for the fortnight, there must be the day in the country, and for both these health-giving schemes liberal help is sought in the name of the Master's little ones.—Yours faithfully,

John Kirk, Secretary.

37, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

Evangelistic.

Work in Edinburgh.

DEAR SIR,—Would the readers of The Christian remember in prayer the aggressive work we have been led to take up for the summer in Edinburgh? During the past year the Lord has blessed the Word to many, both saints and sinners, in our Missions at the Free Assembly Hall, Literary Institute, and other of the largest halls of the city. Now we have taken the "Pavilion Theatre," right in the very midst of thousands of the working class, the majority of whom are never seen in any church or mission hall. The theatre seats about 1,200, and arrangements are being made to carry on hall and open-air work every night in the district and the theatre on Lord's Day. Already there are plain signs of the Lord working.

We should also be thankful if any of your readers are led to help financially, as we desire to visit every house in the district and leave a Gospel booklet. We intend also to pitch a large tent later on in another district of the city.—Yours sincerely,

J. J. Sims.

4, Morningside Place, Edinburgh.

The Villages of Lincolnshire.

TEN years ago, through the grace of God, a band of men (myself among them) having been arrested in a sinful course and turned to God, started immediately to preach Christ in the streets and fairs, and wherever the people were assembled. Many were gathered out of the kingdom of darkness, and some are to-day scattered (after being built up in the faith) throughout this land and India and China, working with God.

Eighteen months ago a Gospel van was secured, and one of the workers set apart to evangelise the villages of Lincolnshire, with results of manifest blessing. The doors are still further opened all round us, and with a tent holding about 400 persons, good work may be done.

I am free for the work for the next four months with my brother evangelist, and should be glad of the help of anyone who has a tent, to accomplish the evangelisation of these dark spots.—Yours very sincerely,

Chas. J. Small.

Boston Open-air Mission, Boston, Lincs.

Great Assembly Hall.

TO return to the same district periodically for twenty-seven years and preach to the same people, to find men and women who were brought to the Lord under your preaching in the early seventies still working away for the Master in the same locality in 1899, to have watched the small mission you visited in its infancy grow by degrees into one of the most gigantic and powerful evangelical works for God in the world, is an experience that few men have met with. Yet this has happened in the case of Mr. Charles Inglis, who has just completed another mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E.

Despite the length of time that has elapsed since Mr. Inglis's first visit to the Tower Hamlets Mission, he is as great a favourite as ever. The meetings during May have been attended by large congregations on week nights as well as Sundays, especially during Whit Week. The cold, dismal weather evidently helped to do this. As a preacher, Mr. Inglis is known all the world over, having visited and preached the Gospel in many lands. His recent visit to the East End, like all his previous ones, resulted in great blessing. His intensely earnest manner in delivering the truth, and the forcible language used, impress his audience with the fact that it is not mere expression of words uttered in a formal way, or sentences of a flowery character, which on analysing are meaningless, but the truth of God,—the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Some precious testimonies to the power of the Gospel were again manifested in the after-meetings. One man who had wronged his employer in the suburbs left on the Saturday through fear of the consequences that might follow detection. He walked the streets of East London all day on Sunday with a miserable conscience, and from sheer exhaustion and want of rest, having had no food all day, he wandered into the hall, and that night decided for Christ. Next day he approached his master and asked forgiveness, offering restitution, but without the desired result.

Another young man, who was an atheist and had done much to try and further the principles of atheism, was arrested by the preaching, and with sorrow prayed earnestly to God to pardon his past life of sin and awful blasphemy against His name and cause. He left the hall rejoicing. It was seen in his face. During the month the Browning Quartette sang at the Sunday evening services with great effect.

Special services were commenced with much blessing by Mr. William Grove, on Sunday last, in a large tent pitched in the Football Field, Maze Hill.

At the close of the Sunday evening service in Hyde Park, five young men followed the company to Hyde Park Hall, and all declared their decision to follow Christ.

Mr. James Sprunt has recently laboured with acceptance at the Gospel Hall, Billinghurst. The special feature of the mission was a series of interesting lectures on the Tabernacle, illustrated by a model and diagrams.

Mr. J. T. Mateer has concluded a fifteen days' mission at Portslade-by-Sea, near Brighton. Many have professed decision, and the Christian workers in the district have been greatly quickened. One outcome of the mission is the formation of a United Evangelistical Association.

During May, Mr. J. S. Harrison has been preaching at the Mission Chapel, Little Wild Street, in connection with St. Giles' Christian Mission. Mrs. Harrison also sang some sweet solos. The services were much enjoyed and very helpful to God's people, and above all we believe souls were saved. Praise God! Wm. Wheatley.

Mr. Josiah Nix has had a delightful time with the fishermen at Stornoway. Crowds have come to the services, and the Drill Hall has been crowded. Every Sabbath night the Christian workers have been encouraged, and sinners converted. Mr. Nix is now in Norway seeking rest previous to his work at Fraserburgh and Peterhead.

On Sunday, Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, closed a fortnight's mission in Shelley, near Hadleigh, Suffolk. We are indeed thankful for his labours, and feel that only in the Great Day shall we know the blessing resulting from the preaching of the simple Gospel. On Whit-Monday about 180 came to a tea meeting in the tent, and a very enjoyable time was spent. E. K.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—June 18-30, Bethany Hall, Glasgow.
Mr. E. P. Telford.—During June, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End.
Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—June 11-26, Annan.
Mr. Jas. Sprunt.—During June, Sundays and Thursdays, Walthamstow; Wednesdays, Wimbledon.
Mr. Henry Thorne.—June 11 and 12, Wimbledon; 18-25, Bromley.
Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday, June 11, at 7, Rev. Jno. Tuckwell; Thursdays during June, at 8, Mr. A. C. Burley; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sunday, June 11, at 7, and Thursday, at 8, Mr. P. Garrioch.
Mr. John Elliott.—June 3-25, Central Hall, Pokesdown, Bournemouth; June 11, Gerston Hall, Paignton.
Mr. George Clarke.—June 11-21, Langholm; July 2-17, Ipswich; 23-Aug. 2, Teignmouth.
Mr. Newton Jones.—June 14, Bloomsbury Chapel; 18, Sittingbourne Baptist Chapel; 25, Lower Norwood Baptist Chapel.
Mr. William Grove is conducting a special mission in the Tent, Football Field, Maze Hill, East Greenwich.

Gosport.—The first district conference of the Soldiers' Christian Association was held at Miss Ridout's Soldiers' Home, Gosport, and between seventy and eighty officers and men attended. The subject for consideration at the afternoon meeting was "How to Reach our Unconverted Comrades." Colonel Seton Churchill, Captain J. R. Wigan, Lieutenant A. F. Sergeant, Mr. A. H. Wheeler, general secretary of the S.C.A., and others spoke. A testimony meeting was held, in which about twenty officers and men took part. A meeting was also held in the evening.

Encouragement in China.—Mr. J. A. Heal, of the C.I.M., Sin-Chang, Cheh-Kiang province, whom our readers recently helped in the acquisition of an idol temple, now writes:—"God still graciously encourages his servants here. Two Sundays ago we examined eleven persons for baptism, and have altogether twenty who have been examined once, the greater number of whom are satisfactory, and will, we hope, be baptized this year. There are also about fifteen other inquirers who have not yet been examined, but who are under instruction and attend the various services fairly regularly. We are earnestly praying that all of these may be 'born again' of the Spirit. If the friends who take an interest in our work would send me their addresses, I will gladly send them tidings of the Lord's dealings with us." Mr. Heal's postal address is care of China Inland Mission, Ningpo, China.

Claremont North London Mission.—Pastor Thos. L. Jones writes that in connection with the above Society a Flower Mission has been inaugurated. Throughout the summer months it is hoped to visit systematically hundreds of sick chambers, taking nosegays and with texts attached. A number of ladies have undertaken the work and would be glad of flowers, which should be sent to Mr. G. Meek, 27, Richmond Crescent, Barnsbury, N.

About Books.

MR. SPURGEON'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.*

THE third volume of the standard life of C. H. Spurgeon is equal to its predecessors in substantial interest. The period covered by this section of the great work is from 1856 to 1878; that is, from a few years before the opening of the Metropolitan Tabernacle to the heyday of the preacher's power and influence. As a frontispiece to this volume, there is a beautiful portrait of Mr. Spurgeon, and the other illustrations are numerous and excellent.

Early chapters are devoted to a narrative of remarkable progress of the Tabernacle Church, with particulars of the arrangements which led up to the appointment of Mr. Spurgeon's brother James as co-pastor. The service rendered by deacons and elders is described in an interesting fashion, and many stories are given of the doings of these helpers, and the ways of the genial pastor in dealing with them. Particulars are also given of Mr. Spurgeon's work as a lecturer. It was in 1857 that the great preacher entered upon his lecturing career, and the subject of his first deliverance was "A Christian's Pleasures." In reference to dancing, Mr. Spurgeon said he remembered "that the first Baptist minister had his head danced off," and added, "I am sure I should have to be off my head before I should indulge in that pastime." In 1859 he lectured for the Y.M.C.A. at Exeter Hall, and in succeeding years many strange topics were included in his list. Those were days in which Mr. Spurgeon was much misunderstood, and he was called upon to "live down" a large measure of misrepresentation and abuse.

In these very readable pages the work all but hides the worker. The various institutions that grew up around the Tabernacle are described—the College, the Orphanage, and the Colportage Association. Mr. Spurgeon's part in the controversy on Baptismal Regeneration receives due attention, and the multiplicity and character of his later writings are fully indicated. There are reminiscences by Mrs. Spurgeon and memories by the sons. Altogether the volume is replete with interest, and cannot but prove a stimulating and enlightening force in many Christian homes.

A STIMULATING BIOGRAPHY.

A deeply interesting and spiritual volume of biography is God First; or, Hester Needham's Work in Sumatra. The work comprises selections from letters and diaries, and has a sympathetic preface by the late Miss S. G. Stock. Our readers are not unfamiliar with the devotion and large-heartedness of that choice spirit, Hester Needham. It will be remembered that in the midst of a busy life, instinct with incessant care and toil on behalf of various spiritually neglected sections of the community, she was impressed with a strong sense of a Divine call to the foreign field. "There is a place in Sumatra," she wrote, "where for forty years the heathen have been asking for a missionary . . . and none has gone, and now the Mohammedans are going, but no missionary of Christ. . . . I have written to offer myself for the work." Accordingly, at the age of forty-six she forsook the tender associations of the homeland and spent the remainder of her life in ministering to the natives of Maindaling. The widespread blessing that resulted is recorded in her diary with an engaging modesty and simplicity. A pathetic interest attaches to her labours among the brown-skinned people, who came to love her so dearly, and who heard from her lips and read in her self-effacing life the story and power of Christianity. In spite of continual bodily suffering she plodded cheerfully on until, on the addition of dropsy to a complication of other diseases, she became much worse and passed away, peaceful and reliant and a true missionary to the last. One of the watchers subsequently wrote, "She ordered all her affairs so calmly and quietly, as one who is at the end of her journey." The little card printed in her memory bore, in addition to her initials and dates of birth and death, the words, "Thankful to stay, but delighted to go." The annals of her fragrant life must needs prove a stimulus to all who can understand and appreciate whole-hearted consecration in the cause of Christ. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons have issued the Tourist's Vade Mecum of Spanish Colloquial Conversation. (1s.) The phrases have been carefully selected, and the pronunciation is imitated throughout.

* C. H. Spurgeon's Autobiography, compiled from his diaries, letters, and records, by his Wife and his Private Secretary. Vol. III. (10s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.)

Cups of Cold Water, by E.M.B., is a collection of helpful papers reprinted from Christian Progress. (6d. Bachhoffner, 162, High Street, Clapham, S.W.)

The Christian Literature Society for India (7, Adam Street, W.C.) has issued a second edition of Seed Time and Harvest, a tale of the Punjab, by A.D. This is a good book to place in the hands of thoughtful Hindus.

The struggle for religious liberty in Bohemia is admirably delineated in The Martyr of Kolin, by H. O. Ward (2s. Partridge). The book is a new edition of "Max Reichner, Pastor," and is a story of persecution on the one hand and devotion to principle on the other.

Birthday books multiply. The latest is the Edna Lyall, with an excerpt for every day in the year from one or other of the many works of Miss A. E. Bayly. The prejudices and views peculiar to the writer named (of whom an excellent portrait is given) find representation in the selections. (3s. 6d. Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

The Andrew Murray Year Book, compiled by Mary Johnson Shepperson, gives readings for every day from the works of Dr. Andrew Murray. Needless to say the contents deal with high truths in a manner intensely experimental. There is a portrait of the South African divine and an outline of his life. (Watchword and Truth Office, Box 5326, Boston, Mass.)

The Land of the Shah has not received much attention in missionary literature, which fact makes all the more welcome the work Persian Women and their Creed, prepared by Mary R. S. Bird, C.M.S. missionary in Persia. (1s. C.M. House, Salisbury Square.) Admirably illustrated, and replete with incident, the book affords a good idea of life among Moslem women, and is as instructive as it is entertaining.

The fourth volume of the "E. F. G." series of pocket dictionaries, of which the general editor is Mr. G. F. Barwick, of the British Museum, is English-Italian and Italian-English, compiled by E. Stokes, and containing the most useful daily and commercial terms, with comparative tables of money and measures, also name lists, and other information. Though small in size, this book is printed in remarkably clear type, and is a handy and useful publication. (1s. 6d. Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

Mrs. Brightwen has done much in recent years to direct attention to the charms of natural history study, and the comparative ease with which that study may be pursued by those who are so minded. Her latest book, Rambles with Nature Students (5s. Religious Tract Society), deals in a most attractive manner with ordinary every-day subjects within the reach of all who go about with their eyes open. It goes through the course of a year, indicating many of the objects and living creatures to be seen and studied with profit and admiration. The book is illustrated with 130 engravings from original photographs and sketches. This is an ideal gift book for thoughtful young people, and one calculated to entice them into paths of research at once fascinating in character and ennobling in general tendency.

Latest born of our great congregational hymn-books is "The Church Hymnary," the issue of which we noted at the time of its publication. A most interesting companion volume is Hymns and Hymn Writers of the Church Hymnary, by Rev. John Brownlie. (3s. 6d. Henry Frowde.) Those who use the new hymn-book will greatly enhance the profit to be derived from it by a knowledge of the authors and the circumstances under which the hymns were written. This will be amply found in Mr. Brownlie's work, contributed not only by his own pen, but by others having special knowledge of the facts. A very wide field is covered. Scotch readers will be specially glad to have the history of the "Metrical Psalms and Paraphrases," around which so many of their early memories cluster. Every lover, and indeed every singer of hymns, ought to extract unlimited pleasure and profit from this delightful and well-printed volume.

A work which will interest many Bible students is The Gospel Problems and their Solution, being an inquiry into the origin of the Four Gospels, by Joseph Palmer (6s. H. R. Allenson). The author's main contention is that the narrative portions of the Gospels were written soon after (and for the most part immediately after) the events happened which they relate; and that the reports of Christ's longer addresses were taken down as they were spoken. Regarding it as certain that our Lord was accustomed to speak in both the languages that were current in Palestine in his time, Mr. Palmer finds that his utterances in Aramaic are mostly preserved in the synoptics—Matthew, Mark, and Luke—while his discourses in Greek are found only in John. Chronological and other questions are also dealt with at length; and, though impressed with the fact that many interesting phenomena still await explanation, one cannot but recognise the reverential spirit and analytical ability evinced by the author of this thoughtful work.

The Churches.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Rev. H. Walsham How, vicar of Mirfield and a son of the late Bishop of Wakefield, has been appointed to an honorary canonry in Wakefield Cathedral.

The Bishops have arranged another meeting at Lambeth for the third week in June. It will extend, according to present arrangements, over two days.

The Church Missionary Society's Exhibition in Dublin has been a signal success, and has realised for the cause of missions over £3,000. The addresses and exhibits were greatly appreciated.

The Church Army Missioners have now conducted eight-days' missions in most of the prisons in England and Wales, and hope to repeat them at intervals of from eight to twelve months.

The Primate of Ireland, Dr. Alexander, has been ordered to Droitwich for the benefit of the brine baths, which it is hoped will at least mitigate the trouble from which he has been suffering of late.

Rev. Arthur Mercer has been instituted by the Bishop of Islington to the Vicarage of St. Mary Magdalene, Holloway. Amongst the clergy present were: Revs. J. A. Faithfull, Rector of Whitechapel (the late Vicar), Prebendary Barlow, and Marcus Rainsford.

The Bishop of Newcastle, speaking at his primary visitation, commended the various diocesan societies and agencies, and said that the most pressing needs at the present time were mission and parochial buildings as workshops for the clergy and lay workers, additional clergy, and developed lay work.

The Bishop of Liverpool has contradicted the report that he was about to resign. Dr. Ryle entered upon his eighty-fourth year on May 10, and on the 10th inst. he begins his twenty-eighth year of his episcopate, having been appointed first Bishop of Liverpool on the creation of the See in 1880.

As a result of concerted action on the initiative of Rev. H. J. Wright, vicar of St. Matthew, Marylebone, a united open-air mission was recently held in a densely populated neighbourhood in West London. Addresses were given by Rev. H. J. Wright, and by representatives of the Baptists, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists, in addition to the City Mission and the Salvation Army.

Congregational.

At the recognition of Mr. Robert Maxwell Moffat as pastor of Zion Church, Frome, there was a large attendance. Impressive addresses were delivered by Principal Fairbairn and Dr. Horton, and fervour characterised the whole proceedings.

Rev. J. W. Atkinson's thirtieth anniversary of settlement at Latimer Chapel, East London, has been celebrated with heartiness. A large number of friends of Latimer, past and present, assembled, and the public meeting was presided over by Mr. Evan Spicer.

At the monthly Communion Service, at South Moulton Church, Devon, a number of young people who had recently decided for Christ, as a result of a week's Special Mission conducted by the pastor and several helpers, were welcomed into fellowship.

Preaching at Edinburgh, Rev. A. R. Henderson, referred to the Peace Conference now in session at The Hague, and said that whatever good might come of it we should owe it to Christ, who, unseen, presided over the assembly and spoke every just and charitable word that was uttered.

The seventieth annual Congregational Union of Ireland was held in Dublin last week, under the presidency of Rev. James Wylie, of Belfast, and was largely attended by representatives from various parts of the country. Three ministers were cordially received as new members, and the work of the churches was said to be progressing.

Baptist.

At Woolwich Road Church, Greenwich (Pastor W. E. Wells), Rev. J. Bennett Anderson has conducted a special mission, with evident signs of blessing.

At a special service held at the Baptist Church, Thornaby-on-Tees, the pastor, Rev. A. E. Calver, delivered an address on the devotional aspect of Baptism, and subsequently immersed a number of candidates.

Rev. T. M. Bergin has been compelled to resign his pastorate at Yorktown, Surrey, owing to prostration after a severe attack of influenza. The Church has offered a six months' holiday, and has placed the Manse at his disposal as long as he may require it.

Special meetings were held at Fareham on the occasion of the formation of the new Baptist Church (Rev. Hugh A. Ellis). Rev. Z. T. Dowen, of Brixton, preached. At a large gathering in the Town Hall, addresses were delivered by Pastor E. A. Carter and other friends.

The pastors' tenth anniversary services at Rochester were marked by deep spirituality. Revs. Fuller Gooch, G. H. Kilby, Mr. W. H. Seagram, and other friends took part. The gatherings were numerously attended, and the work is making satisfactory progress.

Several of the candidates recently immersed at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, were converts from the mission station in Caledonian Road, the services of which are conducted by the deaconess, Sister Dora. Some were first led to serious thoughts of religion through open-air services.

The Baptist Union has entered with vigour upon its Twentieth Century campaign. Arrangements have been made for every county association to be visited before the end of June. In addition to Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, Revs. Dr. Clifford, J. R. Wood, E. G. Gange, C. Williams, and other well-known ministers will represent the Council.

An interesting and helpful conference of the Dundee District Association has been held at Arbroath. At the afternoon meeting, Rev. W. P. Simpson spoke on "Christian Priesthood in its Relation to Present-day Ritualism." This was followed by vigorous discussion, in which most of the pastors took part. In the evening an evangelistic meeting was held.

The annual meeting of the Baptist Union was held in Belfast last week, and over £4,000 was subscribed to a Twentieth Century Fund. It is expected the members of the churches throughout the country will contribute £8,000 additional. A missionary is to be appointed to do evangelistic work among the various congregations, which are increasing at the rate of two a year, and which are in a more prosperous condition than ever they were before.

Methodist.

Rev. William Goodman, General Committee Secretary of the Primitive Methodist Church, retires in July, after five years' service, and will be succeeded by Rev. John Hallam, of Liverpool.

Special services held at Penhale Road Wesleyan Church Portsmouth, were times of spiritual refreshing. A number of persons yielded to Christ, including some of the elder scholars of the Sunday school.

A Wesleyan Mission at Ryde has been much blessed. The meetings were conducted in old-fashioned Methodist style, and at the close of each gathering such scenes were witnessed as evidenced the working of the Holy Spirit.

A meeting of Wesleyan Sunday school children was held last week in the Albert Hall to promote the Twentieth Century Fund. Addresses were given by Rev. H. Price Hughes and Mr. R. W. Perks, and the proceedings were of an enthusiastic character.

In connection with the forthcoming Wesleyan Conference, open-air meetings are to be held in Hyde Park on the second Saturday afternoon, July 29. It is hoped to secure permission to place several waggons in the park and have some of the chief connexional speakers present. This is expected to be a very popular gathering if the day be fine. A committee has been appointed to make all the necessary arrangements, with Mr. Meakin as convener.

Speaking at the Macclesfield Convention on "the Mission of Sunday school teachers" Mr. Pedley, of Congleton, remarked in the course of a helpful address that they must teach sound doctrine, by which he did not mean a course of theology, but simple Bible truth. It was also their mission to build up character—to lay the foundation of a moral backbone. Though in this work more is done by example than precept, precept must not be neglected, but a clear note sounded against drinking gambling, idleness, and other notorious sins. They must aim at conversion, for without it their efforts would be in vain.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Armstrong Black, of Egremont, one of the most thoughtful preachers which English Presbyterianism possesses, has accepted a call to St. Andrew's Church, Toronto.

Under the auspices of the Women's Missionary Association, Rev. Dr. Brandon, gave an address at College Park Presbyterian Church, on Manchuria. In the course of a very interesting narrative, he said that the Scotch and Irish Missions working in Manchuria had now a staff of about sixty. The blessing attending the work of preaching, teaching, and healing was remarkable, and numbers had been baptised.

Society of Friends.

The retirement of Caleb Rickman Kemp from the Clerkship of London Yearly Meeting afforded an opportunity for some expression of a sense of the value of his services at the table for so many years.

The deputation appointed by London Yearly Meeting to present a memorial to the Peace Conference at The Hague were kindly received by M. de Staal, President of the Conference, who expressed his satisfaction with their Address of Sympathy.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. ALEXANDER STEPHEN, shipbuilder, Linthouse, Glasgow, an earnest friend of Christian work in the west of Scotland. Mr. Stephen was brother-in-law of Dr. Stewart, Moderator of the Free Church Assembly.—Mr. HUGH GARDEN, Echt Lodge, an active office-bearer of Richmond Presbyterian Church and the superintendent of its Sunday school.—Rev. W. HINTON JONES, Calvinistic Methodist minister at Shrewsbury, in his sixty-first year. He had been pastor of the C.M. Church at Shrewsbury for thirty years.—Very suddenly, Rev. THOMAS HAYDEN, for the last twenty-three years pastor of the Baptist Church at Gillingham, Dorset.—Mrs. PATER, wife of Rev. John E. Pater, Wesleyan, of Banbury. Much appreciation has been expressed of her gentle, lovable character.—Rev. E. R. EARDLEY-WILMOT, Hon. Canon of Worcester, and formerly rector of All Souls', Langham Place, aged eighty-five.—Rev. RICHARD WALL, M.A., late Rector of Drayton Bassett, formerly Vicar of St. James's, West Bromwich, and first Incumbent of St. Anne's, Birkenhead, aged seventy-nine.—Rev. A. D. MACNAMARA, Treasurer of Cork Cathedral, and Rector of Ballymony, an excellent scholar, and a constant contributor of theological articles to various magazines.

Notices.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS.—G.H. P.G.S. J.M.B. A.D.P. H.C. A.F. C.V. W.F.S. A.H.E. W.E.D. P.G.S. G.P.G. G.R.K. H.B.D. S.D.W. J.W.V. E.T.H. L.B. T.J.K. F.J.R. C.K. E.M.B. H.S. E.H.G. A.Mc.G. P.P. W.H.S. E.H.K. J.N. C.H. D.B. J.S.F. S.E.B. J.H.B. M.L. E.J.P. S.S.M. W.W. F.C. E.W.B. E.A.M. J.D. K.A. Mrs. S.M. S.M. W.K. H.M. A.H.F. S.A. K.W.L. E.A. H.A.E. W.H. G.S.J. A.H.W. W.H.N. S.B. M.L.J. J.H.S. J.J.S. R.C. J.D. E.M.

APPLICATION FOR TRACTS. — Stanford Cooper, 18, St. Andrew's Road, Southampton; Sydney G. Adams, Cliff College, Calver, via Sheffield; Alfred Parton Walker, 13, Astey's Row, Essex Road, Islington, N.; James Jackson, 23, North King Street, North Shields; M. Baker, Woodham Ferris, Essex; Miss J. Hinmers, 35, Chelsea Road, Southsea; E. Bound, Croft Street, Willenhall; Mr. H. Feilden (especially for South African tribes), Crimson Cross Cottage, Strutts Park, Derby; Frederick Marshall, 8, Bradwell Street, Bancroft Road, Mile End, London, E.; Mr. A. Foley, 14, Rotherhithe Street, London, S.E.; Rev. Edward Poole-Connor, Borough Road Chapel, Southwark, S.E.; A. H. Roe (Gospel Temperance), 92, Blake's Road, Peckham, S.E.; Walter Milburn, care of E. J. Ward, Shaw End, Grayrigg, near Kendal, Westmoreland.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on the Ipswich monthly meetings for the deepening of Spiritual life, June 15.

For blessing on a mission at Stockton-on-Tees, to be conducted by Mr. Rowland Edwards of the Evangelisation Society.

Prayer is asked for much blessing on the tent meeting of the Evangelistic Mission about to be held in several places and already commenced at Harrow.

The Second Canadian "Keswick" Convention will be held at Niagara from June 26 to 30 next. Prayer is earnestly requested that larger numbers may attend, and that there may be much blessing.

Cyclists in the north-west of London are invited to take an evening "run" to Harrow and assist in a series of tent meetings being held in the large marquee of the Evangelistic Mission now erected in the Station Road, opposite Hind's Road, midway between the L.N.W. and Metropolitan stations. Rev. Monro Gibson, D.D. is to preach this evening (Thursday) at eight o'clock. Meetings on Friday and each night next week at eight o'clock except Saturday.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE letter from Mr. Moody to friends in Australia, which we printed last week, will have prepared our readers for the announcement which we now make that he is compelled also to relinquish the idea of coming to this country at present. In a letter dated May 31 he definitely expresses that decision.

The following kind letter from a Presbyterian minister suggests a method by which friends everywhere could help to extend our circulation.

I have taken your excellent paper, The Christian, for some time now, and I find it exceedingly helpful and stimulating. I have done what I could to introduce it to the members of my church—a centre of the Presbyterian Forward Movement—by recommending it to their notice upon several occasions.

I should be glad if you could send me a parcel of back numbers for the purpose of free distribution amongst those who know nothing of it; and thus perhaps I shall be able to do some good to those to whom the papers are given by putting into their hands what I consider one of the best of the evangelical weeklies, and also, inter alia, assist your circulation.

The holiday season is now approaching, and a plea may well be urged for help to provide a holiday for some of the Lord's workers, who are burdened with much weariness, but have no means to purchase relief for themselves or their families. Many of our city missionaries, and not a few of the poorer incumbents in the Church of England, are in this position. This is the cry of a correspondent, who signs himself "Infirm Curate," on this matter:—

I was ordained nearly twenty-seven years ago. During that time I have had five short holidays, from one of which I was hurried back almost immediately. I have had also seven attacks of influenza, four of them very severe. These have shattered a once strong constitution. Yet I am doomed to labour on day by day without change or cessation, because my Church makes no provision for my retiring, nor does it give me the means of restoring my health. Now I ask, in all seriousness, would it not be wise to do either the one or the other?

The total contributions to the Church of England last year amounted to over £5,000,000, and yet many of her ministers are in deep distress of poverty, partly, as the above writer says, because they will not bow the knee to Baal, and partly because of inequality in the distribution of these funds. There is surely an ample field for reform, compared with which the "legality of incense" and such problems are as the small dust of the balance.

Judging from the alarmist headlines and reports in some of the daily newspapers of last week, this country was on the verge of war with the Transvaal, because of the failure of the conference between President Kruger and Sir Alfred Milner at Bloemfontein. Calmer counsels have come after a few days' reflection, and we are glad to note that the prevailing tone of the press throughout the country is strongly adverse to any rupture of the pacific relations between the two peoples. Of course, we are the stronger power and could impose our terms on the Dutch by force of arms, but such a step would bring to us anything but glory, unless no other honourable way out of the contention could be found; and that alternative we confidently believe has not yet come within sight.

Without cherishing the fond delusion that the Peace Conference now assembled at The Hague will usher in the Millennium, we may reasonably look for results that will cheer the hearts of all who desire to hasten that golden age. In a sermon preached last Sunday in the English church at The Hague, the Bishop of Hereford made the following reference to one probable outcome:—

In the horrors lately perpetrated throughout Armenia we saw the spirit and the doings of men, whether perpetrators or abettors, who, under a veneering of civilisation seem really to belong to the dark and cruel days of some far-off barbaric epoch. And one reason why we hail the meeting of this Conference of the nations now assembled is this, that we trust it has made the recurrence of Armenian infamies, under any Government allowed a place in such a conference, or indeed under any other Government, while Christian nations look on with folded hands, impossible for evermore.

We can only hope and pray that the Bishop's forecast is correct. We observe that excesses have already been recommenced by the Kurds in Asia Minor. As Turkey's representative has a seat at the Conference it is to be hoped that someone will inform him of the purport of Dr. Percival's discourse.

Schemes for desecrating the day of rest continue to increase, the latest being one hatched by a London vestry. The proposal is to ask all the other vestries and district boards in the metropolitan area, to unite in putting before the authorities of the British Museum the advisability of arranging lectures or short addresses on the objects exhibited in various departments under their control, the same to be delivered between three and four o'clock on Sunday afternoons. If this is successful, the trustees of the South Kensington Museum, the National Gallery, and the Bethnal Green Museum will be approached. Householders hardly think that in choosing a vestryman they are choosing a man to represent their mind on the Sunday question, and we fail to see what the vestries have to do with it. Metropolitan voters should look after their representatives.

Close attention should be carefully kept on other attempts to secularise the day. For instance, the Crystal Palace Company have determined to cater for the season-ticket holders on Lord's Day, and have announced their intention, as regards Sunday concerts, to "feel their way," in the meantime "carefully considering and probably arranging for greater benefits on a Sunday later." This simply means that they are the servants of the public taste, and will govern their action not by any moral principles, but strictly by the law of supply and demand. It is clear that only by educating and carefully watching public opinion can these wily inroads on the day of rest be kept in check. The danger is for the Christian public to go to sleep after its recent victory. There never was a time when it is more important to keep wide awake.

The Bishop of Rochester, in replying to a Nonconformist deputation to the Rochester Diocesan Conference, made three points of great importance: (1) The Church of England has a large share of responsibility for the unhappy differences between herself and Nonconformists. This responsibility, however, should be regarded as a thing of the present as well as of the past. Perhaps Dr. Talbot hardly realises how greatly the differences are being widened by the action of that party in the Church to which he belongs. (2) The Church owes much to such Nonconformists as Dr. Dale, Dr. Reynolds and Mr. Spurgeon. That sense of indebtedness should diminish the separation. (3) The stimulus of the Nonconformist conscience has been a great moral and religious factor in the common national work of all Christians. Dr. Talbot believes that when "Churchmen" and Nonconformists unitedly support well-considered measures of temperance reform, the reform will be accomplished.

The Dutch Reformed Church of the Transvaal is at last bestirring itself to deal with the drink curse, and has sent a numerous deputation to place the case before the Government. Considering how slow the South African churches have been to move in this matter, the event is of great significance. These 308 delegates, consisting of ministers and laymen of the Dutch churches, have gathered together to protest against the liquor evil as undermining the national character of the population, both Boers and native races. Their case was strongly represented, and some useful legislation is likely to be the result. The drink trade has become strongly entrenched in the South African Colonies, and those who know Johannesburg may well feel anxious about the future of our colonists there, unless something is done to lessen the drinking temptations of the country.

Now that the truth has been proclaimed from the house-tops as regards the innocence of Dreyfus, the Pope, according to the Rome correspondent of The Times, in a letter to the Archbishop of Bourges, characteristically seeks to persuade France that he is on the side of truth and justice. This belated act is of no value except to show the value of the Papal claims to infallibility. The whole plot against Dreyfus was engineered by Jesuits, as all the world now knows. The head of the Jesuit order, sometimes called the Black Pope, has used every available means for the suppression of the facts, and for the embittering of hatred against Jews and Protestants, who have been consistently on the side of revision. The Roman Catholic Church thus shares its loss of prestige with the army, and the Pope's attempt to turn the balance comes too late. The Dreyfus affair ought to give a rapid impulse to the disillusionment of France as regards the true nature and influence of Catholicism.

The Romanist party in France is awaking to a sense of the revival of Protestantism, and is growing alarmed. M. Ernest Renauld has reviewed the situation in a volume of 600 pages, entitled "Le Peril Protestant." The Catholic organ, La Croix, in a review of this book, makes some important admissions. It says that there is a steady Protestant infiltration into all the great offices of State.

The higher magistrature has opened its ranks to the Protestants. The universities are crammed with Protestant professors; there are some in all the great schools, in the lycées, in the smaller colleges.

In view of this state of affairs, the paper recommends "a war without truce and without mercy" against this Protestant peril.

Considering the terrible condition of moral anarchy into which a decadent Catholicism has plunged France, this "peril" is likely to be the salvation of that great but unfortunate country. The danger is really from the other side.

Mr. John Murray spoke some words to the Publishers' Congress in London last week, which deserve serious thought. He reminds us that there are now millions of readers where not so long ago there were thousands; that an enormous mass of printed matter, to which he cannot apply the word "literature" as a whole, is put into their hands, but that we have not yet taught a very large proportion of these readers how to read or what to read.

In these days the problems which we have to face are the craving for cheapness; the constant eagerness for what is new; the contemptuous neglect of much that is often but a few months old; the frequent failure of what is good and success of what is bad. The gradual encroachment of journalism into the domain of books is a danger which cannot be disregarded.

The tendency of the Congress was elevating, and we cannot but hope that gradually the taste for better reading will develop along with the ability to read. The "how" and the "what" are two things that teachers of every kind should never lose sight of.

The serious effects, physical and mental, brought about by the over-development of athleticism among women, forms the topic of a vigorous article in The Nineteenth Century. Dr. Arabella Kenealy deplores the present educational methods which treat woman in Tennyson's satirical phrase as "undeveloped man," and so put growing girls through severe and trying physical exercises, fit only for boys to take part in. The effects on physical temperament and morals, this writer says, are likely to be serious. She pleads for the old-fashioned sentiment as to the essential distinction of the sexes, which was sound and healthy. There has no doubt been a general tendency recently among educationalists to ignore this distinction, and to treat boys and girls as though it did not exist. There are signs that the craze is passing away, with a good many others that ignore the fundamental laws of Nature, which are the laws of God, who made man male and female.

The Ethical Society, which has just held its annual congress, takes up a very superior attitude towards the churches "and the faith once delivered to the saints." One of the speakers felt "how much more might be done if good people were only free from their belief in the supernatural." This belief, of course, he and his fellow-members consider a curious survival of superstition in these "enlightened" days. It is interesting, however, to compare the contrast between the propagative power of a "faith" that believes in supernaturalism and one that has discarded that relic of credulous times. The Ethical Society has been lecturing and doing its best to disseminate its views through the country for a dozen years. The total result of its propaganda is a membership of 800 persons, and an annual income of £800. Judging by results, "naturalism" does not thus seem to have discovered the secret of missionary effort.

In truth, the universal testimony of facts shows that once a creed loses the doctrine of "supernaturalism," which, being translated, means faith in a personal God and Father, all converting and persuasive power evaporate from it. It is the supernatural element which is the very heart and soul of religion; without it, it is a dead husk—the living, propagative principle has vanished. The only possible Gospel to men is one that tells them of a supernatural order, which promises them supernatural help, which fills them with faith in a supernatural redemption. Unless grace is superior to law, then is our faith vain and our preaching vain. Christ came to make this clear and real to men, and to Him, therefore, and not to "Ethical Societies" that deplore a faith in the supernatural, the heart of men will ever turn for light and life.

Another chemical discovery has burst upon the world. Hydrogen has been liquefied. Sir Humphry Davy once said:

Fortunately, for the active and progressive nature of the human mind, even experimental research is only a method of approximation to truth.

That is to say, the discovery of to-day brings us no appreciable distance nearer to the final mystery of the nature of things; we must advance, and there is infinite room for us to do it in. Every discovery seems to be of use in enabling man to subdue the earth and make it his servant, but the real nature of things seems to be as elusive as a dream. The Infinite Mind has given the human mind more than eternity will enable it to perform. Kepler said he could well spend eternity in admiring the works of God's hands.

That a wave of peculiar nastiness is going over the stage just now, has been hinted from several reliable sources. The latest protest comes from the columns of the Daily Mail, in the form of a signed article by a dramatic critic, who, in reviewing the dramatic history of the past few years in a discriminating spirit, speaks out strongly against the "drama of flippant immorality" that has taken possession of the London stage. When a religious contemporary a few weeks ago denounced two of the plays now being acted in the West End as shamefully immoral, this was at once pounced upon as another ebullition of Puritan narrowness. Its words were, however, mild in comparison with those of "Mr. Boyle Lawrence," who says of this latest drama, it is "so dangerously and so unaffectedly demoralising that cleanly-minded people are leaving it alone." If the stage is a mirror of public morals, this is a serious matter. Fortunately it is not, but it may be a powerful agency for the deterioration of morality, if not with the clean-minded, at least with the thousands who are not.

Prisoners form a class of persons whose spiritual condition has hardly been seriously thought of beyond the usual routine services. Since permission was given for missions to be held amongst them, the Church Army has been doing excellent service in this direction. Perhaps there is no more useful work that any missioner can set his heart upon than seeking to reclaim these children of crime. Many of them will be peculiarly open to religious conviction during the enforced confinement and discipline. Living words spoken in a spirit of love under the Divine blessing will find a home in sensitive hearts, and many will be savingly impressed.

"Godliness with contentment is great gain." There is a godliness which is far from contentment, "being troubled about many things;" and it is a godliness peculiarly characteristic of the present day. In many churches, and in many homes, the old simplicity is gone, and the "one thing needful" is submerged under a heap of worrying details—things that do not really matter, but which are elevated into a place of exaggerated importance. It should never be forgotten that where godliness is there are all the essentials of contentment. If our lives are spent in right relations with God, we can afford to leave alone many things that now try and afflict us. It would be great gain if those who make themselves miserable about the mere externalities of religion were to aim at the balance of spirit which "stays itself" upon the few great realities and leaves the rest to come and go as God wills.

This principle is as true in the region of belief as in the sphere of feeling and action. What modern thinkers and modern preachers lack more than anything else is centrality. They are too anxious to defend the vast circumference of truth instead of fortifying themselves at its centre. The men who have exercised great and abiding influence in the world are men possessed by a few masterful ideas, who have given themselves to persuading the world of the essential importance of these ideas. There is a holy of holies in the spiritual temple, and so long as this is inviolate in our lives and in our teaching, the outer courts of our thinking are safe from contamination. First to attain this centre, and then to sally forth from it to possess the whole circle of life, is the secret of persuasiveness and power in preaching.

Holiness and Righteousness.

THESE stand to one another in the relation of cause and effect. Holiness is invisible, righteousness is visible. Holiness is the inside of righteousness; righteousness is the outside of holiness. Holiness is a quantity unascertained and unascertainable except by its manifestation in righteousness. We are not good judges of our own holiness, but others are very good judges of our righteousness. Might not Holiness Conventions be profitably supplemented by Righteousness Conventions, in which our conceptions of holiness might be tested by one another's conceptions of righteousness?

Are there not questions of righteousness which Christian men might usefully discuss? Right is right and wrong is wrong. But education, and relationships, and associations, and vested interests, and selfishness, and an artificial conscience, and other causes, tend to warp our judgment and lead us to decisions which may seem for our present advantage, but may prove to our eternal loss.

In this industrial age would it not be appropriate to consider, before an open Bible, the mutual obligations and responsibilities of employer and employed? Political economy notwithstanding, does not the righteous Lord who loveth righteousness recognise a living wage? Trade-unions notwithstanding, does He not require an honest day's work for a fair day's wage?

In this commercial age might not some advance be made towards Scriptural conceptions and definitions of commercial morality? Might not something be wisely said to proprietors and assistants in shops and stores, to promote considerateness on the one hand and faithfulness on the other? It is said that Committees have no souls, that Boards have no bowels of mercy. Might not a Convention for raising the Christian Life insist that individual responsibility to God and man is not lessened by corporate action? These are but a few points of a very large and important subject.

All Power given to Christ.

By Rev. J. CULROSS, D.D.

"ALL authority hath been given unto Me in heaven and on earth; go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." These are imperial words. The humiliation of Jesus is now at an end. He is just about to resume the glory which belonged to Him in eternity, and of which He had emptied Himself to be the Redeemer of man.

They declare his absolute authority. The sphere in which his authority holds is the widest conceivable—heaven and earth. All creatures then, both men and angels, principalities and powers, are placed under Him. "When it is said that all things are put under Him, it is manifest that He is excepted who placed all things under Him." Just as Pharaoh placed Joseph (to use a parable) over all the land of Egypt, and entrusted the whole government of the country into his hands, in like manner all authority throughout the universe is entrusted into the hands of Jesus Christ.

If one might say so, this is an act of the Father's moral confidence in the Son; and is the foundation of what all Christian men hold as a prime article in their creed, that Jesus Christ is the sole Lord of the human conscience. His Word settles all moral and religious questions for us; He is the sole Lawgiver of the Christian Church. The Church has no form of legislation. In what is called The Sermon on the Mount, which is really the legislation of the Kingdom of Heaven, He practically asserts this authority from the first, "I say unto you." This is the imperial tone which all the subjects of the Kingdom recognise. The scribe collected and arranged opinions, balanced probabilities, set forth and criticised the judgment of the ancients. Jesus spoke "not as the scribes," but "as one having authority," whose word was decisive.

This strain of authoritativeness runs throughout his ministry. He does not buttress his decisions by appeals to antiquity or to the general consensus of men; but from the first, and all through, He decides all controversies as to truth and duty by the formula, "I say unto you." There is no appeal from his word.

June.

Come, fling thy roses down, O June,
The year is half-way through;
We work, we toil, we hasten on,
Its rapid flight we rue.
So, laden with the blooms of wheat,
The meadow-sweet thy crown,
Now at our worn and weary feet,
Come, fling thy roses down.

We know "to labour is to pray,"
That honest toil is best;
That after it we feel the more
The blessedness of rest.
Yet we could ill maintain the heat
And long-delayed repose
If unto each, divinely sent,
There came no heavenly rose.

So, fling thy roses down, O June,
Amid the toil and heat
We'll press them to our burning brow
And breathe their fragrance sweet;
And thus refreshed, they shall again
Our ardent souls inspire,
To reach the land of Sharon's Rose
Where service will not tire.

Caroline Tickner.

Abram and Lot.

LOT went with Abram. No personal call, no strong faith, no committal of each step to God, but just accompanying one who stood to him in the place of father. Of how many so-called followers of Christ might it be said, "He or she went with father, mother, or beloved friend," and as long as the personal influence was there, the result was at any rate to be a "companion of them that fear the Lord." But the testing time must come, when every earthly prop is removed, and God will show whether in very truth He has the rule of the life and the love of the heart.

Every stage in Abram's journeys through the land was marked by the erection of an altar. Worship and communion with God marked each resting-place. Is such a mark left behind wherever God's servants tarry? Has your sojourn in each home, be it long or short, been marked by a growing knowledge of God and conformity to Christ, by interceding for souls, by telling of the great salvation?

When warned of coming judgment, Lot tried to warn his family; but his testimony was worthless, for his life had not backed it up. What a contrast between the lonely man of faith pleading for souls, and receiving the answer, and the man who walked by sight, whose warnings fell on heedless ears!

"Abraham believed God. . . . and he was called the Friend of God." Christ came "of the seed of Abraham, according to the flesh;" and the fulness of the promise, "in Thee shall all nations of the earth be blessed," is yet to be made manifest.

Lot's story ends in shame and disgrace, and his descendants were Israel's enemies in after days. How many parents make the excuse for not living wholly for God: "We must think of the children; they must not be peculiar, they must have advantages like others, and be able to compete with others. For our children's sake we must be moderate." Well, friends, Lot chose by sight, with a view to wealth and comfort, no doubt as much or more for his family than for himself; he left his children and possibly his children's children to be destroyed in Sodom's overthrow, and those whom he brought away were steeped in Sodom's sins.

Abraham yielded his dearest at God's command, in unquestioning faith, and received him again from God's hand as one alive from the dead, to be in his turn the channel of God's blessed will, to be in his turn a stranger and pilgrim in the land of promise, and to hold communion with the God of his father Abraham.

Janet Clark.

A Bible Study.

Provision.
Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. John i. 29

Substitution.
Who his own Self bare our sins in his own body on the tree. 1 Peter ii. 24

Appropriation.
I am crucified with Christ. Gal. ii. 20

Separation.
But God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, whereby the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world. Gal. vi. 14

Identification.
I bear (branded) in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.

G. H.

The Tuberculosis Conference, which concluded its deliberations in Berlin last week, has declared fallacious the time-honoured theory that consumption is hereditary. It is well to know that under proper conditions the ravages of this dire disease may be stayed, but by far the most important result of the Conference is the pronouncement for prevention. It is a Christian thing to establish sanatoria in which the sick may be helped; but after all it will be more Christian to inaugurate such sanitary conditions as will remove the cause.

God's Infinitude.

WE limit God, and measure his ability by our capacity. God is in nothing but what is infinite in its greatness, unfathomable in its depth, unreachable in its height.

Men say, "But does He not deign to dwell in the lowliest heart, does He not condescend to enter into the smallest details of our life?" Yes, but there is nothing any longer small when God comes into it. The majesty of his greatness, the infinitude of his power, the lavish outpouring of his mercies, widens and deepens the narrowest and meanest human soul.

He touches the callous heart, and it is melted; He breathes into the bitter spirit, and it is mellowed; He enters where there is discord, and makes exquisite melody; He comes where there reigns strife, and behold! a great calm. When the soul is torn with sweeping tempests, He heals it with the balm of infinite peace. He communes with the weak, and they are weak no more.

There are many plans, schemes, reforms in the world, for the elevating and ennobling of the human race; but they fail to reach the soul. Then we prove the infinite power of God. He begins where human agency leaves off; and breathes again into his very being, and man is once more a living, healthy soul; so that men say, "Surely God is in this place."

We grope for God in an infinitesimal space; we stretch out our hands, and lo! they strike against the walls of our own littleness. We cry, and our cry is so feeble that faithlessness stifles us in the very act. So we might all pray, "Lord, enlarge our capacity to understand; make greater our perception that we may perceive; give us faith that we may claim a portion of thy infinitude." F. R.

Our Trust.

Be true to the trust that was left you,
Ye sons of the sainted dead
Who, protesting for Christian freedom,
To the stake and the block were led—
Protesting against the idols
That Pagan Rome obeyed—
Transformed by Christian trappings—
In modern masquerade.

O, ye Protestants of England,
Beware of that golden bowl,
In the hands of the gay enchantress,
To stupefy the soul.
Beware of the drifting—drifting
On the silent current's flow—
To the vortex where your fathers
Struggled centuries ago.

The enemy's plot is subtle;
Its mazes who can trace?
While the Jesuit in the churches
Is mining at their base.
O, throw the Bible search-light
On this Ritualistic shame,
And unveil the Roman image,
With the mystic-numbered name.

There's a sound in the heart of the nation—
A spring-tide crosses the bar;
'Tis an Israel 'gainst an Amalek,
Declaring perpetual war.
Yes, war to the old invader
Who would spoil your land again!
And death to the hoary tyrant
Who would soul and body chain!
Either you or he must conquer;
Then be valiant while you may:
Take the good sword of the Spirit,
And the wily Agag slay.

So be faithful as your fathers;
Yet not for this age alone,
Not only for your children
And posterity unknown;—
But for Him, your Lord and Master,
And his kingdom yet to be,
For the cause for which he suffered—
To make the whole world free.

Donegal. J. K.

China for Christ.

By Rev. J. SADLER, L.M.S., Amoy.

"I LOOK upon the three or four hundred millions of redeemed souls there, and cannot consider the treatment of them a light matter."

"Why is it not remembered that they are the most important people in the Far East?"

"There is evidence that the Spirit of God is moving in them, not only as to individual converts dotted here and there, but as to a pervading influence of desire for enlightenment."

"Let the Emperor's programme be carried out, and the change effected will be the most wonderful in the Christian era."

"Persistent report said, 'The Emperor is a Christian in all but the name.'"

"The Church of God in China will prove to be the pioneer in all that is good."

"Tell us of the spiritual awakenings in the country."

Such expressions as the above show the attempt on the part of the earnest Christians to appreciate in China. It is affirmed that to-day, in China, not to be a reader of Western books, is to be antiquated. It is solemnly urged that far greater attention should be paid to the preparation of literature, e.g., "Christianity should be powerfully set forth in its historical, social, industrial, political, and moral aspects, also as to its great doctrines."

THE WONDROUS WORKS OF GOD

In the L.M.S. Report it is stated: "The condition of China is intensely interesting, but critical. Change is in the air. The whole country seems tremulous with hidden movement."

In England many minds are astir with the question, Can anything be done in the present crisis, so that Christians may stand by China in her trials? At least, might not a strong statement of goodwill be prepared by the Christian public, apart from taking sides as to political matters? All the forces of Christianity work on quietly in the spirit of the old assurance, "The Lord shall fight for you." The Government of China is bad, corruption and bribery are alarming, many political difficulties are great; but our opportunities for Christian service and it is all-important to take advantage of them while we may. Every day and month is valuable, when ominous words are uttered as to what may take place in the near future.

ARE VERY WONDERFUL,

There is special reason why the people of God should give themselves to prayer in the spirit of unquestioning and unwavering trust:

1. That people at home may have a real conception of the state of things in China, and may realise their duty in view of the great opportunities now offered.

2. That China may not be divided, seeing that "for mission work under Chinese rule (improved as we hope to see it) there is more hope than under French or Russian rule. In any case it is better that China should develop under her own rulers than be trained into civilisation by foreigners."

3. That even worldly rulers in both East and West may perceive that except in its acceptance of Christianity. "The spread of Christianity is the hope for China in every way. We should look for the peaceful development of reform under pretty much present conditions. The behaviour of the Emperor and reform party last year shows what may come sooner than we anticipate. And I suppose we all believe that the check put on it by the Empress-Dowager is not fatal to the cause."

THERE IS NO HOPE FOR CHINA

4. That a due regard may be had to the ancient and venerable empire, "seeing that the Chinese are not a barbarous nation of children that need to be taken in hand and put under tutors and governors like African savages. In fact, any government taking in hand the control of a large part of China would not have an enviable work. The Japanese have tried it with Formosa, and possibly they would not be very sorry to be well out of it."

5. That all who have to do with China may see

THE NEED OF TIME AND PATIENCE.

"The country cannot become a great, prosperous, civilised country in a year or two. It will take time. Some think Japan got her prosperity too quickly—too much as an accretion from without instead of a growth from within."

6. That the "Powers may be willing to help China by acting in a Christian way towards it, and encouraging healthful development, abolishing the opium traffic and all that makes China suspicious of foreign ways."

Nothing is of more importance just now than to remember to pray "for kings and all in authority." It is their business to direct affairs of government. Ordinary people have not the power. Yet it may be possible quietly to influence rulers; and, best of all, prayer can "move the Hand that moves the world."

To the Unawakened.

By Dr. JAMES W. ALEXANDER.

UNAWAKENED! Alas, O sinner! unless thou be awakened, thou must perish!

Not long ago, a house containing many inmates was burned down at night. Several persons perished in the flames. Would you know the reason? They were awakened too late. So the finally impenitent sinner will awake—but too late! Those are dreadful words, even in some earthly conjectures. Too late! Too late! You stand by the brink of a deep and rapid river, and see a youth fall into its waters. He sinks, struggling, and then rises. Boats put out; gallant fellows pull to his rescue; they seize his tangled hair as he rises once more, and bear his drenched and flaccid body to the bank. It is too late! The breath of life has fled. So in many conceivable instances of earthly peril, in some of which the perishing creature, a suicide for example, awakes to the direful truth of his catastrophe—but awakes too late! Sinner, you will assuredly awake, either in time or in eternity.

Sooner or later, a man's sins find him out (Num. xxxii. 23). Perhaps in temporal disgrace and retribution. Perhaps at the hour of death. Beyond all peradventure at the bar of God. The rich man was not awakened in his purple and fine linen. In his lifetime he received his good things; but "in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments" (Luke xvi. 23). He was then fully awake. Can you endure the thought of being aroused by your sins, where no pardons are vouchsafed?

> There are no acts of pardons past
> In the cold grave to which we haste;
> But darkness, death, and long despair
> Reign in eternal silence there.

"It is high time to awake out of sleep" (Rom. xiii. 11). These words are as applicable to this case as to that intended by the Apostle. Oh, for a trumpet-blast loud enough to startle the careless reader of these words into a salutary fear of death, judgment, and eternal wrath! You walk on the brink of a precipice, and God's holiness, justice, and truth are all against you. Yet it is your offended Judge who continues to pursue you with the cry, "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation" (2 Cor. vi. 2). The time is auspicious. It is God's time. "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts" (Ps. xcv. 7, 8). To-morrow has no promises. To-morrow you may be in eternity. Death has surprised thousands at the very time when they were procrastinating repentance. The foolish virgins were not awakened till they heard the cry, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh!" The voice of the archangel and the trump of God will wake every sleeper, for "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation" (John v. 28, 29). Is it not astonishing that you can hear such things from the lips of Him who so loved the world as to die for it, and that you should still remain unmoved?

Be convinced, careless reader, that there is nothing so unreasonable as to remain unawakened, when called by Almighty God. Awakening truths come near on every side, sounding from heaven, earth, and hell. There are cases in which fear is unreasonable, but this is not one of them. No man can rationally despise "the wrath of the Lamb." He who dies in his sins, dies in rejection of the only sacrifice for sin. The dread of so dying ought to take hold of your heart while you read. Those terrible denunciations against sinners, from which they turn away, lest conscience should be shaken from its slumber, proceed not from the mouth of a harsh, malignant being, but from the meek and lowly Jesus, who weeps over lost souls. It ought to prove a pungent consideration that of all the expressions which Scripture contains concerning everlasting woe, the most fearful are those which fell from the gentle lips of Jesus. A little searching of the sacred volume will shew this to be true. The Redeemer spake these threatenings in love, and the thought of this should break the dream of indolent security. Christ's terrors are meant to alarm you out of your sins and your false confidence, and so to make way for his tender mercies. But his mercies are exhibited to the unreconciled only in the present life; and your tenure of human existence, fellow-sinner, is very slight and precarious.

Words to Workers and Others.

CONTROVERSY.

I SEE the unprofitableness of controversy in the case of Job and his friends; for, if God had not interposed, and they had lived to this day, they would still be continuing the dispute.

John Newton.

THE POINT OF SELF-DENIAL.

When our Lord says "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself," he calls us not to mortifications or austerities calculated only to inflict suffering on ourselves, but He calls us, and He calls us "as one having authority," to renounce all those selfish indulgences, and selfish humours, and that pursuit of selfish interest, which interfere with the zealous and extensive exertions for the comfort and good of others, to which He attaches so important a place as a test of our affection to Him, and our devotedness to his service. In such a course, He has left us a bright example, and He calls us to follow his steps. Dr. John Abercrombie.

THOUGHTS ON PREACHING.

The choice of materials for the pulpit should be regulated in part by the principle that the preaching of experiences should preponderate heavily over the preaching of beliefs. Fidelity to the preacher's own mental history should be the forerunner and the model of his fidelity to hearers. We know very little beyond that which we know by heart. The preaching of Wesley and Whitefield is monumental in history for the grandeur of its successes. Yet it was remarkable for the paucity of its ideas. A few central truths of the New Testament were the staple of Wesley's forty thousand sermons. But these were impregnated with the Christian personality of the man. They were full of what Whitefield called "soul-life." For that element of soul-life the early Methodist pulpit has had no superior since the apostolic age. Hence came its romantic conquests. Austin Phelps.

THE GREAT END OF THE MINISTRY.

How many subjects and practices are perpetually coming up, within the circle of religion itself, which, though some of them are necessary and important, and others lawful, are still, if they are not watched, likely to lead off the minds both of preachers and hearers from the great work of conversion. Popular education, papal aggression, with the controversy which it had brought with it; tea meetings, so numerous and not always so seriously conducted as they should be; public meetings of all kinds—these matters and others, all good in themselves, too often give occasion to many persons to content themselves with a share in religious business instead of seeking after religion in reality, and have a tendency, without great care, to produce a species of religious dissipation, and to throw an obstacle in the way of conversion. The more we multiply subjects and occasions for that religious activity which may be carried on by unconverted persons, the more we increase the danger of their being satisfied with this without being savingly converted to God. John Angell James.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 18. 1 Sam. ii.

THE point of this chapter is the contrast between the influence of a strong and wise training, and that of a weak and indulgent one. Hannah and her child stand out in beautiful relief against the sin of Eli's sons, resulting as it did from the weakness of Eli.

Hannah's song lives through this book, inspiring that of Mary, and supplying expressions which reappear in several of the Psalms. The exulting heart; the horn exalted in the manner in which Oriental women raised the silver horn upon their forehead some few inches as the sign of motherhood; the enlarged and rejoicing mouth; the ascription of all praise to God as the incomparable rock; the consciousness that the marvellous alteration in experience is due to the interposition of the eternal Lord; the generalisation for all coming time that what He had done for one He will do for similarly minded; the comparison between the mortal strength by which no man can prevail, and the strength which he gives unto his king —these are thoughts that burn as brilliantly to-day as in their first utterance.

The sins of Eli's sons. They were not only strangers to the power of religion in the heart, but they had gone too great lengths of open profligacy. Unsatisfied with the breast and shoulder, they rapaciously demanded a part of the remainder, catching it up with the flesh-hook from the seething pot. Thus men came to abhor the offering of the Lord. It is an awful thing when the sin of a professing Christian makes worldly men hate religion. It will go very hard with such at last. Christ says it would have been better for a mill-stone to have been hanged around their neck; and the great Judge will surely take into account the reason of the alienation of the down-trodden and priest-ridden people.

Note the repeated allusion to the young child Samuel (18, 21, 26).

MONDAY, June 19. 1 Sam. iii.

The chapter of the Vision—dear to children, which has been woven into the texture of myriads of young spirits, is not less dear to us when the long track of years lies between us and our first introduction to the child Samuel. To read these words again makes us think of the sweet voice that first read them, of the home of early childhood, and of the rapt wonder with which we listened at night, whether God would speak to us also.

The dying lamp in the Tabernacle before the breaking eastern dawn, the silence and the awe of the Holy place, were meet conditions for the opened soul and attentive ear of the child. The little couch on which he lay, or perhaps the rug strewn on the ground, was not too lowly for the eternal God to visit. Stooping from his eternal heaven, He came and stood and called. Not angry because the child did not understand; not impatient of the delay; not ceasing to speak because his voice was not understood, since the heart was eager to know and do his will. With all of us there is ignorance and mistake. We run hither and thither, not knowing the Lord's wishes. But finally the perturbed heart comes to its rest. We lie still with throbbing heart and alert sense until the double knock sounds on the door of our heart, and from all its depths we answer, "Speak, for thy servant heareth."

It was a heavy burden that the young boy had to carry. And when Eli had drawn the painful secret from the child, the burden could hardly have been less, though shared between them. Samuel must have felt as though he were implicated in the sorrows that were predicted for the old man whom he had come to love. All his life must have been shadowed and influenced by what he had heard, and even more so by the noble, childlike submission which said, "It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth Him good."

TUESDAY, June 20. 1 Sam. iv.

See how people whose moral and national life has decayed flee, whenever disaster befalls them, to superstition and ceremonial observances. The heart of Israel was seriously affected. Her priests were grossly immoral and rapacious; her people lacked the faith and purity of which the earlier stages of their history gave many proofs; and in this condition of moral degeneracy it is not a wonder that they fell an easy prey to their enemies, the Philistines. It was then that, in the hour of panic-stricken defeat, they thought of the Ark of the Covenant as a kind of fetish, the outward embodiment of the presence and help of God.

We are exposed to this danger in our individual conflict with sin. God's delivering, saving, might is only granted to those whose heart is perfect towards Him, whose one desire is to know and do his will. When these are present, He shows Himself strong and mighty in delivering the soul from its inveterate foes. But when we refuse to be consecrated in our choice and will, when we are harbouring forbidden evils in our life, when we are disobedient to the heavenly vision—then no outward symbol would avail to give us victory. Men have sometimes thought that if they could always live in a church, surrounded by the most sacred emblems, they would be kept from sin. It is a vain delusion. The Ark, as such, apart from repentance and faith, can never save us.

Let it never be forgotten that the safety of a nation does not depend upon elaborate arrangements of outward religious observance, but upon the morality, virtue, and integrity of the individuals that compose it.

WEDNESDAY, June 21. 1 Sam. v.

The fall of Dagon before the Ark of God has a sublime significance. In the evening, as the priests left its temple, the hideous image was erect upon its pedestal. But now, in the morning light, behold it upon its face in mute prostration and worship. That this was no coincidence was proved when, on the following morning, it had not only fallen again, but become mutilated, the head and arm severed from the trunk. So shall it be with all the idols of the heathen. They shall be "utterly abolished," and the demons of whom they are the grotesque representations will be cast with Satan, whom they obey, into the bottomless pit.

Already full many of the idols of the heathen have been broken in pieces before the preaching of the Gospel, as their votaries have "cast them to the moles and bats." Where are now the effigies of Jupiter and Mars, of Venus and Athena, of Baal and Astarte? Ask the ruins of Athens, the buried cities of Pompeii, the sands of the desert that lie thick on the débris of ancient cities; and, as it has been, so it must be.

The Ark of God, which is blessing to his people, brings terror and anguish to his foes. To these, a savour of life; to those, of death. To Israel, shouts of victory; to Philistia, wails of suffering. God is never, never neutral. He either attracts or repels. His presence is either a blessing or a curse. The dying thief passes from the cross to Paradise; Judas goes to "his own place." And even when the sin of his people might appear to limit his power and to tarnish his majesty, God works for his own Name's sake, which had been profaned among the heathen.

THURSDAY, June 22. 1 Sam. vi.

Every endeavour was made to discover whether the misfortunes of the past month, which had befallen Philistia, were due to natural or supernatural causes; therefore the votive offerings were placed in the new cart to which untrained heifers were yoked, whose young were kept at home. It was most unnatural for them to take the high road to Beth-Shemesh. Their lowing proved the strength of their natural instinct, but an irresistible impulse bore them forward. However strong the attraction of Philistia, that to Canaan was stronger.

What an illustration is here of the effect of God's work on the soul! Holy men wrote the Scriptures, borne along by the Spirit, in directions that were wholly unfamiliar to them. The missionary who leaves wife and child behind him, that he may carry the Gospel to the heathen, is borne along by a similar impulse. The youth whose nature clings to the delights of home and friendship, of success and renown, but devotes himself to arduous endeavour to raise the fallen and to make some wretched slum more like the City of God, is conscious of an identical impulse. "The lowing" is natural to us. Our weak heart clings. We think we cannot live without the love that we are bound to forsake. A dim suspicion falls upon us that we shall be sacrificed as whole burnt offerings at the end, as these poor kine were; but still we go.

In our inner life we are conscious of a similar antagonism. Flesh and sense low for satisfaction, but God's Spirit enables us to do what otherwise we could not.

FRIDAY, June 23. 1 Sam. vii.

This chapter is the necessary correlative of the previous ones. In those, we saw that Israel met the Philistines, by an appeal to the presence of the Ark as a kind of fetish, but with no attempt at that moral reformation which is the first condition of God's saving help. It is to be hoped that all have deeply pondered the lesson, and acknowledged the uselessness of confiding in the symbols or rites of religion whilst the heart is gangrened. Here we see God's method of securing victory, which begins with those significant appeals that Samuel addressed to the nation.

Samuel said: "Put away the strange gods, direct your hearts unto the Lord, and serve Him only, then He will deliver you." In addition to this, the outpoured water was significant of the emptying out of evil, and the pouring forth of supplication and prayer. Coupled with these, the Israelites appealed to Samuel for his ceaseless intercession, and Samuel offered a sacrifice unto the Lord. Then it was that the Philistines were smitten before Israel.

Do these words fall beneath the notice of any of God's children who are incessantly overcome by the Philistines? Perpetually they go out to fight, to be worsted in this great conflict. Let these be assured that the secret of their failure lies in some lack in obedience or consecration. There is some traitor in the soul that must be surrendered, some secret source of failure that drains away God's ready help. You must pour forth the water, my friend, and surrender everything to God; so only will He thunder from heaven and ride in the swift chariot of his salvation.

SATURDAY, June 24. 1 Sam. viii.

Dissatisfaction had been growing in Israel for some time. Disunion had rent the tribes, and the evils which had broken out in Samuel's house greatly aggravated the position. These causes combined to lead the people to ask for a king. And since it seemed impossible for them to realise the theocracy—the Divine Kingship — it seemed best that their wish should be granted. There is no doubt, however, that the Divine permission was given because of their persistent entreaty, and not because it was the best. So often does God give us our heart's desire as the best way of teaching us that it should not be the law of our life, since its issue is always sorrow and disaster.

Note the emphasis laid on Samuel's prayers In the previous chapter the people had said unto him, "Cease not to cry unto the Lord for us;" and He cried and was answered. And now we see him going to and fro between the people and God as true mediator and intercessor. When the assemblage of elders besieges him with the demand for a king, he prays, and in fellowship with God receives the answer to hearken. And when afterwards his words had fallen powerless before the fixed resolve of the people, he heard all their words and rehearsed them in the ears of the Lord. Well does the Psalmist describe him amongst them that called upon God's name. A good and holy man who influenced the life of his people from the pivot of intercessory prayer. How much easier it is to declaim patriotic speeches before man than, in the spirit of true patriotism, to cry to the Lord who is in secret!

Soul-Winning.

A SERIES of stirring addresses on Soul-Winning were delivered last week by Mr. Leonard Weaver at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, and attracted large audiences.

Mr. Weaver, starting from the point that a passion for souls is a necessary qualification for success in evangelistic work, pleaded, in vigorous terms, that that passion must exercise an all-mastering sway. In passions for earthly things, men have no reserves. The outward-bound miner, stricken by the gold fever, and crazy to get at the precious metal, encounters undauntedly the frosts and labours of Klondike. The pleasure lover, in his butterfly pursuit of enjoyment, and the man of ambition seeking fame in the arena of politics or even at the cannon's mouth, are completely given over to their consuming desires. So, too, the followers of Christ must be inspired and similarly keen, for winning souls, and view with agony the present degradation of man into a habitation of devils.

SWAYED BY A PASSION

When we think of the Father's love, when we catch something of the spirit of divine compassion for poor sinners that burned in the words and deeds of Christ, when we realise the eternal destinies for weal or woe of our fellow men, then we shall surely awake to the fact that God has chosen to place the work of rescue largely in our hands, so planning that by "the foolishness of preaching" men shall be convicted of sin and reconciled to God.

City life tends, Mr. Weaver suggested, to make us so familiar with sin that we are apt to come to regard it with comparative unconcern, ceasing to be troubled very much by the careless neglect or open defiance of religion which exists on every hand. We need to pray that we may retain a tender heart and sensitive conscience, making it manifest that we consider the grandest passion that can occupy our being to be that for soul-winning.

Paul had this passion. He cared not for scourgings or stonings, but was instant in season and out of season, in toiling for souls; and God gave him the desire of his heart, as He invariably does when we come to this point, that we must at all costs win souls. John Bunyan had it. "I could not be satisfied," he wrote, "unless I saw fruit to my work appear." Doddridge cried: "I long for the conversion of souls more sensibly than for anything else beside. Methinks I could not only labour, but die for it with pleasure." It was said of Murray McCheyne that whilst he was preaching it appeared that he was almost dying to have men converted. Matthew Henry said: "I consider it greater happiness to Christ than to possess mountains of gold and silver, and to gain souls I am ready to beg my bread from door-to door."

TO GAIN ONE SOUL

Passing to the consideration of hindrances to soul-winning, Mr. Weaver remarked on some common prejudices against revival work. Any departure from the beaten track of respectable worship is too frequently regarded as objectionable. A minister had deprecated the holding of an evangelistic service in his church, as the new carpet, which some lady members had purchased, would probably be soiled by the inrush of a crowd of common people. Not only Ritualism, but "Rut"-ualism is to be avoided.

As to methods of dealing with the people, Mr. Weaver regretted the existence of so much preaching of a colourless and ineffective character. It may attain a degree of popularity, since it is the ordinary state of things, or to offend the cold-hearted professor or the unrepentant sinner; but it means spiritual death to the church. The denunciations by the prophets of those who spoke smooth things, merely to please the majority, demonstrate the displeasure with which God regards those who "daub with untempered mortar." The conventionality which insists on things being repeatedly done according to stereotyped rule, the coldness which is prompt to extinguish anything like vigorous expression of the Gospel message, and the hollowness which works up a false religious enthusiasm from within instead of seeking and obtaining it from above, were all briefly dwelt upon by the speaker, who went on with deep feeling to plead for more prayer and Bible study as an equipment for the Lord's work.

NOT CALCULATED TO DISTURB

Advocating simplicity and directness in Gospel services, and a deeper personal knowledge of divine things, Mr. Weaver urged that preachers everywhere should aim for immediate results. So great is the power of conventionality, so far have Christians, as a whole, travelled from simple soul-winning methods, that in many services a suggestion as to inviting penitents to come forward would be regarded as out of place. Moreover, there should be no limitation of God's willingness and power to save. A doubt as to whether a fish is the right one to catch leads to indecision and feebleness of action on the part of the fisher. It is the privilege and duty of the Lord's people to go forth in the strength of the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," and to declare with the fervour of intense conviction the unsearchable riches of Christ.

"Christian Science."

DEAR SIR,—I recently attended a great meeting in Queen's Hall, Langham Place, to hear a lecture by a Mr. Miller, a Canadian Q.C. Lord Dunmore was in the chair, and the hall was three-parts full. Women in brilliant attire were present in the proportion of about forty to one man. As this was a public exposition of the doctrine, I wanted to hear what "Christian Scientists" had to say for themselves, especially as two patients of mine, very godly women, have taken up with this great error (as I consider it), so masking the truth, yet so near it as to deceive, if possible, the very elect, and who have repeatedly urged me to take it up as a method of healing. These Christian Scientists look upon Mrs. Eddy's book as only slightly removed in inspiration from the Bible, if at all so. The hymns they use in their service are not at all to the praise of our Lord Jesus Christ; they speak of the "supposed" death of Christ, and preach of the reforming power of Christ's life instead of the saving power of his death.

Copies of The Christian Science Sentinel were distributed to us on our entrance, from which I transcribe the following:—

Religion consists not in believing something about God, or thinking about God, but in trying to live the Divine life. Religion is simply the art of living. All Christian Scientists deeply recognise the oneness of Jesus—that He stands alone in word and deed, the visible Discoverer, Founder, Demonstrator, and great Teacher of Christianity, whose sandals none may unloose. Christian Scientists, in some sense at least, are universalists. They are believers in universal salvation. Mary Baker G. Eddy is accused of being as bad as, or worse than, the chief priests thought Jesus was.

This Church of Christ, Scientist . . . has a message of love, etc., to all who love good—God. . . . It says, not by vicarious atonement are men saved, but by working out their own salvation in the way that Jesus, our great Way-shower, taught and exemplified (!)

Our beloved leader, Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, the discoverer and founder of Christian Science, who . . . has brought to this age the revelation and recognition of the divine power and presence—Immanuel—God—Good, with us now and here . . . the Divine, all-harmonious Principle of Man and the Universe—inseparable from its ideals. We are safe in having the fortune to unveil more and more the immeasurable glory of her mission, her life, and her work. God did not make . . . any drugs. Drugs are of human invention.

I append a few very rough notes taken at the meeting.

God made man after his image: as God is a Spirit, so is man, and what we call body is only the evidence of our senses, which often mislead. Mrs. Eddy demonstrated the "allness" of God. If God did not make evil, He permits it, and so there is another power in the world than God. Because God tolerates evil, it must be right to do so. God, finding evil, proposed to use it in his scheme of the universe. If God could create an angel of light who could turn into a devil, the devil must have been there, and God cannot carry out his plan of the world without the devil, and so the devil becomes the keystone in the arch of Christianity. If the devil died, God would have to create another devil. So evil is not included in the all things.

The lecturer then gave three cases of healing by Christian Science, attributing the maladies to the impress of mortal mind.

As to the doctrine of the Trinity and the reality of the devil, the human mind is much more inclined to believe in evil than in good. Christian Science reconciles reason and religion. Health and holiness are realities. Christian Science cures even organic diseases by the power and presence of good, which, acting on mortal mind, dispels the idea of sickness. Christian Science heals the body by the destruction of the thought that makes the body ill. The medicine of Christian Science is mind; that of doctors is matter. Doctors are against Christian Science because it spoils their practice. If clergymen and doctors would study Christian Science, the clergymen would find higher holiness and doctors higher therapeutics. Every disease has a mental cause, and so Christian Science heals. Jesus never asked if a case was acute or chronic. (The lecturer evidently forgot Mark ix. 21.)

Some object that Christian Science does not admit the atonement, but it is explained by the light of Christian Science. Prayer is not importunity, but "not my will, but thine be done." Prayer is a reaching out of thought; prayer is not an act of faith only. Jesus Christ says believers get benefit by believing; so does Christian Science. Jesus Christ shows men how to overcome death, not yield to it. Blood is the life, and Christ's blood, given for man, enables him to overcome sickness and death. Jesus said signs should follow those that believe. Why do Christians obey only in part? The disciples were commanded to heal the sick. Why is this to be limited only to the early ages?

Christian Science was discovered thirty years ago by Mrs. Eddy, and now there are over a million believers in it. The doctrine is spreading. The book, "Science and Healing," has reached its hundred and sixty-fifth edition of 4,000 copies each. In 1866 Mrs. Eddy discovered the science by which this miracle has been performed. If she had not done so, someone else would have had to. She has opened up the Scriptures, and brought to us the knowledge of eternal life.

Man was made in God's spiritual image; then suppose that God made man perfect, and then placed him within the influence of evil to test him. Evil is a kind of minister in reality; we know God by experience, and evil by negative.—Yours truly, M. D.

Hazelwood, Ryde.—The annual meeting of this Y.M.C.A. Holiday Home took place last week at Exeter Hall, and was well attended. Sir George Williams presided. A number of testimonies were borne by former visitors to the physical and spiritual advantage derived by them during their sojourn at Hazelwood.

Evangelical Continental Society. — The annual meeting was held on Thursday last in the Congregational Church, Clapton Park, under the presidency of Rev. W. J. Woods. The report, a résumé of which was read by the Secretary (Rev. George H. Giddins), was unanimously adopted, and interesting addresses were delivered by Pasteur S. Monnier, Secretary of the Home Mission of the Free Evangelical Churches of France; Mr. J. T. Holmes, and Mr. T. Edwards, of the Continental Mission of the Sunday School Union.

Prayer for Mental Sufferers. — A few Christian friends were led, in the summer of 1895, to take Sunday afternoon, at any hour convenient to each, for special intercession on behalf of mental sufferers, whether cared for privately or in asylums. No definite organisation has been found possible or desirable; but as the effort has afforded encouragement and stimulus to personal sympathy with, and quiet service here and there for, patients of various mental standing, it has seemed well to give some special notice of the hour of prayer. Cards of reminder, for distribution as opportunity offers, either generally or among asylum patients, may be had on application to the publishers, Messrs. Edward Hughes and Co., 12, Well Court, Bow Lane, London, E.C. Price, by post, 1½d.; or 1s. per doz., post free.

Protestant Outlook.

It being reported that the Dean of Westminster is proposing to place a large cross over the Communion Table in the Abbey, Captain Cobham, chairman of the Church Association, has addressed a letter to the Dean, appealing to him on several grounds not to allow such a symbol to be erected. The letter concludes :—

As the responsible custodian of that venerable fabric which is bound up with the history and the affections of the entire English people, I entreat you to abstain from action which is certain to be offensive to many, and can hardly be imagined to be of profit to any human being.

On Saturday last the Martyrs' Memorial at Canterbury was unveiled. Situate in the "Martyrs' Field," it consists of a shaft of grey Cornish granite, upon a square pedestal standing on a rock base, and the shaft is surmounted by a Canterbury cross. The pedestal contains on one side the following inscription :

"In memory of forty-one Kentish martyrs, who were burnt at the stake on this spot, A.D. 1555-1558. For themselves they earned the martyr's crown, and by their heroic fidelity they helped to secure for succeeding generations the priceless blessing of religious freedom. 'Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.'"

Among the speakers at the unveiling were Canon Mason, Lord George Hamilton, and Dean Farrar. The last named remarked :—

They had not raised this monument merely in honour of the martyrs themselves. They felt deep pity for them, and strong admiration ; but the martyrs faced death with perfect joy, and even when face to face with the roaring flames their countenances were often lit with the light of angels. They had gone to the stake for the very same truths which we this day were holding. . . .

The blood of the martyrs had been said to be the seed of the Church ; he hoped that monument would long remain in witness that they intended to hold firm to the faith of their fathers, and to banish for ever the day when an attempt could be made to put down honest thought, and to force on people the acceptance of things which they believed to be superstitious and anti-Christian.

Lord George Hamilton declared himself one of those who believed that the most glorious period in the history of the English Church was associated with the Reformation ; that in the struggle which then ensued there was a spiritual impulse given to the English people and a higher sense of national duty evolved, which resulted in enormous material prosperity, until now we are inheritors of the greatest Christian Empire the world had ever seen.

The formation of the Ladies' League for Church Reform brings to mind the great service rendered by women to the cause of Gospel simplicity in centuries gone by. The story is unfolded in general in histories and martyrologies, and more particularly in now and then a work on woman's place in religious effort. Here comes in "Ladies of the Reformation" (two volumes), by Rev. James Anderson, author of "The Ladies of the Covenant," and "Memorable Women of the Puritan Times," a work issued nearly forty-five years ago, but occasionally to be met with second-hand. A slighter treatment of the same deeply-interesting subject is found in "The Women of the Reformation," by Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer, the heroine of the American Civil War, published nearly fifteen years ago in New York. When the present conflict comes to be described by the historian, the exertions of our sisters in the faith will assuredly command attention.

A booklet now being circulated in Italy deals with "The Principal Errors of the Protestants." A friend sends us extracts, one of which is :—

The worship of the Madonna is characteristic of the true Church. All heretics abjure this worship and indulge in fearful blasphemies, such as asserting that the Blessed Virgin had other children after the birth of Jesus! But let us rejoice. Even amongst Protestants the worship of the Divine Virgin is being resumed. We know that when England apostatised from the true faith, the worship of Mary was necessarily abandoned. But now her statue has been officially erected in St. Paul's Cathedral in London, to the astonishment of the public. There may now be seen a splendid white marble statue of Our Lady, crowned with an aureole of glory, and holding the infant Jesus in her arms. Surely her worship must, ere long, bring the Protestants to the true Church.

Prof. Newell's Bible Course.

Lesson II.—Genesis iv.-xi. 9.

THE fourth chapter tells the awful story of Cain. The two seeds, that of the woman and that of the serpent (iii. 15), are apparent the moment the race of Adam is upon the stage. Adam exhibits his faith in the name he gives to his wife in iii. 20-21, in view of the revealed penalty of sin (ii. 17) ; and Eve hers, in the names she gives to her sons (iv. 1, 25). But the devil gets the first son of this race (1 John iii. 12) ; and the moment a true worshipper of God is brought into view, the enmity appears.

Note the contrast in these sons : Cain, the prominent son, likely spoiled; Abel, the unimportant shepherd-boy. Cain, the respectable religionist ; Abel, the obedient believer. Cain, the persecutor ; Abel, the martyr. Cain, the victor ; Abel, the vanquished. Cain, the founder of a brilliant and illustrious line ; Abel, cut off from the earth, and Seth, who takes his place, the humble founder of a Godly line. These things are for us. The earth has but these two lines, and by God's decree they cannot mingle. The wicked, in envy, fall to persecution. (Gal. iv. 29.)

WONDERFULLY FULL OF MEANING

The sixth chapter of Genesis is startling and black. The flood is coming. Wickedness has ripened. The terrible leaven of sin has worked in both lines of the race, till only one righteous family of eight persons (1 Peter iii. 20) is left on earth. Verses 11, 12 describe that age. The "sons of God" of verse 2 cannot mean the children of Seth, who had become as bad as the family of Cain. The Hebrew expression here translated "Sons of God" is used four times in the Old Testament, always referring to another class of beings than men. (See Job i. 6 ; ii. 1 ; xxxviii. 7 ; Dan. iii. 25.) And in the New Testament the name "son of God" is applied only to those born again (John i. 12), and thus directly created by God (2 Cor. v. 17), not humanly begotten.

God's final verdict in verse 13 is one of doom. The charge to Noah to build the ark follows. Chapter vii. describes the destructive deluge. It swept into eternity the iniquitous earth. Not stopping to look at the significant account of the origin of the waters of the deluge, we will simply note in the last verse of the chapter that the waters covered the earth for five long months—an unbounded ocean whose surface was nearly fifty feet above earth's highest mountain-top (verses 19 and 20), "and all flesh died that moved upon the earth."

The waters are assuaged in chapter viii. It was over a year before God called Noah forth, with the long-imprisoned denizens of the ark. With grateful heart he offered sacrifice to the gracious God, who had brought him through the judgment of the world unharmed.

GOD'S ANSWER COMES, that He will no more curse the ground for man's sake, for that from man's very youth his nature is evil had been proven abundantly from the age that had just closed.

Several momentous things are told in the next chapter. In verse 2, man is again given dominion over the creatures, but their attitude to him is to be no longer the loving submission of the age of innocence, but "The fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth." Then follows God's great covenant with every living creature on earth not to destroy the earth again by a flood. The rainbow is given as a token of this covenant, and the explanation of the joyous complacency we feel at the sight of the rainbow probably finds its origin in an instinctive understanding of its meaning.

There is one word unknown heretofore that marks the tenth chapter. It is the word "nations," verse 5 (twice), 20, 31, 32 (twice). Established government seems to have been unknown to the antediluvians. That was an age of freedom from all restraint except individual conscience. The flood-wreck resulted. God now establishes the State. Chapter ix. 6 is the basis of it, as before observed. (Cf. Rom. xiii. 2-4.) The descendants of Noah now divide into nations and kingdoms. Nimrod, the first autocrat and conqueror, stands forth (verses 8, 12). One can almost hear the marchings to and fro of the peoples in this chapter. The Bible is not primarily a history of the world, but of the people of God. The story of the race as a whole will soon be dropped, while the line of God's chosen will be carefully traced on.

The eleventh chapter shows the united families of men moving east till they find the marvellously fruitful plain of Shinar, between the Euphrates and Tigris rivers, the seat of empires for ages after, and chosen by Satan as the first centre of his opposition to the people and worship of God. We soon see men building away at the great tower that they say "shall reach unto heaven," to "make themselves a name," and to cement finally their political and social union. "They are intoxicated with their new power of ordered government," and, being all of one tongue, and their way to godless progress wholly unimpeded, they are ready to forget God utterly, when, by a sudden fiat from his throne, their speech is confounded. The rest of the chapter takes up the line of Shem, to lead us on to Abraham's story ; and will rightly come in the next lesson.

THE FIRST GREAT SPIRITUAL LESSON

that strikes us is man's utter inability to withstand temptation. If he failed in Eden he will fail anywhere Our race must have help—God's help.

The first direct reference to Christ in the Bible is the promise and prophecy of verse 15 of chapter iii. : "The seed of the woman (Christ, see Gal. iv. 4) shall bruise the serpent's head" (Satan's, Rev. xx. 2). And there are six remarkable types of Christ in this lesson. Compare the light of Gen. i. 3 with Christ's words in John xii. 36, 46 : "I am come a light into the world." (See also John i. 9 and 5.) Again, the skins of slain animals with which God clothed Adam and Eve after they had sinned, are the first pictures of Christ's being slain for us, and his righteousness put on us as a garment. Abel's sacrifice (Gen. iv. 4) looks right forward to Christ on the cross ; while the ark is a wonderful picture of the security of those in Christ, and their preservation through the hour of judgment. (See 1 Peter iii. 18-22, John v. 24.) Two men, Adam and Noah, also stand out as typical of the Son of God (1 Cor. xv. 22, Heb. xi. 7).

The human race is traced in these eleven chapters through of its history ; God is trying or testing the race in distinct ways through these different ages. 1. The age of innocence, from man's creation to his fall. 2. The age of freedom, from the fall to the flood, during which time God left man without direct restraint except his own conscience enlightened by the Holy Spirit (vi. 3), even human government not being yet inaugurated. 3. The postdiluvian age, from the flood to the judgment on the defiant builders at Babel. Until the eleventh chapter the whole race has been considered. It having twice failed and wandered utterly away from God, He now prepares to select and train a particular nation of his own, for purposes He will reveal directly.

THREE STAGES OR DISPENSATIONS

We are glad to be able to report that much interest is being shown in connection with these classes. The attendance at the Stratford class is about 1,200.

Professor Newell is giving a series of lectures on the Epistle to the Ephesians to young men at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C., on Saturday afternoons—3 o'clock—June 17 and 24, and July 1.

Oxford Letter.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Oxford Branch of the Christian Social Union is doing good work, by bringing before us in a temperate way the various aspects of the life of the working classes. Lead-poisoning was the subject debated on Tuesday, when Mr. Bertram Wilson gave an address. He showed that the young people suffered most, and these, for an average wage of 7s. a week, are willing to face the risks of fearful disease, loss of sight, and death itself in one of its most hideous forms. There was a strong feeling that earthenware manufacturers should be compelled to use a non-poisonous glaze, such as is now being introduced by several firms.

Some weighty words were spoken by the President of Trinity on Sunday week at a meeting of the Oxford Mission to Calcutta. Speaking of our duty to India, he said we had given India very much, but it became clearer every day that, though we had cased it in a framework of our civilisation and government, the actual life of the Indian people went on almost unchanged. We must do more than give the people civilisation. We must leave our mark on their inner life. This, of course, can only be done by the Gospel, and this aim justified the existence of the Mission. Mr. Whitehead, head of the Mission, and the Dean of Christchurch also spoke.

Dr. MacKennal presided at the thirteenth annual meeting of the trustees and subscribers of Mansfield College, held on Tuesday last week. It was made the occasion for presenting to Dr. Fairbairn his portrait as first Principal of Mansfield. Mr. Albert Spicer referred to Dr. Fairbairn's work, and said that Congregationalists were proud of the success that Mansfield men had won in the University, and of the help and stimulus he had given to their Church life. Dr. Fairbairn, in replying, spoke of the origin of Mansfield as an endeavour made to meet the supreme need of the pulpit, which called not for "priests," but for men who should be "veritable prophets of the Most High."

"One Thing."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

"YES, she is a charming girl—not a bit religious, you know," said the Doctor; "but I have heard you say, if a person lives straight, and attends church once a day on Sunday, that is enough."

"To me there is nothing wanting in her. I am more than satisfied, and in a week she will be my wife, Doctor."

Thus ended what had been a long conversation between the much-beloved medical man and his late assistant, who had taken a practice in an adjacent town.

"Religious, indeed. Think of questioning the goodness of such an one," said Rudolph Baurn, as he walked toward the house of his lover. More than ever assured that she was wanting in no grace or virtue, he decided never to speak of her to the man who imagined he had a responsibility regarding his patients' souls as well as bodies. Gertrude Lenthorpe possessed a bright, unselfish nature. She was accomplished and exceedingly beautiful.

It always seemed to her associates as though she was goodness personified, for none could point to a fault.

Her departure from the social circle was lamented by all, and her wedding dreaded on account of losing her.

But as she stood in bridal attire surrounded by those who loved her, more than one exclaimed, "She's just perfect.'

The parents took a fond farewell. Friends clustered round to say "good-bye" as the carriage awaited bride and bridegroom. "Where is Doctor Messon? I must shake hands with him," said Gertrude. The man who had tended her from her childhood came forward and spoke cheerily to the happy pair. Then kindly and softly he said, "God bless you, my child; there is just one thing you need, eternal life in Jesus Christ. Good-bye."

The old home of happy girlhood was left behind, a few tears sprinkled the lovely bouquet in her hand, and then the heart bounded gladly toward the new and unknown prospects. Together they wandered over scenes in the sunny south, and built fine castles in the air as they talked of future days.

Rudolph could not remain absent from his new practice long, and with excitement and pleasure husband and wife entered the fresh home to begin another chapter in their life's history.

Gertrude became the attraction of all the society in the neighbourhood, and Rudolph grew to admire and adore her more daily.

"What would the old man wish for that cannot be found in her, I wonder?" he said to himself as he sat in his surgery. He had just left the drawing-room where his wife reigned as queen that evening. It was the anniversary of their wedding, and selected guests were gathered to join in festivity and rejoicing.

"I cannot believe a whole year has gone," Gertrude said, after her friends had left, as she stood with her husband listening to his remarks of admiration and praise.

"Everything seems right, Gertie. We have health and happiness and success in every way. Before us all is hopeful and bright. Never lose your pretty smile and sunny locks till we stand at the far end of many, many years of married life," he said.

One week later Rudolph Baurn stood alone in that same room, with blanched face and tightened lips. This was beyond his calculation. His treasured one was lying with life in the balance, a touch of the grim and dreaded spectre, and he must lose her. The servant brought in a telegram, which he eagerly opened and read:

"Will be with you quickly."

In less than two hours Dr. Messon arrived.

"I could not feel safe without you. She wishes you to see her, doctor. This is too terrible. Go to her and tell me what you think;" and the two men quietly ascended the stairs.

The nurse stepped across the room and whispered, "She is scarcely conscious."

Such moments are full of horror, as those when Rudolph stood back while the experienced man took a long look at the patient.

Many times amid the gay surroundings, Gertrude had experienced a strange sense of want. She could not express it, therefore as far as possible put it from her.

Now sudden illness had laid her aside, and her mind was troubled. The words of her old doctor every now and again had repeated themselves, and in her sleep of weakness she seemed to be standing on a cliff, while all her pleasures and friends were falling over and leaving her. She thought she was weeping for some to remain, when a voice said, "One thing you need—Eternal Life in Jesus Christ."

Perhaps she had felt the gentle touch of Doctor Messon's hand, suggesting his very words again. When she opened her eyes they rested on his familiar face.

"I have come to try and help you," he said. "Tell me how you are feeling, if you can."

"Doctor, help me to one thing!" she seized his hand. "You told me rightly, though I never heeded as now. Help me or I shall die before I gain it. Oh, do not say it is too late!"

"Be still, my child," he said, in his old accustomed manner. He knew her husband objected to religious talk, and feared to speak too quickly.

"Say you can help me to this one thing. Quick, doctor!"

"Satisfy her mind, her weakness makes her wander," said Rudolph.

Still holding the trembling hand, the old man uttered life-giving words. "Through faith in Jesus you may have eternal life. He loves you, though you have slighted Him."

For a while he stayed and pointed out the way of peace; and then she lay contentedly, the nurse carrying out instructions.

"Is there hope?" asked the anxious husband as the doctor took his arm and led him to another room.

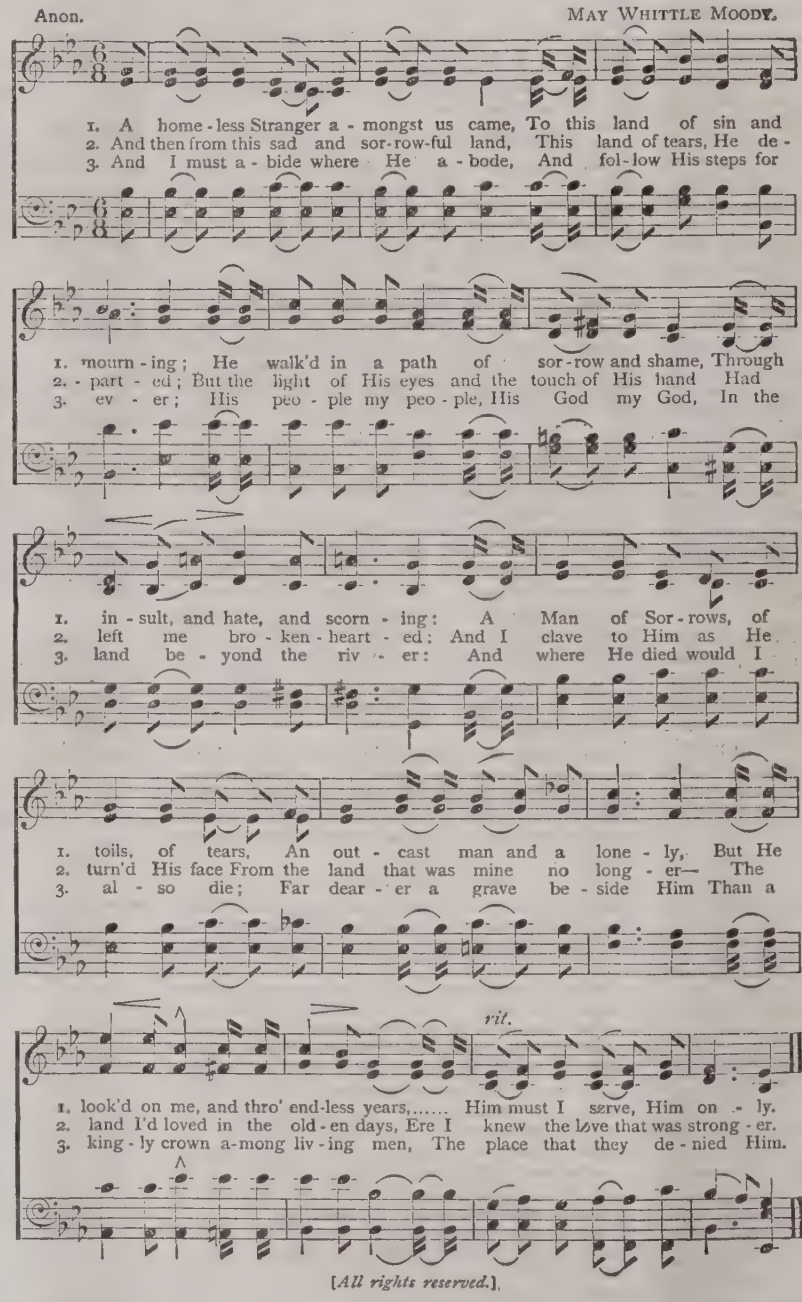
"I see none! Still she is young—we must wait," he said. "My friend, to live without Christ is to miss life's sum total of joy. But to die without Him is blank despair; yet what did you say to me once?"

"This is quite a new standpoint, doctor. I recall my words and say nothing now; only this—save her to me if possible, and give her the help she asks."

During the day and the following night the greatest skill was exercised, and every means employed; but daybreak revealed the fact that life was going. At the margin of the river all events are present; like a map one's history is surveyed. Gertrude scanned her bright few fleeting years, and saw how empty they had been. She dwelt thankfully on what the doctor had spoken at her wedding; and now, in the seclusion of her room, she was ready and eager to admit another, a heavenly visitor. Unheard by other ears, she caught the sound of Christ's voice, and, enraptured by its tones, she listened to her soul's delight, and knew she had passed into acceptance in Him. No pain distressed her—all was calm.

"Gertie, what would you say to me, dear," asked Rudolph as he saw her lips move.

"Tell them my message is, 'One thing they need — Jesus Christ.'" Turning to the Doctor Messon she said, "If they are not here from home in time, tell them all about the one thing, and make them hear."



"You can give up all, can you not?" said the elder man ere he turned away not to see the parting.

"I gain all in one—eternal life in Jesus Christ. O doctor! you were right; in life and in death one thing is needful—remind them all of it for me."

No human touch could call her back, but the dawning of a new life proved she had responded to the touch Divine ere she passed away. . . .

A Homeless Stranger.

Anon. May Whittle Moody.

[All rights reserved.]

Browning Hall, Walworth.

Phases of Settlement Life.

NOTWITHSTANDING all that has been written by and about Mr. Sheldon, there are many sincere Christians who do not feel able to dogmatise as to what Jesus would do in any given set of circumstances. Mr. Herbert Stead, the Warden of Browning Hall, feels convinced, however, that Jesus, if He came to London in person, would settle down in a central district, and work among the poor there. And, of course, Mr. Stead has proved his faith by his works, for he lives in Walworth himself, and spends his time in trying to follow the footsteps of his Master, so far as it is given to a merely human atom to imitate One who was both human and Divine.

We may leave the vexed question of the modern Imitatio Christi, and study for a little this experiment at Browning Hall. For this purpose we can scarcely do better than listen to the story as it recently fell from the lips of Mr. Herbert Stead himself, when he recited it for the benefit of a small but interested company in a southern suburb. The narrative must be compressed, of course, from considerations of space.

South London (said Mr. Stead) and not the East End includes the very poorest districts in London; that has been proved by the investigations of Mr. Charles Booth. Newington, the municipal area in which Walworth is situated, contains slightly less than one square mile, and has a population of more than 120,000. The ward in which Browning Hall stands had the unenviable distinction some weeks ago of reaching the high-water mark of London mortality; it was at the rate of 42 per thousand per annum. That was only for one week, of course; and the bulk of those who died were little children. "The Massacre of the Innocents" is commemorated in certain churches every year, evidently in ignorance of the fact that more children are slaughtered under our noses in London every year by overcrowding and insanitary conditions than were killed by the soldiers of Herod.

From photograph by Mr. Frank Brown, 20, Market Place, Leicester.

It will be understood that Walworth is not precisely the abode of the wealthy and aristocratic. A hundred years ago the parish was composed almost wholly of arable land. Fifty years ago it was a very eligible suburban place of residence, in which many "carriage people" were glad to live. Now it is one of the overcrowded cities of the poor. When the poor came, the rich showed their sense of human brotherhood by making tracks for Clapham and other remote suburbs.

The centre of our settlement work in Walworth is the Robert Browning Hall, a building erected more than a hundred years ago, and known as York Street Independent Chapel. Since then it has passed through many changes. Many families of note used to worship there, among others the Browning family; both father and mother of the poet were members of the church. Robert Browning and his sister worshipped there till the family moved away.

The idea of a "settlement" is to bring back to a poor neighbourhood, from the suburbs or other source, those who shall supply the place left vacant by the exodus of the well-to-do. There are university settlements, monastic settlements, and those that are more distinctly social. Not long ago an eminent American divine paid us a visit, and he said: "I think I have at last found the way of solving the problem of our great cities and bridging this terrible chasm between rich and poor. A university settlement is good. But after all the work will not be done by those who have graduated in a university spending six months or a year in the slums, but by Christian families coming from the more eligible places of residence, planting themselves in the midst of the poor neighbourhood and permeating it with the influence of their family life." I replied that that was the idea with which we started, the basis on which we went to work, and the aim for which we strive at our settlement in Walworth. The difficulty is to get the Christian households there. I have been four years in residence in Walworth, and during that time have addressed some of the most influential congregations in suburban London. I have brought the duty of Christian families coming to reside amongst the poor before these people. I have, through the kindness of many friends on the Press, either by interview with myself or in earnest articles written by others, had the same message put before the eyes and into the minds of innumerable readers throughout the country. And yet how very few have responded! Single men and women have come, and we were grateful; graduates from universities have come, and we were glad to welcome them. But in spite of all discouragement we hold to our primal idea that it is the Christian home planted as a permanency in these districts that is the true unit and nucleus of social service there.

Now, as to the sort of work carried on, I am glad to be able to give a description of our work, not by any of the workers, but by one who may claim to be an authority in all matters pertaining to London—Sir Walter Besant. He has just published what will no doubt be a historic work on South London. That book concludes with a very kindly appreciation of the work of the Browning Settlement; I may be allowed to read something of what he says as to the nature of our work:—

> The directors of this settlement desire to plant a settlement house in every poor street; a house which shall be inhabited by the workers, men or women, and shall serve as a model for the other people in the street; example, in fact, is relied upon as a potent influence. There is or will be a large clubhouse and coffee tavern for men. . . . Once a week there is a concert in the hall; the members of the settlement take as large a part as possible in the local government; they have laid out a burial ground at the back of their hall as a garden; they have a medical mission which give consultations free; some of them are poor men's lawyers; they have introduced the University Extension Lectures; they have founded thrift agencies; they hold Sunday afternoons for the men; they have a maternity society; they have a clothes stores; they have an adult school. Classes are held in hygiene, mathematics, and classics; there have been Shakespeare readings, music, singing, country holidays, summer camps, children's holidays; there is a boys' brigade; there is a musical drill; there are Mayday and harvest festivals; and there are, in addition, works of religion and temperance which I have not enumerated above. The key note of all such work as this is, for the workers, personal service—for the people, the influence of example.

I would rather say the mutual action and reaction of neighbourliness. We do not go there and say, "Behold what shining lights we are; and the best you can do is to imitate us." Nay, our attitude is: "You want us and we want you; let us try to make life brighter and better than it is." Sir Walter says that South London requires fifty such settlements. I should be only too glad to see them; my first desire of course is that the settlement that is there should be supported as the need of the district demands.

After this catalogue of the agencies in operation I will only hurriedly touch on a few points. In an overcrowded district the physical life of the people is one of the first things to be considered. Open spaces are essential. Our Browning garden, of one-seventh of an acre, is much used by the neighbours in the hot months. A plague-spot in the neighbourhood was pointed out to the Vestry, by my colleague, Mr. Bryan, now chairman of the Public Health Committee, and successfully dealt with. A medical mission, the superintendent of which, Dr. Richards, gives his services gratuitously, reaches from seventy to eighty persons every Tuesday and Friday during eight months in the year. Then we have a women's meeting, with 760 enrolled members, over which Mrs. Briant, Mrs. Morgan, and Mrs. Stead preside; country holidays and summer camps, a poor man's lawyer, who gives every week legal advice to those who need it, many thrift agencies, &c. As far as possible we try to get the people to avail themselves of the educational advantages provided by the State, notably in the free evening schools. The University Extension Lectures have been a great success, when given without charge. We have also lectures on social subjects. At the Sunday morning adult school there are studies in different interesting subjects.

But education, after all, is by no means what the people most need. Recreation is one of their great needs, and so we provide music every Saturday evening in the winter. These entertainments are high-class, and have a marked educational value in the best sense. We have "drawing rooms" once a month Perhaps some friends would like to give £2 which is the cost of one of these, with 100 to 200 guests. Four shillings provides a "happy evening" for twenty children. At some of our drawing rooms we have had, along with the most respectable working-folk, the nearest approach to the criminal type to be found in Walworth.

From photograph by Vandyck, 125, Gloucester Road, S.W.

We try in these and other ways to help them, and they help us. But these things do not satisfy us. All our work is grouped around the one great central idea of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. It is our endeavour to make real the Kingdom of God, not merely by the promulgation of theological propositions, but by every-day service in every-day life; that is the sovereign conception of the Gospel. We seek to bear witness to the great claim of Jesus Christ upon the whole life. We call no man and no interest common or unclean.

After giving some details of recent movements in social reform, Mr. Stead said in drawing to a close: "We want more room as a centre; our premises are altogether inadequate. We have secured a site on which we hope to erect a club house, which will be a means of help to many in the neighbourhood. This will cost £4,000. At almost every corner in Walworth there is a great flaring gin-palace. We want to provide the men with a better substitute for the public-house. We trust many will help in that project. But our chief need is residents."

Other Lands.

In Luther's Land.

ALLIANZHAUS, BLANKENBURG, THURINGIA.

WITH deep gratitude to God, we are able to say that the work He has entrusted to us in Luther's Land is showing progress in all its branches. The small seed sown thirteen years ago has, through the Lord's blessing, become a fruitful tree. Our little international band of orphan children—German, Irish, Indian, Armenian—has become more and more the centre of interest and joy in the home life. The Gospel work in the towns and villages of the Thüringian Forest is much owned of the Lord. There are families here and there whom we have been allowed to lead to the Lord, who willingly open their houses for our meetings; and these latter are extremely well attended everywhere.

Trusting to God's help for the means, we have called an evangelist to the Forest, and hope that another will soon follow. An Italian evangelist also has been added to the staff. He was formerly a colporteur of the Scotch Bible Society in Rome, a man of great devotion and zeal, in whose heart the Holy Spirit kindled the desire to labour among his countrymen in Germany. We have accepted him, and send him about among the hundreds of Italian navvies in this country. We get applications from Italians in all parts of Germany, Austria, &c., asking for Bibles and for instruction in the way of truth, so we are full of hope that the good seed sown here among these young men may some day bear rich fruit in Italy.

Our labours for Armenia are also singularly blessed of God. Great sums pass through our hands for the sufferers in that country. The number of orphans we are allowed to care for has now reached fifty-nine, besides the support of widows through the sale of their embroideries, and the help we can send to the hungry. The readers of our papers—the Allianzblatt, a paper of testimony and accounts of the Lord's work everywhere, and the Für Dich, a small Gospel paper—are steadily increasing. The same can be said of the Blankenburg Branch of the Evangelical Alliance, which now counts about 300 members and which stands in direct communication with the English organisation. Of our conventions—on Keswick lines—much could be said. From the first one, held in spite of much opposition thirteen years ago, with its 28 attendants, it has reached 500 last year, meeting in the beautiful new Alliance Hall, which the Lord enabled us to build through the help of his children in many countries. We expect a still larger attendance this year, when the convention will take place August 28 to September 1. Not only have streams of blessing flowed from all these conventions, but similar gatherings have been started in many parts of Germany.

This year, as in the past, we are looking to the presence of dear and honoured English brethern, whose ministry at our conventions is greatly prized. Over against all that is bright in this picture, it would not be difficult to put in the shadows that fall upon our path. We are still entirely excommunicated by the Lutheran Church, dominant in these parts. The pastors of the very town we live in, not only would not cross our threshold themselves, but seek to prevent others from doing so. Everywhere the clergy meet us with the question as to our belief in regeneration in baptism; and in consequence of our replying in the negative, they accuse us of preaching "false doctrine." Added to all this come the trials, conflicts, and disappointments common to all. Why comment upon them? We would rather praise Him who brings strength out of weakness.

We are most anxious to find a Christian worker willing to come to our help in teaching the children of the Allianzhaus English and music in return for German.

(Fräulein) A. von Weling.

Blankenburg, Thüringia.

Basutoland Mission.

THE historic "Mulberry Tree" at Mildmay witnessed, on the afternoon of June 9, an interesting gathering of the friends of the Basutoland Mission. Colonel Morton presided.

Dr. Mathews, who has spent some time in the country, gave a most interesting account of the origin of the work. He told how the Basutos are very anxious to support the mission as far as possible themselves, having given last year about £2,000 to it. The money collected in England goes to help the native fund for the support of native workers. Dr. Mathews stated how impossible it was for a chief in that land to take a definite stand as a Christian. He must renounce being a chief if he becomes a Christian—one old chief to whom the Gospel had appealed many times most powerfully said, "No, I cannot, the gate is too strait."

An additional interest was given to the gathering by the presence of three Basutos, with their interpreter, who were allowed to come from the Earl's Court Exhibition. The three natives, who were Christians, sang "Rock of Ages" in Basuto, and one of them made a speech, saying how kindly they had been treated in England, and how interested they were in visiting the land where the Great White Queen lives. He afterwards very devoutly repeated the Lord's prayer in his native tongue. It was a touching sight to see black men and white worshipping together under that old tree.

There was a small sale of foreign articles in the grounds in aid of the Mission, which attracted many purchasers.

Before the close of the meeting, Mrs. Hogg presented each of the Basuto visitors with a New Testament in their own tongue, and which had been procured for them by the Hon. Secretary at the British and Foreign Bible Society.

The Gospel in Brittany.

YOUR readers may not know that in Brittany a native church has sprung up through the preaching of the gospel by Pasteur Lecoat and his helpers, and through the distribution of the Scriptures (which he has translated) by the Société Evangélique Brétonne. This society is doing a wonderful work, and God is with it of a truth.

But there is a special need just at the present moment. The society has at its headquarters in Brittany some land and building invested in trustees. A small property adjoining it (about 1½ acres) with five buildings upon it is to be sold at once, and can be purchased for £200. It is most important that this property should be acquired by the society. It would not only prevent its falling into the enemy's hands, which would be disastrous for us, but it would be a great help to the Mission, giving at once an industrial side to its operations. One of the buildings, being a flax mill, would give employment to several who are receiving instruction at Tremel, while at the same time it would be a permanent help towards supporting the society in its spiritual work.

Ed. B. Underhill, LL.D., Chairman.
P. H. Hewitt, Major, Hon. Treasurer.
E. W. Bullinger, D.D., Hon. Secretary.
25, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque.

JUST twelve months ago, one Sunday night, a party of English sailors left their vessel and directed their steps towards the Sailors' Rest. As they were crossing the bridge, one of them inquired of his mate, "Where are we going?" The reply was, "To the mission." The first speaker laughed and said, "To the mission. Much good that will do me!" When they entered, the service was in full swing, and they had some difficulty in finding places. During that meeting an arrow from the Lord pierced the conscience of the man who "laughed," and he went back to his ship sore stricken and weeping over his past life. That night proved the turning point in the life of J. B.

Once a fortnight, when his vessel comes to this port, he makes straight for the Sailors' Rest, always bringing some of his shipmates with him. His delight is to tell the story of his conversion, and persuade others to accept the Saviour, who has given him this "beautiful new life." It can truly be said of this man, "Where sin abounded, grace doth much more abound." "It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." His testimony, given from a heart overflowing with love to the Saviour, has been the means of the conversion of his wife, who is dying of cancer. At a cottage meeting held at J. B.'s house on Whit-Monday, the wife of one of his shipmates also found peace in Jesus. Thus the blessing flows on; only eternity will reveal the far-reaching influence of that Sunday night service twelve months ago.

While we are thus encouraged by seeing fruit, the mission is in great need of support. The death of our most liberal subscriber, Viscountess Portman, leaves us a deficit of £64 per annum. Will not some of the Lord's stewards make up this loss for the Master's sake?

(Mrs.) Stewart Mackenzie.

Sailor's Rest, Dunkerque, France.

Work Among French Priests.

THE operations of the Œuvre des Prêtres Convertis have from time to time been set forth in these columns. According to the report for last year the importance and interest are continually on the increase. The work is, of necessity, difficult and delicate. Attention is confined to men of character and purpose; the unfrocked and disgraced have to be left to other treatment.

During the year twenty-seven priests have been accepted and helped according to their several needs. Others received temporal assistance, as they were starving and homeless. The president and director refused shelter or help of any kind to about forty priests who were either undeserving, incapable, or without certificates. The work has now, at Courbevoie, near Paris, 25, rue Carle-Hébert, a Home (Maison Hospitalière) to receive priests when they leave the Church of Rome. Before they begin a career, or enter a theological seminary, endeavours are made to show them the meaning of true Protestantism, and above all of true conversion. In the Maison Hospitalière they see a Christian family life, they read the Bible, they pray together. Meanwhile, the director is enabled to study their character, their capacities, their religious needs.

Communications to the director should be addressed M. L. J. Bertrand, 86, Boulevard Bineau, Neuilly (Seine).

Continental and Prison Notes.

By Mr. CHAS. COOK.

ONE thing most noticeable to me in the houses of the Lord's people on the continent in which I have visited and stayed has been the prayers offered for the prisoner Dreyfus. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him," and the judgment of the Lord's people to my mind is clear and apparent. Nearly the whole of the staff of the French army have been educated at the Jesuits' College, and Rome is greatly in fear of what may momentarily happen.

The testimony of our brethren in Paris is—that Rome is fearing what may also happen by the spread of Protestant truth; that she is circulating a million journals daily in the towns and villages, inculcating adhesion to Holy Mother Church, and even openly declaring that the time has come for another massacre. And yet, side by side with this, are an eagerness to accept the Word of God and a spirit of hearing on the part of the people.

I took with me, for general distribution, a thousand copies of the Illustrated Gospels, with beautifully-coloured covers, published by Mr. Walters, of the Scripture Gift Mission, and in no instance have I met with a refusal to accept them. In the streets and railway stations, by shop assistants and hotel employés, they were gratefully received. May I suggest to all who are travelling in Roman Catholic countries how much good may be accomplished by the distribution of God's Word among the ordinary people one meets? I could point to some wonderful instances of conversion as the result of my giving away the New Testament.

Again have I unfavourably compared our stern prison discipline with the more humane systems I so often see abroad. Recently, at Neuchatel and other places, the governor, when conducting me round, has invariably, as he opened the door, raised his hat and addressed his more unfortunate fellow-man with a "Bon jour." Was not this calculated to produce some measure of self-respect? On the walls of prison cells in France, Switzerland, and Italy may also be seen the photos of wife and children, or perhaps, if a young prisoner, it may be a mother's face is seen. When will our slow-to-learn English authorities permit so humanising an influence in their iron-bound system?

The cell walls of an English gaol often front a dead wall; but I noticed at Lausanne that a high platform ran round the workshops of the prison, and when work was over the men were allowed to sit on the platform which looked out over the beautiful lake, where birds and boats might be seen skimming the surface; whilst beyond the snow-clad mountains were roseate with the glorious sunset banners of the evening sky. I thank God for the privilege of speaking a word of sympathy and cheer to often desponding men and women—I once met an Englishman who had been eighteen years in prison in Eastern Europe without a Bible—of telling the story of love from the heart of the Lord of love. Would that others would follow in the steps of Dr. Baedeker and Baroness Wredé!

If we are able to say in that day "I have given them thy Word," will He not say, "I was in prison, and ye visited Me?" In one of the gaol churches, which I recently visited, I saw what was a novelty even to myself in the prison world. The names of the good and great men of all lands were written on the walls—I suppose as an incentive to hope and emulation. The names of Penn and Washington and others — very properly including S. Belbrani Scalia, the director of the Italian prisons—and over the pulpit were the honoured names of John Howard and Elizabeth Fry. Was it not Howard who replied to the Empress of Russia, who invited him to the palace when he reached St. Petersburg: "Tell Her Majesty I am not here to visit palaces, but prisons?"

Missionary Church of Belgium.

LAST January the Committee anticipated, for the end of their financial year, a deficit of about 50,000fr. On closing their accounts for 1898-99 they have been greatly relieved by ascertaining the deficit to be only 5,300. In the three months, from January to March, the Committee received over 100,000fr. The members of our churches, poor as they are, have made great progress in liberality; our collectors met with a generous reception in London, Rhenish Prussia, North Germany and Switzerland; numerous friends in this country and abroad spontaneously sent us their donations, and the Young Women's Belgian Missionary Aid Association made great and successful efforts to increase their contributions.

We receive good tidings from different parts of our field of labour; our pastors and our churches are doing their utmost to spread the light of the Gospel amidst our benighted people; doors are opening before us; we must add to the number of our stations, and engage the services of two or three more pastors. We enter upon the year 1899-1900 with fresh courage and with the firm belief that the Lord will supply our needs in the future as He has done in the past. Of the 48,000fr. that we require before June 30 to cover our expenses and extinguish the deficit of 5,300fr., we have received 23,000fr., including the ordinary contributions of our churches and the subsidies granted us by various societies. The Lord will, we feel sure, put it into the hearts of old and new friends to come to our assistance according to their ability.

Kennedy Amet, General Secretary.
129, Chaussée d'Ixelles, Brussels.

A Trip to Ecuador.

DESCRIBING a trip to Ecuador, Mr. C. H. Bright, of the Peruvian and Ecuatorian Mission, says:—"The journey occupied about four weeks, and we (myself and T. Cullen) travelled about two thousand miles. But, as our object was mainly exploration, we were not three days in any one place except Guayaquil. There I preached twice to the few souls who gather to hear Mr. Strain teach the Gospel. In other places we scattered papers and spoke to some individuals, but did no preaching. Our object was to find a suitable site to establish a branch in Ecuador.

"The revolution, I am sorry to say, has extended till now all Ecuador is torn up. It is a last, desperate struggle of the priests to regain their lost power, and again to close the door against Gospel heralds. The money to run the revolution has (so it is reported) been contributed by the monasteries and convents, which are rich with the hoarded treasures of three centuries. One of the things that specially struck me, was the curious way some priests take to stir up the flame of piety (?) in their followers. Here is an exact translation of an advertisement that appeared in a local paper of Guayaquil the eve of our visit to Chimbo.

"On November 27 will take place in the town of Naranjita the feast of

THE VIRGIN OF SORROWS.

There will be bull-fights on the 26th and 27th, and on Lord's Day dances of curiquingues (a comic dance), horse races, races in sacks, cock-fights, greased pole, fireworks, gambling permitted by the law, and various other amusements. The faithful and devout are invited to assist at said feast."

Both going to and returning from Chimbo we passed through this little town. I stepped off the train and walked round a bit. It was most saddening and shocking to see the gambling openly carried on in the streets, and the debauchery on every hand. And all under pretext of religion, and got up by the priest himself! By the time we returned, the feast was breaking up, and we had on the train with us two of the idols they had been worshipping, also strolling guitar players, drunkards, and other disreputable characters.

At Santa Rosa I saw an oil painting in the village church representing the souls in purgatory. It represents heaven, purgatory, and the souls issuing from purgatory through the masses said by the priest that is seen officiating at the altar. Its object is evidently to put money in the priest's pocket, and its efficacy to this end cannot be doubted, for there (in the picture) you can see the souls suffering in the flames, and you see them coming out, bleached white in the purgatorial fires.

Communications regarding Mr. Bright's work may be addressed to Mr. B. McCall-Barbour, 16, Johnstone Terrace, Edinburgh.

Free Evangelical Church, France.

AS the representative of the "Union of the Free Evangelical Churches of France," I beg to point out a few facts in connection with its Home Mission, which may be read with interest by the Christians of this country.

Everyone knows that the hour is most critical for French Protestantism at present. In many parts of the country, priests have succeeded in raising against us the fanaticism and the wildest passions of the mob. In Auvergne, for instance, it is amid great opposition and danger to their lives that our missionary, Pastor Delattre, and his co-labourers pursue their work. Clerical newspapers publish daily the worst calumnies against them. On several occasions they have been assaulted most savagely. Meanwhile magistrates and officials sometimes refuse to interfere and to do their duty in preserving the rights and freedom of speech which the law most clearly grants to each French citizen.

Up to the end of October it seemed as if Auvergne were to be completely shut against the preaching of the Gospel. However, Pastor Delattre writes: "I never lost heart, and finally the Lord has opened new doors."

From Florac, in the mountains of Cevennes, famous by the heroism of the "Camisards," Pastor Illaire writes that he notes an increasing missionary life. The congregation seems to be gaining ground and recognition. There has been great emulation of liberality among the members in view of the building of a chapel. A friend has given £200, and all the others have given according to their power—some even beyond their power. This will give our work there a character of permanence which will be greatly beneficial.

At Le Riou, in the department of Haute Loire, since special meetings held in October, thirty converts have been added to the Church. "Our children cheerfully gave up the usual Christmas tree and gifts in favour of missionary work."

New openings for the Gospel have been met recently in the department of Charente, where good Christian work is carried on in many localities.

Pastor Fabre writes about Montignac: "Since the opening of the meeting-house in September, 1897, the inhabitants have cordially responded to the invitation to come and listen to the Gospel. All along they have attended with encouraging regularity; 100 persons are often crowded into the little room listening to the message of grace. We have already a number of regular attendants with whom we enter into more intimate relationship. The great attraction is the singing of hymns; fifteen young girls follow the singing lessons of the Sunday afternoon, and on Sunday evenings young men are taught the same hymns."

The exodus of many Roman Catholic priests from the Church of Rome, which is still going on: the uneasiness and strong desires in many noble minded and pious people, as shown in the controversies pursued in several Roman Catholic reviews and newspapers in favour of a more liberal form of catholicism: are also characteristic features of the present situation in France. Are they not, perhaps, the dawn of a new day, the day of a great spiritual awakening, which "will make everything new" in that beautiful country?

I am in London for a few days longer, and the guest of Rev. du Pontet-de la Harpe, French Parsonage, Bayswater, where any communication may be addressed to me. I should gladly give further particulars on the mission which I represent. S. Monnier, Pastor.

Home Missions.

Friedenheim Hospital.

SEEN in the glint of the summer sun, while the trees of the picturesque grounds wave gently in the evening breeze, Friedenheim is instinct with a peculiar pathos. The poor fading creatures who rest so quietly in this Home of Peace for the dying, who are ministered to by godly and devoted women and by all the applied resources of the healing art, contrast touchingly with the glowing beauties of nature.

On almost every face one sees the grey shadow of coming dissolution. Amid such surroundings one's mind recalls the striking sentence of Bright—"The angel of death is abroad in the land; we can almost hear the beating of his wings." Consumption has its grip on that poor skeleton-like soul who, through the great window of the ward, is taking his farewell glances at leaf and blossom, and sunset sky. In the cots that are placed round the lofty apartments are stretched yet there is not a murmur of discontent; a tender solemnity pervades the quiet rooms, and everywhere one realises that Friedenheim is the ante-chamber of another and a higher existence. Here the helpless and homeless dying find a shelter in the time of storm, and truly may they say that Divine arms make their bed in sickness; for the history of the institution is a record of God's faithfulness and blessing from the time when Miss Davidson commenced her work in the "day of small things" until the present period of extensive influence and public recognition.

SUFFERERS OF MANY KINDS;

The Home, it will be remembered, is meant only for those in the last stages of illness as distinct from incurable patients in a stationary condition; it is for those whose insufficient means and friendless condition prevent their being properly nursed and cared for to the end. The character of the work is one that must especially commend it to the consideration of Christian people, for while the enfeebled body is cared for with untiring patience, the dominant idea of the management is to lead souls to the Saviour.

At the annual gathering held on Thursday last a number of sympathetic friends came together to hear brief accounts of the work. After Mr. J. H. Tritton, who presided, had dwelt briefly on the need for such a home and the devotion of the workers, Dr. Habershon said that the gloomy associations of death were largely removed by the spiritual surroundings. Alluding to the strenuous labours of the nurses, the speaker pointed out that it had become necessary to provide proper accommodation for them. Dr. Schofield emphasised the same point, observing that it was no longer possible to house these consecrated and industrious toilers in their present premises. As to the patients, it was not surprising that of the Home some of them subsequently show signs of recovery, and later on are discharged quite well; but the great majority, of course, die in the Home, and the unceasing labours of help and watchfulness entailed upon the nurses could readily be imagined. The comparative smallness of the outlay originally made in establishing so large an institution, and the very low figure of the management expenses, were additional reasons why there should be a ready response to the appeal for the £2,500 required for the purpose of erecting a suitable residence for the nurses.

UNDER THE SOOTHING INFLUENCES

Canon Girdlestone and Mr. Algernon Coote also spoke in feeling terms, and at the conclusion of the meeting the audience, under the guidance of Miss Davidson, inspected the beautifully kept building and grounds. The expressions of appreciation heard on every hand must have been very cheering to the staff, the only possible verdict being that the institution is a noble expression of Christian sympathy and devotion. Communications may be addressed to Miss Davidson, Friedenheim, Upper Avenue Road, London, N.W.

Giving Them a New Start.

LONDONERS, and visitors to London, are well acquainted with Shaftesbury Avenue—the fine thoroughfare leading from Piccadilly Circus to New Oxford Street; and probably the passers-by are familiar also with the exterior of Shaftesbury House Boys' Home, the headquarters of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children. For the lettering is so distinct that "he who runs may read." But far too few of the general public acquaint themselves with the philanthropic work carried on within, and the transformations witnessed there. Perhaps the most striking sight is to be seen about noon on Saturday mornings, when poor boys of good character are received for transfer to the Arethusa and Chichester training ships at Greenhithe, Kent, and, rigged out in the smart uniform of the ships, they set off, all smiling and happy, for their new surroundings. More pathetic is the sight of the boys and girls received for transfer to the Homes on shore, for the children are younger, and in the majority of cases are parting from mother for the first time. Only the other day a batch of twenty-four destitute lads and lasses were admitted, and sent to the Society's Homes at Bisley, Twickenham, Sudbury, and Ealing. The merits of each case had been decided by the committee, after careful examination. No votes or elections are necessary—a fact hailed with delight by the destitute poor, and also by Christian workers interested in their welfare.

A few specimen cases of children just admitted will illustrate. The secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, will be happy to verify any of the following outlines, taken haphazard from the official papers:

Willie, aged 10, son of a gardener at Wantage, who died after a very short illness, just as the mother was recovering from a sharp attack of rheumatic fever. Kind neighbours are helping to get the children into orphanages, that the poor widow may be able to take a light situation when her strength permits.

Harry, aged 11. His father, a journeyman tailor, died of cancer, leaving his widow with nine children. The clergy of St. James's, Piccadilly, interceded for the case.

Charley, aged 10, son of a labourer at Shedfield, Hants., who died of inflammation of the lungs, leaving a widow and five children. The mother struggled hard to maintain herself and little ones, but was compelled to seek relief.

George and Albert, from Walton-on-Thames, lost both parents through consumption. The mother passed away only a few weeks ago, leaving six children. The two brothers, in accordance with the Society's humane rule, were not separated, but placed in the same Home, Fortescue House, Twickenham.

Edwin and Daisy, aged respectively eleven and nine, came from Shoreditch. The father, a printer, died of asthma, and the poor widow had a hard struggle to maintain herself and family. There were eleven children, the eldest being out at work, but not able to help.

Maggie, aged twelve, came from Stony Stratford, Buckinghamshire. Her mother died ten years ago. How greatly the child needed the timely aid of a Christian home may be gathered from the following details, supplied by a benevolent friend who interceded on her behalf:—"The father lives in a two-roomed hovel, which I am now trying to have condemned. He and Margaret sleep in the same room. The dirt and squalor are beyond description. The man does not illtreat his children, but has no sense of responsibility as a parent. He spends his time in the public-house when not at work, and leaves the girl to take care of herself all day. Her bodily condition is such that only the lowest of the low will associate with her. The neighbours, who are of a very low class, all beg of me to have the child sent to be with her sister." (The application was granted, and Maggie is now enjoying the cleanliness and other blessings of Sudbury Hall Girls' Home, in company with her elder sister.)

Page after page could be filled with these simple "annals of the poor;" but the instances just quoted will suffice to prove the practical work being done which cannot appeal in vain for help from those who love the Friend of Little Children.

Mission Work for Cyclists.

DEAR SIR,—Everyone must feel the great importance of reaching our country villages with the Gospel message, but perhaps few have realised how much could be done with the aid of the cycle.

During the last few summers much blessing has attended the work amongst children in the villages visited by the caravans in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission. There are now four caravans at work—in Suffolk, Sussex, Kent, and Somerset—and a fifth is to be sent out shortly.

But it is evident that by this means very few, comparatively speaking, of the thousands of villages in England can be reached. In recent years in several towns some of our Christian cyclists have gone out in the summer to some of the surrounding villages for Gospel meetings. Such work has generally been done by young men on their Saturday afternoon holiday.

It would certainly be possible very largely to increase such work, if it were systematically arranged from each large town as a centre, and hundreds of villages might be reached with the Gospel message. Very much, at all events, might be done for the children of some of our villages, because they could be met with, when out of school, on any day of the week, and lady cyclists could give them Gospel books and tracts, which would soon find their way into every house in the village.

I would suggest that a "Cyclists' Children's Mission" should be formed in every large town; that the whole neighbourhood round should be systematically mapped out and the villages visited in turn; that ladies should undertake the work of tract distribution during the week, and make arrangements for and give notice of any meetings to be held; and that all the available workers should go out on the Saturday afternoons to conduct the meetings, taking as many villages as possible, according to the force at disposal.

It is clear that in a very short time an immense amount of Gospel literature could be scattered widely in many villages which are, to a great extent, without the Gospel. Of course, the villages most destitute of the Gospel should be first chosen. Many opportunities might also be found in this way of establishing branches of the Children's Scripture Union in small country villages.

Should any such "Cyclists' Children's Mission" be started in any town, the committee of the Children's Special Service Mission would be very glad to supply a large grant of Children's Picture Leaflets and other literature. Information as to the caravan work may be had from Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Ewhurst, Redhill Common, Surrey; and applications for the leaflets of the Children's Special Service Mission, or for cards of the Scripture Union, should be made to Mr. H. Hankinson, 13A, Warwick Lane, Paternoster Row, London.—Yours very faithfully, T. B. Bishop.

A Successful Experiment.

FOR thirty-five years Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission work has been continued, and been a means of saving many. Never since its commencement, perhaps, have the women shown such a desire to lead a new life as at the present time. This has been seen in the way in which they have borne the test of having Bank Holiday to spend as they thought well. On former Bank Holidays special work has been provided for them. Easter Tuesday and Whit Tuesday mornings were anxious times to those in charge at 143, Clapham Road; but prayer was abundantly answered. The women all came to their work, saying, with a little excusable pride, "We are all here," which meant more than it expressed.

This is the encouraging side, but there is another in the midst of all this joy. Great financial anxiety is felt; increasing calls have come and are still coming on the funds, which are exhausted. Buildings are sadly needing repair, and a tottering wall which supports a rotten roof must be rebuilt. Friends have kindly helped in the past, and will no doubt continue their liberal support in this time of difficulty.

The Outlook in Ireland.

THE noble-hearted men and women who, in the teeth of great difficulties, preached "the old, old story of Jesus and his love" to Irish Roman Catholics, have now the joy of knowing that, although they sowed, others reaped. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

A Jesuit, Father Phelan, has recently been preaching in Cork, and he is greatly alarmed at the rising tide of independence everywhere apparent. He said:

We are witnessing a rapid transformation in the country. The bonds that united the pastor and the people for centuries are dissolving and fading away. Even the best (Roman) Catholic, if he were to face himself in examination, cannot account to himself for the change that has passed over his life and mind. There is a deposit of bitterness lying at the bottom of his heart, and a tendency to descant on his grievances. Even the Church herself is suffering. She is no longer the trusted mother, but the suspected friend. There is a tendency to question her authority and to define her limits.

The preacher lamented the fact that Irish Roman Catholics prefer Protestant to Roman Catholic books, and he informed his audience that despondent men have lost all hope for Catholic Ireland.

The newly-created County Councils have in many places set themselves (in obedience to priestly wire-pullers) to pass bye-laws against street preaching, and to try and boycott Protestant banks. It is only fair to say that, in regard to both projects, there is a strong and a growing tide of popular opposition. The following is a copy of a letter written by a Dublin Roman Catholic in reference to the attempt to stop the preaching of the Gospel.

"Enclosed I beg to send you a newspaper cutting, with reference to the passing of a bye-law by the Cork County Council to prohibit street preaching. Though a Catholic, I consider this a most narrow-minded and retrograde proceeding. While the Cork civic chair was occupied by a Parnellite (who, by the way, was a Roman Catholic), these street preachers were allowed to exercise their rights as citizens, and the disgraceful scenes of previous years were not repeated.

"In England the fullest liberty is accorded to Roman Catholics in this matter. I have frequently seen their Whit-Week processions in various Lancashire towns, and no one has ever attempted to molest them. But withal, some of the uninstructed Catholics in England are unwilling to permit the free expression of opinion if opposed to their views. I happened to be in Manchester when Rev. Thos. Connellan was delivering his addresses, and the riotous attempts to break up that gentleman's meetings contrasted very unfavourably with the tolerant attitude of other religious bodies towards the Catholics."

The above is a fair specimen of what one may hear in all directions from thinking Roman Catholics. But the priests, especially the younger generation of them, are losing their heads. In all directions they are threatening Protestant merchants who advertise in The Catholic, Mr. Connellan's monthly magazine.

But priestly wrath will not stop the spread of the Gospel. Mr. Connellan never had greater access, never was welcomed with more heartiness. So vain have been all ecclesiastical thunderbolts hitherto directed at his head, that the Roman authorities are now trying to disarm him by sweetness and flattery. Dr. Long, of Limerick Medical Mission, has lived down the storm raised by Father Slattery.

Aged Christian Blind.—The nineteenth anniversary of the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind, Hanley Road, Crouch Hill, was held on June 2. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided. The report showed that seven had died and that eleven had been received during the year. The chairman made an earnest appeal for funds to enable the Homes to do all the work of which they were capable. The branch at Southend, to which sixty had been sent, could do vastly more work if there were more funds at disposal. Many are waiting to be sent down for change. Various other friends spoke on behalf of the good work maintained by the institution.

Open-Air Mission, Ireland.

THE open-air work during the year 1898 was more successful than in any previous year. The faint-hearted predicted disaster, but victory was divinely granted. Ten new towns were added to the ever-lengthening list, in whose streets a free salvation is now preached.

The "1798 Demonstrations" helped rather than hindered the street preaching in most places, and nowhere was violence experienced; indeed, this is a thing of the past now. Even in Sligo the aspect of affairs has entirely changed, and the preaching in that town is held regularly to attentive crowds, who appear each time more and more interested.

In 1893 open-air preaching in Ireland was unknown outside of Ulster, except in four towns; now it is practically an acknowledged institution in no less than thirty-four of the largest towns throughout the south and west. The Gospel is preached to hundreds, nay thousands, of attentive Irish men and women who never heard the message in its simplicity before. We believe that the Lord who has given this open door is blessing his word to the salvation of souls.

A worker from the South of Ireland writes:—

A few days ago I received a letter from a woman who recently came to Cork, and who listened to the street-preachers. She says, "I never heard anything so beautiful in my life. I have been led to trust in Jesus, and I am resolved to live for Him."

A sailor, who used to strike us with his clenched fists, has also been truly converted to God. He gave his testimony in a public meeting, and said it was his cruel conduct to the preachers that convicted him of his condition as a lost sinner, and that, as such, he had fled to the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation.

A friend from the West writes encouragingly thus:—

Mr. D. R., the eminent evangelist, said to me one Sunday, at the close of the preaching, "That was a wonderful meeting. I am glad I came to it; it was splendid." Mr. William Irving, of Scotland, described another service as "the best open-air meeting he had ever been at!" Another gentleman said, "I would walk all the way from my home in Nenagh to Galway and back again for the privilege of speaking at such an open-air service."

When we think of the awful storm that greeted the preachers four years ago, it is something extraordinary to notice the present great change in the feeling of the people.

The success of the present year has been greater than ever, and the acceptance of the preachers more marked. Several new towns have been opened without any opposition, and all the old places are being worked with renewed vigour. Every day the agents of the Mission are at work in different parts. Of course all the places or towns where open-air preaching is now carried on are not worked by this Mission. The object of the Mission is to start the preaching where it is practicable, and as soon as possible to leave it in the hands of local workers to continue. No salaries are paid to any of the agents at present, but the voluntary services of all suitable workers, clerical and lay, are thankfully availed of, and all expenses paid by the Mission. The average travelling expenses per month amounts to £25. More could be done if there was more money.

The hon. treasurer of the Open-Air Mission for Ireland is Capt. R. Wade-Thompson, J.P., Clonsreagh Castle, co. Dublin.

Hospitals and Sunday Services.—A telephone connection between the London Hospitals and some places of worship was initiated on Hospital Sunday. The installation was carried out by the Electrophone Company at its own expense, for the benefit of the patients. The result was highly successful, every word being so distinctly audible that the various services could be followed with much satisfaction. The buildings connected included St. Michael's, Chester Square (Rev. Canon Fleming), Highbury Quadrant Chapel (Rev. W. J. Dawson), and St. James' Hall (Rev. Hugh Price Hughes).

A Holiday Cottage.—Sister Joyce, of the West London Mission, writes from Craven Hall, Foubert's Place, Regent Street, W., desiring to know of a cheap furnished cottage, or part of one, not far from London, where she could take a few of the girls belonging to her Bible-class for a fortnight in August. The girls are chiefly tailoresses and dressmakers, and are perfectly quiet and respectable.

East End Jews at Mildmay.

BY the kind permission of Col. Morton, Rev. J. Wilkinson and his fellow workers gave their annual treat to Jews from Whitechapel in the grounds of the Mildmay Conference Hall on Tuesday last week. About 300 Jews were entertained, and in the course of the afternoon several open-air meetings were held, the addresses being listened to with attention.

After tea a party of Dr. Barnardo's young bell-ringers delighted the guests by their rendering of several charming pieces. A youthful band of pipers also played some rousing Scotch melodies, which afforded much pleasure to our Russian and Polish friends. Later on, a Gospel meeting was held, over which Mr. Wilkinson presided. After singing and prayer the chairman read Psalm xxii., on which he based an address. Col. Morton spoke some warm words of greeting to the Jews, and assured them that as long as he presides at Mildmay they will always receive a hearty welcome there.

Pastor George Soltau gave a rousing address from the well-known John iii. 16. The people returned to the East End by special train at 8.30, many of them giving expression to their gratitude for the kindness shown them by their Christian friends.

On the following day nearly 100 Jewish children, members of the Mission Night School, were also entertained in the same place, and a right happy time was spent by the youngsters and their teachers and friends. Again the weather was delightful, and the conduct of the little ones all that could be desired. After tea a truly happy meeting was held under the trees. The little ones sang sweet hymns, and repeated from memory the first chapter of Isaiah, from which Mr. Wilkinson gave a loving little address. Rev. Samuel Wilkinson (who left town for Russia the same night) closed the meeting with prayer.

Suffering Childhood.

CHILD-SUFFERING appeals to everyone; there is nothing more pathetic in this wide, wide, world than a helpless little cripple, a sightless bairn, an unhappy childhood, and one longs intensely to help them and make life a bit bearable.

Sadness and suffering are not confined to those who are old. The little burden-bearers are many to-day, and one often wonders where all the childish children are gone, and why one never hears the true and merry laugh in the slums. The most urgent present need of the "Ruth Elliott" Home of Rest for Poor Children, Enfield, is a home by the sea, where some of the worst and most suffering little cripples may be taken.

For eighteen long months Tommy has been bedridden. Sometimes he asks just to see his clothes, and looks at them with such longing eyes. He is but nine, and 'tis young to have to give up all the pleasures that little lads love. The brightest memory he has is of a visit to the sea, a month of perfect happiness, and his little white face lights up with joy at the very mention of it. "Are we going again? I believe I could get well there." Margaret, a little golden-haired girl of eight, has lost her leg. Her great grief to day is that she "will never be able to ride a bike," but we see far greater troubles in the days that are to come. She is most delicate, and in her own home can never get strong; her parents are poor, and surroundings are against her.

One could multiply these cases by the score. They are discharged from the hospitals long before they are strong, and have to go back to the poverty and neglect of their own homes, where they never get a chance. No mansion is wanted, no elaborate building; simply a pretty, convenient house, where the little ones may go and be nursed back to health, and learn the meaning of "Home, Sweet Home." The work has the warm support of Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, Rev. V. Travers Macy, M.A., vicar of Clay Hill, Enfield, and others. Communications should be addressed to Miss Annie Priest Peck, hon. sec., Ruth Elliott Home, Enfield, N.

Invalid Children's Aid.

THE work of the Invalid Children's Aid Association has been carried on during the past year with much energy and proportionate success. Over 600 fresh cases were assisted. This work appeals strongly to those who have the welfare of sick little ones at heart; especially to those mothers among our upper classes who look upon their nurseries as their most precious jewel cases, and rejoice in their children as treasure untold. Many of our "slum babies," who have never known anything but the poorest and most squalid surroundings, and whose nursing care has been of the scantiest, develop various forms of disease, and so start upon their life career handicapped from the outset.

The after care of children discharged from hospital is an important part of the work, and many invalids are sent to nursing and convalescent homes in town and country or to the seaside. Some 270 cases appear by the report to have been benefited in this way during the year.

The fundamental idea of the founder of the Invalid Children's Aid Association was to find a friend for every seriously invalided child among the poor of London, and to this end the committee has strenuously worked for the last eleven years. When it is remembered that the population of this great city increases at the rate of some 50,000 per annum, the field of work is felt to be decidedly large. There is room for any number of workers, and the Association asks for such as are not afraid to visit the children in their own homes, or who would be willing and capable of directing a staff of visitors in some particular district.

Another part of this work consists in supplying surgical supports, invalid carriages and perambulators, crutches, and many other necessaries and medical comforts which are beyond the parents' means and are most essential to recovery.

Another feature of this movement may be noticed, namely, the training given to those boys and girls who are sufficiently recovered to learn a trade. Eleven cripples were placed last year in training Homes in addition to twelve similar cases already under supervision.

Funds are greatly needed to enable the committee to carry on the work. All information can be obtained from the Secretary, Mr. H. G. Evered, 18, Buckingham-street, Strand.

M. F. E. H.

British Jews' Society.

FOUNDED by the late Rev. R. Herschell, in association with Rev. Robert Murray McCheyne, Dr. James Hamilton, George Yonge, and other worthies of a past generation, the British Jews' Society has had a glorious record, and is to-day engaged in a blessed ministry in many lands. The missionaries number twenty-two, and the voluntary helpers complete the hundred; but there are several doors which the committee is earnestly desirous of entering.

The fifty-sixth annual meeting, held a few days ago, was presided over by Rev. D. A. Herschell, a veteran in the work, the last of the six brethren of that name who were gathered into the fold of Christ many years ago. A stirring report was read by the secretary, Rev. Dr. Dunlop, in which was proposed a Twentieth-century Million Penny Fund, after which an address was delivered by Rev. Wm. Cuff. Having recently returned from France, Italy and the Holy Land, Rev. A. Sternberg told an encouraging tale of work in progress, and enlarged upon the pressing need of more witnesses for Christ in great centres of Jewish population. In Rome, the message of salvation was listened to with attention by a number of Jews, and the same was the case in Naples.

Passing on to notice his visit to Jerusalem, Mr. Sternberg said that it was his privilege to speak to several hundreds of Jews, incurring the stern indignation of some of the more prejudiced of the race. In fact, one day he and his wife were heartily execrated by a body of Hebrew women, who followed them through the streets as far as the Valley of Hinnom. The dread associations of Tophet well served the memories of the angry folk, who, pointing to the horrid spot, exclaimed, "It is there that you will be cast for bringing idolatry to our Holy City!" It was not difficult, said Mr. Sternberg, for us to understand the remark, for there were then in Jerusalem some 8,000 Russian pilgrims perpetrating acts of idolatry in the streets as they knelt before saints and shrines on their way to the so-called Holy Sepulchre. And not knowing the difference between the Christ of the Gospel and the Christ of the idolatrous churches, the people visited us with abuse and curses that were neither called for nor deserved. In some instances, he added, we were able to make explanations, and our words were kindly received.

In conclusion, Mr. Sternberg sought to emphasize the proposal mentioned by Dr. Dunlop, and would like to call it the "Herschell-McCheyne Twentieth-century Million Penny Fund." By help thus received it is hoped to resume missions in France, Italy, and Palestine. Full particulars of this undertaking may be had from the offices of the Society, 96, Great Russell Street, W.C.

White Cross League.

SIR,—May I draw attention to a point calling for very serious consideration. We must allow that auricular confession is an honestly originated and well meant, if mistaken, endeavour to combat the sin which exists in the world. What particular sin it is popularly supposed principally to deal with is evidenced by the prevailing tenor of the objections urged against it.

If we would guard ourselves against the dangers and abuses which accompany this mode of dealing with this sin, it is surely our duty to suggest and adopt some other method, unless it is proposed to expunge the seventh commandment from the Decalogue and very large portions from the New Testament. What would St. Paul or St. Jude have thought of the ostrich-like policy which is adopted by so many professing Christians of the present day? And yet the state of our streets, the tendency of modern literature, and recent drama, render it impossible for us to remain in ignorance of the crying abuses of our times.

Only the other day the dramatic critic of our leading journal concluded his review of a new play produced at the Grand Theatre, Fulham, with the following words:—

"One would not venture to predict a long life for it in London proper, because it is quite inoffensive and free from vulgarity."

The apathy displayed on the subject is incredible to anyone who has not to deal constantly with this painful subject.

The White Cross League is the only large society, as far as I am aware, now in existence which deals with the evil on thoroughly safe and comprehensive lines.

Our objects are to promote—

I. Purity among men.
II. A chivalrous respect for womanhood.
III. The preservation of the young from contamination.
IV. Rescue work.
V. A higher tone of public opinion.

I venture to claim that everyone who dreads the establishment in our country of a system of habitual auricular confession should at least give effect to his objection by supporting us in our endeavour to make our objects known to and adopted by every man in our country.

The evil is too wide-spread and aggressive for us to ignore it. Let those who object to its being dealt with in secret come forward and help us to resist it in the open.—Yours faithfully,

C. A. Bourne.

7, Dean's Yard, Westminster Abbey, S.W.

Union Hall Mission.—For many years the Gospel has been faithfully preached at Union Hall and the other evangelistic centres in North-west London which are connected with this useful Mission, and the workers are able to report steady progress. The Gospel services and Sunday schools, as well as the special meetings held for the benefit of various sections of the community, have been a great blessing to the poor people who are gathered in. Hon. Treasurer, Mr. William Holmes, 156, Alexandra Road, London, N.W.

The Mildmay Conference.

PROGRAMME OF MEETINGS.

Tuesday, June 27.

ROOM No. 4, 7 a.m., Prayer Meeting, Mr. James E. Mathieson. Large Hall, 11 a.m., "He appeared to put away sin," Lord Polwarth (chairman), Rev. Hubert Brooke, Rev. F. B. Meyer; 3 p.m., Bible Reading, Rev. George Soltau.

Room No. 6, 3 p.m., Scripture Gift Mission and Crystal Palace Bible Stand, Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Colonel Philips, Mr. Walters. Room No. 4, 3 p.m., Mildmay Mission to the Jews, Lieut.-General Sir W. Stirling, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, Rev. J. Wilkinson; 4 p.m., Prayer Meeting for Israel, Rev. J. Wilkinson; 4.30 p.m., Mildmay Mission at Hebron, Mrs. Bowie, Rev. B. H. Alford. Room No. 5, 3.0 p.m., the Bible League—Archæology and the Scriptures, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, and Rev. John Tuckwell; 4.15 p.m., North Africa Mission, Mr. G. T. Edwards, Pastor J. Stephens, Mr. E. H. Glenny, and Mr. G. B. Michell, Tunis. South Tent, 3.0 p.m., Medical Missions, J. L. Maxwell, Esq., M.D., E. Percy Paton, Esq., F.R.C.S., R. F. Owen, Esq., M.R.C.T.I., and Herbert Lankester, Esq., M.D.; 4.15 p.m., Soldiers' Christian Association, Sir George Williams, Colonel G. Philips, Hon. Sec., Qr.-Mr. Sergt. Luchford, Sergt. Inst. Lazzell, Sergt. Grant, R.M.L.I., and others. Mulberry Tree, 3.0 p.m., Christ's work among the children, Rev. Canon Fleming, and Dr. Barnardo; 4.15 p.m., Children's Special Service Mission, Rev. E. A. Stuart, Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, Mr. H. Hutchinson, and others.

Large Hall, 7.0 p.m., Rev. H. E. Fox, and Rev. N. Vickers.

Wednesday, June 28.

Room No. 4, 7.0 a.m., Prayer Meeting, Hon. R. Moreton. Large hall, 11.0 a.m., "Now to appear in the presence of God for us," Lord Polwarth, Rev. C. A. Fox, and Dr. Geo. Hanson; 3.0 p.m., Bible Reading—The Priesthood, Rev. Hubert Brooke.

Room No. 6, 3.0 p.m., Zanzibar Strangers' Rest, Mr. John Cory, Rev. J. G. Train, Dr. Harry Guinness, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Knapman, and Mr. J. T. Isaac. 4.15 p.m., "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Harry Guinness, and others. Room No. 4, 3.0 p.m., Missionary Meeting, the Bishop of Sierra Leone, Rev. C. Jukes, Madagascar, Mr. Eugene Stock, and Rev. J. Boegner, Zambesi. Room No. 5, 3.0 p.m., British Syrian Mission, Rev. E. W. Moore, Miss Bazett, Syria, and Miss Lord, Tyre; 4.15 p.m., Miss Leigh's Paris Homes, Rev. J. G. Pilkington and the Hon. M. Winifriede Sugden. South Tent, 3 p.m., Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, Major-General Hatt Noble, Rev. Dr. J. Spence (Belfast), Rev. Prebendary L. B. White, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Colonel Morton, and others; 4.15 p.m., South African General Mission, Mr. A. A. Head, Mr. T. B. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Maynard, and Mrs. Goslin; 5.30 p.m., Prudential and London Banks Prayer Union, Mr. T. H. Wharrie and Rev. F. S. Webster. Mulberry Tree, 3 p.m., Young Abstainers' Union, Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton, Mr. A. C. P. Coote, Mr. Jasper Keeble, and Mrs. Hind Smith; 4.15 p.m., Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., Mr. J. H. Tritton, Sir George Williams, Rev. E. J. Kennedy, Mr. Frank Anderson, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Lady Hope, Hon. Emily Kinnaird, Sister Lucy, Miss Monod, and Miss Ruth Rouse.

Large Hall, 7 p.m., Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, and Mr. W. R. Lane.

Thursday, June 29.

Room No. 4, 7 a.m., Prayer Meeting, Mr. Edward Trotter. Large Hall, 11 a.m., "He shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation," Lord Polwarth, Rev. H. B. Macartney, and Rev. Alfred Bird; 3 p.m., United Communion, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor.

Room No. 4, 3 p.m., Bible Reading, Rev. F. B. Meyer. Room No. 5, Christian Literature in the Mission Field, Mr. Eugene Stock, Rev. George Owen (Pekin), and Mr. D. J. Legg. Room No. 6, Parents' Prayer Meeting, Rev. D. B. Hankin. South Tent (after the Communion), Evangelisation Society, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Hon. R. Moreton, and Mr. John Wood. Mulberry Tree (after the Communion), O.A.M. The Gospel at Races and Fairs, Sir H. H. Bemrose, M.P., Rev. J. G. Train, Mr. H. W. Maynard, and Mr. Frank Cockrem.

Large Hall, 7 p.m., Lord Polwarth, Rev. W. R. Mowll, and Rev. Preb. Webb-Peploe.

Anchorage Mission.—The annual report of this well-known society states that the committee are again able to report humbly and thankfully that a large number of those who have been rescued through the "Anchorage" are living respectable and in many instances consistent Christian lives. All the year's cases, except those still in the insitutions, have either returned to their friends or have been placed by the Mission in suitable situations. Secretary, Mr. A. J. S. Maddison, 32, Charing Cross, S.W.

Dr. Barnardo and the Waifs.

OUR readers will most probably have noticed in our advertisement pages the announcement by Dr. Barnardo of the formal act of incorporation, under the Board of Trade, of the homes and other institutions under his care. The title by which the work will henceforth be known will be "The National Incorporated Association for the Reclamation of Destitute Waif Children, otherwise known as Dr. Barnardo's Homes." We naturally regret the virtual disappearance of the old familiar title, "Dr. Barnardo's Homes;" but if the new step conduces to the prosperity of the institutions that matter may be waived.

In the current issue of his magazine (which is now designated The National Waifs Magazine, instead of Night and Day), Dr. Barnardo adduces the advantages that he hopes to secure for the work by the change. The new title, he says, expresses more clearly the nature and sphere of its operations; probably the short title will gradually come to be "The National Waifs Association" or "N.W.A." The work of the Homes is in the strictest sense "national." Incorporation, moreover, provides to a greater extent than before for the continuity and preservation of the work. It also secures certain definite objects, which, as the founder, Dr. Barnardo has always had at heart —the diffusion of Protestant Evangelical views and the bringing up of the children in the Protestant faith, according to the Holy Scriptures. The articles of the new association limit the personal liabilities of the council, the trustees, and all others who carry on the work. Lastly, they leave the director unhindered power during life to continue the work as before, and, under certain circumstances, to appoint a colleague and successor.

The readers will doubtless agree that the foregoing are good objects to be sought after, and will pray that they may be attained. There will be no change, of course, in the character and scope of the work, and we see little prospect of any lessened need for it. We regret to notice that the immediate financial necessities of the Homes are very great.

Field Lane Refuges.

THE fifty-seventh annual meeting of this Institution was held at St. Martin's Town Hall, the Earl of Aberdeen in the chair. The Secretary (Mr. Peregrine Platt) read an interesting abstract of the report, which stated that the weekly attendances at the classes, meetings, and services have averaged 2,728, the purpose of all being to bring to bear upon the ignorant and the depraved a sacred influence and a reclaiming power. The work amongst the young had had special prominence.

The Industrial Schools maintain 140 boys and eighty girls. In addition to the Christian teaching included in the general course of instruction, the children receive Bible instruction from the clergy and ministers and other friends in the locality of Hampstead, where the schools are situated. The industrial training comprises instruction in tailoring, carpentering, bootmaking, breadmaking, gardening, and poultry farming. The girls are all trained for domestic service.

Amongst the oldest branches of the work are the Male and Female Refuges, which afford a haven of rest all the year round to respectable men and women in temporary destitution. The women are occupied in the laundry, and the men in cleaning the establishment and collecting the broken food from City warehouses. Half the inmates go out each morning and afternoon to seek employment, and the remainder are employed in the institution.

The Ragged Church Service, for those who have fallen from positions of respectability and comfort, continues its valuable work, and is attended every Sunday morning by from five to six and seven hundred men and women (at least five-sixths of the number are said to be men). The service is supplemented with a modest meal of bread and cocoa.

The committee are unfortunately confronted with financial difficulty. Their small reserve fund (the proceeds of legacies) has been entirely exhausted. The institution is at the present time literally living from hand to mouth, and the committee appeal earnestly for increased support.

Various friends gave addresses strongly advocating the work.

The Y.M.C.A.

NEW associations have been successfully started at Hyde and Failsworth in the Lancashire district, and Poole in the Southern district.

The annual meeting of the Shoreditch Association was recently held in the Town Hall of the district, Mr. W. McCall presiding. An encouraging report was given by the secretary, and several brethren gave addresses. The branch is hampered by a debt of £500.

The second large Y.M.C.A. building in Sweden has been opened. It is that of the Gothenburg Association, which has cost something over half a million kronor, and has a splendid situation in a central part of the town. The building occupies a whole block, facing four streets. The National Conference of the Swedish Y.M.C.A.'s takes place this year in the town of Norrköping.

London Y.W.C.A.

IN addition to its many existing agencies, the Young Women's Christian Association has recently formed two new departments. These are for the help of blind and deaf girls, to whom the advantages of membership of the Association are now secured by means specially adapted to their needs, such, for instance, as the printing in Braile type of the monthly letter to members.

The work of the London Y.W.C.A. is varied and practical. Figures gathered from their new report show that during 1898 several hundred girls in business have been lodged in their twenty-six homes in various parts of London; 1,026 more have been helped to situations by its Employment Agency, and 340 women and girls have received assistance in time of need from its Convalescent, Sick Aid, and Holiday Department. During last summer no less than 5,000 girls availed themselves of the free invitations to country gardens near London, arranged by the same department, while at the Holiday Home of the Association, Peace Cottage, Rickmansworth, 300 young women have taken rest and change for longer or shorter periods. Several hundreds have attended its gymnasiums and educational classes, and 16,000 books have been circulated from its Library Department.

Personalia.

General Booth returned to London on Monday from his third Australian tour. He has been away nearly five months, and has travelled 35,000 miles.

Miss Procter, of the Lebanon Mission and Schools, hopes on June 19 to be in London, where she would be pleased to attend drawing-room or other meetings, and speak on behalf of the work. Her address will be 78, Mildmay Park, N.

Rev. J. Manton Smith reports that his amputated leg is slowly healing up, and by the end of the year he hopes to be in a condition for active service again. Meantime he must take entire rest, and he desires prayer that he may patiently wait God's time. Mr. Smith is now residing at 74, Rutland Terrace, Billing Road, Northampton.

Tent Work.—A quarter of a century has passed since starting our Gospel tent campaign, and now we are in the thick of it still. Two tents are in full swing, and others are being erected in various districts. I have been preaching in my commodious wooden-sided tent (which is pitched on the old racecourse, Upper Knowle, an increasingly populous suburb of Bristol) for the last fortnight with encouragement in the way of blessing. I desire a continued interest in the prayers of your readers. JAS. A. VICARY.

63, Ashley Road, Bristol.

Militia in Camp.—About 1,000 men from various parts of the country are expected in camp at Brecon for a month's training. For the past twelve years, with various friends, I have visited the camp twice a week during the training distributing tracts and Gospel papers and taking scores of pledges. About one-third of the men who encamp each year are now abstainers, and there is a marvellous improvement in their conduct. Any literature received will be thankfully accepted, carefully distributed; some papers will, after the training, be sent to the barracks, hospital, infirmary, workhouse, and gaol, and distributed among postmen, railwaymen, policemen, and other public servants. D. DEVOIR THOMAS.

Castle Street, Brecon, South Wales.

International S.S. Lessons.

June 25, 1899.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners" (1 Tim. i. 15).

WE have spent six months studying the life and death of Jesus; the whole story is true and therefore worthy to be accepted. If Jesus Christ came on purpose to save sinners, I am a sinner. He came to save me. Am I saved? If not, why not? Perhaps I do not feel I need this salvation; my soul is dead and cold. The Holy Spirit can convince of sin. Ask Him to do so.

THE REVIEW

can be conducted in various ways. Questions may be written on slips of paper and drawn one by one. The scholar who answers receives the question to keep; all unanswered ones to be laid aside and answered afterwards by the teacher.

Or a diagram of a bunch of thirteen grapes and thirteen leaves, to be filled in with letters denoting the people and the topics of each week.

Go over the titles of the first ten chapters in John's Gospel which we gave last quarter, and then take those of this quarter.

Chap. xi. Lazarus raised from the dead.
Chap. xii. The Anointing at Bethany.
Chap. xiii. The Lord's Supper.
Chap. xiv. The Holy Spirit, the Comforter.
Chap. xv. The Vine and its branches.
Chap. xvi. The Spirit's Work.
Chap. xvii. The Lord's Prayer.
Chap. xviii. The trial of our Lord.
Chap. xix. The Crucifixion.
Chap. xx. The Resurrection.
Chap. xxi. "Lovest thou ME?"

Bring out in detail, by question and answer, the principal thing taught in each chapter.

THREE LESSONS ON JESUS WITH HIS FRIENDS.

I. The friend He raised to life (Question on each point).
II. The friend who loved and honoured Him.
III. The friends whom He served.

THREE LESSONS ON WHAT JESUS TAUGHT.

IV. The true way.
V. The true Helper.
VI. The true Vine.

FOUR LESSONS ON JESUS AND HIS ENEMIES.

VII. The one who pretended to be a friend.
VIII. His false accusers.
IX. They who condemned Him though innocent.
X. They who ill-treated and crucified Him.

TWO LESSONS ON JESUS THE KING.

XI. The King over death.
XII. The King over his people.

TAKE ALSO THE VARIOUS CHARACTERS, SEPARATELY.

Mary, Martha, Lazarus, two classes of Jews.
Judas, Peter, John, Thomas.
Annas, Caiaphas, Herod, Pilate.
The thieves on the crosses.
The women, their love and their work.
Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus.

PRACTICAL LESSONS.

The reality of Resurrection.
The eternal fragrance of one loving work for Christ.
The need of following Christ's example.
The Lord's Supper, a memorial service.
Only one way to Heaven.
The work of the Holy Spirit.
Union with and abiding in Christ.
Responsibility of those who reject Christ.

Tramps' Mission.—The efforts of this helpful Society in the spiritual interests of tramps and outcasts are continually demonstrated in various commonsense ways. During the past year Gospel addresses have been delivered in casual wards, and a number of unions supplied with Bibles, Gospel story books, wall-cards, and hanging rolls for the exclusive use of casuals. Thirty-four large unions received additions to libraries, but many workhouses supplied during the earlier years of the Mission are in great need of fresh wall-cards and books. The work also includes the visitation of tramps' lodging-houses. Union chaplains throughout the country speak in appreciative terms of the Mission's labours. Secretary, Miss S. E. Barnett, 2, Eldon Villas, Battledown, Cheltenham.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

A Strange Mistake.

WHAT would you boys and girls think, I wonder, if some day, when you were sitting in church, the preacher whom you considered a very wise and wonderful man, told his audience "that every one of them had two ears—one very broad reaching down to hell; the other very straight and narrow reaching up to heaven."

A missionary in South Africa once told this to his Zulu congregation at a time when he did not know their language very well. You would say: "It is not true; I don't believe it!" A native is fairly credulous, thinks a white man a very wonderful person indeed, and capable of doing almost anything; but I doubt very much if he could be made to credit such a statement! Of course it was all a mistake, and very easily explained.

The missionary meant to speak about the broad and narrow way, as spoken of in Matthew vii. 13, 14. "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. Because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life; and few there be that find it."

He wished to explain to the people that they had all two ways to choose from, the broad and the narrow, and so on. But the missionary made one simple mistake, a very easy slip; he used a wrong word. That was all.

Here are the two words in Zulu. Look at them well and see how easily he blundered. "Indhlela" means "way," "indhlebe" means "ear." He used "indhlebe" (ear), instead of "indhlela" (way). I can imagine how solemnly he would speak on such a subject and how puzzled his audience would look.

Perhaps you say: "What a dreadful mistake!" Yes, it was! We are all liable to mistakes, but how will it fare with those who at the end find that they have made the irretrievable mistake of choosing the broad way which leadeth to destruction, "when God has commanded us to enter in at the strait gate."

Just as the missionary made a very simple mistake, such an easy slip, so you may as easily and simply make the awful blunder of never entering the strait gate of Heaven through the precious blood of Jesus Christ, but slip along your own way along the broad path of heedlessness and sin.

The three girls you see in the picture live near the Majuba Mission Station, Natal. They have dressed themselves in their smartest blankets, all gaily adorned with brightly coloured beads, to have their photographs taken. They have put on all their bead ornaments and wire bangles that they wear when they go to their dances or beer-drinks, and one girl carries a native doll.

Their names are: uFanai, Intombi, and uBlau, and when this picture was taken some time ago they were all heathen. Now, I am sure you will be glad to hear that two of them have expressed the desire to "enter in at the strait gate." The third has not, as far as I know.

May God by his Spirit show them and us how strait the gate is to enter by, and how narrow the way is to walk in that leads to the eternal city. And, oh! do remember that there are thousands of heathen who have never yet heard of Jesus Christ, "the way, the truth, and the life;" and thousands who never can hear as long as we are selfishly indolent and indifferent. If you have not as yet joined the Young Home Helpers' Union for boys and girls, do so at once and thus help us by your prayers, your efforts, and your gifts.

Constance Grieve.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Gravesend, June 16-17; Southfleet, June 18; Acton Bridge, June 23-24; Birkenhead, June 25; Liverpool, June 26; Cranleigh, July 1-2; Kingston-on-Thames, July 3; Mr. J. Spiers, Harrogate: Mr. J. S. Tyler, Tunbridge Wells, June 18; Mr. Hankinson, Whitchurch, Hants, June 19; Penge, July 19; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Churchinford, Som.; Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Causley Wood, Wadhurst; Mr. Harrison, with caravan, Faggate Sussex, to June 16; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Wetheringsett; Mr. E. Fielden Nivin, Scunthorpe, Lincs, June 15-18; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Tunbridge Wells, June 29; St. Matthew's, Redhill, July 1; C.S.S.U. van (Mr. Chas. Harrison), till June 17, Fay Gate, near Crawley.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending June 24.

Sun., June 18	Acts xiii. 1-13		Thurs., June 22	Acts xiv. 1-18
Mon., „ 19	„ xiii. 14-25		Fri., „ 23	„ xiv. 19-20
Tues., „ 20	„ xiii. 26-41		Sat., „ 24	„ xvi. 1-18
Wed., „ 21	„ xiii. 42-52

(768)

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 180).

HIDDEN TEXT.

1. Complete the following texts, giving chapter and verse.

2. Take a word from each, and form a text to be found in Proverbs iii.

(a) "We should not trust in ourselves" (2 Cor. i-iii.).
(b) "In Him was life" (John i.-iii.).
(c) "I will dwell in the house" (Psalm xxiii-xxvi.).
(d) "The Lord is my strength" (Psalm xxv-xxix.).
(e) "Keep thy heart with all diligence" (Proverbs iii.-vi.).
(f) "All power is given unto Me" (Matt. xxvi. to end).
(g) "All Mine are thine" (John xvi.-xix.).
(h) "Rend your heart and not your garments" (Joel i.-iii.).

(Children under ten answer question 1 to any three; under thirteen to any six.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 179).

1. a. Simon called Peter and Andrew his brother (Matthew iv. 18).

b. James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother (Matthew iv. 21).

2. The cleansing of the leper (Mark i. 42, and Luke v. 13).

3. Seed sown on stony ground immediately it sprang up (Mark iv. 5).

Seed sown by the wayside—Satan cometh immediately (15).

Seed sown on stony ground immediately receive it with gladness (16).

Three Zulu Girls.

Seed sown on stony ground—immediately they are offended (17).

4. Matthew xxvi. 74 and John xviii. 27.
5. Æneas (Acts ix. 34).
6. (a) Matthew viii. 3. (b) Matthew xx. 34.
7. In healing Lazarus. Two days (John xi. 6).
8. Ecclesiastes xii. 1.

No. 179.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—
A—Violet Ashworth*, Jennie Almond, Ralph Aldwinckle.
B—Ella Berryman*, May* and Daisy* Bligh, Mabel Birney*, Herbert Braddon*, Emily Bridgewater*.
C—David Colville*, Lydia Cleary, Dorothy Cooper, Mabel and Ida Cole, Brereton and Kathleen* Code, Guy and Oscar Cross, Anna Chanyen, Arthur Cox, Kittie and Carl Cope, Daisy Clarke, Bessie Cheale*.
D—Nellie Dowsett, Constance, G., Hilda, and Elizabeth Drayson, Kitty and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Polognia Daws*, Ralph and Dorothy Daintree, Lucy Davidson, Stanley Drew, Mai and Ethel Davidson, Vera Dickinson, John Davies.
F—Kitty Fausset, Temperance* Foskett, Vincent and Mabel Fleet.
G—Constance Gabbett, Clarice* and Bertie* Gale, Irene and Kathleen Gough, David Gardiner, Olive Grandy*.
H—Claude Hutchence*, M. J. Hill, Frances Harding, Ruth Hinder, Elsie Hatcher, Hetty Hill, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewer, Willie Hooper, Beatrice Hastings, Eric Hill.
J—Betty Jacobs, Emily Jones.
K—Maurice Kalinsky, Stanley and Eva Kalb, Nellie Keeley, Lily Kinvig*.
L—Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Gertrude Lambert, Margaret Lee, Blanche Lindup, Henry, May, Sidney and Edward Law.
M—Margie Marston, Evelyn Moir*, Elsie and Dorothy McMullin, Hedley Meader, O. L. Morice, May Mills, Lois Mewburn, Mabel Morris.
N—Valric Noel, George Nash.
P—Mildred Peters, Daisy Phillips, Kathleen Pincott, John and Hilda Pearce, Lilian Pearson*, Katie, Leonard, and W. Picknell, Mary Plumb.
R—Winifred Roberts, Alice Reid, Kate Rosenbloom, Ethel Rowe, Nora Read, May Reed.
S—Solomon Stockfish, Betty Stocks, Esther Simmons, Joseph Stephens, Dryll, Amy*, and Fanny Stileman, Annie Shelley, Laura Standen*, Mary Seed*, Flora Simmons*, Kathleen* and Douglas Shepherd, Mabel Stembridge.
T—Olive Taylor*, Florence, Ruby, and Eileen Tomlison, Herbert Tomkins, Olive Tritton.
V—May Vickers.
W—Greta Watson, Fred and Helen Webb, Sarah and Annie Wood, Noel, Phillis, and Cecile Wright, Dorothy White, Edith and Edward Wheeler, Digby Watson.

No. 178.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—
A—Gladys Allan, Ambrose Adams, Percy Allen, Enderby Anderson, William Aston.
B—Susette* and Mary* Beck, Mabel Birney*, Reginald Bulteel, Robert Browne, Massy, Allen, and Con Baker, George and Colin Brown, L. S. Browne, Stanley, Lily*, and Gordon Boxer, Leonard Bentall*, Ashley Bowker*, Eva Browne, Maud, Sylvia, Dorothy, and Evelyn Barrett, Edith and James Barker, Dorothy Berry, Mary Bryant, Frank Avory, Lillian, and Teresa Blackie.
C—Alice Crang, Duncan Campbell*, Gussie Clark, Edith and Dora* Corrie, Walter Carter*, Gladys and Beryl Calvert, Cicely and Millicent Craven, Richard Cornthwaite, Lois Craven*, Phyllis Cotterell, Isabel and Mabel Cardlin, Dorothy Clarke, Henry Chaney*, Daisy Clarke, William and Mary Charles, Nellie and Janie Crawford.
D—Ernest Davies, William Dilly*, Dorothy Dyke, Gordon Duncan, Vera Dickinson, Elizabeth, Hilda, and Constance Drayson, Dorothy Dyke, Agnes and Catherine Darke, Constance Devenish-Meares, E—Muriel Ecroyd, Maud Eddey, Muriel Edwards*, Helen Eardley-Wilmot.
F—Flossy*, Agnes, Maggie, and Lewis Fullarton, Janet Fawkes, Aileen and F. A. Figgis, Arthur Findlay, Hyacinth Fitz-Simons, Helen Forbes, Marian* and James Freegard, Muriel and Agnes Fry, Bessie Freeman.
G—Thos. Groombridge, David Gardiner, Dorothy Garfit, Hedley George, Mary Glass*, Harry Gribble, Winnie, Dorothy, and Nancy Grove, Edith*, Margaret*, Stuart, Jack, and Dorothy Gray, Edith Grieve, Aileen Gardner.
H—Dorothy Harris, Ethel Hutchings*, Harcourt and Helen Hunter*, Kathleen Hamilton, Theodora Hill, Francie Hoyte, Willie Hopkins, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Marjorie Hogge, Ronald, Fergus, and Charlie Haig, Elsie Hatcher, Kathleen Hughes, E. Henderson*, Ella Hake, Freda Hunton.
I—Nellie Irving*, Isabel and Ami Inglis, Daisy Iredell, Mary Inglis.
J—Kate* and Norman* Johns, Lizzie Johnson,* Dora and Grace Joyce, Thomas Johnson.
K—Dorothy*, Grace*, and Philippa* Kerr, Jeanie Kyle, Flossie Key, Willie*, Isa*, Agnes*, T.* and Alex* Key.
L—Harriet Lynham, Guinefred Leigh, Edith Harry and Linda Lowe, Violet Lewers, Hannah Lovell*, Edith and Nellie Lockhart.
M—Christina Marshall, Charlie and Frank Medcalf, Daisy*, Nellie*, and Annie* Mackenzie, Howard* and Gwendoline Moir, Hilda Medill, Annie* and Elsie* Moule, Dora Marples, Beatrice Le Mesurier*, Harry Malaher, C. and Bessie Millar, George and Eileen McClure, Margaret Macphee, Margaret Morris, M. Mountstephen*, Dora Muir, Ian McGregor, Edith Monet, J. and Barbara Maconchy, Francis McClure, May Mills, Avie Mallory, Kathleen McClure, Bella and Abraham* Mack, L. R. McGregor, Tita and Daisie Mackenzie.
N—Maude and Amy Nottage, Edith and Ernest Nash, John Cissy, and Peter Nicholson.
O—Sidney and Katie Oliver, Maude and Eva Oakes.
P—John Pearse, Kathleen Pincott, Alice Palmer, Laura Percy, Walter Perryman, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Willie Petter, Edith Purkiss, M. and Louie Penny, Daisy, Vera, and May Petrides, Eddie, Jessie, Ada, Willie, and Winifred Palmer, Myrtle Perry, Evelyn Pechey.
R—Elmina, Jessie, and Isabel Roe, Marion and Gussie Roach, Herbert Rudd, Marjorie Rainey, Phillis Riddle, Gwennie Ravenhill, May Reed.
S—Minnie* and Bessie* Shepherd, Constance and Hilda Schaeffer, Helen Stalker*, Bessie Symes, Gladys, Eric, Gwendoline*, Undine*, Wilfred, and Mervyn Shaw, C. R. and Violet Salvesen, Bertha Stocker, Binford Sellwood, Ivy, Rosetta, and Muriel Sherwin, D. D. and T. M. Stanier, Evelyn Shaw*, Douglas and Kathleen* Shepherd, Elsie Slark, Lucy Soltau*, Janet Speed, E.* and Susie* Sutton, Dollie Salt*, Ronald Studd.
T—Alice* and Frank Thompson, Herbert and Frank Thompson, Olive Tritton, Olive Trench, Marjorie Tracey, Louie* and Nannie* Tibbits, Ethel Taylor*, Alice Truelove.
U—Queenie Upton*.
V—Kenneth Vining.
W—Pringle Wilson, Ernest, Kenrick, and Queenie Wakeford, Sydney Wisdom, Madge and F.* Wilson, Greta Watson, Connie Wood*, Agatha Ward, Charles and Amy* Wingrave, Charles and Winnie Williams, Robert Weddell, Louisa*, Lissa*, Violet, and Claude Walker.
Y—Gladys, Eva, and Maurice Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 171—Cuckoo Lister*. No. 172—Daisy McArthur, W. B. Henderson. No. 173—W. B. Henderson, Lottie, Rotha, and Ivan St. George. No. 174—Lottie, Rotha, and Ivan St. George, Charlotte Cane. No. 175—Frank and Vera Sjöström. No. 176—Frank and Vera Sjöström, Ina*, Nettie*, Kate* and William* Thomson. No. 177—Ina, Kate* and Willie* Thomson.

Personal.

F. A. and A. E. Figgis, Kathleen Pincott, M. A. Allen.—Thank you for your flowers. They have been much appreciated.

George O'Beirne, Theodora Hill, Gussie Clark.—I am sorry you have been ill, but hope you are getting on alright now.

Edith and Edward Wheeler.—You should have given three texts to each of the terms used.

Mabel Morris.—That was a bad accident; I am glad you have now got your arm out of the sling, and can do your Searcher again.

Violet Lewers.—I am glad to welcome you as a new "Searcher."

Uncle Tom's Cot.—D.D. and M.A.M., 1s.; L., R., I., and E. St. G., 1s.; P. Methodist Sunday School, H.H., 3s. 8d.

Uncle Tom.

Central Morocco Medical Mission.—The annual report of this work, of which Dr. Robert Kerr is director, tells a story of progress and development. From Rakat, Salee, and Larache as a basis of operations, a deeply interesting work is carried on among a population of from six to eight hundred thousand people, all living in tents. Copies of the report may be had from the hon. secretary of the mission, Mr. Grahame Wilson, 13, Royal Terrace, Crosshill, Glasgow.

Village Work in France.—There is now a very open door in France for village work. God's Word and tracts are, as a rule, well received, and opportunities occur for speaking to some about Jesus as the only Saviour. Will two ladies, who speak some French, and desire to serve the Lord in this way, offer to help in work among the mountain villages of Savoie? Very good climate and beautiful surroundings, with inexpensive living. Further particulars given by the Misses Wellington, now in England; they may be addressed, 90, Abbeville Road, Clapham Common, S.W.

American Medical Students.—On the invitation of the U.S.A. brethren, Dr. Williamson began in October last a tour of the medical colleges in the States, the object being to deepen and widen among students of America the interest in medical missions. This tour closed in March with a nineteen days' campaign among the medical students of Chicago. During the six months, Dr. Williamson visited eighteen cities in ten States, addressing audiences numbering in all close on 7,000. Forty-one addresses on medico-missions were delivered, and there were twenty-four directly evangelistic talks. During the tour the doctor had the privilege of one hundred and seventy-one personal interviews with men and women about their life work.—Medical Missions.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

WE hope our readers will not fail to peruse the two utterances of Canon Fleming at the Dublin Y.M.C.A. Convention, reported in this issue. They are of especial interest in view of his high position in the English Church at the present time.

A lady, ordering our nine shilling parcel of Protestant books, writes that she will gladly distribute the copies of The Christian, as for the last twenty years she has posted from six to ten copies to country places every week.

We are greatly obliged to this and all other friends who thus enable us to extend our influence. The expenditure of sixpence or a shilling a week in this way would be an easy matter for many readers, and it would bring them into pleasant and profitable correspondence with those on whom the boon was conferred. Pardon a personal question: Will you do what you can in this way?

Few more useful proposals have emanated from the London School Board than that embraced in a recent resolution to give to young convicts in Her Majesty's prisons education in evening schools. The fact that the eyes of some people are open to the need of aiding criminals to improve themselves, is itself an effort after reform of a sure kind. There can hardly be two opinions as to the benefit likely to accrue from such evening classes. We do not seek to pamper criminals, but we warmly advocate the adoption of any measure that will help the prisoner when his sentence has expired to retrieve the past, and start again with improved prospects of doing right for its own sake.

We wish that municipal electors would keep in mind how great a responsibility rests upon them for the moral condition of the town of which they are citizens. Take, e.g., the power they have over public-houses. The magistrates licence the public-houses, but the police inspect them, the police are appointed, paid, pensioned, dismissed by the Watch Committee, the Watch Committee is chosen by the Town Council, and the Town Council is elected by the ratepayers. On the people, therefore, the responsibility ultimately rests. Now, members of the drink trade are always seeking a position on these Town Councils and Watch Committees for purposes of their own. The great desideratum in every council and committee is men who will do their work without fear or favour, men having only one purpose, to do good work for the people.

The Metropolitan Free Church Federation has been making preliminary arrangements for its share of the National Mission, which is being projected for the beginning of the century in the Free Churches of the country. It is suggested that London should slightly precede the provincial districts, in order to be able to command the services of missioners who would otherwise be engaged in their own centres. The time for commencing the movement will probably be the third week of January, 1901. A week of mass meetings of Christians in great public buildings, with a view of arousing them to a due sense of the importance of the work, will precede the proper work of the mission, which will then follow in local centres, of which there will be about 200 in London alone. After this the country districts would follow suit immediately. The plan is a great and noble one. If adequately and worthily carried out, it should not only command the Divine blessing on countless multitudes of individual souls, but give a grand impetus to Evangelical Christianity in England at the outset of the new century.

The statement, on the authority of more than one keen observer of American life, that "Christian Science" (so-called) is spreading in America, is one to cause sad reflections. There is neither Christianity nor Science in the movement. It is simply a revival of the great Gnostic heresy in a modernised form, and is the fruit of a morbid religious attitude of mind working on the basis of a false philosophy of nature and life. It finds its chief votaries among those who are out of sympathy with the Evangelical faith, but who long for a "faith" of some kind, with which to still the cravings of their spiritual natures. This is the condition of thousands in every country. Those who refuse the "bread of life" try to satisfy themselves with "husks" of various kinds. In the end they will "perish of hunger," unless they return to the "Shepherd and bishop of souls."

The steady decline of the clergy of the Church of England in social standing and in education, is made the occasion for some curious remarks by the Rev. A. C. Deane in The Nineteenth Century. He says that the number of candidates for orders is diminishing, that their quality as well as quantity is lowering, that the younger clergy almost take a misguided pride in their ignorance. "Their preaching ability is low from the fact that they are ill-read. . . . Nearly all the men who nowadays take orders belong to the lower middle classes. The farmers' and shopkeepers' sons are sent to theological colleges and are then ordained." The prospect is that ultimately "the people will have no more respect for their clergyman than they have for a dissenting minister." As a matter of fact, dissenting ministers have no reason to complain either of their social standing or the respect in which they are held. Those who are worthy of their work and office have all the respect to which they are entitled; and we suspect that the same is and always will be true of clergymen likewise.

Writers in magazines and papers are often distressing themselves about the quantity and quality of ministers of the Gospel; and by quality they mean, either partially or wholly, social birth and standing. They want the Gospel to be preached by "gentlemen." This accords with a certain peculiarity of British nature: the soldier prefers to be led by a gentleman, and the sailor looks up to a high-born captain; nevertheless, the distinction is not recognised in the New Testament. Grace, not birth, is the qualification of a minister. The anointing of the Holy Spirit, conferring power and wisdom, not the gentleman's pronunciation and manner, is the requisite. We are not objecting to men of birth and social standing—we are glad to see all sorts; but we cannot allow the accidents of life to be put in the place of the essentials of spiritual endowment, nor even to be unduly emphasised. The absence of "gentlemen," in the conventional sense of the term, may be a gain to the divine quality of the ministry, which ought to be a lowly service, not a lofty profession.

A correspondent writes to us as follows:—

By the death of Dr. Lawson Tait the anti-vivisection cause loses a most able and uncompromising advocate. Supreme in his own department of abdominal surgery, this eminent practitioner had the originality to perceive and the candour to expose the misleading and dangerous nature of deductions based upon vivisection experiments when applied to the treatment of human diseases. In a paper read before the Birmingham Philosophical Society on "The Uselessness of Vivisection," Dr. Tait examines in the most lucid and exhaustive manner the claims of modern vivisectors to valuable discoveries in the surgical treatment of diseases, and shows not only their futility, but in most cases their superfluity, the so-called discoveries having been made in other ways many decades and some a century or two ago. The death of this great surgeon, who had the courage of his opinions, and whose original genius has been so powerfully instrumental in advancing the art of surgery, often in opposition to the opinions of his professional colleagues, is an incalculable loss to the cause of curative science, and thereby to the human race. But the enduring benefits that his talents and labours have conferred on mankind, are an imperishable monument to his worth.

Another marvel of science is the power, discovered in a new form of X-rays, of steering torpedoes without the use of connecting wires. A young Swede, named Alex Orloff, discovered these invisible forces when he was working up some experiments in reference to the powers which rays of light possess in vibrating waves of the atmosphere. He can make torpedoes two miles and a half away do whatsoever he wishes, go backwards or forwards, go in a curve or in a direct line, turn to the right or to the left, sink or rise. Wireless telegraphy is quietly establishing itself in our thoughts as an accomplished fact; now we must get accustomed to the fact of force transmitted by an invisible ray of light. All these discoveries tend to produce conviction as to the reality of an unseen universe. The mightiest physical forces are unseen, and from that fact it may be easier for the mind of man to believe that the original force is God, who is a Spirit.

The fall of the French Ministry and the difficulty to form another, is the latest development of the Dreyfus trouble in France. Ministry after ministry has broken against this stubborn rock of offence. It stands out of the weltering chaos of French politics as the one immovable point of resistance to the shifting tides of opinion, and prejudice, and self-seeking. And the reason is that it is a great moral question. At the bar of conscience nations as well as individuals have to stand; and till its imperious demands have been satisfied no secondary question can be finally settled. The impressive teaching of the situation is that once the moral sense of a nation has been thoroughly awakened, no peace or quietude can be enjoyed till justice has been done and wrong fully righted.

That an enthusiastic meeting in exposition of Protestant principles should have been held at Boulogne, which is described as "a citadel of clericalism," at which there were between 700 and 800 Catholics, is a significant incident in the "awakening of France." Abbé Bourrier, who was the chief speaker, had a reception in marked contrast with that which he received at a previous gathering, which the priests had "packed" with a gang of roughs, who made speaking impossible. At the second meeting the public not only showed a determination to give the speaker fair play, but when the Gospel was eloquently expounded in its simplicity, many of the auditors, who said they had never before attended a Protestant meeting, avowed themselves Protestants, and a group of young men declared it to be their intention to found a society for combating clericalism. There are many proofs that the day is ripe for a great onward Evangelical movement in France.

The fact that till 1862, to read the Bible in Spain was an indictable offence, punishable with imprisonment, while fanatical and atheistical publications were freely disseminated, explains much of the religious condition of that unhappy country. The Religious Tract Society has since been busily at work creating and circulating healthy Evangelical literature in that land. Just now Spanish Protestants are collecting a sum of money as a practical proof of their gratitude to the Society, and a memorial is to be sent as an accompaniment of the gift, detailing the amount of good which has resulted from its audable efforts to enlighten the nation. This is one more proof that while the authority of Catholicism is based on keeping the common people in darkness and ignorance, the extension of true religious knowledge is everywhere felt to be an unspeakable boon. "More light!" is the cry of the down-trodden and neglected masses everywhere, and where the light of the Gospel penetrates, their hearts greet it with joy and gratitude.

The proclamation of perfect religious liberty in Madagascar is another severe blow to the cause of Jesuitism in France, as it is a great step in the progress of Christianity in the island. The bitter persecution of Protestants, which was initiated at the time of the French conquest, and the shameless confiscation of the London Missionary Society's schools and property, form one of the darkest blots in the history of modern Roman Catholicism; and that this policy has failed is one of the signs that the era of Catholic oppression is doomed all over the world. The Christians of Madagascar have passed through another fiery trial, and on the whole they have borne it nobly, and have come out of it purified. The future of our faith in the great French dependency will be looked forward to with interest among all Evangelical believers.

Rev. John Fitchett, the editor of the Australian Review of Reviews, gives some startling instances of the lengths to which the advocates of secular education have gone in Australia. In some of the colonies not only has the Bible been entirely excluded from the schools, but every mention of the name of Christ was deliberately expunged from the text-books used in Government schools. The schoolmasters were denied their right to take part in any religious work, even on Sundays. We are glad to hear that the pendulum is swinging the other way, and in New South Wales undenominational religious teaching is given and the Bible is read. Some of the other colonies are also coming into line.

Lord Overtoun's Reply.

FOR some months past anonymous pamphlets have in hundreds of thousands been circulated in Glasgow, making serious charges against Lord Overtoun, as to the manner in which he treats his workers in respect of wages, sanitary conditions, and Sunday labour, in his works, known as Shawfield Chemical Works, Glasgow.

At the usual monthly meeting of the Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign Committee, held on Monday afternoon in the Bible Training Institute, Lord Overtoun presided. Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming opened the meeting with prayer. Thereafter Lord Overtoun asked permission to make the following statement, which was most cordially received, and at the unanimous request of the meeting his lordship consented to its publication:—

"During all the years in which I have been engaged in public and religious work, I have refused to be drawn into newspaper controversy; and such an attitude appears to me to be all the more necessary when charges are made by anonymous writers. Acting upon this principle, I have refained from taking any public notice of certain pamphlets which for months past have been widely and persistently circulated throughout the country, containing articles by anonymous writers, directed against myself, and having special reference to Shawfield Chemical Works, in which I am a partner, and to the condition of the men employed at these works.

"It appears to me that it would be a serious matter, indeed, for public life were it be established that public men were liable to be compelled to reply to anonymous writers; or should it come to be believed by such writers that they had only to make their charges extravagant and scurrilous in order to render a reply imperative. Holding these views, I do not propose to reply to the charges which have been made against me. In response, however, to the suggestion of various Christian workers, who are deeply interested in the contemplated Evangelistic Campaign, and who regard the charges as an attack directed, not merely against myself personally, but also against a movement in which many interests are involved, I take this opportunity of saying:—

"First: That not only is Shawfield, like all other works, under the supervision of the Government Factory Inspector, but, being a bi-chromate work, such factory inspector is required, in his periodical visits, to see to the observance of additional special rules applicable to all bi-chromate works, such rules having reference to lavatories, respirators, etc. Further, being under the Alkali Acts, Shawfield is also under the supervision of the Government alkali inspector. I have reason to know that the factory inspector, whose most recent visits were made last week, is satisfied as to the sanitary and general condition of Shawfield works, while the alkali inspector reports Shawfield as standing high in the list of works as to immunity from gases and fumes.

"Second: As regards Sunday labour at Shawfield, it has always been a concern to my partner, Mr. Chrystal, and myself, that any Sunday work should be necessary, and our constant aim has been to keep it at a minimum. About three-fourths of the men do not work on Sunday, and no man is obliged to work on that day; nor does any man suffer prejudice by not so working. In the state of our chemical knowledge the carrying on of Sunday work has been a necessity, owing to continuous and complicated chemical processes, which go on night and day. Experiments having in view the reduction of Sunday work at Shawfield, have been proceeding for years, and my firm were enabled some time ago to diminish considerably such work. As the result of more recent experiments, Messrs. Stevenson, Carlile, and Co. (the only other Glasgow makers) and my firm have arranged at our first shift to make a trial of stopping the chrome furnaces. The cessation of labour on Sunday at Shawfield is a consummation which I have always ad very deeply at heart, and I am hopeful that the successful progress of our experiments may eventually enable this to be practically accomplished. I admit that, in view of any Sunday work going on at Shawfield, however necessary, I may have made a mistake in agreeing to head a deputation to the Town Council of Glasgow as to the Sunday opening of the People's Palace.

"Third: The wages and general condition of labour at Shawfield, as well as the treatment of men in case of sickness, accident, and old age, compare favourably with other works. This is borne out not only by the fact that the majority of the men who come to Shawfield remain—there being many men in my firm's employ who have served for periods ranging from twenty to fifty years—but also by the fact that after a strike in February last, though many of the men had found work elsewhere, they almost without exception returned to Shawfield so soon as work was resumed. I may add that strikes have rarely occurred at Shawfield, only four having taken place during the last twenty years. No man was ever dismissed from Shawfield because he belonged to a union or took part in a strike.

"Regarding the various statements in the pamphlets to which I have referred, I will merely remark that there is not therein, I think, a single charge of importance which is not either grossly exaggerated, or, as in many cases, absolutely untrue. My partner and I fully recognise our obligation to use all reasonable means to ensure the comfort and welfare of our workers, and we are anxious and will be ready to do all in our power towards that end."

Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

THE following letter has been addressed by Mr. Moody to the Glasgow Evangelistic Committee:—

My dear Lord Overtoun,—After so many years' absence from Glasgow, it is most encouraging to receive so cordial an invitation to again return to your city and be associated with so many true friends in the preaching of the Gospel.

The first impulse upon receiving your invitation was to accept; and, were my own personal pleasure only to be consulted, I would at once have replied in the affirmative. There are other considerations, however, that make it impossible for me to accept this opportunity of engaging in a work which, I know from past experience, would be accompanied with so many delightful associations, and would result in many true Christian fellowships.

The work in my own country has never been so promising as it is now. Destructive theology on the one side, and the no less evil spirit of extreme intolerance on the other side, have wrought wide dissension in many communities in America. Instead of fighting error by the emphasis of truth, there has been too much "splitting of hairs," and only too often an unchristian spirit of bitterness. This has frequently resulted in depleted churches, and has opened the way for the entrance of still greater errors. Under these conditions, the question of the authorship of the individual books of the Bible has become of less immediate importance than a knowledge of the teaching of the Bible itself; the question of the two Isaiahs less urgent than a familiarity with the prophecy itself.

These facts are being recognised by many of our leading churches, and some of our ablest ministers are turning to the preaching of the Gospel as never before. The coming year in America, I believe, is going to see a widespread evangelistic movement, in which I trust that thousands may be reached by the churches.

In addition to the great movement which is now beginning to make itself generally felt, there is an ever increasing demand being made upon me by the schools which I have established. These schools, with their 1,200 students, are growing and steadily developing, thus continually needing my presence.

For these reasons I believe that it is my duty to remain for the present in my own country; and, much as I should enjoy returning to Glasgow for such a campaign as you propose, I must decline. I sincerely appreciate the warm expression of fellowship which your invitation expresses, and would thank you for the friendship which has ever been accorded me by your Committee.

Trusting that God may crown your labours with heaven's richest blessing.—Believe me,

D. L. Moody.

East Northfield, Mass., May 23, 1899.

About Consecration.

By Dr. J. R. MILLER.*

NO word is more frequently used by young people in these days than the word consecration. Indeed, it is used so frequently, and falls from the lips so glibly, that there is danger of its true meaning not being always appreciated. Precisely, what do young Christians mean—or older ones—when they talk about consecration? What effect has their act of consecration upon their life?

Consecration is personal devotement to God. By this act we profess to set ourselves apart for God and for God's service. We confess that we belong to Christ because He has bought us with a price; and we say that we recognise his ownership and lay ourselves upon the altar for his use. If our act be sincere, we will regard all our life as belonging to Him. Our hands are his, to be used in doing his work; and they must be kept clean for Him, and do only worthy things. Our lips are his, to speak only for Him, and words only that will please Him. Our heart is his, to cherish only the affections, feelings, and motives which are consistent with his Spirit and his will. Our feet are his, to walk with God, and to run on his errands. Our money is his, to be used by us for Him. Our whole life is his; we are not our own, and we are to live for the honouring and glorifying of Christ's name.

But precisely, what does all this mean? The difficulty lies in bringing down this lofty ideal consecration from its spiritual and ethereal heights, and interpreting it into the common life of our common days. We do not live among the stars; we live yet on the earth. We have to do with earthly things. The greater portion of our time is taken up with what we call secular work and duties. We must live in human relations, in our home, in society, in mingling with people in business, in school, in amusements. How shall we carry out the principles of our consecration in this earthly life?

For one thing, we must live out the teachings of Christ in all that we do, in our daily life in the world, as well as in our relations with God. If young people are at school, they must be diligent in their studies, and kindly and unselfish in all their relations with schoolmates and teachers. That is,

THEY MUST BE CHRISTIANS AT SCHOOL.

In home life they must manifest, in all their relations with the members of their household, the affections and dispositions which are inspired by Christ. They must be thoughtful, kindly, patient, unselfish, not easily provoked, thinking no evil, ready in all ways and at all times to serve. If they are employed in any business or calling, they must do the duties which are assigned to them with faithfulness and with alacrity, never taking advantage of kindness to shirk work; always honest and truthful, always patient and courteous. In their social relations they must maintain the principles of Christianity, never forgetting, when they meet worldly or wicked people, that they belong to Christ, and are worthy of Him.

This does not mean that they should be talking all the time about religion—there is a time to speak out boldly for Christ, and there is a time when silence, even concerning religious matters, is better than speech. But it means that they are never to do anything inconsistent with the Christian life, anything that would bring reproach upon the name of Christ.

A little girl applying for membership in a church, when asked by the pastor what she thought it would be for her to be a Christian, replied: "I suppose it will be to do what Jesus would do, and to behave as Jesus would behave, if He were a little girl and lived at our house." There could be no better definition of a consecrated life. A Christian is always a Christian, wherever he may go. He is never off duty. He always represents Christ. He must always strive to be what Jesus would be, and to do what Jesus would do in his place.

One of the most common weaknesses of much of our consecration is the effort to grasp the thought to make the consecration once for all, rather than in detail. For example, each morning, as we begin the day, we may give ourselves to our Master just for the one little day. We may ask Him to take us, and keep us, and use us.

IN TOO LARGE A WAY,

We then take up our allotment of tasks for the day, feeling that it is Christ's work we are doing, and therefore that it is holy. It is just as much a part of our Christian duty to learn a lesson in school, to sell goods in the store, to perform a duty in the office, to plough in the field, to sweep a room, to cook a meal, as it was in the early morning to go apart for prayer and Bible-reading. We are to regard all the tasks and duties of the day as holy, and as part of our consecrated life.

If, then, in the providence of God, there break into our plan for the day interruptions—human needs, for example, which require sympathy, thought, time, or money—we are to regard them as fragments of service sent to us from God. They are bits of God's will breaking into our human plan; and we are to regard them as sacred, and do them cheerfully, even if they take our time and cost us trouble.

Living thus, holding our whole life to be used by the Master as He would use it, diligent in our business, losing no moment of time, we are to fill our day with tasks and duties well and faithfully done.

THIS IS CONSECRATION.

No other kind of living is worthy of the name. We cannot be always at prayer, nor always reading our Bible; and it is a mistake to think that consecration has to do only with these spiritual acts and exercises. It has to do quite as much with the secularities of life, although, indeed, this spirit makes all our duties holy.

Even our amusements and our pleasures are to be considered part of our life of consecration. Therefore, nothing must be entered into which would dishonour Christ. We should go to no place which we would not be willing to have Christ see us entering. We should engage in nothing which should make us ashamed if his face were to appear in the doorway.

There is a too common impression that nothing is religious save what is essentially religious in its form. Thus, many people fail to carry their consecration outside the church and the prayer-meeting. They are very devout in their feeling and manner while a service lasts, but fail to live devoutly when the service is over and they are mingling with their fellows. We should remember that consecration is not a matter of feeling, but of disposition, of conduct, of character, of words and deeds. If, therefore, it is something only for a holy place, or for a sacred service, which fades from our face and life when we go out, it is not genuine. Consecration is not a frame; it is a life.

It is never encouraging to see people put on an unusual solemnity of manner in an effort to be consecrated Christians. There are some good young men and women who seem to think that consecration should make them grave and serious. They talk in solemn, unnatural tones. They are oppressed with a kind of which makes them anything but lovely or lovable Christians in the eyes of other people. They may be thoroughly sincere; but their assumption of sanctity, as it appears in their bearing, makes them very imperfect representatives of Christ. It even leads some persons to suspect the genuineness of their religion.

SPIRITUAL SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS,

Thus, instead of honouring Christ by a goodness which is beautiful as well as true, they hurt their influence as Christians. Religion should be natural; anything that is unnatural is in so far un-Christlike. "Whatsoever things are lovely," is one of St. Paul's phrases describing the ideal Christian life. Sanctimoniousness is very unlovely. Persons who put on holy airs, fancying that thus they are proving themselves consecrated, are only showing their religious self-conceit. Simplicity is a mark of all beautiful Christian life. Moses was not aware of the shining of his face. The truest, divinest goodness

IS NEVER CONSCIOUS OF ITSELF.

True consecration does not require that a child's religion shall be that of the full-grown man or woman. One of the dangers of a young Christian's life is in this direction. He is apt to take his ideal from older Christians and to imitate them. We know what happens if we try to open a rosebud and hasten its unfolding: we only spoil the bud and hinder it from ever becoming a lovely rose. It is the same when a young Christian tries to be a grown-up Christian. The charm of the young Christian character is spoiled, and the life is so hurt that it will never be what it might have been if it had been left to develop naturally.

Consecration, to young Christians, therefore, means the beautifying, enriching, and sanctifying of their youth. Jesus himself waited thirty years in quiet before he entered upon his public ministry. His consecration led him to obey his parents, to help in the carpenter's shop, and to do the common duties that came to his hands. There can be no higher example for any young Christians. They are to do the duties that belong to their age, thus preparing themselves for the more serious responsibilities and the tasks of maturer years.

* Extracted from a delightful book recently issued by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton (2s. 6d.), called Looking Forward. It expounds a great many "Young People's Problems," and each is dealt with in the same intensely practical and sympathetic strain. The volume is very attractively got up, and would make a capital present for thoughtful young persons of both sexes.

Words to Workers and Others.

FACTS ABOUT SINNERS.

THE chief of sinners may be saved if they will repent.

The least of sinners will be lost except they repent.

Sinners often talk and complain of the sins of others when they have not repented of their own sins.

Dr. Nettleton.

CONDITIONS OF REVIVAL.

While prayer is the spirit of a revival of religion, the substance of a revival—the pillar and ground of all—is the sound, zealous, pointed preaching of Christ, the compliance with the command, "Go, stand and speak unto the people all the words of this life."

Burns of Kilsyth.

AN URGENT CALL.

I said, "Let me walk in the fields;"
He said, "Nay, walk in the town."
I said, "There are no flowers there;"
He said, "No flowers, but a crown."
I said, "But the skies are black,
There is nothing but noise and din."
But He wept as He sent me back,
"There is more," He said, "there is sin."

"THE PERFECT MINISTER!"

In my imagination, I sometimes fancy I could make a perfect minister. I take the eloquence of ——, the knowledge of ——, the zeal of ——, and the pastoral meekness, tenderness, and piety of ——; then, putting them all together into one man, I say to myself, "This would be a perfect minister." Now there is One who, if He chose it, could actually do this; but He never did. He has seen fit to do otherwise, and to divide these gifts "to every man severally as He will." John Newton.

PRAYER FOR EVANGELISTIC WORK.

The Holy Scriptures abound with declarations that the Lord heareth and answereth prayer. "He hath never said, Seek ye my face in vain." "We know that, if we ask anything according to his will, He heareth us." Nothing can be more eminently accordant with his will than the conversion of sinners; a work to which his express command hath summoned us, to which all our obligations have impelled us, to which all his promises have encouraged us, by which his Son is to be honoured, his purposes fulfilled, his kingdom established, and heaven filled with everlasting praise. John Howard Hinton.

THE SPIRIT OF SERVICE.

What a blessed change was wrought on Paul when cast to the ground! His own will was broken all to pieces, and now he is ready only for the service of Him whose name he so hated and whose servants he persecuted. "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" (Acts ix. 6.) These are the very words and characters of a true convert. And thus, the soul turned to Christ may in some cases doubt what is his will; but that once resolved, there is no deliberation whether to do it or not. He says not: If the service be honourable or profitable, that is, carrying worldly credit or profit in it, then will I do it; no, but whatever it is, if it be thine, and Thou appoint me to it—"Here am I." And this makes the meanest work of his station excellent. Archbishop Leighton.

Revival Days.

TWO old letters have been sent to us which have a special interest at the present time, when there are many longing for and expecting a fresh breath from heaven of God's converting and reviving power. The earlier letter tells of prayer for revival, and the later speaks of its beginnings. The second letter was written to the late Dr. Horatius Bonar by his brother, James Bonar, and contains, as will be seen, interesting references to people and places of historic import in the story of past revivals in Scotland:—

Edinburgh, Dec. 23, 1835.

Dear Friend,—Would that I had faith enough in prayer myself to use it as they do who have power and prevail. Whatever I may long for, the greatest thing I ever contemplated was, if I could find three women of my mind on the subject, to ask them to join me in entreating the Lord to send his Spirit with the words of our dear pastor, that they may not all fall to the ground.

Were I a minister, I should like it ill that people would not meet to pray for me without asking my leave and moulding the thing in my peculiar fashion. The Spirit goes with the unordained, though ministers do not all think so; and when you read the book I send you, you will see the revival at the Kirk of Shotts was under an unordained preacher, and the first prayer-meetings in some revived northern parishes began with boys in the fields and girls in a widows' cottage.

Perhaps if you were to show the book to Mr. H——, it might be the beginning of a meeting of ministers. The minister of Dunbarnie says the most refreshing association he knows is a monthly Presbyterial prayer-meeting. Would that there were such symptoms of life that people would resume the former habit of prayer-meetings!—Ever yours, Mary G. Lundie.

Edinburgh, January 18, 1840.

My Dear H——,—I returned from Collace a few days ago. I found C. and A. well, but somewhat disappointed at your refusal to be at Dundee next Sabbath, as they had heard from Mr. Cheyne and Mr. Burns that your discourse on last Communion had been blessed to not a few.

Burns has been and is still in Perth. He was to preach every night last week, and if the attendance continued as it began, the church would be over-flowing on all occasions. A plan has been adopted there, which has at least removed one ground of cavil, which is—not to allow the people to remain beyond ten o'clock, but to open the church during the forenoon expressly to give opportunity to all who wish to converse with the ministers. The meetings are in Mr. Milne's church, and he, along with Cumming and A——, have been present on several occasions assisting Burns. A great stir has doubtless been created, and in some instances there are grounds to hope a saving change has followed; but as yet Burns regards the work at Perth as only begun, though symptomatic of similar results to those in Dundee.

At Blairgowrie, I believe, there is still a deep impression prevailing. McDonald] proposed that, in testimony of their gratitude to God for his signal goodness during the past year, the people should make a free-will offering to his cause at the close of the year; with this they readily complied, and contributed no less than £52.

At Collace things seem going on much as usual, though there are one or two cases of a promising appearance. The church is filled on Sundays and the meeting not less so on Wednesdays. There is one woman now a regular attendant from a distance of three miles, who was awakened during the summer at Dundee.

I had a very interesting letter from Mr. Purves some time ago, telling me what was going on in Jedburgh. I hope the work proceeds, and by this time has reached Kelso. Our prayer-meeting continues to be pretty well attended. Mr. Liddle reads the revival tracts, and has also preached a series of sermons on the subject. To-night another prayer-meeting commences in our church, to be held weekly, on the present position of the church; and the elders have instituted several district meetings. There is much need to arouse.—Your affectionate brother, James Bonar.

History of the L.M.S.*

A CAREFUL perusal of Rev. Richard Lovett's History of the London Missionary Society has amply justified the great expectations suggested by the well-known importance of the subject. It is about four years since the Society completed its centenary; and in two handsome volumes we have an account of the hundred years of prayer and labour, sacrifice and conflict, perseverance and conquest. Letters and journals, minute books and biographies, have been digested into sixteen hundred pages, admirably set off with maps and portraits. In the words of the preface:—

The aim steadily kept in view has been to present to the reader an accurate and complete picture of the origin and the administration of the Society, and of the great results which have been achieved by the consecrated men and women who have, on the one hand, maintained the home administration, and on the other carried through the complex toil which the Society has undertaken in so many of the great mission fields of the world.

The child of revival, the Society was called into being by documents which have peculiar historical interest. Here we have the text of George Burder's "Address to the serious and zealous professors of the Gospel of every denomination, respecting an attempt to evangelise the heathen." The arguments employed are not yet out of date. Here is a familiar one:—

Our merchants venture into the burning and frozen regions, to trade with men of every colour and clime, for uncertain riches. And are there not yet among us numbers of ministers and pious youths, who would gladly fly to the ends of the earth, bearing with them the glad tidings of salvation? Let us but make the trial, and it will assuredly be crowned with success.

Needless to say, the confidence of these worthies was speedily realised. The Society was never strictly denominational, but designed to include adherents of several communions; in fact, at a meeting of directors in 1796 it was formally resolved, as that the Society's design was not to send to the heathen either Presbyterianism, Independency, Episcopacy, or any other form of Church order or government, but "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God." It was only after the lapse of years that the administration became practically associated with the Congregational body, whose members and adherents have made the work their own by loyal interest and liberal maintenance.

"A FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLE,"

Early trials and ultimate successes are here detailed in a singularly readable fashion, the various fields being considered separately. Great names appear on the scene, also many men less known to the world, but whose record is on high. The many portraits constitute a striking feature. The work as a whole fully justifies the claim of the preface that the Society has been so honoured by the Great Head of the Church as to be able to take a prominent place in many of the great achievements for the uplifting of humanity which the nineteenth century has witnessed:—

It was the first of modern Protestant Societies to begin work in Polynesia, in China, in Madagascar. The refusal of the directors of the East India Company to allow Haldane and Bogue with their two colleagues to go to India, led the Society to exert very powerful influence upon the movement which, in 1813, threw all India open to missionary labour. James Smith was martyred by the officials of Demerara; but this crime gave the impetus needful to carry the work of emancipation through its last stages. The work of Vanderkemp, Philip, Moffat, and Livingstone in Africa has profoundly influenced the colonial policy of Great Britain toward native races. And not the least noteworthy achievement of the century has been the constant and powerful reflex action upon the faith and zeal and self-sacrifice of the home churches of such great achievements as the mission to Tahiti, the conversion of Imèrina in Madagascar, and the mission to New Guinea.

As was also the case with several other important societies, the L.M.S. did not at once select and enter the spheres in which their best and most permanent work has been done. There is an interesting chapter in the second volume on missions begun and abandoned. Mention has already been made of Tahiti, famous through the voyages of Captain Cook and others, and towards which Carey had cast a longing eye. This island was early entered by the Society, and that in times when the Pacific Ocean was practically an unknown sea. Now we can go from London to Samoa in six weeks; a century ago, unless you were able to charter your own vessel, it might take you six years; and even in your own vessel the journey then occupied as many months as it now takes weeks.

Throughout Polynesia marvels have been wrought in the name of the Lord Jesus, as is admirably shown in a chapter giving "A Century's Results."

AMONG THE FACTS RECORDED

are (1) Heathenism, with its most degrading and superstitious customs and observances, including cannibalism, has practically disappeared from every island and group to which the Gospel has been carried. (2) Wherever the Gospel has gone, civilisation has followed in its train; in Tahiti, not a native would work regularly, or admit the advantages of civilised life, until he had embraced "the new doctrine." (3) Intercourse between the islands has been developed by the missionary ships. (4) Wherever the Gospel has been received, education has followed. (5) It is to missionary efforts that all South Sea literature is due. (6) Polynesia has herself become the centre of much valuable missionary extension work.

The growth of Christianity has, in fact, been rapid throughout the Pacific. Three sentences shall illustrate this.

Tahiti in 1810 was wholly heathen; to-day she is among the semi-civilised nations, with strong elements of Christian growth and culture. New Guinea in 1870 was a terra incognita, wholly in darkness, cruelty, and savagery of the worst kind; to-day she is full of points of light, from which the light will shine out ever more and more unto the perfect day. And what is true of the earliest and of latest Polynesian mission is true, in more or less degree, of every mission that has found a place between them.

The fascination attaching to effort in the islands of the South Seas has diverted our attention from India, China, and Africa, in which the L.M.S. has done a great work side by side with other societies. On this these volumes are deeply interesting, and very instructive; and the same may be said of the chapters on Madagascar. With abundant reason, will friends of missions thank Mr. Lovett for his noble work. Here we have the Acts and Monuments of modern missionary enterprise in many lands, and accordingly we have a "Book of Martyrs," comprising singularly pathetic chapters. The story of Madagascar stands out by itself for tragic details of persecution relieved by glorious fidelity to the faith on the part of native Christians. It has been truthfully said that Modern Missions have provided a new apologetic of the faith; in that sense, these handsome volumes occupy a place in literature of great value to the Church at large, as well as being of deep interest to the student of aggressive Christian effort.

* The History of the London Missionary Society, 1795-1895. By Richard Lovett, M.A. Two vols., with portraits and maps. (21s. nett. Henry Frowde.)

Fishermen's Hall, Barbados.—Dear Sir,—In a letter written to me by Mr. Weekes, an earnest Christian worker in Barbados, he says: "I wish that some Christians in England, who have money and loving hearts, could see the fishermen and their families worshipping God under a big tree on Sunday mornings, when the weather permits, by the ruins of that Mission Hall which was destroyed in our awful hurricane. I am sure the result would be the gift of the amount needed for rebuildtng the hall, which is only £87." I hope that some of God's stewards will give this small sum that the Barbados' fishermen may have their Gospel Hall again.—Yours in the Master's service, Agnes E. Weston.

Royal Sailors' Rest, Devonport.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 25. 1 Sam. ix.

WHAT a blessing a man of God is to a community! The phrase is often used in this chapter of Samuel (6, 7, 8, 10). That he was a prophet or seer was secondary; the primary consideration consisted in his being evidently and pre-eminently a man of God. How blessed it would be if all who set themselves up as prophets or seers were acknowledged men of God! "Know that God hath set apart him that is godly for Himself."

The man of God is held in honour (6). Saul's attendant knew this. The fame of this good man had reached the common people. And there are no critics more observant and more likely to know than servants. It is a supreme test of a master's character when his own household speaks well of him, and when their talk reaches other households.

The man of God is attractive to the young, and exerts a supreme power over their lives. Notice the interest with which these young maidens watched the movements of the man of God. They knew just where he would be, and what he would be doing, and they spoke from an evident respect and esteem. And as for Saul, the whole of this young man's life was affected by that memorable interview. In long years after, when he called for Samuel to come to advise him, there was a vivid recollection of this never-to-be-forgotten afternoon, night, and early dawn. Let us stamp ourselves on others not by our intellect, or wealth, or beauty, but by goodness, or better, our godliness.

The man of God has deep relations with God. "The Lord had uncovered the ear of Samuel a day before Saul came. . . And when Samuel saw Saul, the Lord said unto him, Behold the man of whom I spake unto thee."

MONDAY, June 26. 1 Sam. x.

When we step out on a new and untrodden path, we have a perfect right to watch the evidence of circumstances pretty narrowly. Samuel had designated Saul as king, and anointed him; and now a succession of circumstances—any one of which, taken alone, might have been a coincidence, but all of which happening in the precise order which Samuel designated could only appear as miraculously and providentially ordered—came to corroborate the words of the old Prophet. Get your marching-orders from the lips of Christ, in the first instance, and then watch the drift of events, in which God further strengthens your faith.

But notice, that after Samuel's enumeration of the series of corroborating incidents had closed, he said three memorable things, each of which should be deeply pondered. First, that the Spirit of God would come mightily on him. Is it not possible for a man to be endued for a sudden work, and to be dropped out of God's hand? Was it not so with Saul? Second, that he would be turned into another man. But is it not possible to be another man, under some transient impulse, without being a new creature? Thirdly, he was to do as occasion served. There are times when we cannot be left to our own devices because our circumstances are so very perplexing. Then an angel will be sent to give us precise indications of our cause of action. At other times we shall be left to our own sanctified common sense, which we may undoubtedly trust if we have first eliminated the self-element, which deflects the magnet. "My judgment," said our Lord, "is just, because I seek not my own will, but the will of Him that sent Me."

TUESDAY, June 27. 1 Sam. xi.

This was a grand exploit, never forgotten by the grateful inhabitants of Jabesh-Gilead. In the dark day of Gilboa, they remembered it, and came to save Saul's body from a dishonoured grave. Oh, that we were ever mindful of the blessed interposition which Jesus made on our behalf, and that we regarded it with a similar jealousy for his honour, and all that concerns Him!

A man is not demeaned by following the oxen. He may be a designated king in the meanwhile. We, who are priests unto God, should not feel the ordinary duties of life as common, unclean, or dishonourable.

The Spirit of God comes mightily on us for special work; but oh, for his abiding presence! Oh, to be always full, always possessed, always on fire! This will only be ours, if we give Him time. Wells fill up in darkness and silence, by the percolation of water. This is better than to be always waiting for spates, which rush impetuously down the torrent-bed, and leave it a heap of stones.

Be sure to ascribe the glory of your successes to God. "The Lord hath wrought salvation to-day." When you come in from your ploughing or sheep-keeping, be sure to gird yourself and wait on Christ, serving up for Him the savoury dishes of thanks, and praise, and congratulation that men have mistakenly brought to you. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name, give glory."

WEDNESDAY, June 28. 1 Sam. xii.

Evidently Samuel thought that this was to be the final scene of his ministry; he little realised in what sad events he would be called on to take a part. But we must greatly admire his attitude in this historic convocation.

First, his hands were clean (3). Not all public men can say as much, or court public scrutiny. It has been within the province of comparatively few to hold up their hands and say, These are clean. But surely this must be the ideal of all who hold public office. Not a coin must stick to their fingers in transmission; not a shilling must come into their pockets by way of hush-money or bribe; not a suspicion of bias or unfairness must attach to their decisions—not for themselves only, but for the cause of God and religion.

Second, he pleaded with the people (7). The man whose character is clear may plead. Before you begin to plead, be sure that your character is clean. I do not say bring your pleading down to the level of any inconsistency of your character, but lift your character to the level of your pleading. Be yourself what you desire others to become. Take heed to thyself, and then to the doctrine. But the best way of being orthodox in doctrine is to be orthodox in life and love. Men will take a great deal from the man whom they can respect.

Third, he promised still to pray for them (23). Indeed, he would have accounted it as sin against God himself if he had ceased to pray for them. Let us search ourselves by this statement. Can it be that we are daily adding to the number of our sins, in limiting the range and earnestness of our intercessions? Apparently the restraint of prayer is accounted a positive transgression by the Holy God.

THURSDAY, June 29. 1 Sam. xiii.

Are you startled to find Saul deposed for one act? For evidently such was the case. Because he had offered the burnt-offering, a duty which pertained only to the priestly tribe, or to one like Samuel, his kingdom was not allowed to continue; and in the expressive language of the seer, his successor had already been discovered and designated by the Spirit of God. But it startles us. One act, and such a result! Yes, but that one act revealed much else.

First, it was a distinct violation of the fundamental constitution of Israel, in virtue of which the offices of king and priest were kept jealously apart. "Thou hast not kept the commandment of the Lord thy God, which he commanded thee." Next, it was the result of subordinating conscience to expediency. "I saw that the people were scattered from me, I forced myself therefore and offered." And, lastly, it was an act of unbelief, since Saul evidently thought that God could not defend him from the Philistines, while he stood quietly waiting for Samuel's advent. These ingredients were all present in Saul's precipitate haste, and their presence indicated a weakness and obliquity of moral character, which disqualified him as the organ and executor of the Divine will. God saw the nature behind this act, and diagnosed it, and saw that it was not after his own heart.

Be very, very careful, O soul of man! The Watcher of men is scrutinising thy every act, not from a distance, but near at hand, with eager desire for thy highest good; with love and tender sympathy, and willingness to succour; but testing thy faithfulness in the very little before promoting thee to greater opportunities.

FRIDAY, June 30. 1 Sam. xiv.

In Jonathan we have a noble type of chivalry, patriotism, loyalty to God, to his father, and to his friend. An altogether noble and lovely type of manhood such as would have graced any age of the world's history. His character is always full of fascination to young men, and reveals the lovely blend of nature and grace, and a noble disposition on which God's Spirit wrought mightily.

Was not that ancient promise present to his thought, as he climbed with lithe agility up the steep, "One of you shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight?" It was a religious act, and not merely the result of heroic daring. "It may be," he cried, "that the Lord will work for us, for there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." And that faith opened the way for God, so that through these two young men, He was able to save his people. As the people said afterwards, God had wrought with them, and through them, a great salvation (45).

Two with God at their side are equal to anything. Out of weakness, they are made strong, they wax valiant in fight, and turn to flight the armies of the aliens. "How much do ye reckon me for?" asked the great general of his handful of men, on the morning of the battle, when they ruefully measured their meagre ranks with the thousands of the foe.

But do not forget to take of the honey as it drops from the honeycomb of God's Word. Let it be caught up even amid the haste of the rush of battle. It is well in the midst of business, or domestic duty, to take a handful, that our eyes may be enlightened and our strength renewed.

SATURDAY, July 1. 1 Sam. xv.

It would appear that one more chance was given Saul of retrieving the dire failure already recounted. God is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. But again the king of Israel failed. "Saul and the people spared Agag and the best of the cattle." There was a reserve in his obedience. He was prepared to obey up to a certain point, but in the ultimate test, in a collision between his greed and the Divine command, he turned back from following. Are you sure, my friend, that you have not turned back from following? Is there any reserve in your consecration, a holding back from the last point of obedience? Let us beware lest, as to Saul, God says: "I have rejected; for behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of lambs."

Too often men gloze over their disobedience by the avowal of their intention to sacrifice to the Lord (15). They are conscious of their failure, but then they can better serve the cause of God. It is a fatal mistake. God desires not our gifts, but ourselves; not our time, effort, or money, but the loyal devotion of eager and loyal hearts, which count his least whisper law.

It is vain to lay the blame of our acts on others so long as we share in the profitable results of their sins (24). We cannot absolve ourselves of responsibility of evil actions so long as we thrive on the proceeds. The employer of labour is not exonerated from blame if he winks at the dishonesty of his employés.

They who flout the commands of God are often the most punctilious in their outward religious acts, and most eager to have the countenance and support of religious men. They are less careful of God's honour than their own. "Honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel." They love the praise of man more than the praise of God.

Bridge of Allan Convention.

THIS annual gathering, says the N.B. Daily Mail, was opened at Bridge of Allan on Monday week. Some years ago it was observed that, contemporary with this convention and running parallel with it, there was a marked reviving of spiritual interest over various parts of Scotland. The same feeling comes over us as we enter the large tent which occupies its accustomed place in the field to the east of the town. We are very naturally asked whether there are any grounds for our belief. The answer, happily, is not far to seek. We find that last year the United Presbyterian Church had special evangelistic services in no fewer than twenty-five Presbyteries, that one of their agents was so overwhelmed with work that ministerial help had to be provided, and that there were distinct manifestations of spiritual awakening at Oban and other places. The Home Mission Committee of the Free Church report similar times of gracious refreshing in several Presbyteries. When we go to the Highlands we find there have been at least four years of practically unbroken revival, and the year just closed has been the best of the four.

The opening service brought an audience that more than filled the central part of the great tent and overflowed somewhat into both sides. It was matter of great regret that Mr. Wilson, of Broughton Grange, was laid aside by illness, and unable to preside, as he has done so worthily since the Convention was opened. In his absence Dr. Ferguson, of Kinmundy, took the chair. After devotional exercises, Dr. John Smith, of Broughton Place Church, Edinburgh, gave the opening address from Matthew vi. 9—"Hallowed be thy name." He said: We have come with a definite purpose and to receive definite blessing. Many have come here leaving duties and responsibilities behind. There is a sense of need reigning in their hearts. It may have been there was a fierce conflict with evil, in which they have been sore assaulted by the powers of darkness. Some there are who find life a very complex thing, and they are not clear that they have taken the right course. Some, in former years, walked in the clear light, filled with joy like a perennial fountain, but they have lost it—it may be. Their deepest longing to-night is to get to the Cross.

Our personal condition ought to be a matter of deep personal concern, and yet that personal need may be best met on a higher plane. There is one great life filling all the channels of life in the universe. It is revealed in our text, "Hallowed be thy name." If lifted thus to glorify Him, we shall find our troubles removed. Moses knew what he needed when he cried, "Show me thy glory." If filled with his Spirit our one sorrow shall be that God should be so little known, that there should be so many living ignoring Him. It was this burden, brought in upon them overwhelmingly, that made men like the Haldanes, Whitefield, Wesley, and others be in such earnest for the glory of God. We have to learn two things that shine out in that glory—the righteousness and the mercy of God. People say the Gospel is effete, that it has lost its power. That is not so. It is we who have lost power, lost touch with God. These men had it. Cambuslang, Kirk of Shotts, and other places still witness to it. They preached and men heard as under the very eye of God. In relying on Him absolutely, in surrendering wholly, we shall die to sin and self, and rise in the power of the living Christ.

SECOND DAY.

The early morning prayer meeting was well attended. There were an earnestness and confidence that seemed to anticipate the blessing coming.

Dr. John Smith gave the Bible reading from 1 Corinthians i. 4-9. He said that some years ago an eminent Christian worker was presented with a sum of money which her friends placed in a beautiful casket. She thought the casket was all the gift, and felt very grateful for the work of art that adorned her table. A friend thought she was not making due use of the thoughtful kindness of her many friends, and asked her regarding it. This led to the box being opened, and inside were found many sovereigns which till then had been untouched. So it is with many a Christian—the treasure is hid in Christ, but it is there to be used, not to be hoarded. In Christ the believer has got a new standing and a new subjection; our life is placed in his hand day by day. We have more—a new presence. He has made you free to his wealth. You have heard the word plutocrat, which means mastery through money of all positions, pleasures, markets, men. So Christ gives us the use of inestimable spiritual treasures for our actual possession to give us the mastery. This we have by being in contact, in union, with Himself.

There is an order of enjoyment—(1) In all utterance. He opens our mouth and gives us the right word. (2) In all knowledge: not the knowledge of our school days, but that which is experience; very different and very personal, and sometimes very difficult, but yet very real. (2) All assurance. In a recent author the whole aim of the book was to show that nothing could be known of what Scripture teaches. These things happened so long ago there could be no certainty. But the believer says—These things are happening now, and I know them; I can personally confirm the testimony of Christ. (4) Waiting for the revelation of Jesus Christ. We are but at the beginnings, the alphabet of Christian experience. When Christ takes the ordering of our life in all things, small and great, He acts with highest wisdom, sets our will, tempers, aspirations right. He ever keeps in view the day of our appearing before Him, when we shall be unreprovable.

In the afternoon there were two addresses, the first by Rev. F. S. Webster, from Psalm li.—a searching personal examination of repentance and faith as a personal experience, and their relation to confession, cleansing, renewal, and holiness. Rev. F. B. Meyer followed with an address, which was the complement to that just given; that had to do with sin against the first table of the law; this had to do with the second table of the law, and specially illustrated in Matt. xxv.—If you do not love the man whom you have seen, how can you love the God whom you have not seen? Our attitude towards God will be determined by our attitude towards man—"the least of these my brethren." He recognises the nature that is akin to his own. One perfect act of undoubted love will indicate a nature beloved of God. If there be no such act in our life, then there is no real, deep, true love.

The evening addresses were by Rev. C. G. Moore and Rev. F. B. Meyer. There was a very large audience.

THE THIRD DAY

not only brought fine weather but largely-increased audiences. Rev. F. S. Webster gave a striking and helpful address on "The trees of God are full of sap." The Bible reading was given by Rev. F. B. Meyer from the Epistle to the Galatians, and formed one of the most remarkable addresses ever given in the Convention, on the character and relations of the flesh and spirit. The exposition was full of most practical teaching, lucidly put and yet most closely reasoned. He traced the life of the Saviour in his constant yielding to the will of the Father, and how thereby He glorified God—entire surrender of whatever will was his as the perfect man. The Cross meant the absolute surrender of everything back to the Father. Have you ever found out your Barabbas? Have you put him to death where the world put Christ, and have you put Christ on the throne where the world put Barabbas?

In the afternoon there were two addresses. The first was by a very young minister, Rev. H. M. Moir, of Strichen, from Luke ix. 51—"Wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them." He said Jesus first convicted and then corrected his disciples. He unmasks and then prescribes. He wants his disciples to manifest the spirit that he showed Himself—who had the long patience of the husbandman.

Rev. F. B. Meyer followed with an address full of point and pathos. The audience was large and in deep sympathy with the speaker, who took for his subject, Luke xvii., 3. His treatment of the faith like a grain of mustard seed was telling. He showed how the open door to the tender and diminutive life hidden away in the seed by-and-by received all the power of nature until it attained maturity. As the whole ocean pours through the narrow gateway of the strait, enlarging the doorway in its progress—so God received into the heart and life enlarges the capacity till we are filled with all the fulness of God. The danger of present day Christian work is constant giving out, without taking in from God.

In the evening there were two addresses. Rev. J. B. Figgis, from 1 John iii. 19-21, described the Christian life in its threefold aspect—(1) A life in which God's commands are kept; (2) a life in which the heart does not condemn; (3) a life in which it is possible so to walk as to please God. Rev. Frank S. Webster gave an exposition of Isaiah vi. bright and searching. At the close, there was an after meeting, when a large number came to the front, and thereby signified their acceptance of the fulness of Christ and the filling of the Holy Ghost.

THE FOURTH DAY.

The early prayer-meeting on Thursday morning was well attended. The interest was greatly enhanced by the presence of fifty young men and lads from a boarding school in town. The rest of the audience were manifestly moved by the spectacle of so many promising young lives taking part heartily in the devotional exercises. The address was by Rev. C. G. Moore, speaking from Psalm l. 14, 15. He directed the attention specially of his youthful audience to three things—(1) thanksgiving to God, (2) to pay their vows to God, and (3) to call on God in the day of trouble. His remarks were happily illustrated from his own personal experience in school and family life.

The Bible reading had a fine forenoon gathering. Rev. J. B. Figgis chose for his subject, "Vessels meet for the Master's use." He started with the Pauline conception "vessels of mercy," and traced the experience of the Christian life, now broken by disappointment, re-made by the hand of the Great Potter, emptied of self, and filled with God's presence, and, lastly, honoured by being used in his service.

In the afternoon the first address was given by Rev. H. L. Moir, of Strichen, having for his theme "The Guest Chamber" for the King. Rev. C. G. Moore followed with an address from Ephesians ii. 22, 23—"The fulness of Him who filleth all in all."

THE LAST DAY OF THE CONVENTION

was the best of a very remarkable five days. the forenoon was devoted to the annual missionary gathering. From Kurdistan, Oroomiah, China, India, Africa, Brazil, Arabia, Syria, Egypt, the Congo, Morocco, there were intensely interesting reports, which kept the large audience interested for three hours, and showed even to the casual observer the remarkable progress of the Kingdom of Christ during the past twenty years.

In the afternoon, Rev. H. L. Moir spoke on the Transfiguration. He was followed by Rev. C. G. Moore, from John xxi., "How Christ becomes a presence and a glory in life." (1) He claims our supreme love; (2) claims us for the tasks that lie nearest his heart; (3) He claims our loyalty as Divine Lord and Master. The closing addresses of the Convention were given by Rev. J. B. Figgis and Rev. C. G. Moore, and the large audience dispersed with a conscious joy that betokened the nature and extent of the blessing received.

The special revival which, during the past years, the Highlands has enjoyed, is traced to a meeting of ministers held at Forres some years ago for the deepening of their own spiritual life. Shortly thereafter Rev. John Mackay, of Cromarty, gave himself for the work of Highland evangelisation, a Prayer Union was formed, and ever since the stream of blessing has been increasing. We are glad to hear now that a Prayer Union has been formed in the centre and south of Scotland, and, as a result, we may look for what we trust will prove a great national awakening.

Prof. Newell's Bible Course.

LESSON III.—ABRAHAM: THE FRIEND OF GOD.
Genesis xii.-xxv. 10.

I. The first step, as usual, is to read the lesson over, for mastery. Five or six times will generally do for a lesson of this vivid narrative character. But one should not stop short of full possession of the lesson as to its material.

II. The Chapter-names: xii. Call, xiii. Separation (from Egypt and Lot), xiv. Victory (over kings and covetousness), xv. Abrahamic Covenant, xvi. Hagar, xvii. Circumcision, xviii. Intercession, xix. Sodom, xx. Abimelech (I.), xxi. Isaac, xxii. Testing, xxiii. Machpelah, xxiv. Bride, xxv. Death.

III. Seven words trace Abraham's career: xii. Call, xiii.-xiv. Preparation, xv. Covenant, xvi.-xx. Waiting, xxi. Fulfilment, xxii.-xxiii. Testing, xxiv.-xxv. Fruitfulness. Go carefully through the lesson, in the light of these themes.

IV. The Bible is full of God's sovereign dealings with man. We saw it in the undeserved mercy shown to man in Eden. Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord (iv. 8). The Noachian covenant is another instance (chap. ix.). And now, in chapter xii., God sets his heart in grace upon the son of Terah in idolatrous Ur of the Chaldees, and reveals Himself to him. Such are the ways of "the God of Glory," as the Holy Ghost by Stephen calls Him, in this very connection (Acts vii. 1).

To question these sovereign ways of God is simply to "reply against God" (see Rom. ix. 19, 20). The creature's prerogatives must end somewhere, if God's are to begin anywhere. This earth is itself a great example of Divine election. Little, like Bethlehem (Mic. v. 2), among the thousands of systems and suns and planets of our universe, it has yet been selected, in God's mere sovereign choice, as the theatre of the greatest drama of the ages—with all the tremendous issues and astonishing history that that involves. The earth, we repeat, has been made the sole theatre of this drama for all the universe; and the results achieved here will extend to the whole universe (Heb. ix. 26, Phil. ii. 6-11, Col. i. 20, Rev. xi. 7-15, Eph. i. 10, Rev. xxi.-xxii., Psa. viii., &c. See "After the Thousand Years," Trench (Morgan & Scott); "Star Worlds and their Destiny," Mahony; "Earth's Earliest Ages," Pember (Hodder & Stoughton)—a book every earnest Christian should read in these days).

THE SETTLING OF THE SIN QUESTION,

Now if the earth is the theatre of God's dealings with the great sin question, and the claims of Satan and the powers of evil, the nation of Israel is the stage of that theatre. Keep this in mind. Think of this earth as the centre of interest for the countless myriads of spiritual intelligences, bad as well as good. Then think of the children of Israel as the great elevated platform upon which is to be conducted a great "public experiment." The race having thrice failed as a whole, God now chooses out a peculiar people with whom to deal, in plain view of all his creatures. And in Abraham God is laying the foundation for this platform of the world-theatre.

It ought to be deeply pondered that God took Abraham out from all his natural connections (Gen. xii. 1) in order to beget in him the pilgrim spirit, and thus begin in him a peculiar people for himself (Study Heb. xi. 9-12).

V. Let us now rapidly sketch the story. The Shemitic ancestry of Abraham traced, with their Mesopotamian home and history; God's purposeful call of Abraham, and the great sevenfold promise to him; the long journey of obedience and hope; Canaan at last, but Canaanites; the comforting vision of God; the altar-and-tent life begun; the famine; Egypt and the sad back-sliding; then back to Canaan and Bethel, worship and joy, with Lot's worldly choice of Sodom, the place so soon to be judged, and his separation from his godly uncle, who moves up to Hebron, the place of fellowship. Now the first great battle of the east and west is on, with valiant Abraham—a real general—to the rescue of captive Lot, and on the way back the mysterious Melchizedek with his effectual ministry to the man of faith about to be flattered and tempted.

THE GREAT COVENANT

with Abraham follows, giving him Palestine for ever, and the promise of multiplied seed to fill it.

The foolish Hagar expedient to obtain the promised seed with its utter failure follows; and then thirteen long years of waiting (between chapters xvi. and xvii.) when circumcision is given as a token of the covenant, and the boy Isaac promised to the faithful patriarch of ninety-nine years. Anon, with two of the heavenly host, the Lord appears to Abraham to announce that the sin-cup of Sodom at last is full unto judgment, and to give his friend opportunity to pray his poor nephew out of the burning. Then follows the doom; the third age has closed; the tale of Lot's horrible progeny, destined to be the worst enemies of God, is added, and the story of Abraham's second fear-spasm about his wife: then the child of promise is born, and the mocking Ishmael cast out. Now comes the supreme heart-test of Abraham—the offering of Isaac, his son. Will he do it? He will without once faltering. And then to the full. The aged Sarah is next laid to rest in the quaintly-purchased cave of Machpelah. The glad wooing and wedding of Isaac follows—a beautiful chapter. A few more years, and the pilgrim is "gathered to his people"—we know them who they are.

HE IS BLESSED BY GOD

Only one mighty man moves in these chapters. Others than Abraham (save Melchizedek, who was greater, Heb. vii. 4-10), seem pigmies. Abraham continually breathed the air in the mountains of faith. If he descends—for he does—he is soon ashamed and goes back directly. He was the friend of God (2 Chron. xx. 7), and the father of them that believe (Rom. iv. 11; Gal. iii. 7). God found something rare in him (see Neh. ix. 8). "Thou foundest his heart faithful and madest a covenant with him (compare 2 Chron. xvi. 9). Yet in himself he was weak as other men; he knew it, and also the place of strength. "And Abraham fell on his face and God talked with him" (Gen. xvii. 3).

VI. The character of Abraham should be taken up and studied most patiently and thoroughly. It does not pay to hurry in any Bible study, but haste will be ruinous to good results here. Will it not pay you to become intimately acquainted with the man whom God called his friend? See Isa. xli. 8. Take time, then, and do it.

In the study of a Bible character, it will be well to proceed in the following general order: 1. The prenatal influences; genealogy, character of parents, &c., cf. 2 Tim. i. 5. 2. The life-story; including the careful examination of the early life and advantages, the details of the narrative throughout, and the making of the epochs or stages into which the life seems naturally to fall. 3. The primary or original so far as they can be discovered; i.e., the man as he is when God takes him up. 4. The spiritual history. This is the most important line of character study. The general rule in it is to look at the man's life from God's view-point. He mapped and managed it, with an end in view of every detail, and a general end in the whole, for every character in the Bible stands for some great truth or lesson. And somewhere in the Bible always, I believe, God gives his design in each of the great Bible characters, explains his method with them, and gives his estimate of them. 5. The final character; the man as he is at last, as the result of God's method with him, noting his strong points and weak points, tracing each to its source, if possible; and finally summing up the man in one characteristic word. In Abraham's case this is easy. He is the great man of what—?

ELEMENTS OF THE CHARACTER,

VII. The following topics should be carefully studied:—1. The call of Abram; God's reasons for it; objects in it; probable method of it; difficulties of obedience to it; secret of Abram's obedience, cf., Heb. xi. 8; things left; things gained (search concordance).

2. The

PROGRESSIVE REVELATION OF GOD

to Abraham (Revised Version best): (a) As the Lord (Jehovah, his name as in covenant with his people), xii. 1, 8; xiii. 4, 18. (b) God Most High (El-Elyon, Creator—God over and owning all), xiv. 18-22. (c) Shield and exceeding great reward, xv. 1. (d) The Almighty God (El Shaddai), xvii. 1. (e) The Righteous Judge, xviii. 25. (f) The Everlasting God, xx. 33. (g) The God of Providence (Jehovah-Jireh), xxii. 14. Wonderful and delightful discoveries will attend this study.

3. The Abrahamic Covenant. Gen. xv. and xvii. On what basis made—God's grace, or Abraham's works? See Gal. iii., &c. Exactly what did its promises include? To whom were they ultimately made? Gal. iii. 16. Have they yet been fulfilled? Will they yet be fulfilled?

4. Circumcision: Its object or end; its meaning; its connection with the covenant; its exact typology for us—be sure to go deep enough here. Col. ii. 1, 12; Rom. vi. 3, 6; Luke ix. 31, &c.

5. How are we Abraham's children? See Gal. iii. 7; Rom. iv.; John viii.; Luke xvi., &c.

6. Lot: his motions; history; character; religious experience, family and progeny—look well into this, comparing his family life with his uncle's.

7. Melchizedek (see Heb. v.-vii.) — the man, his kingship, his priesthood, its origin, order, object, and location (Salem—Jerusalem). Christ will be the next priest-king (Zech. vi. 13, Ezek. xxi. 26, 27). Why no more (since Moses) till He come?

8. Angels (Gen. xviii., xix.)—their nature, manifestation, and ministry. Distinguish both them and their ministry from that of the Cherubim in Gen. iii. How?

9. The Angel of Jehovah, first mentioned in Gen. xvi. 7. Who? (Gen. xxii. 11, 12; Judges xiii. 8-22; Zech. iii. 6, &c.). Why did he thus appear? Make a note of each of his similar manifestations as you go through the Word, and study its exact object and character.

10. Prayer (Gen. xviii.)—its privilege, proper objects, power, method, self-limitation, and answer.

Our next lesson will be Gen. xxv.11-xxxv. The Patriarch Jacob. Read the chapters at least five times over.

My Presence . . with Thee

Of all the charms this life affords,
And all the blessings Christ accords,
Oh, tell me now, of heav'nly bliss,
Is there a charm surpassing this—
Christ's hidden presence oft to feel,
Which He had promised to reveal?

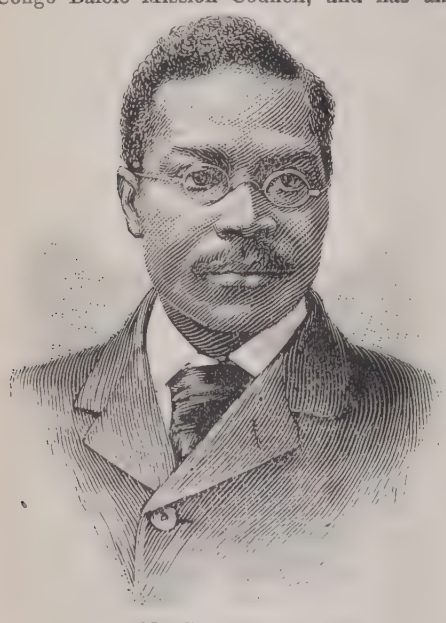
That Christ should hide his glories so,
Yet wrap us round with loving glow,
While talking with us, down the street,
To human hearts is passing sweet;
Thus unawares we find Him steal,
And in our souls his presence feel.

Dear Lord! thy presence by our side
Gives power to us with Thee t' abide;
Converse with us along the road,
And fit us now to dwell with God.
Oh, make our hearts a "Bethany,"
And ever bear us company.

F. J. WILLIAMS.

Miss Holt's Books.—Kind friends outside the parish have presented three sets (forty volumes each) of Miss Holt's story books, to the Old Ford schools in East London. Rev. W. Adamson, vicar, combines with other Protestant workers in acknowledging the timeliness of Messrs. Shaw's enterprise. Mr. R. J. Felgate appeals for a set for the schools of the China Inland Mission at Chefoo. Any friend willing to supply the need may send them for Mr. Felgate to the office of the C.I.M., Newington Green, N.

Bound for "Regions Beyond."



A PARTY of fourteen workers is about to start in connection with the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union, for various parts of the mission field. Half are going to Africa, and half to South America. We give on this page portraits of four of the outgoing workers.

The Congo group numbers seven, of whom four are returning for the second or third time, and three are new recruits. Mr. Arthur James Bowen is a most successful missionary. He has acquired considerable knowledge of the language, and won not a few souls to the Saviour. The serious illness of his wife, whose life was only saved by returning to this country, compelled his retirement from active service in the field. Since his return he has rendered valuable help as teacher of the Lomongo language to those who have been accepted by the Congo Balolo Mission Council, and has also continued the all-important work of translating the Scriptures. Now that his wife's health is restored, he has volunteered to return alone to the Congo for two years, in order further to perfect himself in the language, and continue with greater advantage his translation of the New Testament. We hope that the excellent health he has hitherto enjoyed may be continued, as he returns to Bongandanga, the scene of his former labours.

Mr. A. J. Bowen.
Photo by W. Edw. Wright, High Road, Leyton.

Mr. Philip Clarke.

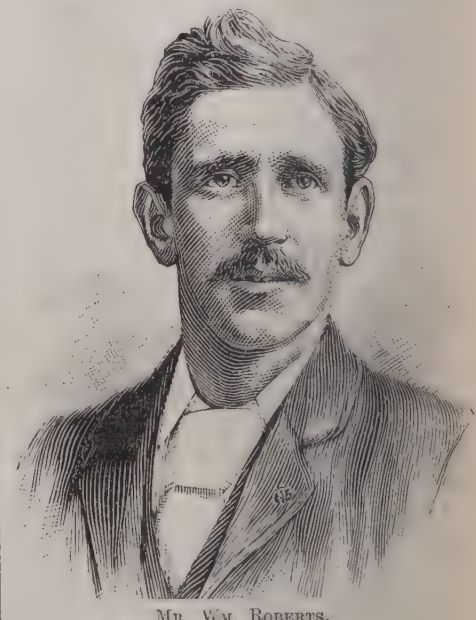
Mr. William J. Sinclair will accompany Mr. Bowen, and will continue the work that has been carried on in the "regions beyond" Bongandanga, and possibly establish a new post on the Bolumbo River. The region accessible from such a centre is of considerable importance on account of its large population, and presents one of the most valuable openings that are likely to be found for an effective entrance of the Gospel.

In the difficult work amongst the women of the Lulonga Station and surrounding villages, Miss Annie Amory will be associated with Miss Logie, now returning for the second time to the Congo. During the last five years the former has undergone full training at Doric Lodge and Bromley Hall (the medical department), and has been a valued helper for the last two years in the practical management of Doric Lodge. Already familiar with the grammar of the language, she expects soon to pick up the Eleko dialect.

Mrs. Randall, whose devoted and gifted husband died from African fever during his furlough at home, is going out for the third time. She leaves her two little children in the Missionary Children's Home connected with Harley House, where they will find every loving care. It is not without much prayer that she has volunteered for the field where years ago her brother died; and did the Council not feel, from an intimate knowledge of the circumstances, that it was the right step, they would not have accepted her offer of service.

Two coloured brethren are from Jamaica, and represent a desire fully to test the value of such help on the Congo. It is a notable fact that Jamaicans, far better than white men, stand the climate in Central America, where malaria and yellow fever render life so precarious to the European. When, some years ago, the mortality in Africa was very serious, it was determined to see what could be done by such workers; and so, with the help of two earnest and gifted pastors in Jamaica, three men have been selected for the experiment. Mr. James has already gone out for the second time to the Congo, and now two other brethren join the Congo Balolo Mission.

Mr. Philip Clarke has received full training for a schoolmaster in the Calabar College, Jamaica, and Mr. Thomas Benjamin Sawyers is a capital carpenter. Both have proved themselves stable Christians, and during their residence at Harley House have commended the choice of the Jamaican pastors. May God, who in his mysterious providence permitted the billows of black misery to overwhelm their forefathers, grant that a reflex wave of blessing may, in some measure at any rate, compensate Africa for the bitterness of the past.

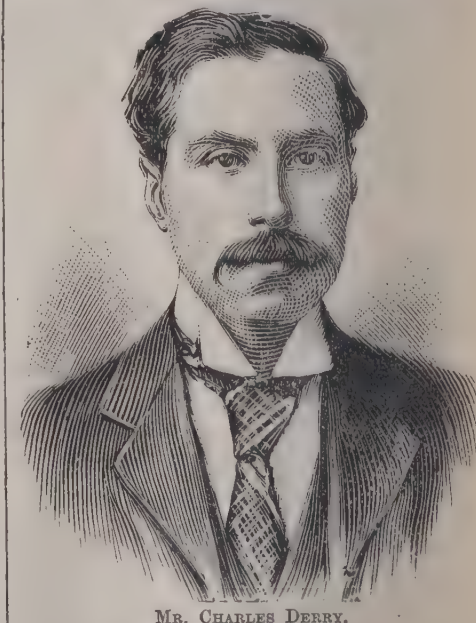


The Congo Railway, now completed, is of the greatest value in helping missionaries past the cataract region of the river, where so many fevers were contracted before the Upper Congo was attained. The ticket from Matadi to Stanley Pool is, however, very costly, £20 for 230 miles! This about corresponds with the former price of hammock carriers, so that transport expenses are still very heavy. The porterage bills for goods and passengers, together with customs dues, have lately run out at about £250 per month, or £3,000 per annum. The departure of the present party of seven will involve a passage and outfit expenditure of £1,200.

South American Group.

Mr. and Mrs. William Roberts are sailing for Buenos Ayres en route for Coronel Suarez, 300 miles further south. There Mr. Roberts takes up the work he originated among his Welsh compatriots and the Spanish-speaking population of that town and surrounding country, where he and Mr. Robinson are the only workers. He has erected a capital little chapel, which, by the liberality of an English friend, is secured to the Mission. The "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union has adopted Mr. Roberts' movement, and he and his wife go out as members o fthe Union.

Messrs. George Smith and Robert F. Elder go out together to the Argentine, the former to take up Spanish work, with which he is familiar, having already laboured eleven years in that Republic, and the latter to acquire Spanish, with a view to Gospel work as the Lord may guide. Mr. Smith is an old Harley House student, and goes out as superintendent of the Argentine Mission of the R.B.M.U. Mr. Elder is a gifted student from Pastors' College, with an undoubted call as a Gospel preacher and rich promise of future usefulness. The new firm of Smith, Elder, and Co., publishing not books, but the Gospel of the grace of God, as our brother put it in his address at Exeter Hall, carries with it our deepest interest.



Mr. Charles Derry expects to leave in June for Central America, where he hopes for a while to labour in Costa Rica, in conjunction with Señor Castells and his wife, also former students at Harley House, who are returning to the capital, San José. Mr. Derry has benefited not only by a full course in the "Regions Beyond" Training Colleges, but also by special medical study in Scotland. He has, moreover, worked at the Spanish language, and is likely to make an able missionary of the Cross.

Mr. Wm. Roberts.
Photo by J. C. Turner, 10, Barnsbury Park, N.

The manifold expenses involved in the maintenance of the training colleges where these workers have been helped, the up-keep of property, and the prosecution of the large evangelistic and medical work in East London, are very considerable; and the foregoing particulars are laid before the readers of The Christian, in order that they may have fellowship in the equipment and sending forth of these missionary labourers. The catholic and interdenominational character of the work constitutes a special claim on all who desire the hastening of the Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Derry.
Photo by Tippetts, 8, Lozells Road, Aston.

H. Grattan Guinness, M.D.
F. B. Meyer.

Y.M.C.A. Expansion.

BRITISH CONFERENCE AT DUBLIN, JUNE 13-16.

THE eighteenth British Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations was opened in Dublin on Tuesday, the 13th inst., a special fitness attaching to the selection of the Irish capital, as its Association is this year celebrating its jubilee.

As usual, opportunity was taken of the meeting together of so many representative men from all parts of the country to hold the half-yearly provincial sitting of the National Council. On the invitation of Mr. E. J. Figgis, jun., vice-president of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., seventy-five gentlemen sat down to luncheon at the Hotel Metropole, when welcome was extended to the Council by Mr. Figgis as host, and by Mr. J. G. R. Porter, of Omagh, and Mr. G. F. Trench, of Ardfert, on behalf of the Irish executive.

Mr. FIGGIS rejoiced that the condition of Association work in Ireland was full of hope: spiritual things were given the paramount place in all the centres; increasing interest was being manifested in home and foreign missions; and the members were giving proof that Irishmen could be both loyal subjects and whole-hearted Christians. Mr. TRENCH remarked that, amid the political difficulties of a few years ago, a good deal was heard, in relation to Ireland, of the "union of hearts." He believed that nothing would better promote this sort of union than the work of the Y.M.C.A. He was glad to see evidences that, in the three provinces of Ireland hitherto ruled by Rome, a remarkable change was coming over the people in their attitude toward the Gospel; opposition was breaking down, and obstacles were being removed. This was the general testimony.

Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, as president, acknowledged the welcome on behalf of the Council. He had himself been one of those who fifty years ago had crossed the Channel to plant the seed of the Y.M.C.A. in this city. Mr. D. A. BUDGE, general secretary at Montreal, brought the greetings of many Canadian brethren, and reported progress in all departments of the work in the principal cities of Canada. Mr. OWEN, of Bombay; Mr. FRANK ANDERSON, B.A., the Council's student representative in India; and Mr. J. HUGHES, general secretary at Brussels, also responded.

The Council meeting which followed, under the presidency of Sir George Williams, was unusually interesting. Brief summary reports were presented by the travelling secretaries, indicating many encouraging features in the work of the past six months since the full Council last met in London; and the Secretary, Mr. W. H. MILLS, introduced an outline programme of which might fittingly inaugurate the Twentieth Century. The principal suggestions were—an augmentation of the travelling and organizing staff at home, in the Colonies, and in foreign countries; a development of the publishing and other resources of the central office; and the furtherance of active work amongst special classes of young men unreached by existing agencies. On the motion of Mr. J. H. PUTTERILL, of Exeter Hall, seconded by Mr. W. H. NEWETT, of Manchester, it was referred to the executive to nominate a committee who should formulate a definite plan of campaign, and submit the same to the Council for consideration at the earliest possible opportunity.

NEW AND EXTENDED WORK

The delegates, numbering over 500, met in the Metropolitan Hall in the evening to a reception by Mr. J. R. WIGHAM, J.P., president of the Dublin Association. Not only in that capacity, however, did he welcome the Conference, but also as a member of the mercantile community of the city, and an ex-president of the Chamber of Commerce. He maintained that no class had more reason to be thankful for the work of the Y.M.C.A. than business men, providing as it did for the moral and spiritual safeguarding of their employés. The fact that Association property in Ireland now represents some £50,000—a stake in the country of a substantial character—has greatly strengthened the position of the work; but best of all its developments is the missionary spirit engendered, the Dublin Association having at the present time about twenty old members now labouring in the foreign field.

Some welcome words were given by Rev. W. J. CLARKE, D.D., Rector of St. Thomas', who maintained that the Church of God at large had much reason for gratitude that the Y.M.C.A. existed. The need to-day is for out-and-out men, not "in-and-out" men who were with them one day and found elsewhere the next. He held that there is no institution that does more to produce men of the type required. (We should like this fact to be more widely recognised by clergy and ministers everywhere).

ON BEHALF OF THE CHURCHES,

Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS responded for the English delegates, Mr. Colville (Dumfermline) for Scotland, Alderman Trounce, J.P. (Cardiff), for Wales, and Mr. D. A. Black (Belfast) for the Irish members.

Wednesday.

The forenoon meeting had for its subject "The Christian Life," which was dealt with from standpoints instructive, hortatory, and practical.

A clear and forcible address was delivered by Rev. CANON FLEMING, whose utterances were among the most timely and useful of the week. The duty of his hearers toward the younger men among whom they work was set forth thus: "How ought I, as a Christian man, to set the Christian life before the young men whom I desire to reach?" It must be ever remembered that, to the young man's mind, presents itself. There is the life which we desire to set before him, the higher life; and there is the lower life around him that is always dragging him downwards.

REV. CANON FLEMING.

LIFE IN A DOUBLE ASPECT

It never was so easy since the days of Christ to begin the Christian life as it is to-day; yet it never was so hard to continue in it as now. It never meant so much to be a Christian, nor so much not to be one, as it does to-day. When men begin the Christian life they are conforming to the custom of their time. In our Lord's day men had to violate all their customs to enter upon it. We are carrying out the whole education of our Christian land, all the tenets we have learned; but our Lord's disciples were reversing all the teaching and all the tenets of their life. The odium of religion has largely gone, and one of the dangers of the Christian life is that it is growing every day more popular and respectable; it adds to a man's respectability and credit and character among his fellow men if he is known to be trying to live a consistent Christian life. The churches are now centres of refinement, and power, and life. Therefore, it seems so easy for a man to become a Christian, that he is tempted to say, "Let me glean pleasure now; I am young; I must enjoy myself. I can at any time enter upon the Christian life." A man who attempts to do so upon those terms ends it where he began it. At a man's conversion the Christian life is only begun; it is a battle all through—a campaign to the very end: "He that endureth unto the end, the same shall be saved."

Why is it so hard to continue the Christian life to-day? Because there is no change in the service of our Lord and Master; there is the same cross to bear, the same cup to drink, as was given to the disciples at the first. Another reason is that there is such a wonderful extension of the outward sphere of life. In the present day, the consecration of a man's life and his powers to God means more than it ever meant, because there is

SO MUCH MORE TO CONSECRATE.

Take the amusements and pleasures that young men want and will have; it means much to write "Consecrated" upon them all. We do not ask young men to give up their pleasure, but to consecrate it. If we succeed in that, young men will only go where the Lord would have them to go, and will be found in the "safe places." There are men in all the great centres of life who are in a sense successful, but who are building no character to last; and they will founder and go down if they are not saved and brought to this higher and better life. If we can only help a man, standing on the threshold of life, to decide for Christ, to put the hand of his faith upon the promises of God, that man will never find himself beset by temptation and difficulty which by God's grace he may not overcome. May every one present be a helper of such to enter upon and continue in this Christian life! There is no other life worth living, and if it is worth anything it is worth everything.

Mr. Geo. F. TRENCH, J.P., of Ardfert, President of the Tralee Association, followed in an earnest and thoughtful strain, drawing lessons from his own experiences of the Christian life. He had grasped as fundamental principles that the Christian young man must be well that he is emancipated from all claims of Satan upon him, and that in regeneration he has a new nature. The right understanding of these principles will prove an immense help to a successful Christian life, which will be further enriched in proportion as active Christian work is engaged in.

ASSURED OF HIS SONSHIP,

Rev. J. GLYNN DAVIES (Newport, Mon.) was another very acceptable speaker. His addresses sparkled with Welsh humour and anecdote, but never without a strictly useful purpose. He had noticed the falling of the autumn leaves, how some seemed to fall of their own accord, others were removed by the force of blast and storm; yet a few remained till dawn of spring, when they, too, had to yield to the force of the new life within the branch. So is it in the Christian life—the old habits, thoughts, desires, sins, must go before the irresistible power of God working within the heart. But is there not too often found a lack of earnestness of purpose in its development? When we hold the handle of an electric battery we feel no sensation, but when we grip it with both hands, we experience throb after throb, wave after wave, of the electric current. How often do we pray and read and preach inertly, until we lay tight hold of God; then are we strong in the strength that He supplies.

We need more to realise to what God has appointed us. He had seen in the catalogue of the Zoological Gardens a direction to the

"SPACIOUS CAGE OF THE EAGLE!"

He wondered what the eagle would have said had he been able to read that! Yet men will try to cramp into narrow limits the aspirations of their immortal souls, and think they are giving them spacious room, when they should be soaring free and unfettered into the eternal realms of God. Oh! why don't young men rise to-day? Let us press toward the mark of the prize of our up-calling in Christ Jesus.

Lord KINNAIRD concluded the meeting by urging that the prime object of all Association work was not to erect great buildings, useful as they might be, but to see that there was a gathering in of souls proportionate to the labour expended in the work.

After luncheon, which was provided at the Rotunda by invitation of Mr. William Fry, Vice-President of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., a photograph of the delegates was taken in the Rotunda Gardens. At the afternoon session, under the presidency of Mr. J. G. R. Porter, Chairman of the Irish Executive, the topic for discussion was—"How may the Y.M.C.A. assist in solving the

SOCIAL PROBLEMS OF THE PRESENT DAY:

(a) Obscene language; (b) gambling; (c) impurity; (d) intemperance?" This was introduced in an able paper by Mr. George S. Orr, of Glasgow, who urged, at the outset, that individual action was not sufficient in this matter; the corporate action of Christian men was essential; and he considered the Y.M.C.A., as a Christian body, pre-eminently fitted for the work, not only because of its interdenominational basis, but because it deals with young men at the most susceptible period of their lives.

The Association's first duty is to its members, whom it must educate upon these questions; but it owes a duty also to the general public, and should endeavour to organise effort, in a variety of ways, to combat the devastating effects of these great evils. It must prosecute rescue work, devise agencies for counteracting the influences of vice, push evangelistic work, encourage its members in the systematic visitation of young men in their homes, and provide recreations that will secure their interest and win them from the streets.

He dealt separately with the four questions embodied in the title of his paper, suggesting many ways in which Association workers might help to stem these tides of iniquity; and finally pressed that Christian men, not shirking these problems as unpleasant and difficult, must regard them from the right point of view; must look at them through the passionate eyes of the loving Redeemer, contemplate the misery and sin of mankind, in order that their hearts might be moved soon to discover methods, great or small, which would in some measure mitigate these flagrant evils.

Mr. William H. Godwin, of Hereford, presented a second paper under the same heading, producing, as visible illustrations of his remarks, some cigarettes prepared expressly, at a halfpenny a packet, for little boys to smoke; also samples of low-class illustrated papers, the circulation of which, he insisted, ought to be at once prohibited. Future generations, he remarked, would rise up and call blessed the institution which showed itself capable of effective reforms in regard to the great social evils of this day; and he trusted the Y.M.C.A. would be able to project some successful effort in this direction.

Mr. W. Boyd, of Ardrossan, submitted a motion pledging the Conference to support Local option. It was not seconded, but was handed in writing to the chairman. Mr. David Elder, of Glasgow, urged in regard to it the suspension of the standing order that no resolution shall be submitted before its terms have been approved by the Conference Committee. The chairman, however, ruled that this could not be done. Intemperance, it was said by several, was at the bottom of most of the other vices that afflicted this generation.

Mr. Crawford Smith, on behalf of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Association, and as chairman of that branch as well as President of the North-Eastern District Union, presented an invitation to the Conference to meet in Newcastle next year. On the motion of Mr. David Dreghorn (Pollokshields, Glasgow), seconded by Mr. W. H. Newett (Manchester), this was enthusiastically accepted.

Presiding at the evening meeting which filled the large Metropolitan Hall, Lord Kinnaird described the value of Y.M.C.A. work as indicated by the two following facts: (1) It is computed that one-tenth of the population is composed of young men whom it was most important to win for Christ before they went out into the world; (2) the membership of an association changes, speaking roughly, about every three years, so that there is a constant stream of young fellows passing through it at the most susceptible period of their lives. Facts like these themselves constitute an urgent appeal.

The first speaker was Canon Fleming, who roused the meeting to a pitch of enthusiasm seldom witnessed in a religious gathering. When he sat down, the meeting rose en masse to the accompaniment of prolonged applause and waving of handkerchiefs. But it was not a daintily flavoured dish of pleasantries that he had put before them, but a downright earnest setting forth of what Nathanael Culverwell called

"GREY-HEADED TRUTHS."

As a preliminary, he sketched the rise of the Y.M.C.A., more than half a century since, and told how a dozen young men (including Sir George Williams, and representing in equal proportions the Church of England, Wesleyan, Congregational, and Baptist bodies) had met to inaugurate what had now grown to be a potent factor in the religious life of the nation. In its very inception the Y.M.C.A. was unsectarian from the first breath that it drew. May it remain so until it draws its last breath, when Christ shall come again! In these fifty or fifty-five years the Association has attained a very sturdy manhood. It has more than 6,000 branches, and more than 500,000 living members. The branches and the membership are increasing every year.

He regarded the work of the Y.M.C.A. as unique, because it is not a work so much done for young men as a work done by young men among young men. Age is valuable because of its instruction, its example, its experience. It brings the past in a certain measure to bear upon the present. But when young men take up work, it grows under their very hand and is kindled with their enthusiasm. It is unique also because of the basis on which it was formed. It seeks to unite those young men who accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Head and Saviour, according to the Scriptures, who desire to be his disciples in their life and doctrine, and to associate with it the extension of his kingdom among young men. That is a clearly defined basis—an aspiration sufficient for any young man, and is the reason why this Association has never aimed at forming a church. The Church is the permanent body of Christ, the corporate life of Christianity upon earth; but the Y.M.C.A. seeks simply to win men to Christ, leaving them to join that Christian denomination which each believes conscientiously to be the most Scriptural and the best.

Although unsectarian, the Y.M.C.A. has its creed: the Bible, and the rule of life within its covers, is its creed. In these days we cannot afford to lose a single fragment of the truth which God has given—truth with the dew of heaven fresh upon it, plucked fresh from the Tree of Life, which will make giants of us all. We rally round the truth which has stood and will stand to the very end. Let us never be alarmed, in this nineteenth century, when we hear of some new critic who thinks he was born to set the Bible right. If the Bible cannot stand a shaking from such pigmies as that, let it go! But it has stood and withstood such attacks. It has lifted up its head again and again, from the fiercest and the keenest criticism, to show that not a hair of its head had been touched. It has come through every crucible and every furnace, and the smell of fire has not passed upon it. These are days when it is well to remember, and when my own dear Church of England should remember, that the Bible is the only religion of Protestants. We are determined that the old Gospel, the will of God, the duty of man, the atonement of Christ, the pardon of the sinner, and the work of the Holy Spirit, shall not be frittered away; but we will hand them down, undiminished and unsullied, to our children's children. The Association draws its very life from the Bible. The speaker then appealed for an earnest, manly type of Christian who would fearlessly put into practice the principles they had applauded, and concluded with an eloquent rendering of the Bishop of Exeter's poem,

"GIVE US MEN!"

Not less forcible was the address that followed from Rev. J. Glynn Davies, as he tersely urged upon his audience the fourfold message: Jesus saves. He saves to serve. He sustains those who serve. And those who serve Him are on the winning side. He received recently a postcard bearing the following laconic contents:—"My dear sir, my sins are killing me. What shall I do?" He replied, in similar form, "Jesus saves!" to which came the response, "Hallelujah! so He does!" It is easy enough to be bad. Any fool can slip restraint, can throw the reins on the neck of passion, and rush down the hill. But it is hard to conquer self and sin. This is where Jesus saves; and if there are difficulties in service, then Jesus helps, and will at last present us faultless before the presence of his Father with exceeding joy.

Rev. Henry Montgomery (Belfast), whose forte lies specially in the direction of bringing meetings to a practical issue, followed with a rousing appeal to any unconverted persons present to yield unreservedly to the claims of the Lord who died for them. The best way of celebrating the Jubilee of this Association, he said, is to get recruits out of the present meeting. Let us remember not only what Christ saves young people from, but what He saves them to. The Government protects young birds, young fish, young children. Let our associations begin with the lads at as early an age as possible, for nowadays they are being ruined before they reach their teens. The best thing a man, woman or child can do for this life, or the next, is to give their life to Christ as Saviour and Lord of all.

Thursday.

THE Y.M.C.A. IN THE FOREIGN FIELD.

Mr. Frank Anderson, B.A., Student Secretary for Bombay Presidency, read a paper on "The Sphere of the Y.M.C.A. in the Foreign Field." He said that in India there were at least four classes of young men presenting a field for the Y.M.C.A.—the Europeans, the Eurasians (or Anglo-Indians), the Indian Christians, and the non-Christian students. The Europeans were scattered all over the country and were surrounded by all sorts of temptations. There could be no question that they were right in helping the Indian local associations, who were doing all they could to help themselves, to maintain in cities like Bombay and Rangoon trained secretaries who could give all their time to the work.

The Eurasians represented a class in India which, especially in the large cities, must always be reckoned with. Descended partly from Europeans and partly from natives, they had many peculiarities, and presented many difficulties and problems in Christian work. Among the young men of this community there was an ample field for the Y.M.C.A., and whatever the Y.M.C.A. could do for them, that it ought to do.

The Indian or native Christian practically formed another distinct community in India. Their trend was towards Western ways, and they were ready to adopt or share the benefits of every well-tried form of Christian work which could be placed before them. The field for the Y.M.C.A. among them was unquestionably large, and it was of the deepest interest to observe how the missionaries were adopting the Y.M.C.A. A large number of the associations in South India were small vernacular associations in centres of missionary operations, and one of the resolutions of the C.M.S. Quinquennial Conference, held in December last at Allahabad, recommended that "Sunday schools should be well organised among Indian school children, and Y.M.C.A.'s and Y.W.C.A.'s promoted." A movement which had grown up within the last ten years, by which the Y.M.C.A. had been applied as an agency for missions, was of the greatest interest and importance. The idea of the Y.M.C.A. as a missionary organisation was comparatively new; it was certainly never prominent in the minds of those who founded it; and yet in many mission lands it was proving its fitness to deal with the evangelisation of the educated non-Christian young men. Whether it set before itself the combining, training, and directing of the Christian students for the purpose of winning their fellow-students to Christ, or whether it set apart trained men to deal directly through evangelistic meetings, Bible classes or personal work with the non-Christian, it was pre-eminently within its rights in entering this field, and it might be doubted whether any body other than the Y.M.C.A. could effectually deal with the educated classes.

In speaking to an audience of educated non-Christian young men, the Y.M.C.A. trod on no one's heels, and one of the most interesting points which they might notice was the invariable support which the missionaries had given to its missionary operations. (Applause.) He emphasised upon the conference that the Y.M.C.A. in the home lands had in the evangelisation of heathen lands. The experimental period was fast passing away, and in the years to come they should be prepared to maintain a strong work, which, apart from immediate or startling results, should be fit to rank with the deep and penetrating work now being accomplished by educational missions among the young men in mission lands.

A MIGHTY PART TO PLAY

In conclusion, he mentioned some interesting statistics with reference to the Y.M.C.A. movement in India. There were ninety-two associations; eighty-six of these report a membership of 5,109; of these 1,042 were Europeans belonging to thirty-four associations, thus indicating that half the associations were purely native. Thirty-six associations raised for current expenses £2,468, besides £81 for national work. There were nine European secretaries giving all their time to the work, and two native secretaries, the latter being maintained by the funds raised in India.

Then came short speeches from a number of delegates. Special interest centred in those of Messrs. H. Kawaye (Japan) and D. A. Budge (Montreal). The latter related how far his Association was able to help, by systematic giving, the foreign work. From other speakers came timely suggestions as how to protect young fellows proceeding to the Colonies and elsewhere abroad, by visiting out-going vessels and giving particulars of the Y.M.C.A. benefits in foreign places; by local secretaries informing their foreign co-workers of any young Englishmen going out—all of which would help to stop the leakage that is now so much regretted.

Occasion was taken at this meeting to express the thanks of the Conference to the local friends who had in many ways helped to its success by kindly hospitality, and to the Tramways Company for their generous courtesy in granting the visitors free passes over all the lines during the days of session.

Rev. F. B. MEYER occupied the "quiet hour" which followed with a Missionary Bible Reading from the Epistle to the Romans. Referring to God's dealings, as here described, with the Gentile world, he appealed to his hearers in behalf of missionary work, on the grounds, first, of their trusteeship; secondly, of their pity; and thirdly, of their obedience.

Mr. ROBERT ANDERSON, president of the Belfast Association Y.M.C.A., occupied the chair in the afternoon. Mr. FRANK HOWE, assistant-secretary of the English National Council, presented a paper on "District, National, and International Conferences, their use and abuse." The writer urged that the greatest amount of usefulness is found in a national or international conference, which serves the four purposes of (a) Devotion; (b) Demonstration; (c) Deliberation; and (d) Dissemination. All the force and inspiration accumulated in the various sittings should spread itself, through the delegates, in a great wave of spiritual energy and refreshing among the centres to which they returned. In measure as this result was achieved, the conference would be a success, or a failure.

Everything, therefore, depended upon the purpose and motive actuating the individual delegates, and upon choice being made, at Association and district meetings, of the right men for this important duty. A solemn obligation rested upon the delegates to use the Conference for its truest, highest ends; if any made it purely a holiday occasion, or chiefly a time for social enjoyment and relaxation, this was to abuse it.

District conferences were dealt with separately. Lack of concentration, it was pointed out, spoilt much of their work. They should leave the discussion of broad Association subjects to the larger assemblies; abstract topics were not for them; they must get at concrete questions, actually affecting the work, or the absence of it, in towns within their own borders. The District Unions needed a clear, constant view of their own territory, occupied and unoccupied, and a steady determination to possess the whole of it as soon as might be.

Mr. WILLIAM BROWN, general secretary of the Edinburgh Association, opened the discussion, and, during three-quarters of an hour, was followed by a large number of delegates in interesting two-minute speeches upon conference procedure. A Scottish delegate charged the British Committee with having abused this particular Conference, by refusing the moving of a temperance resolution the previous day. Lord KINNAIRD requested information upon this point. With the chairman's consent, Mr. W. H. MILLS explained the rule forbidding any motion that had not previously been sanctioned by the Council, it having been found necessary to safeguard such assemblies from having resolutions sprung upon them on a variety of topics, many of them, perhaps, foreign to the business on the programme. A second delegate from Scotland desired to question Mr. Mills further, but the chairman, with the cordial support of the meeting, declined to permit this, whereupon four or five Scottish representatives left the hall by way of protest, and the session, shortly after this regrettable incident, was closed.

The British Committee subsequently held a meeting, under the presidency of Sir George Williams, at the Shelborne Hotel, when a constitution was unanimously approved for a British and Colonial Federation of the Y.M.C.A.'s. It was also at this meeting referred to the four executives of the British Isles to draft a complete series of bye-laws governing conference procedure, and providing for the appointment at future gatherings of a Committee of Resolutions or Arrangements, to which, at the first sitting, shall be submitted for approval all motions which it was desired to submit for the consideration of the general body of the delegates. A great and successful was held in the evening, presided over first by Sir EDWARD LYNGE HUTCHINSON, Bart., and later by Mr. W. H. SEAGRAM, of London, Chairman of the Foreign Committee of the English National Council.

MISSIONARY MEETING

The first address was delivered by Rev. F. B. MEYER. Referring to his recent visit to India, he riveted the attention of the large audience by describing the tremendous temptations which beset the many young men who went from this country to the chief cities of our great dependency, and the urgency of the need of the many thousands of native students who, educated out of superstition, out of belief in their fathers' gods, were launched upon a great sea of speculation and doubt without compass or chart.

It is a very anxious, critical moment for India. The pressure of the Government examination system was so heavy that the teachers and the taught were straining every nerve in the direction of passing examinations; therefore the missionaries were not able to concentrate their thought and time upon the Christian, the generating, the saving work which he was sure was dearest to their souls. Hence the supreme necessity of calling to their aid such effort as the Y.M.C.A. was initiating in India, as it had already successfully established in the principal centres of Bombay, Calcutta, and Madras.

Mr. Meyer bore strong testimony to the immense value of the work in these cities, and expressed his earnest desire that, following the erection of the splendid Association buildings at Madras and Calcutta, Mr. Frank Anderson might realise the object for which he had come home—the providing of a large building for Christian work among the students at Bombay. He also spoke warmly of Mr. Oliver H. McCowan's work at Rangoon, and commended him, as an Irishman, to the warm, whole-hearted, prayerful support of his Irish Association brethren.

Mr. FRANK ANDERSON, in the course of the address which followed, pressed home the stupendous opportunity and responsibility devolving upon the British associations in regard to the work for young men of India; and Mr. A. B. LLOYD, of the C.M.S., Uganda, stirred the interest and emotion of the gathering by telling of what God has wrought through native agency in Central Africa. The hope of Africa, the hope of India, the hope of the whole heathen world, he said, lay with the natives; and he pleaded earnestly for the renewed consecration and increased missionary sympathy of all the delegates.

Rev. HENRY MONTGOMERY brought the evening's proceedings to a close by conducting a consecration meeting. In promises and gifts, £120 were received for the work of the Y.M.C.A. in India and Burma.

Salvation.

HARK! the gracious proclamation
Sounding over earth and sea—
'Tis the Saviour's invitation:—
Burdened one, 'tis offered thee—
Life is dreary,
Thou art weary—
Hear his message—"COME TO ME."

Vainly in the world thou'rt seeking—
Seeking never finding rest:
Hark! a Heavenly Voice is speaking
Soft and low within thy breast:
Interceding—
Gently pleading—
"Trust Me and be fully blest!"

Hear His loving invitation—
"Heavy laden come to ME;"
Still He offers free salvation,
For He bled and died for THEE:
Sin confessing
Claim the blessing
Take his gift and happy be!

Linger not! for night is falling;
"Tarry not in all the plain:"
Linger not! for Christ is calling;
Shall he plead with thee in vain?
Oft rejected,
Long neglected,
Yet He calls thee once again.

Higher than the heavens above thee
Is the mercy of the Lord.
Lonely heart, there's One to love thee—
One by angel-host adored.
He will take thee,
Ne'er forsake thee
Till the lost one is restored.

Hear the Gospel invitation
Sounding over earth and sea:
Pardon, reconciliation,
Full salvation—full and free.
Jesus bought it,
Have you sought it?
Take this gift and happy be!

E. RICKMAN.

British Home for Incurables.—Earl Amherst recently laid the memorial stone of the new wing of the British Home for Incurables, Crown Lane, Streatham. The board of management felt that the time had arrived for the completion of the institution as originally intended, and the Princess of Wales, as patroness of the Home, approved of the new scheme, and joined in the appeal for the sum of £12,000—which will not only cover the expenditure on the new building, but will endow the new beds.

Home Missions.

Miss Sharman's Homes.

THE beneficent institutions for the reception and training of orphan girls, maintained for so many years under the superintendence of Miss Sharman, must needs be greatly helped by the crowded and enthusiastic assembly at the Mansion House on Friday afternoon last.

The work, which is entirely unsectarian, has been conducted in such quiet and unobtrusive fashion that comparatively few people are aware of its extent. It has developed in many directions. In addition to the Central Homes in Austral Street, Southwark, country branches have been added at Gravesend, Tunbridge Wells, and Hastings. Children are received from early infancy, and each elder girl is entrusted with the CARE OF A YOUNGER CHILD.

The school work is carried on upon Board School lines, and an annual inspection is held. No servants are kept, as the girls do all the work under the direction of the matrons, and are thus prepared for domestic service.

After the Lord Mayor, who presided, had remarked on the economical, business-like, and sound Christian character of the management, Miss Sharman gave a brief description of the work. A strong advocate of homeliness, she did not desire to create a regiment of soldiers nor a set of living machines, but bright, joyous, real children, who enjoy life while they can, and prepare for the toil and strain of after years by storing up sunshine in their hearts for themselves and others. Work there is in the Homes, and plenty of it, but there is play also. Bible lessons and sacred teaching are daily welcomed; so are merry games. The divine idea of childhood is that of a bright morning to usher in a consecrated life. The former inmates maintain loving communication with the Homes. They are scattered almost all over the world, holding posts of honour and usefulness, and very many after a time have taken up distinctly Christian work. In each Home some of the old girls are helpers, and many are at work in other institutions. Some are hospital nurses, some teachers, but the greater number are in service. The principles of "no voting, no begging, and no debts," are found to work well. Miss Sharman concluded with a note of thanksgiving for the great blessing that had attended the work from the first.

Rev. F. B. Meyer considered it an honour to speak on behalf of this admirable work, with which he was thoroughly familiar. He invariably found mental refreshment and stimulus in meeting those bonnie children, and rejoiced in the scriptural instruction and common-sense training afforded to them. They were a true family.

Mr. Ernest Tritton, M.P., expressing his deep sense of the value of all sincere effort to cope with the miseries of the poor, remarked that Miss Sharman's work demanded co-operation and support, since it was carried on in ACCORDANCE WITH LOFTY PRINCIPLE.

In simple faith, with heartiness and sympathy, the children were not merely educated, but loved, and led into the paths of righteousness.

A vigorous address was given by Rev. W. R. Mowll, who remarked that some of the children came from homes of a degrading character, being familiar with terrible sights and scenes. Rescued and "mothered," they were taught in practical fashion how to face the difficulties and problems of life. Mr. Mowll attached high importance to the work on account of its thoroughness. They were instructed to "sweep out the corners," and their scrubbing was genuine, not a mere wiping of the floor with a wet cloth. A much larger degree of public attention and support should be devoted to such useful Institutions.

A vivid description of the internal working was given by Dr. Matcham, who spoke in high terms of the arrangements made for the comfort of the little ones. The death-rate is considerably below one per cent., which is less than that of the healthiest towns in England. The expense of supporting the large family is necessarily large, and an additional requirement is an extension of the seaside Home, in order to provide accommodation for consumptive cases.

Communications may be addressed to Miss Sharman, 20, West Square, Southwark, S.E.

Royal Triumphs at "Royal Ascot."

REMARKABLE and deep interest has been awakened among God's people all over the country by the story of "The Gospel on Epsom Racecourse," published in your issue of June 8. Helpful communications from many friends have cheered our hearts and strengthened our hands, and to these, as well as your readers generally, who await with equal interest the record of our toil at Ascot Races, I desire to address myself, praising God for the wonderful triumphs of his Gospel vouchsafed at this centre of wealth, fashion, and aristocratic ungodliness.

June 13, 14, 15, and 16 are days which will never be forgotten by the evangelists who took part. We were eighteen strong on the first day, and were subsequently joined by others, our company including Major Mackinlay, Mr. Chas. Cook, Mr. B. Barry Wake, and Mr. Ned Wright. Loaded with choice Gospel booklets and cards in several big bales, numbering altogether more than 20,000 publications, we rallied on the racecourse opposite the Grand Stand. From Tuesday forenoon till Friday afternoon a campaign of extraordinary interest proceeded, marked on the first day by the bitterest opposition, and on each of the following days by signal instances of conviction and conversion. Mr. Heatley and several members of the Racecourse Mission joined forces with us, and rendered very acceptable help.

Here are some incidents out of many which might be related:

JEWISH OPPOSITION.

Tuesday was throughout a day of trial; strong opposition proceeded from a knot of Jewish professional gamblers, who could not endure the sight of two of their own race among us, one of whom had been a tipster on that very racecourse a twelvemonth ago! They set on us again and again, evidently ready for violent measures; but we stood our ground, and the Lord helped the object of their violence to deliver a glorious testimony of the saving and keeping power of Christ. This seems to have cowed them, as the remaining days were a complete contrast, and we were allowed to proceed with our work in comparative peace.

AN ACTRESS ON HER KNEES.

On Wednesday afternoon a fashionably-dressed lady listened with interest, accepting a hymn-sheet and joining in the singing. According to our custom, when the horses came by during a race we all knelt and prayed, and, to the astonishment of all, this grandly-dressed lady knelt with us there on the green sward! She was afterwards spoken with earnestly. "I am only an actress," she said, "and have a theatre of my own at ——. I believe in God. You can come and preach in my theatre if you like!" Her name and address were taken, and the opportunity thus given will be availed of in the winter, God willing. Let earnest prayer be meanwhile made for her conversion.

TWO YEARS AGO!

The same day a man and his wife were observed listening intently. A tract was offered, when they made the following statement:—"We came to look for you gentlemen. Two years ago one of you gave us a Gospel of John, and we have treasured it ever since. We wanted to tell you what a comfort it was to a daughter who has died, and to whom we read it during her last illness." They were both pointed to Christ, and tearfully confessed their acceptance of Him. Both will be visited by the evangelist who conversed with them.

THE FIRST AND THE LAST VISIT.

"On Thursday afternoon," writes an evangelist, "I spoke to two young men who had come to the races on their cycles. They said it was the first time they had visited a racecourse, and it would be the last. One said he was a Christian, but, like Peter, he was following afar off; tears ran down his cheeks as he said he would accept Christ afresh there and then, and go to hear the Gospel at Staines on Sunday."

These and other incidents made our hearts overflow with thankfulness. Each evening was occupied in village work at Bishopgate, Egham, or Englefield Green, where most interesting services were held, and many wanderers were reached. Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

Open-Air Mission, 11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

By Mr. B. BARRY WAKE.

At the commencement it was evident that our presence was an offence, and that we ought not to be tolerated. On the plain, below the beautiful parasol-tented Grand Stand and Lawn, where flocked the fair daughters of England's aristocracy, and away on the course, we gave our banner to the breeze. There, under the glorious flashing sunlight, our happy band toiled on during the four days of battle.

Wonderful to tell! while men attempt to howl us down close by—yes, close by—we see the falling tear, and hear the sinner's spoken surrender and the sinner's believing plea.

On Friday (the last race day) a man laid violent hands on one of the banner poles. A lady standing close to us, broken down under God's convicting grace, gave herself up to her Saviour, his wonderful grace causing her joyously to despise her previous shame.

Satan places his battalions in splendid form, from his own point of view, on the racecourses of England—nay, in such array for destructive operation as on no other ground. It is clearly, therefore, the duty of the Soldiers of the Cross to attack such a stronghold if it can be shown to be fairly approachable. Where under heaven can so many "creatures," who are destined to live for ever, be found massed in any equally given space, and before whom it is the imperative duty of the Church to bring the Gospel as a witness?

The Homes of Hope.

AMID the luxury and frivolity of modern city life temptations to sin abound, and it is an easy matter for a young girl to slide into the alluring paths of vice. Means to rise again from the depths are by no means so plentiful, but we rejoice to find that among the number the Homes of Hope continue to occupy a useful position.

The annual report is a pithy account of much good work. Both the preventive and the reformatory branches have made progress. Some of the stories of betrayal and ruin which are related are pathetic indeed, and it is cheering to know that many of the girls develop into godly and reliable women. They are, in most cases, far more sinned against than sinning, and in a number of instances gladly receive the Gospel message.

Great attention is paid, and very rightly so, to preventive cases. Here is a sample instance:

H—— H——, aged fifteen years, entered the Home through the recommendation of the police magistrate at Bow Street, having been found on Westminster Bridge homeless and destitute. The mother, who was a widow, sent the girl to public-houses to sell flowers, where, as may be imagined, she met with all manner of bad characters, and on more than one occasion narrowly escaped being morally ill-treated by the low men whom she addressed in order to sell her flowers. In the Home the matron speaks of her as a very nice child indeed (being really only a child), but had formed bad acquaintances in her wanderings. The mother herself began to feel alarmed at the probable end of the child, as soon as she realised the fact that the girl was spending her nights out entirely. Happily the girl is not of immoral or vicious tendency, and although treading on the very verge of ruin, she has been mercifully spared falling into a life of unchastity. She has conducted herself very commendably while an inmate, gladly availing herself of the many excellent useful lessons she learns in the Homes.

The ceaseless patience and loving care required in dealing with some of the wilder characters are well illustrated in

J—— A——, whose parents both died when she was very young. She was brought up by a grandmother. When it was thought she was old enough to be placed in service, she was most indiscreetly sent as help in a public-house. There, unfortunately, the girl fell. Subsequently she became an inmate of several homes and refuges, but was always running away. The Matron adds: "I have had a deal of trouble with her on account of her violent temper, and thought at one time I should never be able to place her out to service. I have obtained for her three different situations, in each of which, unhappily, she has remained but a month or so. After two years' hard work and patience, I have managed in a measure to cure her temper. She has now been nine months as housemaid in a medical gentleman's family doing well."

The annals of the Homes of Hope are full of heartrending histories of brutality and betrayal, and the labours of the worthy secretary, Mr. W. J. Hornibrook, and his devoted workers, on behalf of a simple but ill-treated, and deluded section of the community, must command respect and sympathy. Communications may be addressed the Secretary, 4, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

The Evangelisation Society.

THE annual record of the Evangelisation Society may always be relied on to supply interesting and stimulating news of aggressive Gospel work.

The latest report, modest in character, is full of good tidings of spiritual revival. The Society "does not tabulate spiritual results, but the letters received from friends in the localities where missions have been held, tell of work that has stood the test of time, of converts added to the churches, of some who have become evangelists, missionaries to the heathen, local preachers, Sunday-school teachers, open-air workers and village workers, as well as of husbands and wives whose lives and homes have been transformed by the same Divine renewing power." Not the least cheering accounts are those of work amongst the dark and neglected villages of England. In spite of hindrances by sacerdotal prejudice or general apathy, there has been much blessing.

United missions are found to be the most satisfactory means of evangelisation, especially when held in neutral buildings. All sections of God's people work together and come into closer contact. The people see that on fundamental truths the Evangelical Churches agree; Christians are revived, and an impetus is given to the whole spiritual life of the place, while the combined effort arrests the attention of the careless as nothing else can do.

Testimony continually reaches the secretary as to the abiding character of the evangelist's work. Here is a sample note:

Mr. C—— is greatly beloved because of the very many whom, under God, he has been the means of leading into liberty. One case I must mention here, of a man who, up to the age of seventy or seventy-one, was a notorious character. In short, he was everything that was bad and a terror to the neighbourhood; but some few years since he was converted, and is now living a most consistent life. It does one good to hear his testimony to Jesus' power to save, and it is a delight to see his beaming face.

The tent work has a chapter to itself. A service in a tent is always less formal than one in a place of worship, or even in a schoolroom or public hall. On this account many people are attracted who for years have absented themselves from any church or chapel, and the simplicity of the word, ungarnished by oratorical effect, and characterised by the vividness of earnest feeling and delivery, has led to beneficent results in many parts of the country.

The Scottish branch contributes some forcible descriptions of the work.

As the outcome of a mission conducted a few years ago a Y.W.C.A. was started. From the beginning the membership has been large. They have done and are still doing a good work in the district, a work highly appreciated by local ministers, as well as by the community at large. In addition to this, they have representatives in both the home and foreign fields.

A minister said, some time ago, that he had a young man preaching for him who was brought to the Saviour at one of the Society's missions. "That young man," he added, "is one of our best students, and gives good promise of great usefulness in the future."

In a pointed word of concluding comment, Mr. John Wood, the hon. secretary, adds: "The command is still upon us to preach the Gospel to every creature. We seek to do this without regard to denominational questions or adequate pecuniary return, and with a deep sense of responsibility to God, to those who entrust us with the means, and to the people who listen to the Word of life from our lips." The Society's offices are 21, Surrey Street, Strand, W.C.

The Aldersgate "Mid-day."

SPEAKING on the Afro-American question, on Monday last, at the noon prayer meeting, Mr. D. E. Tobias enlisted deep sympathy for his fellow-countrymen, the coloured people of the Southern States, by a modest and straight-forward statement of the present melancholy position of affairs.

The disabilities of the negroes, the peculiar means by which they are held in terror, and the practical continuance of slavery under the guise of the "chain-gang" system were clearly described. Mr. Tobias appealed for the separation of the sexes in these "gangs," and of young lads from old criminals. At present the prisoners are herded together day and night, regardless of age or sex, while the average length of the sentences passed on the coloured race as compared with that of the whites, demonstrates the injustice meted out to the former. The question, pure and simple, is one of property in human flesh. The reflections made upon the coloured people as a justification for keeping them in bondage are disingenuous. For instance, they are alleged to be ignorant, but at the same time those who blame them shut them out from public educational institutions, which are maintained by taxation on both races alike. Mr. Tobias pleaded for the prayers and influence of Christians on behalf of his suffering compatriots.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, remarked, in a closing word, that the root difficulty—the strong racial feeling—was manifested not only in America, but in South Africa, and was evidenced by the arrangement at Durban Post Office, by which a native, educated and able though he might be, was prohibited from entering by the same door as a white man.

Bermondsey Settlement.

THE good work at Bermondsey continues to make headway in one of the most difficult districts of the metropolis. The helpful agencies of the settlement develop in number and strength on a sound Gospel basis.

At Southwark Park Wesleyan Church, the branches which centre round an evangelistic and temperance work are in a prosperous condition, and an important department of activity is that of Christian teaching, dealing with Biblical subjects, and the application of Christian principles to the problems of modern life. The Warden, Rev. J. Scott Lidgett, found that Sunday morning lectures on such topics, in the open air, were well received by artisan audiences.

In quieter ways, too, this work of undenominational Christian teaching is being carried on. On several mornings, before the ordinary work of the day begins, Mr. Lidgett conducts classes of Christian workers, missionaries, &c., in Bible study and Christian doctrine. The college for working men and women, with extensive class lists, the girls' clubs, boys' brigade, nursing and relief societies, and many other useful organisations whose bare enumeration would be a lengthy process, are instrumental in leavening a slum district with the spirit of true religion, and raising the tone of education and social life.

It was in Bermondsey Settlement that Sister Grace first shaped the pathetic Guild of Brave Poor Things for the instruction and recreation of all those little ones who, by physical or mental defects, are debarred from taking any pronounced part in the battle of life. It is a touching sight to see the members mustering for their meeting, the blind and lame being helped along by their friends, the little blind children hastening from the blind school, the deaf children from the neighbouring deaf centre directly their lessons are over, and many mothers bringing their sick children to the gathering, which gives them almost all the enjoyment that their life affords.

It is satisfactory to note that purely educational effort does not expand to the detriment of the Gospel, a leading characteristic of the popular services being an aggressive evangelism. Mr. Lidgett cordially invites an inspection of the Settlement, and its many sided work. The address is Farncombe Street, Bermondsey, London, S.E.

Commercial Travellers' Christian Association.

THE half-yearly meeting was held on Saturday last at Barden Park, Tonbridge. Mr. W. T. Rogers presided, and the secretary (Mr. Leonard Courtney) reported highly satisfactory progress. During the past six months 316 new members had been introduced, and 1,300 new subscribers to "Good Lines" had been enrolled. Bibles have been sent to the following hotels:—Central, Eastbourne; Warburton's, Newport; Hotel Westminster, Aberystwyth; Young's, Cardiff; Edinburgh, Armagh; and McKeown's, Dungannon. Total forty-five. Also 377 text-cards have been sent out. Library had been sent to:—White's, Wexford; and renewals to Fernley, Bath; Franklin's Dublin; Saracen's Head, Ashford; Angel, Cardiff; North's, Portsmouth; Gordon, Rochester; Fleur de Lis, Canterbury; and Laurence's Liverpool. Beneficent grants had been made in 368 cases of distress amongst travellers or their widows and orphans.

Personalia.

Gipsy Smith, the well-known evangelist, is very much better in health, and hopes shortly to resume his work.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is announced as a speaker at the International Convention of the Epworth League, to be held in Indianapolis on July 20.

Dr. G. D. Dowkontt, of the International Medical Missionary Society, New York, hopes to spend July and August in this country. He would be glad of any opportunities of speaking on Medical Missions. Letters for him should be addressed care of Mr. B. F. Babcock, 4, Water Street, Liverpool.

Rev. T. W. Drury, Principal of the Church Missionary College, Islington, has been invited to become Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, in the place of Dr. Handley Moule, now Norrisian Professor. Mr. Drury, who was formerly scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge, and took a first class in the Theological Tripos, has had remarkable success in his work at Islington.

Mission to Pea-Pickers. — Pea-picking is about to begin in Worcestershire. In the region just beyond Evesham some 400 pickers will be encamped for the next two or three weeks. In answer to urgent invitations we are starting for Gospel work among these people. Assured that this call is of God, we feel persuaded He will incline the hearts of his stewards to send the needful help. John Burnham.
Fern Bank, Brentford.

Advent Conference, Clapham.—The annual conference on Our Lord's return was held on June 14 to 16. The meetings were better attended than usual, and the interest in each meeting deepened as the days went on. The aspect of this conference has rather changed within the last two years. It is no longer so occupied with the various views of different speakers, or with the details of the Lord's return, but concerns itself more with the subject of the personal readiness of individuals. The addresses on this subject were very powerful and to the point. Rev. F. Paynter was the chairman, and his simple, earnest addresses were impressive and touching.

Berger Hall, Bromley, E.—A week's convention for the deepening of spiritual life has just closed at Berger's Hall, Empsom Street, Bromley, E., the Home-Mission headquarters of the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union. This is the first convention of the kind held in this part of East London, and the interest has been so great that in all likelihood others will follow. Night after night large numbers of East End believers gathered. The speakers were Pastor Fuller Gooch, Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, Prof. Newell (Chicago), Dr. Harry Guinness, and Pastor James Lyall. The truth emphasised was Christ's absolute ownership of the believer, and the fulness of blessing promised to those who were willing to recognise the Divine claim. The Word was with power, many standing up each night to declare their willingness to yield all to Christ and to launch out into the deep of a larger Christian life.

Other Lands.

The Famine in Russia.

COMMUNICATIONS from the scene of the famine in South Russia rehearse a tale of great sadness. In many districts the people who have so far survived are the victims of great suffering through typhus and scurvy. They lie in miserable huts away from friends, and unable to do anything for their own nourishment or recovery of health. Young and old alike are in dire distress, and many who were formerly well-to-do are to-day helpless and forsaken. The Christian ladies who have arrived in Kazan to nurse the sick and feed the hungry, are showing a devoted spirit. In some cases they are medical students, spending their holidays in service which, though painful at present, will bring its reward in the recollections of coming days.

Madame Tretiakoff, a village schoolmistress, writing from the Tchistopol, says: "We had started a free dinner room for seventy children, but owing to the lack of funds we were obliged to reduce the number to fifty. It was so hard to tell these poor hungry children that I should be obliged to close the door on twenty of them! I tried to frame one sentence after another, but each sentence would seem just as cruel to the starving children. At last I was obliged to tell them one day that I could only feed fifty of them. A deep silence ensued after I had uttered the fatal words. The white and pinched faces seemed to grow a shade whiter, the eyes drooped, and the little hands which had been so busy a minute ago, suddenly dropped. Then the voices rose, protesting and pleading—'Don't exclude me!' 'For Christ's sake not me!' 'I have nothing to eat at home!' 'We only get food once a day, and that is bread made of arack and acorns!' 'Oh, don't exclude me!' and so on. What could I say to comfort these poor sufferers? The need of the people is so great, consequently large funds are needed."

By the end of March the Red Cross Society had organised 629 free dinner-rooms in the Kazan province, both for children and adults, where hot food was supplied to 45,000 people. Allowances of flour were also granted to 71,500 people, and baked bread to 14,500 out of 240 bakeries. Six shelters were organised for 466 people; thirty-four bakeries, with a cheap sale of bread; sixty feeding stations, for 2,691 men; twenty-five tea houses; and the night refuge. Altogether the Red Cross provided food for 132,000 people in the Kazan province.

With the advent of spring a terrible question arises. With what are the fields to be sown? In the starving villages, there is not a grain in reserve. The rural authorities are quite unable to help all, whilst the peasants have absolutely nothing to buy corn with. Since 1891 the soil has been impoverished and exhausted to the last degree. In the suffering districts the probability is that only 25 per cent. to 30 per cent. of the area of cornfields will be sown. It is especially hard on those peasants who have rented their land on the half-system—i.e., paying as rent half the produce of their land, and likewise for those who have bought their land by the aid of the peasants' bank. The local rural authorities refuse to advance them anything towards sowing their fields (for instance, the Sviajsky rural authorities refused the appeal of ten communities). The Government rural authorities are likewise straitened for funds, as the Ministry of the Interior (Home Office) has only accorded them a credit of 4,000,000 pouds of grain, whereas 5,284,539 pouds are absolutely necessary. (One poud, 36lb.)

Communications may be addressed to Mr J. T. Woolrych Perowne, 3, Bryanston Place, London, W.

(798)

New York Notes.

AFTER an unusually cool May, June has come upon us with its normal temperature. Consequently, there is a tendency among us to "wilt." Owing probably to the fact of the next great International Christian Endeavour Convention being held in London in 1900, and that the Exposition will be the chief attraction in Paris, the number of ministers leaving for Europe does not appear to be quite so large as usual. Still, quite a number have gone or will go.

But there is no intention on the part of the churches of this city to let the devil have all his own way here during the summer. Most of the pastors have made arrangements by which their pulpits will be occupied all through the hot weather, and the open-air field is to be occupied in considerable force. The topography of the city is not, on the whole, favourable for evangelistic work in the streets; but there are several locations that are really very good ones. During the last week or two a party of well-meaning people have been carrying on a kind of cart-tail evangelistic campaign in the quarter chiefly inhabitated by Jews. A gentleman, apparently in very delicate health, was wheeled on the sidewalk in an invalid chair. A light waggon driven by a coloured man formed a pulpit for a youth, who delivered earnest Gospel addresses; while two white girls and a coloured one sang appropriate solos and hymns. On one or two occasions the party were pelted with stones and other tangible evidences of lack of appreciation on the part of those whose good was sought.

The New York Sun, whose editorials are noted for terse, clean-cut sentiments, expressed with great force, in commenting upon the remarks of the secretary of a Society for Sabbath Observance, to the effect that golf, wheeling, &c., are chiefly responsible for the absence of many people from Divine service, says that the real reason is to be found further back than that. It points out, with truth, that the doubt cast upon the Bible and its authority by men like Dr. Briggs undermines faith, not only in the Book but in any revelation at all. If religion is simply a matter of education, and the Bible has no authority peculiar to itself, why go to church to learn about the one or to listen to the other? ROGER MARTIN.

The Lower Himalayas.

VERY few of your readers will have heard of the C.M.S. Mission to the Tribes of Jaunsâr, which has been recently started. Jaunsâr is situated above the Annfield Mission, Dehra Dun, on the Lower Himalayas. The people are very simple and accessible, but intensely ignorant and superstitious. Sometimes we have long, tedious, and dangerous paths to travel to get to their villages, often 1,000 or 2,000 feet above our camp; but when we reach them, tired and jaded, how delighted we feel at the reception they give us! Men, women, and children flock around us to hear us sing and preach. My husband has been writing a little grammar and a vocabulary of their language, and has translated into it Matthew's Gospel and a little volume of hymns.

In order to get among the hill tribes we have built ourselves a hut to live in, about eighteen miles from Annfield. Now we are enlarging it further, so that in case the Society send us additional missionaries we can put them up also. When we cannot get up to the distant villages we can always go to the low sheds, and generally find people willing to listen. Besides, we meet with groups of hillmen on the road going to and fro, and they will always sit down and rest their burdens whilst we put before them the way of life.

A lady in England sends to us the pay of a native Christian catechist, who helps in preaching the Gospel in Jaunsâr. Will your readers kindly help us in the cost of building these huts? Mr. H. Malaher, Secretary of Missionary Leaves Association, 20, Compton Terrace, Islington, London, N., will receive help.—Yours sincerely, (MRS.) ADA CARMICHAEL.

Rambagh, via Saharunpur, N. India.

Hunan Extension.

THE first tangible result of the determination of the C.M.S. to grapple more fully with the evangelisation of China is the fact of my wife and I being at Wuchow in Kuang-si, with the prospect of shortly going on to Kuei-lin, the capital, 300 miles north of this city. Very little missionary work has been done in Kuang-si in the past, and even now less than twenty missionaries are distributed in six cities out of 120 working among these ten millions.

Hunan, the home par excellence of the literati, long the centre of anti-foreign and anti-Christian propaganda, is at length slowly and reluctantly opening to outside influences. Kuei-lin occupies an important position relative to S. Hunan. There is also communication by river and canal to Yung-chow. A strong mission in Kuei-lin ought to have considerable influence, and to ultimately extend into Hunan itself. As all work there must be begun de novo, there being no Chinese Christian helpers available, a large initial staff will be necessary. May I ask you to remember these needy fields in prayer, and thus co-operate effectually in the evangelisation of these parts?

LOUIS BYRDE.

Address C.M.S., Hong-Kong.

The Balaghat Mission.

WRITING from Baihir, Balaghat, India, Mr. John Lampard says:—"Our camping work in the villages has been much blessed. Our plan is to march six or eight miles every morning (except Sunday), preaching in two or three villages on the way, and holding an evening meeting in the camping village. At night we generally get a good proportion of the adult population. The presence of my wife nearly always ensures the attendance of a good number of women, which was rarely the case in my bachelor days.

"One of our best camps recently was at a village called Alna, in one of the remotest parts of the district. On a Saturday evening we had a good meeting in the yard of the head man's house, our native bhajan singing, being assisted by my concertina and a big native drum. The people here are such a timid lot that when I rode through the village some time previously a number of the men hid themselves; others ran away into the forest, and one man fled, as if for his life, to the top of a high hill. During Sunday we probably had nearly every man, woman and child in the village at our meetings.

"While my wife and I have thus been visiting the more outlying parts of our field, the work has proceeded with vigour at our two stations, Baihir and Nikkum. At the former, in addition to the oversight of the orphanage, Miss Fredoux has preached in all the villages within a few miles' radius of Baihir, visiting some of them two or three times. Miss Fredoux travels in a small native bullock cart, without springs, and is accompanied by a native Christian woman.

"We are putting up a building to accommodate the orphans under our care. The foundation is of rough stone and baked brick, the walls of sun-dried brick with a tiled roof, and the cost of the whole will not exceed £50. It seems to be the Lord's purpose to extend our operations here, and He is thrusting out new helpers one by one. A young man named Mr. Williams is en route from England to join us, and we hope to welcome another lady worker from England after the rains.

"The outfit and passage money of new workers, our new orphanage building, the new mission house at Khursipur and so on, mean, of course, increasing needs."

Communications may be addressed to Miss Adeline Lampard, 114, Clapton Common, N.E.

Flowers from Palestine.—We have received some beautiful specimens of coloured flowers and grasses grown in the Holy Land neatly displayed on cards with appropriate lines. They are prepared by native women and are sold on behalf of mission work, carried on among Jews by the London City Mission. The cards can be had (1s. 1d. post free) from Mr. J. Dunn, 3, Bridewell Place, London, E.C.

A New Mission Field.

I HAVE been appointed to the Siroucha circuit in the Godavery District. There was no money to send a man to these needy people, so I volunteered for the work, willing to trust God for all, in order that the Gospel might be preached to them. Since coming here last January, I have travelled hundreds of miles on horseback and on foot, and I have never seen the people so anxious to hear God's Word preached.

The door is wide open; who will help? We are in need of money and workers. My entire income is only about £6 per month. Out of this I have to pay all my expenses. This is no small item, as there are no railways in the country yet, and I have to send 500 miles for supplies. We are praying over the matter, and believe God will have compassion on these poor people, who are so anxious to know the truth. R. H. Madden, M.E. Mission.

Siroucha, C.P., India, May 9.

The Indians of Brazil.

SINCE my return to England I have frequently been asked, "Is the Roman Church doing nothing towards Christianising the Indians?" To this question I want to make a straightforward reply, without any ambiguity, and weighing well the full import of the words which I use. With one single honourable exception, all the priests with whom I came in contact during my recent journey were immoral, drunken, and ignorant. Every mission which the Romanists have started has utterly failed to accomplish the Christianising of the Indians. More than this, I assert that the tribes who have come under priestly care are decidedly inferior in morals, and more lacking in industry and order than the tribes who refuse to have any intercourse whatever with the whites.

It is my deliberate judgment that, if we want to do successful missionary work among the Brazilian Indians, we must continue to go so far inland as to be effectually out of reach of the trader and the rum-seller; and we shall do well if we obtain small reservations for the work from the Government, from which all undesirable settlers can be excluded. I am planning a missionary trip to the Araguaya river, the western affluent of the great Tocantins. This river has nearly 1,000 miles of navigable water, and along its banks are formed the great tribes of the Cayapós, the Carajás, and the Chavantes.

They ought to be reached with the Gospel before the Catholic priests get at them, for it is a well-known fact that just as soon as a Protestant mission is planned, the priests at once bestir themselves to get on the ground first, and to sow the seeds of error and superstition which it is afterwards so difficult to eradicate.

One of the great hindrances of my last year's expedition was due to the poor accommodation which we had for our river journey. Not only was our canoe far too small and inconvenient, but it was also insecure and ill-protected, so that a considerable portion of our belongings was spoiled by water and exposure. A Liverpool ship-building firm has made me a plan of a suitable steel-canoe, which is to cost £180. Adding £70 for freight, import-tax and fittings, makes a total of £250. Mr. W. Roger Jones, 20, Exeter Hall, Strand, London, will act as treasurer for this and for the manual training school, which I hope to set afoot as soon as the necessary means are received.

George R. Witte.

Christian Endeavour in Crete.—We have been greatly cheered, says Christian Endeavour, by a letter from one of our soldiers in Crete, in which he tells us, in most enthusiastic style, of the introduction of our movement into Candia. The Society there is only five months old, but our correspondent describes it as being "full of life from above." Many members of the Society are quite young converts, consisting of Greeks and Moslems and two Jews. All told, these number 102, with fifteen corresponding members in the villages. Only a few months ago many of these men were engaged in savage warfare with each other, but now they are loving and praising God, and dwelling together in unity as brethren in Christ.

Protestant Outlook.

PREACHING at Forest Gate on Sunday last, Cardinal Vaughan declared himself deeply interested in the Ritualistic movement. He compared the Anglican Church to Noah's Ark, containing all kinds of things—a variety of professions and practices. A large and growing party, however, is looking for "Catholic Truth," and the archbishops sit smiling and fearing, looking for some compromise. Such was the Cardinal's view of things, and such was his sympathy with the movement, that he declined to utter a word of controversy at present.

At the fortieth annual meeting of the English Church Union, held last week at the Church House, Westminster, the present membership was reported to be 37,900, of which 4,370 were clergy. It seemed that 7,500 persons had joined the Union since last year's Congress at Bradford. The presidential address of Lord Halifax, which was read in his absence, defended the usual extreme positions. An evangelical crusade against the Oxford Movement was regarded with contemptuous composure; it must either end in an ignominious failure or in the disestablishment of the Church. And Lord Halifax added: "There are worse evils than disestablishment"—a remark which was loudly cheered.

At length the Protestant Episcopal Church of America is showing Romeward tendencies. A glaring illustration of the fact is afforded by the appearance of a book entitled "Prayer at Mass," and its introduction into the Church of the Ascension, Chicago. Composed almost entirely of prayers taken from the Latin, the book is addressed to "American Catholics." The compiler, "Father" Larrabee, admits that his manual is without parallel in the Episcopal Church of America; it contains "Litany of the Blessed Sacrament" and forms for every Romish rite and ceremony. Much controversy has been aroused by the appearance of the book, and among others who have spoken is Bishop Cheney, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, who has expressed the hope that the book will have a providential mission in opening the eyes of the laity to the direction in which the priests are leading them.

Canon MacColl, in his "Reformation Settlement Examined in the Light of History and Law," expresses the opinion that the Church of England has done wisely in refusing to admit the term Protestant as entering into the definition of her claims. Because Protestant is a negative term, he thinks that "the Protestant faith" is a contradiction in terms. "The note of faith is—'I believe;' of Protestantism, 'I do not believe.'" That is only half the truth. The Protestant protests against the prayers of saints and of the Virgin Mary, because he believes in the efficacy of the intercession of Christ; he repudiates the offering of the sacrifice of the mass, because he believes in the offering of the body of Christ once for all; he rejects the Church as the sole interpreter of Scripture, because he believes that the Holy Spirit in the heart is a safer guide, and that no one should come between God and the soul. Thus the negations of Protestants all rest on the strongest and most sacred affirmations.

Two pamphlets of substantial value, and likely to assist many in the present crisis, are: Is the Christian Ministry a Sacerdotal Priesthood? by Rev. E. Keightley Botwood, B.A., Croydon (6d. Elliot Stock); and Confession and Absolution, by the late Dean Plumptre, including an excursus on "the Power of the Keys" (6d. C. J. Thynne). A vigorous indictment of the Confessional has been written by Mr. T. G. Jack, with the expressive title Beauty and the Beast. Needless to say, the moral aspect of the subject is emphasised, the effects of the system upon female modesty and innocency being particularly brought to view. Mr. Jack quotes many authorities, Romish, Ritualistic, and Protestant, and shows the Confessional to be a veritable instrument of Satan, inimical to domestic purity, social honour, and national well-being. The pamphlet deserves serious attention at the present time. (1d. nett. W. Wileman, 27, Bouverie St., E.C.)

International S.S. Lessons.

July 2, 1899.

Hosea xiv. 1-9.

Golden Text.—Hosea vi. 1.

Lesson Surroundings.

IN order to make this lesson interesting the teacher must be well acquainted with the history of the times and the Prophet. The history of the time is found in 2 Kings, chap. xv., xvi., xvii., 2 Chron. chap. xxvi., xxvii., xxviii. The people of Israel had arrived at a period of great outward prosperity. Their country was larger and richer than it had ever been since the times of Solomon. But wickedness prevailed, irreligion and idolatry, and God's laws were entirely set aside. Then the Lord sent his spirit into certain men, and they prophesied to warn the people that God's judgments must fall on them for their wickedness, and Israel be ruined.

"The Minor Prophets" books, so-called, not because they are less important but less in size than the others, twelve in number, they are not arranged chronologically in our Bible. Jonah comes first, then Amos, and then Hosea. Amos came with a message of denunciation against the sin, he represented God's justice. Hosea represents God's unchanging love.

Hosea (meaning Salvation).

Who he was and when he lived? (See ch. i. 1). He was a prophet in the northern kingdom of Israel for about sixty years. God taught him his message from his own personal experience. Hosea married a beautiful young wife, named Gomer, whom he dearly loved, but she became wicked and left him; he never ceased to love her, and again and again got her back to his home and forgave her, even paying a price to get her back. This forms a perfect picture of God's choice and love for his people Israel, of their unfaithfulness to Him, his tender yearnings after them, the price he paid for their ransom, and the sad end of forsaking Him and spurning his love. (See Isa. liv. 5; Jer. iii. 14; Rev. xxi. 2, 9.) All this can be applied to the true people of God now. (Matt. xi. 28-30; xxiii. 37, 38.)

The Book of Hosea

is composed of portions of his prophecies, which God has preserved for our instruction. The first and third chapters are in prose, the rest is poetry. Chapter i.-iii. form the first part of the prophecy, and were written some years previously to the other; iv. to the end is full of touching appeals, in view of the swiftly-coming punishment for sin. Jehovah seems to speak with tears of sorrow and pity in his eyes.

Hosea xiv. 1-9.

Verses 1, 2 are spoken by the Prophet. He calls upon Israel to return to their God. Sin always makes us fall. We are like the Prodigal Son in Christ's parable. Repentance is to turn right round, and confess our sins. Then comes the new birth. (John iii. 3, 5.)

Verses 2, 3 are the words of prayer and promise put into the mouth of repentant Israel. "The calves of our lips" means the sacrifice of praise. (Heb. xiii. 15.) They had gone to Assyria, Egypt, and idols for help.

Verses 4-6 is the voice of the Lord, saying what He will do to those who return to Him in sorrow for the past. Mark the exceeding kindness—He forgives, heals, loves, and gives them power to grow holy, and beautiful, and useful. This God longs to do for everyone who is sorry for their sin. Who will return now?

Verse 7. The Prophet again speaks, describing the blessings of those whom God forgives and receives (Song Sol. ii. 3, Ps. xvii. 8, xci. 1).

Verse 8. Repentant Israel renounces his idols.

The Lord says, "I have heard him and observed him."

Israel rejoices, "I am like a green fir tree."

The Lord reminds him not again to trust in himself, for "without Me ye can do nothing" (John xv. 5).

Verse 9. The moral, a message to all (Eccles. xii. 13, 14).

Truths to be Emphasized and Illustrated.

1. We have all wandered from God. All sin and disobedience is going away from God (Rom. iii. 23).

2. God is always pleading in love "Come back" (Eze. xxxiii. 11).

3. What is included in true repentance? (Acts xxvi. 18).

4. How has God opened the way for our return? (John xiv. 6).

5. Who is willing to come back to God this afternoon?

6. Then verse 4 will be God's word to me.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

The Bear.

THE male voice with which I speak is not a pleasant one, and those whom I now address would sooner hear the roar of the lion, the braying of the ass, or the trumpeting of the elephant, than the grunt of a bear. Still, I help to make that variety in sound and form, which you sometimes say is charming. My form is no more elegant than my voice is harmonious. You must take me as I am, and kindly listen to my words. Nor have I beautifully-marked skin like my friend the tiger or my distant relative the zebra. I have a shaggy coat of a dirty brown colour, excepting when I live among snow and ice, and then I am white. I know I am scorned and despised, for there are not nice stories about me as there are about so many other animals. Still in your sacred book. I know there is a story there of a young giant-killer and king. He was one day feeding his father's sheep, when he saw me suddenly pounce upon one of the lambs. By using his staff and sling and his strong hands I was slain, and the lamb rescued. Soon after that he saw a wicked boastful giant frightening the soldiers on the battlefield. He saw that God, who delivered him from the bear, would deliver him from Goliath, so he went against him with a sling and a stone. He slew him and cut off his head and showed it to the king and the army. Though I did try to steal and eat the shepherd's lamb, I could not very well help it, for so was I made. Beside, as I am in this way always associated with the young hero's splendid giant killing, I am glad that I encountered David on that dark quiet night of long ago. While I sometimes slay, simply to fill my hungry stomach, and that of my young ones, I am sometimes ordered to slay in punishment for some wrong, which I am too dull and stupid to understand thoroughly myself. But the voice which speaks within my thick skull,

MY NAME APPEARS SEVERAL TIMES

I CANNOT BUT HEAR AND OBEY, though I cannot say I know whose voice it is.

Many, many years ago there was a great preacher in a distant land who was very brave and very faithful. He prayed for the people; he warned, and taught, and entreated them, so that they might forsake their evil ways and become good. Some did amend their ways, and treated him with kindness and reverence; but one day, as he was going along to a city, probably to teach and worship the true God, a crowd of youths and young men made mockery of him and his bald head. They probably used very bad language, and threw dust and stones at him, and took God's name in vain. He turned and rebuked them, and told them that God would surely punish them for their brutal treatment of his aged messenger. So two of our mother bears, probably afraid that their young ones were going to be taken from them by this crowd of noisy, reckless, brutal young people, came out of the wood, and in their rage forty-two of these young people were slain. This may seem to you a shocking punishment; of course I cannot reason about it as you can. But this I know, that when any of our baby bears take liberties with their mothers, and repeatedly do what they are told not to do, then we punish them by raising our paw against them to teach them to behave properly.

Won't that be a happy day for us when, as your prophet foretells, "the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together?"

C. H. P.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Acton Bridge, June 23-24; Birkenhead, June 25; Liverpool, June 26; Cranleigh, July 1-2; Kingston-on-Thames, July 3; Mr. Hankinson, Penge, July 19; Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Bournemouth, to June 26; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Tunbridge Wells, June 29; St. Matthew's, Redhill, July 1; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Kentisbeare, near Collompton, Devon; Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Causley Wood, Wadhurst; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Maplehurst, Nuthurst, Horsham, to June 28; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Wetheringsett.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending July 1.

Sun., June 25	Acts xvi. 14-24		Thurs., June 29	Acts xviii. 1-17
Mon., „ 26	„ xvi. 25-40		Fri., „ 30	„ xviii. 18-28
Tues., „ 27	„ xvii. 1-15		Sat., July 1	„ xix. 1-12
Wed., „ 28	„ xvii. 16-34

(800)

We Never Tire of Summer.

We never tire of summer—
How many hearts there be,
That hail her wonder-working touch
Over the land and sea.
And eyes, that watch the glowing sun
Climb up the heavenly arch,
Each day with widening, loftier sweep,
Upon his stately march.

We never tire of summer—
'Tis pleasure always new
To stroll along the fragrant banks,
Fresh with the glistening dew;
And see the tufts of feathery fern
Spring from their mossy bed,
And greet the first sweet heather bell,
As she lifts her gentle head.

We never tire of summer—
To watch the merry brook,
And follow its mysterious wind
Far into hidden nook,
Where pathway ends in wondrous maze
Of brier, and shrub, and flower;
And interlacing boughs above,
Arch in the fairy bower.

We never tire of summer—
Strange if one ever could—
The time that brings the holidays,
The picnics in the wood,
The rambles on the ocean shore,
The boating in the bay,
And all the pleasant things that crowd
Into a summer day.

And shall we ever tire of Him
Who gives these pleasant things—
The "Happy God" who round our path
Such joyous sunshine flings?
Shall we of his glad service say
"A weariness is it!"*
And close our hearts to that dear Lord,
His will and ways to quit?

No! let us love Him, trust in Him,
And try to please Him well;
And ask the Holy Comforter
Within our hearts to dwell;
And He will make us lovely too,
As flowers that scent the breeze,
And happy, as the warbling birds
That nestle in the trees.

J. R.

* Mal. i. 13.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 181).

Complete the following texts, giving chapter and verse.

1. —— that is bereaved of —— (Hosea xi.-xiv.)
2. "The cow and the —— (Isaiah viii.-xii.)
3. —— flee from a lion and —— (Amos iii.-vi.).
4. "Hath delivered me —— of the (1 Sam. xv.-xx.).
5. Who fought a bear, and when? (1 Sam. x.-xv.).
6. Who killed a lion? (Judges x.-xv.).
7. When were bears used as a means of punishment? (2 Kings).
8. What class of people are likened to wolves? (Matt. iv.-viii.).
9. What animal was used as the subject of a riddle? Give and explain the riddle (Judges x.-xv.).
10. To what animal are people that are "accustomed to do evil" likened? (Jeremiah xi.-xiv.).

(Children under ten do any four; under thirteen any seven.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 180).

(a) "We should not trust in ourselves" (2 Cor. i. 9).
(b) "In Him was life" (John i. 4).
(c) "I will dwell in the house" (Psalm xxiii. 6).
(d) "The Lord is my strength" (Psalm xxviii. 7).
(e) "Keep thy heart with all diligence" (Proverbs iv. 23).
(f) "All power is given unto Me" (Matt. xxviii. 18).
(g) "All Mine are thine" (John xvii. 10).
(h) "Rend your heart and not your garments" (Joel ii. 13).

Hidden Text—"Trust in the Lord with all thine heart" (Proverbs iii. 5).

No. 180.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Violet Ashworth*, Jennie Almond.
B—Rose Butler*, Gertrude Bush, Lily Blackman, Ella Burton, Mabel Birney*, Florence Blackman, May* and Gordon Bligh*, Ella Berryman, Emily Bridgewater*, Alan Banks.
C—David Colville*, Lydia Cleary, Ida and Mabel Cole, Brereton Code, Edith Clarence, Dorothy Cooper, Bessie Cheale, S. Cumbers, Kathleen Code, K. Carey-Brenton*, John Colville*.
D—G., Hilda, Constance and Elizabeth Drayson, Dorothy and Ralph Daintree, Nellie Dowsett, Mai Davidson, Willie Davies, Violet Dodsworth, Agnes and Elsie Darke, Polognia Daws*, Stanley Drew, Catherine Darke.
E—Muriel and Miriam Ecroyd.
F—Kitty Fausset, Temperance Foskett*, Vincent and Mabel Fleet.
G—Irene and Kathleen Gough, Mary Gover, Tom Garfit, David Gardiner, Clarice and Bertie Gale, Constance Gabbett, Olive Grandy.
H—Eric and Mary Hill, Evelyn* and Dorothy* Hewer, Beatrice Harland, Claude Hutchence*, Frances Harding, Beatrice Hastings, Elsie Hatcher, Nellie Hatchett*, Hetty Hill, Jennie Holmes, Stanley, Florence and Francie Hoyte, Edith Holms.
J—Thomas Johnson, Grace and Dora Joyce.
K—Nellie Keeley.
L—Blanche Lindup*, Gertrude Lambert.
M—May Mills, Dorothy Morgan*, Mabel Morris, Lois Mewburn, Margie Marston, Edith Monet, Hedley Meader*, Elsie and Dorothy McMullin, Lewis, Grace, and O. L. Morice, Marie Meek, Barbara and J. Maconchy.
N—Eleanor and Valerie Noel.
P—Gladys Palmer, Daisy Phillips, Ruth Pledger*, Mary Plumb*, Walter*, Katie* and Leonard* Picknell, Lizzie Pratt, Lillian Pearson*, Rhoda Partridge, Ethel and Kathleen Pasley, Mildred, Hattie and Evelyn Peters, Kathleen Pincott, Grace Palmer, Ruth Patient.
R—Nora Read, Alice Reid.
S—Elsie Slark*, Ada* and Jessie* Snowball, Fanny Stileman, Cicely Sherbrooke, Mildred* and Constance* Scott, Douglas Stevens, Flora Simmons*, Laura Standen*, Mary Seed, Minnie*, Kathleen*, and Douglas Shepherd, Fred, Amy* and Dryll Stileman, Herbert Stuart*, Mary Symon, Joseph Stephens, N. Sturrock, John Smith.
T—Olive Tritton, Ruby, Florence and Eileen Tomlinson, Theodora Thorn*, Frank and Herbert Tomkins, Olive Taylor*.
V—Kenneth Vining, Rosetta Viccars.
W—Dorothy White, Digby Watson, Cecile, Noel and Phillis Wright, F. and Madge Wilson, Edith and Edward Wheeler, Annie and Sarah Wood, Agatha Ward.

No. 179.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Ambrose and John Adams, Enderby Anderson*, Percy Allen*, William Aston.
B—Ashley Bowker*, Florence Blackman*, Dorothy Berry, Maud, Sylvia, Evelyn, and Dorothy Barrett, Lilian, Avory, Frank, and Teresa Blackie, Lucienne Brabandes*, Ernestine Buhl, Lily*, Gordon, and Stanley Boxer, Leonard Browne, Susette* and Mary* Beck, William Berwick, Mabel Bailey, Leonard and Frank Bentall, Dorothy Benson*, Louis Berthé, James and Edith Barker, Allen, Conyers, and Massy Baker.
C—Gladys and Beryl Calvert, Richard Cornthwaite, Ethel Craigie, Janie and Nellie Crawford, Dorothy Clarke, Duncan Campbell*, Lois Craven*, William and Mary Charles, Susie Cumbers, Walter, Jessie* and Maggie* Carter*, Dora Corrie, Isabel and Mabel Candlin, Eleanor Chance, Millicent and Cicely Craven, Olive and Phyllis Cotterell, K. Carey-Brenton*, Henry Cheney.
D—Blossom Davis*, Constance Devenish-Meares, Maggie and Agnes Darke, William Dilly*, Ernest Davies, Marie Denizot*, Harold Davis, Margaret Davison.
E—Muriel Ecroyd, Muriel Edwards*.
F—Mary and Bessie Freeman, James and Marian* Freegard, Agnes and Muriel Fry, Lewis, Agnes, Flossy*, and Maggie Fullarton, Aileen and F. A. Figgis, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Janet Fawkes, Jeanne Fancon*, Louise Filhol*, Eva, Mabel, and Maggie Fletcher, Constance Furlong.
G—Daisy*, Mary*, Ethel*, and Alfred* Greenacre, Margaret*, Stuart, Dorothy, Edith* and Jack Gray, Nancy* and Dorothy* Grove, Harry Gribble, Aileen Gardner, Edith Grieve, Norman Good, Henry Gibson, Thos. Groombridge, Mary Glass*, Evelyn Giddings.
H—Stanley, Francis*, and Florence* Hoyte, Ethel Hutchings*, Rosetta Hamilton*, Theodora Hill, Harcourt and Helen Hunter, Charlie, Ronald and Fergus Haig, Georgette Hoffman*, Kathleen Hughes, Ella Hake, Kathleen Hamilton, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Marjorie Hogge, E. Henderson, Dorothy Harris, Freda Hunton, J. Hay, Nellie Hatchett.
I—Daisy Iredell, Nellie Irving.
J—Norman* and Kate Johns, Thomas Johnson, Lizzie Johnstone Sinclair Jackson.
K—Jeanie Kyle, Willie* and Isa* Kay, Philippa* and Grace* Kerr, Flossie Key*.
L—Norah, Harry, Linda, and E. J. Lowe, Harriet Lynham, Stanley Long, Nellie and Edith Lockhart.
M—Charlie and Frank Medcalf, Annie* and Daisy Mackenzie*, Abraham and Bella Mack, Marie Meek, Mildred Morgan, Maggie Munro, Christina Marshall, Avie Mallory, Dora Muir*, Mabelle Mountstephen*, J. and Barbara Maconchy, Harry Malaher, Kathleen McClure, Lewis McGregor, Mary and Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Tita Mackenzie, Annie* and Elsie* Moule, Howard* and Gwendoline Moir*, Margaret, Daniel, and Dorothy Morris.
N—Maud and Amy Nottage, Mary and H. Neligan, Peter, Cissy and John Nicholson. H., Mary and Dorothy Nathan.
O—Maude Oakes, George O'Beirne, K. Oliver.
P—Violet Philips, Eddie, Willie, Winifred, Ada and Jessie Palmer Evelyn Péchey, Ruth Patient, Winnie Page*, Walter Perryman, Clarice, Percy and Geoffrey Peach, Vera, Daisy and May Petrides, M. and Louie Penny, Myrtle Perry, Kathleen* and Ethel* Pasley, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Rhoda Partridge, Alice Palmer, Willie Petter, Laura Percy.
R—Gwennie Ravenhill, Marjorie and Herbert Rainey.
S—Janey Sinclair, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Maudie and Janet Speed, Evelyn Shaw*, Helen Stalker, Ivy Sherwin, Mervyn and Gwendoline* Shaw, C. R. and Violet Salvesen, Binford Sellwood, Nannie Stirrock, Herbert Stuart, Dollie Salt, Florrie Smith, K. and L. Soltau, Minnie*, Edith and Bessie Shepherd, Bertha Stocker, Elsie Slark, Constance Scott*, Susie Sutton.
T—Harry Thompson, Alice Truelove*, Nannie Tibbits*, Marjorie Tracey, Frances Trotter, Ethel Taylor, Olive Trench, Fred and Lucy Trotter, Frank and Alice Thompson, Derwent and Arthur Turnbull.
U—Queenie Upton.
V—Kenneth Vining*, Phyllis and Ruth Vigers.
W—James and Madge Wilson, Sidney Wisdom, Thomas and Robert Weddell, Connie Wood, George Willis, Agatha Ward, Lissa*, Louisa and Violet Walker, Charles and Winnie Williams.
Y—Gladys and Eva* Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

Nos. 160, 161, 162—T. Alan Hogg (Chefoo, China). No. 167—Mary, Christine and Graham Pearson (Tasmania). No. 168—Christine and Graham Pearson. No. 172—Maria* and Cuckoo* Lister, Q., Ezra and Louis Matthews (S. Africa). Alice Henderson, Queenie* and Llewellyn* Dale (India). No. 173—Alice and Elsie Henderson (Jamaica), Janet Garrett* (Kimberley). No. 175—Jean and Eliza Scott, Dora Wallace (Ontario), Rotha, Ivan and Lottie St. George (Canada). No. 176—Dora Wallace* (Canada). No. 178—Ina, William*, Nettie and Kate* Thomson (Bulgaria).

Personal.

Many thanks for some flowers received last week.

The Five Grays.—Thank you for your letter containing change of address.

Marjorie Sherbrooke, Theodora Hill, Gladys Young.—I am so sorry you are still ill, and hope you will make haste and get well again.

Mai Davidson.—Thank you for your letter. I am very glad to know you can answer that question.

John Pearce.—It is a pleasure to welcome your little sister as a new "searcher." I hope she will do it as nicely, and enjoy it as much as you do.

Maggie Davison.—I am glad to welcome you back among the "searchers."

Daisy Iredell.—You did not complete question 4 in 177.

Uncle Tom's Cot.—M. and J. Cole, 6d.

Uncle Tom.

Whitstable.—A Home for Orphan Boys has been founded here by Mr. H. W. Squirrell, who is much devoted to the work, and gives his services as director gratuitously. Seven out of the twenty-four beds are occupied, and it is expected that other inmates will be received soon. Mr. Squirrell's aim is to get boys passed on to him who would otherwise have no refuge but the workhouse. Rev. F. B. Meyer and Dr. Horton are vice-presidents of the Home, and the hon. sec. is Rev. E. Austin, Whitstable.

Letters to the Editor.

China in Prophecy.—I.

"Behold. . . . these from the land of Sinim." Is. xlix. 12.

CHINA, or the Celestial Empire, as it has been called, has, naturally enough, many points of interest to the human mind. But on the devout Christian's interest it has a special claim. It is a Bible land. Converts to Christ are to be won from amongst its myriad millions ere the mystery of God is finished. And its armies, alas, are to come under the command of Russia towards the close of the Gospel age, and the return of the Jews to repeople Palestine, the lot of their inheritance, during the millennial day. Therefore, the letters in your columns from missionary and merchant are of great importance. They call attention to the extraordinary events transpiring at the present hour in that land of Sinim, and more especially to the religious results likely to accrue if the policy triumphs of "spheres of influence" and "partition." Your correspondents allude to these in terms of just deprecation, and they urge "the independence and maintenance of China, with the open door," with a view to extensive Christian evangelisation. But the question arises whether this is now possible, however laudable, and whether the Lord's people have not to face a situation, which is certain to wax worse and worse—

Until the great archangel blow
The latest trumpet of the seven.

As the commercial ought not to be separated from the Christian, so the political should not be sundered from the prophetical; for what is prophecy but the unveiling of the hand of God in history? China is one of the lands of the Bible, and has been traced by the finger of the Lord Jesus, "the Servant of Jehovah," on the chart of his kingdom, as furnishing members for his ransomed Church. It is now some years since I called attention in a series of lectures to the place of China in the predictions connected with the Messianic kingdom, and with the rise and progress of Russia, as the Biblical king of the north, over whose vast and colossal empire the great and last Antichrist was to exercise sway before the dawn of the millennial age. See the prophetic chapters of Deuteronomy, certain of the Messianic Psalms, the prophecies of Isaiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and Zechariah, and the Apocalypse of John in Patmos (xvi.-xx.). These throw light upon our Lord's prophecies (Matt. xxiii.-xxv.); as they also act as a key to unlock many of those ancient cabinets of providence and grace; remembering 2 Pet. i. 19-22, as we stand

Upon the extreme verge of better days,
Time's awful drama to survey.

It is but a year ago since I warned our country and statesmen that, unless they were both prescient and prompt, Russia would fasten a grip upon China which no human power, or combination of powers, would be able to unloose. My endeavours "to awaken alarm and to arouse action" failed; in fact, they were called "visionary vapourings," just as the interpretations of prophecies in times past have been. Yet they have been largely fulfilled; and the political situation is such, your correspondents say, as to justify my forecast that the remaining developments, as foreshadowed in Biblical prophecies, are likely to be very shortly fulfilled to the very letter. There is, consequently, little time to be lost in marching the warriors of Christ, with the Word of God in their hands, and capturing souls for The King. Will God's Anglo-Saxon offspring volunteer

For nations marked upon his chart, ere yet
The mystery of God can be complete?

The passage heading this paper occurs in the second section of the Second Book of Isaiah, chaps. xl.-xlvi. It comprises predictions which have been well said to be of the deepest interest to the whole human family. Never was this more so than to the present, as also to the next generation of Britain, and of the Christian Church. In it Christ, the Messiah, the true and ideal "Israel" (the Prince whose intercedings prevail with God), is the central orb round which all revolve as satellites round their sun. The Lord Jesus is represented as the One Divine Servant of Jehovah, whose service is as the living root whence is to grow a great tree, whose boughs, fruit-laden with "grace and truth," are to extend even to the land of Sinim; or as a fountain whence are to flow rivers of living water to the kingdom of the Tchins. The Arabians and other Asiatics call China "Sin," or "Tchin," from a dynasty of that name. Dr. Parker, a missionary to China, says that the Chinese have been known from time immemorial by the name of Tschin:

That flow'ry land, whose lotus-loving sons
Shall gather round God's central Sun of bliss.

The chapter (xlix.) in which this marvellous land is mentioned constitutes a proclamation by the Messiah Himself, and is a prediction of his kingdom. Christ Himself speaks, disclosing what the Father had, in remote eternities, declared to Him, if He would consent to be his Missionary Servant, to undertake man's redemption, the earth's regeneration, and the universal restitution of all things. The Lord Jesus speaks as that Servant of Jehovah—not as a mere slave who can have no recompense, no portion with the great (Is. liii. 10, 12). And He announces His destiny and determination with reference to the Gentiles. In that glorious ministry of Gentile ingathering, "other sheep I have which are not of this fold, them also I must bring" (John x.), China has its place, not as a political nation, but as a nation of the world out of whose teeming throngs are to come trophies of triumph for Christ. Are Britain's sons and daughters to win them

Proclaiming to Mongolian tribe and tongue
Evangel tidings of eternal love?

This reference, however, to China must be read in the light of the predictions in Ezekiel, Daniel, and John, and in certain of the Psalms. Then there rises before our mind's eye the political situation to-day. The king of the north has been allowed by Lord Salisbury and others to seize upon Manchuria and Port Arthur. That cannot be undone, though your correspondents cling desperately to the hope. Nor is there much hope that their anxious, earnest cry will save the rest of China. The hour for that has passed, thanks to England's folly. It is a matter of time, and that a very short time, now before Russia is in possession of China, and before its millions of Mongolian warriors become a branch of the armies of the Prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal. The railways of Russia and France, as well as of Britain and Germany, are already penetrating the land of Sinim (see Isaiah xlix. 11). Russia is preparing to do the same with Persia, another kingdom destined to be embraced by that fierce power. But the railways and highways of Russia are never mercantile, like those of Britain; that is, always subordinated to the military. And when once the armies of these ancient Bible lands have come under the iron discipline of the king of the north, they will find swift and easy conveyance to the lands of the west, and especially to that "Holy Land," whither God is to lead his ancient Bible people, the Jews, at the end of the Gospel age, when it has been preached for a witness to all nations and the fulness of the Gentiles has been gathered in:

That fulness which proclaims the hour
When Judah's tribe returns to pow'r.

Wm. Adamson, Vicar of Old Ford, E.

(To be Concluded.)

Lawyers' Prayer Union.—This Union numbers 190 members, who join in definite prayer for the legal profession on the first Monday in each month. The first annual meeting was held on June 14 at No. 10, Devonshire Place, W., the residence of Mr. Holmes White, one of the members. Mr. Justice Bruce presided, and addresses were given by Master Archibald and Mr. Reader Harris, Q.C. The meeting was well attended. Communications from any barristers or solicitors wishing to join the Union should be made to T. Cooke-Collis, hon. secretary, 47, Essex Street, Strand.

Evangelistic.

Hyde Park Services.

As proof of the cosmopolitan character of the Hyde Park meetings on Friday week, four friends at the close of the address thanked the speaker for his message. They were a Greek, an Armenian, a German, and an American.

On Sunday evening when Mr. R. C. Morgan and Mr. W. R. Lane spoke, there was quite a large foreign element sprinkled in the immense crowd. Lady Hope gave an address at the indoor meeting, and the large band of workers were busy pointing the anxious and the backsliders to the seeking Saviour. Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers, added to the interest of the park meeting.

A ten-days' mission has been held at Portland Prison, conducted by Rev. W. Bryan-Brown, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, on the invitation of Rev. H. Halford-Adcock, the chaplain. Some 400 Protestant prisoners attended the daily morning prayers and two services on each Sunday, and the attention and reverent behaviour were throughout most marked. The singing also was a feature of the services. The results have been encouraging, and of the some 150 visits paid to men in their cells, sixty-seven were on the men's own special application to see the missioner. The missioner had to leave a list of about twenty to be seen by the chaplain after his departure.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till June 30, Bethany Hall, Glasgow.

Mr. E. P. Telford.—During June, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Till June 26, Annan.

Mr. Jas. Sprunt.—During June, Sundays and Thursdays, Walthamstow; Wednesdays, Wimbledon; June 26 and 27, Willesden Green.

Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday, June 25, at 7, Mr. Geo. Andrews; Thurs., at 8, Mr. A. C. Burley; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sunday, June 25, at 7, and Thurs., at 8, Mr. P. Garrioch.

Mr. John Elliott.—June 25, Central Hall, Pokesdown, Bournemouth.

Mr. George Clarke.—July 2-17, Ipswich; 23-Aug. 2, Teignmouth.

Mr. Newton Jones.—June 25, Lower Norwood Baptist Chapel.

Mr. William Grove is conducting a mission in the Tent, Football Field, Maze Hill, East Greenwich.

Mr. Leonard Weaver is conducting a mission in the Gospel Tent, Tooting (near the Tramway Terminus).

Rev. Thos. Cook.—June 25, Annfield, Liverpool; July 2, Old Market Street, Bristol; 9, Barnstaple; 16, King Street, Plymouth; 23, Stanningley; 30, Skegness; Aug. 6, Bridlington Quay; 13, Llandudno; 20, Colwyn Bay.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—June 25 and July 2, Farwig Mission, Bromley; July 4-14, Paris; 16 and 23, Haling Road, South Croydon.

Request for Prayer.

For a tent mission being held at Bedminster by Rev. John Mitchell.

On behalf of a tent mission at Upper and Lower Sheringham, conducted by Mr. A. Woolley, from June 18 to August 20.

Fallen Asleep.

At Leighton Buzzard, Mr. Francis Bassett, at the age of eighty. He was a justice of the peace for Bedfordshire, and a prominent member of the Society of Friends.—Rev. J. H. Pollexfen, Vicar of St. Michael's, Middleton Tyas, Yorks., an earnest and sympathetic evangelical.—Rev. C. A. Alington, Rector of Swinhope and Rural Dean of Grimsby. He did excellent work as a pioneer missionary in Africa.—Rev. John Lister, of Montrose Free Church.—Rev. Thomas Aston-Binns, suddenly, from an apoplectic seizure. He will be chiefly remembered as the Home Organising Secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, for which he worked zealously and without remuneration for some ten years, resigning the post only in 1898.—At Berne, Madame Paul Minault, widow of the devoted French missionary to Madagascar, who was assassinated by bandits about two years ago.

Notices.

Communications Received with Thanks.—W.S.C. H.E.T. W.W. J.N. Mrs. C. G.P.G. L.E.T. M.L. C.O.B. W.T.McC. E.K. H.G.K. J.M. S.P. L.M.M. G.F. W.A.K. M.E. Miss B. J.R. W.J.L. M.G. A.E.W. W.T. E.M.B. C.W. S.J. S.P. O.T. F.F. J.G.M. F.M. E.A. F.C.R. S.A. F.H.W. W.G.E W.F. M.E.S. S.E. M.A.H. W.A. T.C.C. E.K. R.J.F. Miss H. J.B. W.H.R. A.S.F. M.L. S.S.M. S.B. C.B. S.R. C.D. O.L.H. H.E. A.G. A.M.R. Lord O. G.M.M. M.L.J. R.B.

Applications for Tracts.—L. Bashford, St. Thomas's Mission, 4, Warrender Park Crescent, Edinburgh; A. Woolley, Evangelist, Upper Sheringham, Norfolk; G. Jordan, 20, Kinmel Street, Birkenhead; Mr. A. De Rose, 3, Richardson Street, Stepney, E.; Mr. John Haltridge, Willowgarth, Rose Valley, Brentwood; Charles W. Cornish, 35, Argyle Road, Carlton Square, Mile End, E.; W. Gladstone, 89, Chilton Street, Deptford; Sidney T. Cooke, Schoolwood Cottage, Cowley, near Chesterfield (books for a poor village Sabbath school); Joseph Thrift, Cliff College, Calver, via Sheffield; Miss A. Drew, 13, Standard Street, Union Road, London, S.E.; Mr. W. Bilton, Cambridge Evangelist, Stony Stratford; John Eccles, 15, Bankside, Dalton-in-Furness, Lancashire; Mr. J. J. Parsons (for seaside Gospel services), Buddleford, Teignmouth.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

A donation of £1,000 has been paid anonymously into Messrs. Coutts and Co.'s bank to the account of the Additional Curates' Society.

The Bishop of Liverpool, who is staying at Lowestoft, is looking stronger and seems to be in better spirits. It is stated that the Bishop has been ordered complete rest for three months.

The Bishop of Islington laid, on Saturday afternoon, the corner stone of the temporary church and mission buildings of the new district of St. Alban's, Stamford Hill, which is worked under the London Diocesan Home Mission, by Rev. J. W. Goddard.

The inaugural service in Welsh, according to the rites of the Church of England, was held in the chapel in Camberwell New Road, recently purchased from the Congregationalists. This is the fourth place of worship which has been opened within the past few years for services in the Welsh language.

The annual festival service of the East London Church Fund was held on Thursday last at St. Paul's Cathedral. There was a large congregation, including about 300 of the clergy from East and North London. The Bishop of Stepney and the Bishop of Islington, the presidents of the society, were also present.

Mrs. Creighton, wife of the Bishop of London, laid on Thursday last the corner-stone of the new church of St. Andrew, Bromley, E. The population of the parish, which in 1861 was 24,000, has now risen to 70,000, and to meet the spiritual wants of the people five churches, in connection with the parish church, have been erected.

Rev. Norman Bennet, M.A., missioner to public schoolboys, Church Parochial Mission Society, who has in addition accepted the post of hon. chaplain of the National Refuges for Boys at Bisley, desires to point out that his description as "Chaplain to H.M. Prison, Sierra Leone," is incorrect, arising from an unauthorised statement in the "Clerical Directory."

The Bishop of London attended the opening of the Diocesan Church Army Home in West Kensington. Dr. Creighton remarked that this Home was but one of a number which were spread not only throughout London, but throughout the country. It was hopeless to make large barracks and expect them to have any salutary influence upon men. The great merit of the work of the Church Army was that it was done quietly.

The Bishop of London consecrated at Ealing, on Wednesday last, the new church of St. Saviour, which has been built in the centre of a poor district, to accommodate 1,000 worshippers. Objection had been taken by a parishioner to the figures of Christ on the cross and of two Apostles which had been placed in the church. The Bishop stated that he had no intention in consecrating the church of sanctioning these figures, for which a faculty must be obtained.

The annual conference of a religious body known as the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was held in Birmingham on Saturday last, Earl Nelson presiding. The brotherhood had its origin in Chicago, and was brought prominently before English Churchpeople at the Church Congress at Norwich. The object sought to be attained is "the spread of Christ's Kingdom among young men," and the brotherhood work under two rules—one of prayer and one of service.

Speaking in St. James's, Piccadilly, on "The Social Message of the Church to the West End," Rev. Dr. Fry dwelt upon supposed irresponsibility in the use of wealth, as arising from individual carelessness or selfishness, sanctioned by a false public opinion, and practically increased in our own time by the transference of so much of manufacturing and commercial business to "limited liability companies," superseding to a great extent the old relation of mutual responsibility between master and man. The remedy must depend on the quickening of the individual Christian conscience and the correcting influence of the Church.

Congregational.

In connection with the advocacy of the Congregational Twentieth Century Fund, a campaign similar to that undertaken by Dr. R. W. Dale and Dr. Guinness Rogers on behalf of the Congregational Jubilee Fund is being arranged.

A large tent which is pitched on the ground adjoining the "John White" Memorial Schools in Tennant Street, Belfast, has been opened by the Congregational Church at present worshipping in above-menticned schools, for a summer evangelistic campaign. The tent was crowded at all the services.

Baptist.

The erection of the new chapel at Ilford has been delayed by the plasterers' strike, and cannot be completed until September. Rev. F. A. Jones, whose wide experience and devoted labours are so well known, has accepted the pastorate.

Many will be glad to know that Dr. G. C. Lorimer, of Boston, U.S., whose visit to this country was so much appreciated last year, is to preach at Regent's Park Chapel, Park Square East, on July 16, and each successive Sunday until August 26.

Some 154 members of Catford Hill Church have united with a new church under the pastorate of Mr. H. M. Greenwood, temporarily worshipping at "The Elms," Perry Rise, Forest Hill. A Sunday school, held at the Board School, Lower Sydenham, numbers nearly 400 scholars.

The twelfth anniversary of the pastorate of Pastor F. E. Marsh, of Bethesda Chapel, Sunderland, was observed last week. During the last twelve years 645 persons have been united in church fellowship, and at the present time twenty-six are waiting to be admitted.

The story of the Wantage Church (Pastor C. L. Gordon) has been issued by Messrs. Stead and Brayne, St. Michael's Street, Oxford. (1s.) The story is full of interest. The church has just celebrated its fifth jubilee, Rev. Archibald G. Brown and other ministers taking part.

Pastor B. E. Chettleborough, of Leighton Buzzard Chapel, was present in his vestry on June 12, to receive "Birthday Presents" for the reduction of the chapel debt. This year they amounted to nearly £67, making a total of about £316 paid off the debt during the eighteen months of the present pastorate.

At Bow Road Church, at the third anniversary of Pastor Fred H. King's settlement, Rev. F. B. Meyer preached in the afternoon. At the evening meeting Mr. Geo. C. Varley presided, and helpful addresses were delivered by Rev. B. J. Gibbon, Dr. Harry Guinness, and Mr. Thos. Richardson. Good progress was reported.

The anniversary gatherings at Abbey Road Chapel (Rev. H. E. Stone) were marked by cordiality and earnestness. The pastor made a fervent appeal for more workers, and Rev. S. A. McCrachan impressed the fact that blessing could be had only from following Gospel lines. To ensure true success all churches needed war-ship, worship, and fellowship.

American Baptists have just held their annual meetings in San Francisco. Large delegations were present from the East, and the addresses seem to have been inspiring and hopeful. It was voted to raise £15,000 for missions in Cuba and Porto Rico. Rev. A. H. Strong, of New York, was elected president, and aggressive plans for work during the coming year were adopted.

Centenary services have been held in connection with Siloh Church, Tredegar. The society was established in 1762. In 1804 Messrs. Josiah Thomas and Edward David were elected pastor and assistant, both continuing to follow their daily vocation, one as a shoemaker and the other as a miner, and receiving 12s. 6d. each per quarter for their pastoral services. In 1818 the notable Rev. J. P. Davies began his ministry. The present pastor is Rev. Z. H. Lewis, and the work is full of vigour.

Speaking at the annual meetings of the Lancashire and Cheshire Association of Baptist Churches, Mr. Pedley, the moderator, advocated, as a means of increasing the churches' income, the curtailment or entire abandonment of personal expenditure in luxuries. If the people could go back to the plain living of their fathers of half a century ago and dispense with 50 per cent. of their luxuries, they would have an addition of £40,000 or £50,000 a year to their exchequer, and that would ensure financial prosperity.

Methodist.

Among the delegates at the Primitive Methodist Conference is Rev. J. Mskinya, a native African, who has laboured as a fully ordained minister on the banks of the Orange River for several years.

Our readers will be pleased to learn that as a result of the note which recently appeared in this column concerning the Wesleyan building scheme at Portbury, a friend of Rev. Thos. Cook has contributed £50. The success of the scheme is now assured.

The Fernley Lecture is to be delivered this year at the Wesleyan Richmond Road Chapel, London, by Rev. T. F. Lockyer. The subject is "The Evangelical Succession; or the spiritual lineage of the Christian Church and ministry." The date of delivery is July 28.

The meetings of the first national assembly of Welsh Wesleyan Methodists, held at Machynlleth, were characterised by fervency and unanimity. One special gathering was an open-air service, at which Rev. Hugh Hughes, Connexional evangelist, and the President of the Conference preached in Welsh and English.

Vigorous evangelistic work is being maintained by the Otley Mission Band; a band of young men who, in addition to the usual indoor services, conduct open-air gatherings both in the public places in the town and on the village greens up and down the circuit. A recent camp meeting in the market place was productive of blessing.

At the Primitive Methodist Conference, held this year at Grimsby, Rev. W. Goodman, who for the past five years has filled the office of Connexional secretary, was elected President. Mr. Goodman has served in the ministry for thirty-six years, and has been the superintendent of New Mills, Glossop, Hyde, and Manchester Fourth circuits.

The Wesleyan Mission at Abbey Hill, in the east end of Edinburgh, finds there a large and growing population, and for two years past has gathered a congregation therefrom. The hired premises have been a drawback, owing to their obscure situation, excessive cost, and general discomfort, so a small, but pretty and comfortable, iron church has been opened on the main thoroughfare.

The South African Wesleyan Conference was an inspiring gathering. The president (Rev. William Wynne) said in the course of his address: "Never in the history of South Africa has the outlook for aggressive work been grander or more hopeful than to-day. We cannot close our eyes to the fact that the trend of events is towards the opening up of this vast Continent to civilisation and Christianity.

At the Wesleyan local preachers' assembly at Birmingham, Mr. George Cadbury said it was impossible to look at the great masses in the great cities and the rural districts without rejoicing that there was so large a body of Methodist local preachers. He trusted that in the next ten years their numbers might be doubled. He insisted upon the priesthood of all believers, and prayed that the Association might grow and prosper.

The Joint Committee of the Bible Christian Methodists and the Primitive Methodists have held another sitting, at which it was mutually agreed to present two schemes to the approaching Conferences of both bodies. One will give district meetings a free choice in their selection of Conference representatives, and the other will provide for one-third ministers, one-third laymen, and the remaining third to be left to the discretion of district meetings.

On Whit Sunday an extraordinary scene was witnessed in Johannesburg. Rev. J. Scholefield Morris (Wesleyan) referring to the unlawful sale of drink to Kaffirs, invited his congregation to raid a neighbouring illegal establishment forthwith. Putting himself at their head they marched to the house, and found fifty Kaffirs drinking. As soon as the invaders were seen, all the electric bells in the house were set ringing, and the sale was stopped. The raiders then marched to the Detective Department, and made sworn statements on the subject.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. MacEwan presided at a recent Sunday afternoon open-air gathering on Clapham Common, convened by the Free Church Council of Battersea and Clapham, when stirring evangelistic addresses were delivered by ministers of various denominations.

Rev. J. B. Meharry, speaking in his own church at Crouch Hill in support of Westminster College, declared that the church or the community that does not aim at having an educated and a soundly cultured ministry is a Church that has not the remotest chance of power and honour in the future. All the Reformers were men of erudition, and it stood them in good stead. They were men of piety, but they were also cultured.

Salvation Army.

Additional Zulu candidates have been accepted for officership in South Africa.

At General Booth's final Sunday meetings in Melbourne, 312 persons went to the penitent form.

Arrangements are being made for the commencement of Salvation Army work in 100 additional cities in the United States.

A large congregation assembled in the Massey Music Hall, Toronto, on a recent Sunday, to hear Miss Eva Booth speak upon her work in London slums.

General Booth is to conduct meetings in St. Mary's Hall, Islington, in connection with the Salvation Army's Missionary and Social Exhibition at the Agricultural Hall, July 24—August 8.

About Books.

The Teacher's Bible, at special price of 4s. 11d. (London Bible Warehouse, 53, Paternoster Row), is a marvel of cheapness, containing, as it does, a valuable "Bible Reader's Manual" of 300 pages, edited by Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D., with numerous illustrations. The 6s. 6d. edition, in a beautiful morocco yapp binding, is extraordinarily good value for the money, and forms a strong and serviceable book for constant use.

A Study in Philology is the title of a little book, by Ernest Pearson, presenting comparative vocabularies from all the families of languages, with special reference to Hebrew, Ancient Chaldee, and Assyrian forms or roots. The subjects here dealt with or illustrated are—parentage, existence, pronouns. (3s. 6d. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.) Students of language will find pleasure and profit in an examination of these pages.

Students of measures designed to give practical effect to peace principles, will be glad to know of two volumes recently issued by the Peace Society. The smaller, entitled The Tzar's Rescript (paper 6d., cloth 1s.), presents in a permanent form a series of tracts and essays that have already been widely circulated. All are from the pen of Dr. W. Evans Darby, Secretary of the Society. The other book, International Tribunals, is a new and enlarged edition of another work by Dr. Evans Darby. (5s.) It contains the text of various schemes of arbitration and reconciliation, which have been propounded since 1815, with instances of the application of pacific principles. It is interesting to know that this latter book has been circulated by M. de Staal among the delegates at the Peace Conference at the Hague, some of whom have borne unqualified testimony of its usefulness. (Offices of the Peace Society, 47, New Broad Street, E.C.)

It is remarkable that those Christian institutions that are commonly known as sacraments or ordinances should have been the subject of so much discussion, and have been regarded from so many standpoints. Indeed, it is a rare thing to meet with a consideration of either of the ordinances conducted in a devotional as distinct from a controversial spirit. Rev. F. Augustus Jones, however, supplies this lack in his book—The Gospel in Baptism. (Paper 1s., cloth 2s. T. H. Hopkins, 16, Gray's Inn Road, W.C.) He sets himself to deal with every New Testament reference to baptism, in the hope of thereby assisting candidates to realise the importance and beauty of the ordinance, and of unfolding the important truths associated with this well-known act of confession. Leaving ecclesiastical questions and qualifications, doctrinal and ritualistic, Mr. Jones aims at expounding the Scriptures with simplicity and candour; and alike as to matter and manner his book deserves high commendation.

Mr. F. Kirby, 17, Bouverie Street, E.C., issues a penny edition of John Bunyan's GRACE ABOUNDING TO THE CHIEF OF SINNERS.

Lieut.-Col. F. Roberts has written a thoughtful pamphlet on prophecy, entitled FACTS! An Investigation respecting the Closing Years of the Present Dispensation. (3d. Partridge.)

THE GOSPEL IN ROMISH COUNTRIES, by Fritz Fliedner, pastor in Madrid, is a pamphlet of present-day significance and value. (6d. Andrew Elliott, 17, Princes Street, Edinburgh.)

LOVE'S ERRAND, by Mr. John Langsford, of the West London Mission, is a report in tractlet form of an interesting evangelistic address on "He must needs go through Samaria." (1d. Marshall Bros.)

Dr. Monro Gibson recently preached A LESSON ON "EARLY CLOSING," in St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church. It has been published in a neat booklet by the "Voluntary" Early Closing Association, 64, Cheapside, E.C.

A historical outline of great interest in connection with the tercentenary celebration is LIFE OF OLIVER CROMWELL, by W. J. Townsend, D.D. The booklet is issued by the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches. (1d. Thomas Law.)

A readable volume of travels in various parts of the world, is WANDERINGS, WEST AND EAST, by Dr. Bartrum. (2s. 6d. Partridge.) Fresh and unconventional in style, this sensible volume contains useful information, packed in a small compass. The illustrations are excellent.

Two instructive pamphlets, beginning the series of "Bible House Papers," have been issued by the British and Foreign Bible Society: IN OUR TONGUES, by G. A. King, M.A., a member of the committee; and FOUR HUNDRED TONGUES, by J. Gordon Watt, M.A., secretary of the society. (6d. each.)

MNEMONICS IN A NUTSHELL; or Hints on Memory Training, by Arthur C. Sidey, is a booklet containing six short articles. (1s. Cook & Sons, 209, Kingsland Road, N.) Good memories will not require these hints; poor memories will need much more humouring and culture. Anyhow, the booklet is in the second edition.

Mr. H. D. Brown has written a booklet CREATION: ACCORDING TO SCIENCE AND ACCORDING TO REVELATION. (2d. Holness). There is, of course, room for difference in the statement of the case on either side, and it is possible to be loyal to Scripture while unable to agree with Mr. Brown in many things. Sufficient to say that these pages are thoughtful and reverent.

FINLAND, an English journal devoted to the cause of the Finnish people. No. 1 has just been issued; having come come into existence apropos of recent political events affecting Finland and its constitution, the publication will be continued from time to time as occasion may demand. (3d. 106, Victoria Street, London.)

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

We are at length in the midst of summer weather, and the time has come for the poor denizens of our crowded city centres to have their greatly-coveted "Day in the Country." We once more offer to our readers the privilege of helping in this good work, which affords an uncommon amount of health-giving enjoyment at a comparatively small cost.

It is gratifying to note the interest evinced in Professor Newell's Bible Course in London. In several centres the attendance is very large; in all the Professor has been greatly encouraged. He is desirous of securing the united prayers of earnest Christians throughout the country; and from present members of his classes he has received the names of five hundred or more prayerful people, to whom he has written begging importunate intercession—

For the utter defeat of Satan, the opening of a great door for the blessed Word of God, and the outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon all the classes now being conducted in London.

These letters have, we understand, brought a host of replies, assuring Professor Newell of earnest and confident participation in the united supplication that is being made to God at this time.

Many of the letters received by Professor Newell express the expectation of a great revival in the near future. May the Lord hasten it! There are indications in several quarters of "times of refreshing." Let readers of The Christian combine their prayers with those which are ascending to God for the great object specified by Professor Newell, and we shall see "greater things than these." Any who would care to assure the Professor of their purpose to join in the volume of prayer to God at this time, may write to him at 27, Devonshire Street, Portland Place, W.

The Bombay Guardian, which was edited for thirty-five years by Rev. George Bowen, has for the last ten years been directed by Mr. Alfred S. Dyer. The health of Mr. Dyer having quite failed for the present, the trustees find it necessary to offer the paper for sale. It is a weekly publication, having a considerable sphere of influence, both in India and in missionary circles in England and America. The paper must be carried on as a missionary effort, and requires to be subsidized to the extent of £350 a year. Before discontinuing publication, the trustees desire to place the facts before the Christian public, in the hope that some wealthy individual or syndicate will take it up, having regard to the influence to be thereby acquired in the direction of spreading evangelical truth, and promoting the various causes of national righteousness that the Bombay Guardian has advocated in the past. Communications should be addressed to Mr. Maurice Gregory, 47, Devonshire Chambers, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.

The first success of the Peace Conference was achieved last week by the determination of the Congress to adopt a revised form of the Geneva Convention rules for the humanising of war, and to apply it to naval warfare. The revision does something to protect neutral states from the evil effects of war, and also to protect the civil population of an invaded country. Explosive bullets are prohibited, also the dropping of explosives from balloons. So far there does not seem to be much hope as to the possibility of reducing armaments, though the principle of international arbitration is ripening to a practical conclusion. There is abundant call for continual prayer that God may influence the minds of delegates, and of the Governments behind them, in the direction of a more brotherly trust in each other's good intentions. Mutual suspicion is the great enemy of peace.

The danger over the Transvaal is great and imminent. There is, in some quarters, a tendency to push things to extremities which cannot be too strongly deprecated. Even if we are seeking to do a just thing it should be done in a right way, and with a due regard to all the interests and persons involved. We may sympathise with the wish of the Outlanders to be represented in the government of the country where, for the time being, they live, but if we forward this wish in such a way as to kindle undying animosity between the English and the Dutch in South Africa, we shall have created a greater evil than we have cured. The time calls for self-restraint, patience, and a firm resolve to avoid a war which would do incalculable injury. The churches of Christ should remember this great question in prayer, and the exercise of influence towards a peaceful solution of the difficulty.

While we are fuming against the despotism of President Kruger and his burghers, it is well we should remember that Englishmen who, in our name, rule despotically over the various nations whom we have conquered, are in constant and serious danger of acquiring a despotic temper which may do irreparable harm both abroad and at home. How few stay-at-home Englishmen realise that our rule in India is, at the bottom, a military despotism. And how few can understand the gravity of the evils for ourselves and for the natives which spring from that fact alone. The old exclusion of missionaries from the country, and the present immoral cantonment regulations, may be cited as illustrations. The former has long been removed, and the latter will have to be finally and entirely repealed.

Social and international morality is, curiously enough, always behind the morality that governs individuals. The controversy between this country and the Boers is an illustration in point. The impulse of revenge is considered out of date, at least in this country, in the code of personal conduct. But in certain sections of the press there is almost an open profession of desire to precipitate a crisis between Britain and the Transvaal, in order to wipe out the humiliations we have from time to time suffered at the hands of the Boers (who, whatever their faults, are resolute and brave, and know how to repel aggression), and to "wipe out Majuba." This low and brutal standard is utterly unworthy of a great Christian country, and true patriots must ever stand up for a higher principle in vindication of our "national honour." The next few months will prove a testing time for all of us. We repeat the conviction that peace in South Africa will be permanently secured only by fair dealing and honourable self-restraint on our part.

The summer weather is favourable to open-air preaching—a method to which the Gospel owes some of its greatest triumphs, and to which the Churches will have to give increased attention, if they are to be faithful to their trust and to the souls of men. The Gospel preachers whom Wycliff sent throughout the country were obliged to do much of their work in the open air. The Puritans followed the same method, John Bunyan being peculiarly effective in the use of it. Whitefield's burning zeal could not be contained in churches, but swept on to commons and any open spaces that were accessible. Wesley soon followed in his steps; and in one way and another the Gospel was brought to every inhabitant. Primitive Methodism was born on Mow Cop, a hill in Staffordshire. We must be jealous of a tendency in these times, especially at watering places, to abolish this ancient privilege of open-air preaching, though what is the use of it if none employ it? We want more of our ablest men employed in the open-air.

In the volume of Dr. Dale's Essays and Addresses are two passages which are peculiarly pertinent to these present times, one of them objecting to the narrow view that, if a man be a minister of the Gospel he ought not to follow any trade.

It is one of the evil traditions which we have received from ecclesiastical communities founded on principles which are altogether different from our own, that no man can become a minister, and yet "abide in the same calling wherein he was called." It seems to be supposed that the boast of the Great Apostle, "These hands have ministered to my necessities," would be the shame and dishonour of a modern pastor.

It may be almost safely assumed that this "evil tradition" has as much, if not more, power among "laymen" than among ministers themselves. In the second passage Dr. Dale protests against the idea that none but ministers are competent to "dispense" baptism or the Lord's Supper.

There are statements in the Savoy Declaration which the writer of this essay would decline to accept; against the restriction which provides that neither baptism nor the Lord's Supper "may be dispensed by any but a minister of the Word lawfully called," he vehemently protests.

There, again, one chief difficulty, we suspect, would be found among laymen in Nonconformist churches.

The anniversary gatherings of colleges for the education of Christian ministers scarcely emphasize sufficiently the importance of the culture of the heart as well as the training of the mind. Prize lists and the results of university examinations represent only one side of the education that is imperative for the men who are to win and edify human souls. Of all callings, that of the Christian ministry depends for its efficiency upon the spiritual force exerted by the preacher. Theology, science, and philosophy are necessary for bringing out the best powers of the intellect. The student must delve into the deep things of God under the guidance of master minds. Yet he is not equipped for his high calling unless he knows much of quiet, secret communion with God. Heart to heart fellowship with Him means an insight into those spiritual essentials which quicken and fire faith and love.

At the ninety-sixth anniversary of Hackney College, the chairman, Mr. Henry Spicer, B.A., said he had been taken aback when he heard that the number of services conducted by the students in the year had been fully 1,400. He was met with loud cries of "No, no," when he suggested that such a long list must have interfered with the studies of the students. As there are twenty-nine students in the college, the 1,400 services in the year do not amount to one service per week for each man—not an extravagant number surely, and not calculated to hinder study, while doing something to realise the evangelistic character of the college, and to prepare students for actual service.

There are two contradictory conceptions of the Church of Christ between which choice must be made. The first is that of the club, where the respectable congregate to hear the Gospel preached, and to enjoy each other's spiritual company. The peril of such an idea is to make the Church an exclusive and self-satisfied circle, into which strangers presently fail to find entrance (especially if they belong to a lower grade of society), and so to defeat the highest end and purpose of its existence. The second conception is that of a spiritual hospital, where the tired and the troubled, the wounded and the outcast, find a welcome to its fellowship, and a helping hand to the grace of God. It is clear which of these conceptions is true to the New Testament, and to the mind of Christ. That the Churches do not succeed better than they do is that they are so often unconsciously enslaved by the first, and so forget the second.

A remark in the suggestive and significant letter of "China in Prophecy," reminds us of an interesting incident on a railway journey. The writer was alone and a young lord entered. We soon got into conversation, and the young man was arrested by the remark that if politicians would study the prophet Daniel they would get light upon the situation of affairs concerning which they are now hopelessly in the dark. He asked for an explanation, and we spent the rest of our time in reading the fourth of Daniel, with occasional references to later chapters, with which, when we parted, the young peer expressed himself as interested and edified.

The late Sir George Grey, who in his day saw as much as any man of nations in the making, said that we all recognise there are certain driving forces behind the march of humanity. We may not see them, or we may merely get a glimpse of them now and then, but they are there and always in operation.

> Providence,—that is my word. The chief of these forces we have, as I hold, in the evolution of the Anglo-Saxon race.

There is a great truth here, and there is also a possible danger. We plead for an acknowledgment of Providence, but Providence must not be confounded with all our developments, with our land-grabbing, with our opium and liquor trade, with our too frequent oppression of feeble tribes. There is an expansion according to the principles of the kingdom of God; and there is an expansion according to pride and greed; yet God can overrule evil for good. His overruling of evil does not justify it.

In a letter to The Times the Governor of Wandsworth Prison details some startling and disquieting facts relating to the religious antecedents of the 14,000 male prisoners who pass through that prison every year. He says:

> While it is the exception for any one of them to tell us that he has never been to Sunday School, it is nearly always the case that we find that he has never, since leaving Sunday School, attended any place of worship and never said a prayer.

There is here a clear indication that there is something wrong in the system of training the young in religious knowledge and life. The question is, "Why do the elder scholars so often pass out of the school only to vanish into the great vortex of the world?" They belong, according to the above writer, not so much to the wicked as to the weak classes. Clearly, something more should be done for those who feel that they are too old for Sunday School classes, but who are not drawn by the ordinances of public worship. Here is a great problem needing the highest resources of Christian statemanship.

The Daily Mail has an article headed "Our Great Industrial Rival—Drink: Facts and Figures that will surprise the Workers of Great Britain." It asks, "Why is America securing orders that should remain in this country?" Which question is thus answered:

> American workers are our most formidable rivals because they spend their money on nourishing themselves and making themselves efficient workmen, while English workers spend far more of their wages on drink than they can afford; and not only more than they can afford, but more than is good for them. Thus they become inefficient. And the battle is to the strong.
>
> If we could reduce our national consumption of alcoholic liquors to the measure of the American consumption per head, our drink bill would at once be reduced by more than £57,000,000. This sum is equal to more than one-half of the national revenue, and would be sufficient to provide £26,000,000 for old age pensions, and also secure the entire extinction of the National Debt in less than twenty-two years.
>
> What of America? No doubt even they drink more there than they need. But Dr. Gould—a great authority—declares that higher daily wages in America do not mean a correspondingly enhanced labour cost to the manufacturer, because greater physical force, as the result of better nourishment, in combination with superior intelligence and skill, make the working man in the United States more efficient.

These and other particulars are obtained from "The Temperance Problem and Social Reform," by Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell (Hodder and Stoughton), which we have already reviewed at some length, but which contains a vast amount of information which cannot be too widely disseminated.

Great possibilities for good lie before the British Chautauqua movement. The appointment of a permanent secretary to the committee in Mr. Laurence M. Gibson, son of the president, Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson, should prove a distinct advance in the usefulness of the pending Summer Schools. Such gatherings as those to be held at Saltburn in August and at Folkestone in September, attended by the young life of English Christian homes, may mark an epoch in many lives. This combination of a summer holiday with the culture of the heart and the quickening of the faith life, is growing more popular every year.

That the pulpit does not always speak with bated breath on the evils of our time is evidenced by a recent deliverance at the Chapel Royal, Savoy, by Rev. T. J. Lawrence, Rector of Girton. His exposure of the wrongs endured in some villages is enough to make one wonder whether we are living in the dark ages under the tyranny of the French kings or of the Italian nobles. A tremendous indictment is wound up with a sentence that makes the flesh creep:—

> I am familiar to-day with a village where it is far better for a man's personal ease and comfort for him to be a drunkard, a thief, and an adulterer than to evince a desire to look into crying abuses and remedy admitted evils.

The preacher delivered his message in one of the most famous pulpits in the metropolis. Will county magnates take the warning to heart?

The Methodist Times calls attention to the slavery of domestic servants in the West End, where Sunday has been the favourite day for dinner parties and private entertainments, involving a large increase of domestic work. We are persuaded that the evil is spreading in other directions, and that there is a great deal more interchange of social visitation and consequently of Sunday labour among religious families than there used to be. The result is to make the Day of Rest a day of hard labour for servants, and to make it impossible for such as are anxious to attend Divine Worship to do so with any regularity. Thoughtlessness rather than any deliberate selfish tendency is at the root of the evil.

Lord Overtoun's Reply.

LAST week we published the fact that certain serious charges had been made concerning the conditions of labour at the chemical works of which Lord Overtoun is the chief partner. We also published Lord Overtoun's reply.

We are obviously incompetent, not having knowledge of all the facts, to form a conclusive opinion, still less to express a decisive judgment in the case. Our sympathies are entirely with the working men so far as desiring for them equitable, generous, and kindly treatment; and, at the same time, with the Christian and Evangelistic work with which Lord Overtoun is so prominently connected.

The bitter tone of the attack has made it more difficult for the accused firm to reply, than if the statements had been made in a judicial spirit.

It has been said that some of the charges are absolutely false; others misrepresented or exaggerated; and in regard to others, which are partially true, that the conditions are being remedied.

Lord Overtoun is said to have promised a further and more categorical reply, by means of the Press Association, at an early date. We hope for more than a reply, for we gather from his former document that there is need for improvement with regard to Sunday labour and other matters.

It should not be considered sufficient to satisfy Government Inspectors. The ideal of Christian employers should certainly be the comfort and well-being of their employés. To quote from a Manchester paper: "One may be pardoned for indulging in the hope that this controversy in the West of Scotland is a sign that we are entering upon a new era, when works of all kinds shall be conducted in accordance with the dictates of a pure 'Christian conscience' rather than on the lines of sordid business."

Meanwhile, it is to be hoped that the proposed and much-needed Evangelistic campaign in Glasgow, during the coming winter, may proceed unhindered by this painful discussion; and that the discussion itself may lead to better relations between employers and employed.

Lynching.

By Mr. T. M. WINTLE.

THE shocking atrocities perpetrated upon Negroes in Palmetto, Ga., the details of which the Daily Chronicle declared unfit for publication, have once more called attention to the deplorable state of lawlessness and anarchy existing in the Southern States. The frequency of lynching within the last few years is calculated to alarm every well-disposed person, who realises the dreadful results to which it leads, or the enormity of the crimes committed against human rights, good government, and civilisation.

In a free country like America there is no excuse for lynching. If there is evidence to convict, the courts will punish; if there is not, then punishment should not be inflicted. The courts of the United States surely can be trusted to punish the guilty and protect persons and property.

With the view of minimising the atrociousness of lynching, it has been set forth that the people in the South are placed in a trying and difficult position by the presence of the coloured race, which forms a large percentage of the population, having the rights of citizens before receiving the training necessary to prepare them for the responsibilities of the position. If the same population, it is argued, were placed amongst any other people, human nature would exhibit itself and the results would be the same. This is the ignorant and selfish cry that was raised in our own country when the franchise was first extended to the boroughs, and repeated with tenfold vehemence in later years when the rights of citizenship were granted to every householder. But the extension of the franchise has not brought about a state of things such as that existing in the Southern States.

It has also been said that the Negro's vote is in the hands of politicians who manipulate it to their own selfish purposes, and the result is detrimental to the progress and prosperity of the State. But is it not equally true that in the North, East and West of America, as well as in the South, the people vote en bloc? Whatever defects exist in the political education of the Negroes, it is certain we must seek elsewhere for the real cause of the social anarchy existing in the South.

Again, it has been alleged that the graver crimes of arson, burglary, and rape, have become so frequent outside the cities and towns of the South, as to interfere seriously with the security of the people in rural districts; and that they are constantly kept in a state of terror. Unfortunately "mob law" is not confined to country districts; in populous centres there are the stains of human blood shed at the hands of the lynchers.

The absence of police protection, and the slow process of bringing to justice and punishing offenders, have been put forward as excuses for lynching. It is remarkable, however, that in numbers of cases the persons lynched were already in the hands of the law; in not a few instances they have been taken out of the court and lynched while being legally tried.

It is a sorrowful sight to see the citizens of the South trampling under foot their own Constitution, which has been framed so as to be on the side of the oppressed; defy the Government, ignore the law, and assume the function of law-makers, judges, juries, and executioners.

It has been well said by a Southern gentleman who has done much for the community: "The mob is not a safe tribunal justly to determine any cause; for the mob judges without a full and complete hearing from both sides; it decides in a passion, and too often in whiskey."

Not long since, in the State of Georgia, the mob failed to take action because of a division amongst themselves. One portion wished to hang a man who had not been tried, and the other to liberate one who had been tried and sentenced to be hanged for murder.

In Cleveland co., Ark., last year, a man was lynched because he was suspected of stealing a pig worth 2dols. In North Carolina, Joseph Williams was lynched because it was said he was impudent to a white man. In Hampton, Ga., last August, James Mealey was lynched because he wanted to purchase a drink of soda water at a public bar. And in June last year, Mary Parkes, a little girl eight years of age, was lynched in Batesville, S.C., without any charge being preferred against her.

Eternity alone will reveal the number of innocent persons whose lives have been ruthlessly sacrificed by the lynchers. Not long ago a man was charged with rape, and came near being lynched. He was rescued from the mob, and it was proved that the purpose in preferring the charge was to have him lynched in order to suppress his evidence against parties who had been violating the prohibition law.

In another case a man was charged with assault upon a woman. He escaped the mob that was pursuing him, and established the fact that the charge was made against him to defeat the collection of a debt. Had these men been lynched, their guilt would never have been questioned.

To his honour be it said, ex-Governor Atkinson boldly spoke out on this question, in his honest attempt to remove this dark stain and roll away the reproach from the State of Georgia. In his message to the General Assembly, 1897, he said:—

> While it is the duty of the Government to protect its citizens, and do all that can possibly be done to prevent the commission of the offences which have provoked the people to resort to such a reprehensible remedy, it is also its duty to guarantee to every citizen charged with crime a trial before an impartial tribunal, as guaranteed by the Constitution.
>
> It is the duty of the citizens to leave to the Government under which they live, the righting of wrongs and the punishment of crime. The man who ignores this obligation, and assumes with his own hand to punish crime, becomes a criminal.
>
> It is an attack upon the Government itself, a conflict between the forces of anarchy and law. Any organised effort to set at nought our laws and punish crime without, and in defiance of, the law, is itself criminal. It is worse than criminal in its very essence; it is treason against the majority and against Government.
>
> Responsibility for the crime of lynching rests not only upon actors, but upon the community which shuts its eyes to the crime and permits and tolerates it.

"Mob law," or lynching, is only the occasional outburst of that cruel, heartless, and unwarranted hatred and prejudice that are burning out the life of patriotism and sense of justice in the white people of the South. Go where you will, in every society, the coloured question meets you; it casts a pall over the moral, social, and even spiritual life of the South, and its withering, blighting influence is everywhere to be seen. Capitalists and worthy immigrants hesitate before going South, as they seek places for investment and work where law is supreme; while these volcanic outbursts of cruelty advertise the fair South to the world as a half-civilized people. Nothing so impedes material growth, lowers the standard of civilization, and degrades the character of the people, as the absence of love of justice between man and man.

Without doubt it is the question of the hour in the United States; it is a problem that must be solved, and that soon. For the oppressed are sighing and crying, and their cry reaches the throne of Him who hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth. The lynching of coloured men and women will lead on to the lynching of white men and women also.

"Forgiven for His Name's Sake."

1 John ii. 12.

"Forgiven—for his Name's Sake,"
It fell like a pleasant song
On a heedless heart—and she stayed to hear,
Half scornfully first—then, in hope and fear,
And with yearning tears, e'er long.

"Forgiven—for his Name's Sake."
Not for my sake at all?
For nothing that I can do or be;
But just because Jesus has died for me,
And stooped for me to call.

"Forgiven—for his Name's Sake."
It fell with a hush of peace
On a contrite heart that lay at his feet;
And rang in its depths like an echo sweet
Of music—that will not cease.

"Forgiven—for his Name's Sake."
It fell with a thrill of hope
On a wounded heart, bowed low at his cross;
Disheartened with failure, and sin, and loss;
And the tearful eyes looked up.

"Forgiven—for his Name's Sake,"
"Who loved me" after all.
Lord! take my hand in Thy pierced one,
Lest, forgetting my weakness, I stray alone,
And wander again—and fall.

"Forgiven—for his Name's Sake,"
And lo!—she rose from the dust
At his loving voice; as the Master smiled,
And said, "I will be Thy strength, my child,
Cling closer to Me, and trust."

"Forgiven—for his Name's Sake."
It fell with a clarion sound,
On a ransomed heart that knew of his love;
Yet, was going alone toward the Home above;
Not winning the wanderers around.

"Forgiven—for his Name's Sake,"
"Forgiven." Yes, even me!
Forgiven, and laden with blessings divine;
Yet with never a star in thy crown to shine;
Or "a lost sheep" sought for Thee.

"Forgiven—for his Name's Sake,"
She woke as out of a dream.
"Forgiven," she whispered. Yes, even for this!
But henceforth earth holds for me nought of bliss
Save the joy of pleasing Him.

"Forgiven—for his Name's Sake."
And lo! she rose with a smile
That shone through her tears, saying, "Let me go
Unto others—his marvellous love to show
For the rest of earth's "little while."

Edith Gilling Cherry.

"The Master's Touch," with several hitherto unpublished poems by the same writer, are now in print. Address Mrs. M. S. Cherry, care of the Bible Society's Tract Depôt, Bedford Street, Plymouth. 3d. per dozen.

The Boca Mission.—I send herewith receipt of the treasurer of this mission for £9 18s. 6d. from "Readers of The Christian," for the Boca Mission, Buenos Ayres. The Mission was never in a more prosperous condition in all its spiritual work. About 350 children are receiving daily instruction in the Word of Life, while the Gospel services in Spanish and English are regularly maintained, the Spanish services, in particular, being very largely attended. The local authorities, represented by a member of the local council, have recognised that the moral tone of the section has been notably improved by the work of this mission. The work invites to enlargement, and especially to the opening of a girls' school, which we should at once accomplish if sufficient means should be contributed. We hope you will still continue to permit our friends to make their bounty available to this work through you.

Charles W. Drees, Treasurer.

Buenos Ayres, May 22.

Mustard Seed.

Matt. xiii. 31, xvii. 20; Luke xvii. 6.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE Lord Jesus Christ was a keen observer of nature. Little things, common objects, what men cast away as valueless, had an infinite fascination for our Lord, because He saw how much could be made of the fragments which others would leave strewn upon the mountain side—a lost sheep, a lost money-piece, a prodigal son, little children, and whatever men were accustomed to pass over as of small account.

Naturalists tell us that from the grain of mustard seed a growth of twenty-five feet is often produced, in the leafy boughs of which birds build their nests, and beneath whose shadow a man on horseback may find shelter from the scorching sun. And Jesus said that the disproportion which obtained between the tiny seed and the mighty resultant of its contact with the earth, might obtain between the product of our lives and the tiny capacity that we may have for God. The insignificant mustard grain might well despair if it were informed that it must produce so lofty and far-spreading a tree, yet with the favouring help of earth and sky such result would be gradually but easily obtainable. So, soul, thou mightest well despair of effecting anything in this world, so weak thou art, so limited thy capacity, so small thine opportunity; but there are conditions which, if thou wilt observe them, shall lead thee to results far surpassing thy furthest thoughts or aims.

THERE ARE FIVE STEPS

through which the mustard seed passes to its destined maturity. First, contact with the soil; so long as it lies upon the barn floor, or in the sack, it is inoperative. Secondly, silence; growth is no sudden process, but through weeks and months the seed must be content to lie in its silent grave. Thirdly, suffering; no sooner has it reached the dark confinement of its prison cell than it is torn by the devastating acids of its new environment; its waterproof sheath is perforated, its heart is pierced, it is torn so as to be almost unrecognizable. All these are the beginning of its sorrow. Fourthly, there must be a response to the appeal of mother nature, as with eager importunity she knocks at the door of the tiny seed until the principle of life opens it and she enters. At first the aperture is very small, and only a tiny throb of nature's great life manages to pass within, but, having entered, she strikes the rootlet downward, and the green shoot upward toward the over-arching sky. Lastly, the seed gives to nature its direction; the acorn toward the oak, the chestnut towards the chestnut, the mustard to mustard—"God giveth it a body even as it pleased Him, and to each seed a body of its own."

Each of these must have its counterpart with ourselves.

I.—CONTACT WITH GOD.

Jesus said, "Who is it that touched me?' The multitudes around were pressing and crushing, but only one touched, and drew out the saving power. What a difference there is between thronging and touching. The multitudes throng; the individuals touch. It is possible to spend an hour in prayer, to read a whole tract of Scripture, to be sedulous and absorbed in the services of God's house, and to spread wide works of religion and philanthropy, and yet for months together not to touch the living Christ. On the other hand, the upward glancing of an eye, a sigh of aspiration, a definite reckoning and counting upon the blesssed Confederate and Partner, with whom we are called into association, may be a touch, a point of union, a junction through which the Divine shall pass instantly into the human, and the fulness and strength of God into our emptiness and weakness.

The opposite poles in the current of electricity must touch, hands must grasp, the circle must be completed, before the current can pass swiftly and mightily on its mission. And thou, O soul of man, must understand in thine inner experience what Jesus meant when He said: "The glory which Thou hast given me I have given unto them, that they may be one, even as we are one—I in them, and Thou in me, that they may be perfected into one." The eternal God, as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, must come in contact with thee, and thou with Him, that the Divine force, which is ever rising in his heart, may flow into thee, and, through thee, back, multiplied and rejoicing to Himself.

Probably the whole process of redemption, from its incarnation in the purpose of God through the mediation and atonement of Jesus Christ, with the further help of the Holy Ghost, is intended to establish this union between God and the soul, which, when once it is constituted, becomes the medium through which God is able to make his mighty power and love known in the world. There is no honour comparable to this, of living in such abiding union and contact with the Son of God that whatever is in Him longing for manifestation, may find a ready vent through us, with as little leakage as possible.

II.—THERE MUST BE SILENCE.

"My soul is silent unto God, from Him cometh my salvation." Be still before the Lord and wait patiently for Him, be still and know that He is God. And "Eli said unto Samuel, 'Go lie down;' so Samuel went and lay down in his place; and the Lord came, and stood, and called as at other times, 'Samuel, Samuel.'" Such silence is a necessary part of nature—silence of the winter forests, of the brown ploughed fields, of the long sleepfulness of babes, and growing things. The Apostle tells us that it was out of the silence of times eternal that the Gospel and the preaching of Jesus Christ has emanated for the blessing of the world. They that sit at the feet of Jesus rise to pour the alabaster box of very precious ointment over his head. In quietness and confidence is strength.

We must have our quiet times. The soul must centre itself, either in the early morning when the world is still, or in the summer vacation by loch or ocean, fiord or glacier. Never count those hours in which the soul seems to lie still, without desire or movement, passion or prayer, as lost; the Spirit that brooded over chaos broods still, bringing order and beauty by his patient processes. What though the frost pulverize the clod, or the drenched leaves rot in the soil, or the busy life of the world passes unheeding, or the years change from the rust of autumn to the green beauty of spring, in the heart that quietly waits purposes are forming, long trains of reasoning are maturing, the springs of life are becoming filled, and presently, at the sounding of the trumpet, there shall be a resurrection. Christian soul, thou and I must be stiller if we would be deeper, stronger, more fruitful!

III.—SUFFERING.

The grain falls into the ground to die. Does not it suffer as it sees its beauty despoiled, as its heart is pierced and torn, as the sentence of dissolution is executed? Its sighs reach no ears, its cries of pain cannot penetrate its prison walls, but the martyrdom is not less excruciating as the black inquisitors ply it with torture. So with the soul through which the world is to be blessed—Joseph in his prison, Hosea in his lonely wife-deserted solitude, Jesus as man in the loneliness and anguish of Gethsemane, Luther in the Wartburg, Bunyan in Bedford Jail, and myriads more whose sufferings are known only to God, suffering in the heart, of disappointed hope, of the crushed and broken spirit, of the unutterable despair.

There must be suffering if you are to renounce your way and will for God, if you are to learn obedience as Jesus did before you, if you are in your measure to be perfected to sympathize with and intercede for your fellows—if through the decay of the outward man the inward is to be renewed day by day, and by the destruction of the stone the image is to grow to perfect symmetry and beauty. No statue apart from the chisel, no grapes without the pruning-knife, no gem without the wheel, no seed coming to growth without death, no birth without travail.

IV.—THE OPEN DOOR TO GOD.

As the principle of life in the tiny seed opens to the knock of nature the microscopic portal through which she pours a tiny stream of life, so the soul, which is unable of itself to do anything, must open the door to Him who stands and knocks. This is faith. Faith is simply capacity for God, openness towards God, power of receiving God: "As many as received Him, to them gave He the right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name." "This I saw," said Hopeful, "that believing and coming were all one; and that he that came, that is, ran out in his heart and affections after salvation by Christ, he indeed believed in Christ." But it is also true that he who opens the door for Christ to run in and enter his soul, has faith.

Faith opens a tiny aperture towards God. It may be very small, slight as the touch of a weak, frail woman upon the robe of Jesus, but no such appeal is ever lost sight of. From out the glory of his heaven God bends to answer the least appeal, and just so long as the minute doorway is kept open He pours Himself in, striking the root down and the green shoot up. Have you not noticed how the water which pours through some narrow channel, widens the channel as it flows? So, as God passes through our faith, He widens it and it grows. The disciples said, when they heard the Master's command to forgive even to seven times, "Increase our faith," as though they would have a vision of the increased capacity before they ventured to use it, but in effect the Master said, "Do not seek for greater faith, use the faith you have got." Let the love of God begin to pour through that tiny channel of your capacity, for as it passes in successive acts, or words, or thoughts, it will hollow the channel and love will grow.

Cease to think whether your faith is great or small; renounce the worrying consideration of the degree in which you can absorb or transmit the Divine influence; let your one aim and purpose be that God may work in you and through you for his own good pleasure. All faith which has God for its object, is true faith. It is not what we do for God, but what we let Him do through us, that tells. Cease to speak of anything save this, that Christ works through you to make men obedient in word and deed.

V.—BE NATURAL.

Each seed gives the force of nature its own direction. So it is in grace. The power of God in Isaiah produces his evangelistic prophecy, through Ezekiel his vision of the land and temple, through John epistles of love, through Peter of hope, through Paul of faith. The power of God in George Müller produces orphanages, in Carey Missions, in Wesley a Church. Let God have his way with you, be content to be yourself, let Him fulfil the unique purpose which He had in your creation and redemption. If you are a grain of mustard seed, let there be the mustard growth. Do not envy another, do not imitate those who are exercising a wide influence upon men; you will be a poor imitation, but may be a very useful original.

It is not for us to look towards the end of the bough where the fruit swells, but at the other end which is united to the tree. Let us not be calculating the results of life, the twenty-five feet growth, the far-spreading branches, the deep dark shadow; it is enough for us to be hidden with Christ in God.

An Indian Convention.—Kotageri is a station on the Nilgiri Hills about eighteen miles from Ootacamund, and is the sanitarium for a large number of Danish and German missionaries, a few C.M.S. and Free Church missionaries, and the home of a number of planters. Two missionaries living at Kotageri, who had attended the recent Convention at Ootacamund, and had been helped spiritually by the meetings, felt that a similar convention should be held at Kotageri. From the first meeting the presence and power of God were felt. Mr. Hill's Bible readings on Romans vi. 7, 8, had much to do with arousing deep and solemn thought in the minds of many.

Madura Mission. J. C. Perkins.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, July 2. 1 Sam. xvi.

THIS is a chapter of remarkable helpfulness to all Christian workers.

1. God's provision. "I have provided Me a king" (v. 1). Whenever a post is vacant, God has some chosen one to fill it, and it is our duty to wait for Him, in prayer and faith, to bring the man and the post together. God will often go into places where we should least expect Him to find his chosen instruments. He chose David to be his servant, and took him from the sheepfolds, from following the ewes, to feed Jacob his people. You do not know, young soul, the eyes which are watching you in your daily toil, the hand which will give you the wider sphere, if only you are faithful in the less.

2. God's choice. Man looks on the outward appearance. When Eliab came, Samuel, accustomed to the towering stature of Saul, immediately concluded that this must be the chosen one. We need to be taught again and again that no flesh may glory in God's presence. Not many mighty, not many noble are called, but God chooses the foolish, the weak, the base, the things that are despised, yea, the things that are not. Away with his sheep is the lad with the ruddy complexion and the beautiful eyes, whom Jesse and his sons were ready to forget, but who is the man after God's own heart.

3. God's anointing. The outward chrism of oil was but the sign of the inward and spiritual grace with which that young life was to be thenceforward empowered. From that day! What a memorable day it was. Its influence lay along the lawns of after life, in beneficent blessing. Note that word mighty. Oh that the same power might come thus on us from now! And that will include so much else. The Spirit's grace flowed through all the channels of David's life, whether of music, valour, or speech. Thus is it always. The spiritual reacts on our natural and intellectual endowments.

MONDAY, July 3. 1 Sam. xvii.

The strength and defiance of Goliath are apt symbols of the opposition with which the individual and the Church are met in the heavenly places. We wrestle, not against flesh and blood, but against hosts of wicked spirits in the heavenlies. As there was no man in Israel that had a chance of prevailing against this mighty champion, so we have no might by which we can withstand these spiritual foes that infest our life. You may gird on Saul's armour as you may, and brace yourself to the conflict, but by human strength you have no chance of prevailing. "The Lord saveth not with sword and spear, for the battle is the Lord's," and He alone can give our enemy into our hand. In order to succeed—

1. You must believe in the living God (v. 26). This is the distinction between the carnal and the spiritual, between the man who believes only in the Aaronic side of Christ's Priesthood, and him who has come to understand the Melchizedek side, with his power of the indissoluble life. Nothing but a clear and firm apprehension of the life of the glorified Christ will ever carry the soul through its conflict with the power of hell.

2. You must be gentle and humble (v. 29). When David was reviled by Eliab he reviled not again, but bore himself gently and humbly. Had he fallen into a temper of passion he had been unnerved for the fight. You must master yourself if you would master Goliath.

3. You must refuse Saul's armour (v. 39). Plenty of advice will be given as to the necessity of adopting precautions, and availing yourself of the assistance of worldly policy and power. "If thou wilt worship me, all shall be thine."

4. You must be in fellowship with God (v. 47). Faith opens the heart to God, so that He may effect through the weak human instruments mighty things which had not been looked for.

TUESDAY, July 4. 1 Sam. xviii.

Love and hate are closely woven into the lot of some men. Their natures have strong positive and negative poles, which attract and repel. So Jonathan and Michal were attracted, whilst Saul, in moody jealousy, was repelled. Oh for more of this divine magnetism!

There are three strophes in this chapter, each of which ends with the words, "David behaved himself wisely" (vv. 5, 15, 30). There is a wisdom of conduct which makes a man respected even by his foes, and this was conspicuous in David, because God was with him.

Jonathan. Here was love at first sight. These two pure hearts leapt to each other, and were from that moment to shine as twin stars, Castor and Pollux, in the thought of man, and, perhaps, in the firmament of heaven. How easy it was for Jonathan to exchange his royal attire with his friend; but what a moving reminder to us of the joy with which our Lord emptied Himself, and became clothed in the likeness of flesh that He might make us to be arrayed in the garments of his salvation!

Saul. Green-eyed jealousy knocked at the door that day, when the women sang David's praises. If only Saul had, there and then, resisted it, and called on God to bar it out of his life! He played with the lion's cub till its rough tongue drew blood, and it became mad. The only cure for jealousy is to compel oneself to act and speak as one should, if love were supreme. Go forth and make yourself show love, for God's sake, and as a channel of God's love.

Michal. She was true at first, until disappointment embittered her. David owed her his life. But there never could have been complete sympathy between them. Take care to marry only in the Lord. Thou child of the new age, do not enter into wedlock with the child of the world which is passing away.

WEDNESDAY, July 5. 1 Sam. xix.

It is necessary to read the Psalms, which correspond with these chapters, because they reveal the workings of David's heart. Throughout these perpetual siftings and changes, he was living in close fellowship with God, escaping to Him as a bird from the fowler's snare. How little do those who regard only the exterior of our lives realise the hopes and fears, the joys and sorrows, the secret soul-life before God! Psalm lix. is a profound commentary on this special chapter, with its double reference to God the strength of the persecuted soul:

"O my Strength, I will wait upon Thee,
For God is my high tower."

And again:

"Unto Thee, O my Strength, will I sing praises:
For God is my high tower, and the God of my mercy."

God's Prevenient Mercy is the Psalmist's song in that Psalm (verse 10). And there are many illustrations of it here. God prepared Jonathan's path, when pleading with his father, and inclined the weak-minded monarch to assent to his loving pleading on his friend's behalf. There was prevenient help in Michal's wifely concern and help. And in that afflatus which befel Saul in the company of the prophets, we may again recognise the Divine interposition. Prevenient mercy is that which interposes and intercepts, which goes before and anticipates, which bears the brunt of an attack.

When we read that an evil spirit from the Lord was upon Saul, we are probably to understand that it was of the Divine permission. When men wish not to retain God in their knowledge, He gives them up to their own lusts.

THURSDAY, July 6. 1 Sam. xx.

There are two or three memorable verses in this pathetic chapter, which are woven into our common speech.

"There is but a step between me and death." Is it so, dear sufferer? Has it come to that? Only a step, and death; then be of good cheer, for thou art within a step of heaven, of the unveiled mysteries of existence, of the presence and bosom of God. To depart is to be with Christ. To be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord. To abandon the tent is to enter the City of God.

"Thou hast brought thy servant into a covenant of the Lord with thee." That appeal was irresistible. Altogether apart from Jonathan's love to his friend, his chivalry could not be unmindful of their plighted troth. And if thou canst look up into God's face and remind Him of past times of covenant-plighting, thou touchest Him to the quick. He is faithful.

"Thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be empty." The empty seat is always significant of a missing one. The empty seat in the family pew, at the table of the Lord, in the home, tells not unseldom of the prodigal; unless, indeed, of the saint, who has entered the mansions of the Father's home.

"Is not the arrow beyond thee?" Run as we may, there is a beyond which we cannot overtake. A beyond of love that we can never explain, of mystery that we cannot unravel, of ideal that evades us, of illusion that recedes as we advance; but some day we shall see face to face, and shall be satisfied.

FRIDAY, July 7. 1 Sam. xxi.

Again we must turn to the Psalms to cast their light on the inner life which lay hid from the gaze of man, though it revealed itself to God. Thus the life of nature is silent as men go trampling through the forest, though it stealthily manifests itself when all is still again. Psalm xxxiv. is specially valuable here.

It was under tremendous pressure that David left his native land, and it would almost seem that there had been some lapse of faith on his part. Surely he might have been certain that God would perform all his promises, and have held his ground in Israel. It looks like a stroke of policy, or expediency, to find him stealing across the frontier to Achish. And, as is so often the case when we trust in our own counsels, and forsake the firm, safe ground of faith, he found that he had gone from bad to worse.

It was not a very dignified procedure on the part of the man after God's own heart, to play the madman. Surely the incomparable sword of Goliath, which hung at his side, must have protested against such behaviour. And yet, at the close of the incident, when he is actually driven away from the palace and city, he goes off with a sublime psalm on his lips. The righteous had cried, and the Lord had answered and delivered. The Lord had redeemed his soul, and seen to it that he should not be condemned. Many had been his afflictions, but the Lord had delivered from them all. What a pæan of thanksgiving and praise.

Lift up your hearts!
We lift them up unto the Lord.

SATURDAY, July 8. 1 Sam. xxii.

The Cave of Adullam was destined to play an important part in David's life. Psalms lvii. and cxlii. bear this as their inscription. From these it appears that the shelter of the cave suggested many thoughts of the sheltering care of God, in whom he took refuge until his calamities were overpast. He never lost his belief that God would send from heaven and save him, or that his foes would fall into the snare they had laid for him. And often from the dark recesses of the cave the voice of the sweet singer might be heard calling on psaltery and harp to awake to praise God. Let those who are compelled to hide in dark caves learn the lesson of these two Psalms.

It was to Adullam that the motley band of outlaws gathered—those that were in distress, in debt, and discontented—over whom David became captain, and out of whom he created the nucleus of his all-victorious army of after years. It has always seemed such a marvellous anticipation of the grace of Christ, who sets up his standard outside the kingdom of this world, gathering beneath it the publicans and sinners, the flotsam and jetsam of the ocean, or, as Rowland Hill put it, more forcibly than elegantly, "the rag, tag, and bobtail." Ah! Master, what a marvellous art is thine, which is able out of such material to form the armies, which one day shall follow Thee on white horses to universal victory!

To Adullam, Abiathar fled from the slaughter of the priests with the awful story of Doeg's vengeance and Saul's. There the fifty-second Psalm was composed, and there Abiathar received the memorable assurance that his life and David's were inextricably united. Doubtless our Lord repeats to thee and me those same words (v. 23).

Glimpses of Romanism.

X.—The Papal Church and the Bible.

By Rev. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

An Italian member of Parliament, addressing his constituents at Brescia some few years ago, and referring to the attitude that the Papal Church takes up in regard to the Bible, said that immediately after the invention of printing, when every press in Europe was engaged printing the Bible, there was one solitary exception, the Pope's press at Subiaco, near Rome. The first book ever printed in Italy was printed there in 1465, and from that time it poured forth a perfect stream of literature of all kinds; but never a book, never a chapter, never a verse of Scripture.

The attitude of the Church with reference to the Bible at Subiaco was in perfect keeping with the attitude it assumed towards it before the invention of printing, and with the attitude it has preserved towards it ever since. Put into the hands of the people, the Church practically says, any book you please, no matter how degrading (there are few demoralising books on the Index Expurgatorius; their circulation is permitted and encouraged), but do not on any account let them have the Bible.

The Papal records of a thousand years show unbroken hostility to the Bible and to Bible-readers. As early as 860, Pope Nicholas I. pronounced against it; Gregory VII., in 1073, confirmed the ban; and Innocent III., in 1198, declared that all who read the Bible should be stoned to death. In 1229 the Council of Toulouse passed a decree against the possession or reading of the Bible; and the Council of Trent, and many a council since has done the same.

In modern times bull after bull has been fulminated against Bible Societies: by Pius VII. in 1816, by Leo XII. in 1825, by Pius VIII. in 1830, by Gregory XVI., and by the late Pope Pio Nono. It was under his ægis that Francesco Madiai and his wife were arrested in August, 1851, in Florence, for reading the Bible, were imprisoned in the Bargello for ten months, and then sent to the galleys. It was under his ægis that an English gentleman was also arrested at the same time, for having a Bible in his pocket, and was imprisoned.

And what about the present Pope? In the matter of

OPPOSITION TO THE BIBLE,

as in other things, he has had to keep an eye on England. The Papacy has lost Italy, and England is its hope. And so, a few years ago, he seemed to reverse the policy of his predecessors by actually issuing an Encyclical that appeared to favour Bible reading. But as we all in Italy knew at the time, the Encyclical was a sham, and immediately on its issue secret instructions seemed to have been given to the priests to stop the sale of the Bible in Italy, and the giving of it to the people by English travellers, by all means in their power, and attempts to do this were made by them in every quarter of the land.

But it may be said that the opposition of the Church is directed against Protestant versions and not against Roman Catholic ones, such as the Martini, which are sanctioned by the Pope. Such is not the case. The opposition is against the Bible, Roman Catholic or Protestant, pure and simple. For example, the Martini version is published by the Church, I have been told, in two forms, one so large and so costly that the people cannot buy it, and one so small and so illegible that nobody would care to have it. A priest told me that no priest, even, was allowed to possess it without the Papal consent, and the very fact of applying for that consent brought him under suspicion. Therefore, he said, we have no Bibles.

Students are not taught the Bible in the Papal Seminaries. It is not used as a text-book in their training. The Bible is no weapon in the armoury of the Propaganda. The Papal Church has its missionaries in every quarter of the globe. There is no instance in history of their ever having given the Bible to those amongst whom they labour, or of their ever translating a page of it into any native tongue. A curious thing happened at the so-called Œcumenical Council, held in the Vatican in 1869-70, at which was decreed. Döllinger, or it may have been Dupanloup, in supporting his argument against the insensate proposal, wished to refer to some passages of Scripture; but no one had a Bible in the whole Council, nor could one be procured for him within the bounds of the Church, so he had to borrow one from the Protestant chaplain of the Prussian Embassy!

THE INFALLIBILITY OF THE POPE

The ignorance of the Roman Catholic clergy of the Bible is only equalled by their hostility to it. The two go hand in hand. Padre Curci, the learned Jesuit, who died a few years ago in a convent at Fiesole, to which he had been banished by the Vatican for his liberal writings, said, in his work "Vaticano Regio"—

If theological study in general has waned and degenerated amongst our clergy, Biblical study has been entirely abandoned. The activity of the Protestants in the study of the Bible, which ought to be to us a noble incentive, has been made a pretext for calumny to such an extent that already in some large dioceses an understanding is allowed to circulate quietly amongst the younger clergy that, as the study of the Bible is a Protestant affair, it would be a curse to anyone to engage in it.

As bearing out what Padre Curci has said, let me tell what happened in Padua a short time ago. There a Young Men's Christian Association was formed, which began to make headway, and so alarmed the curia. The priest in whose parish the Association met called upon the mother of the president, and denounced him, telling the poor woman that her son had got bad books, and was going headlong to inferno. The mother listened quietly, and then said:

It may be so, but it does not look as if it were; for he used to drink, he does not drink now; he used to swear, he does not swear now; he used to stop out late at night, he is always home early now; but I will send him to you with all his books and you can judge for yourself.

Accordingly the young man called upon the priest, and first of all he handed to him a New Testament, printed for the British and Foreign Bible Society. The priest said: "That is a bad book;

YOU MUST BURN IT."

"Very well," said the young man. Then he handed him a little book, entitled "Vita e Parole del Signor Gesù" ("The Life and Words of the Lord Jesus.") This book consists of the Gospel of St. Luke, and the discourses of Christ, taken from the other three Evangelists. But it is a book that I had published by Catholic publishers. The priest looked at this book, saw who published it, and handing it back to the young man, said, "That is a good book, you may keep it." "But," said the young man, meaning to be entirely frank with him, "this book is simply a part of that one" (the condemned New Testament), and then he explained what it was. The priest answered, "I know nothing about that; all I know is that the one is a bad book, published by Protestants, and the other is a good book, published by Catholics."

The fact of the matter is, that the priests know nothing about the Bible. I know, from my own personal knowledge, that Canons in St. Peter's cannot turn up a passage of Scripture. I do not believe that any ecclesiastic in the Vatican, nor in the Church, has any extensive knowledge of the Bible, whilst I believe the majority know nothing whatever about it.

A friend of mine, now an evangelist, when a young, zealous Catholic in Turin, got hold of a New Testament, and took it to the priest. The priest said, "You have got hold of a very bad book. That book was printed in hell." The words awoke the young man's curiosity, and, in spite of he took the book home and read it. The result was his conversion, and his giving himself to Christian work. The fact of the matter is, neither Pope nor priest has ever had much knowledge of the Bible theoretically, and they have had less practically; and, if they had their will, they would make all, from prince to peasant, like themselves.

THE PROTEST OF THE PRIEST,

In Italy, at least, their will in this respect they can never have. On September 20, 1870, when the Italian troops entered Rome, by the breach they made in its walls at the Porta Pia, a cart full of Bibles, driven by a colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society, entered with them. The Italian troops were the pledge of the material liberty of the people, the Bible was the pledge of intellectual, moral, and spiritual liberty. And year by year since then the importation of the Bible, and the circulation of the Bible, has gone on at a steadily increasing rate.

A tremendous spurt was given to the spread and sale of the Bible in Italy when, in June, 1888, the editor of the Secolo newspaper published a paragraph in praise of the Bible, saying:

There is a book that contains the poetry and science of humanity. It is the Bible, to which no work in any literature can be compared. It is a book necessary for the culture of all classes, and ought to be found in every home. The Bible is denominated "the Book" par excellence, and also "the Book of Books." No book was ever considered to have such importance in the history of literature, and in that of the development of intelligence in general, as the Bible. No book merits as much as it to be the object of profound study.

The editor proceeded to announce his intention of giving the Bible to his countrymen, publishing it in 210 parts, at five centessimi (one halfpenny) a part of eight pages each, accompanied with 900 illustrations, for the production of which duplicate plates of those used in Cassell's Bible, published in London, had been obtained. He added: "This artistic, useful, and popular edition, the first of its kind in Italy, is destined to have an extraordinary success." His prophecy was literally fulfilled.

Five years later, in October, 1893, I noticed a second announcement in the Secolo, which said that of the first edition of the Bible, which was now entirely sold off, had induced the editor to publish a second edition. I then wrote to the editor, with whom I had already been in correspondence, for particulars as to the first edition, and I was indeed surprised and gratified to learn that he had sold 50,000 copies — that is, he had sold 10,000 copies on an average annually for five years; and as each copy, when completed, cost 10 francs, he had sold 500,000 francs' worth, or, in English money, £25,000 worth. Poor Italians, in cities, towns, and villages, actually spent £25,000 in purchasing the Bible, that book which the Papal Church had used its influence and ingenuity ever since the invention of printing, and for some centuries before that, to suppress.

THE IMMENSE SUCCESS

But that does not explain all. The publication of this native Bible familiarised the Italians with the Book. They ceased to regard it as a foreign book and a Protestant book, and began to recognise it as a universal book, the heritage of all nations, and the foundation of all religion worthy of the name. The result was that the Bibles and Testaments published by the British and Foreign Bible Society and other societies, found

A NEW AND READY ACCEPTANCE.

Colporteurs could say, "The Secolo Bible costs you 10 francs, but I can give you it for 1 franc." The circulation of foreign printed Bibles has since then gone up by leaps and bounds. Year by year more copies are bought than of any other book. The Bible, in point of circulation, is recognised in Italy to be "the Book par excellence," "the Book of Books."

There is not much chance for the Papal Church when that is the case! Where the Bible goes, the Church cannot go, nor remain. The two are as opposed as bitter and sweet, light and darkness, good and evil.

The late Dr. William Arnot, of Edinburgh, used to say:

In order to kill mischievous weeds, you must not only pluck them up and cast them out, but you must sow the field from side to side with a closely-growing crop of precious grain.

As in Italy, both these processes are at work, we may entertain the hope that soon the Papal weeds of error and superstition, falsehood, and the offering of "salvation in sin," instead of from it, will be rooted out, and "the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God," may be seen to flourish in the individual and national life of this classic people and land.

Prof. Newell's Bible Course.

Lesson IV.—Isaac and Jacob: The Heirs of the Promise.—Gen. xxv. 11-xxxv.

I. Read and re-read the lesson till it is altogether familiar.

II. The chapter-names: xxv. Birthright; xxvi. Abimelech (II.); xxvii. Blessing; xxviii. Ladder; xxix. Service; xxx. Increase; xxxi. Mizpah; xxxii. Wrestling; xxxiii. Prevailing; xxxiv. Disgrace; xxxv. Consummation.

III. Of Isaac we have little told us, but enough to make out the man and to glean from his history rich spiritual instruction. Study him in the manner spoken of last week.

Note, specially, that he was a man of faith. See Heb. xi. 17, 20. That he had power in prayer. (Gen. xxv. 21.) That he was full of appreciation of the divine dignity of his pilgrim and patriarchal calling. (Heb. xi. 9; Gen. xxv. 11; xxvi. 24, 25; xxvii. 37; xxxv. 28, 29.) That his life in general profoundly impressed the people about him, as that of his father Abraham had done before him. (Gen. xxvi. 28, 29. Compare xxiii. 6, R.V., marg.) That his godly walk had so influenced Jacob as to give the latter a peculiar name for God: "The Fear of my father Isaac." (Gen. xxxi. 42-53.) (It is worthy of note, as an encouragement to parents, that this is the conception of God that we find in Jacob at the end of his twenty years of exile.) Nor did Jacob, in the marvellously keen spiritual insight of his latter days, change his opinion of his father's piety. (See Gen. xlviii. 15.) Moreover, we find that Isaac was very peculiarly blessed of God. (Gen. xxv. 11, xxvi. 12 14, 16, 19, 29.) But we must note certain other FEATURES OF ISAAC'S CHARACTER.

That he was very easy-going and peace-loving is evident from Gen. xxvi. 19-22. We are ready to wonder if it was all grace that made him so yielding. Especially as in xxiv. 63, we see him to be of a quiet, meditative disposition; and in xxiv. 67 a real mother's boy—no discredit to him, indeed, especially in view of his mother's character. (1 Pet. iii. 5, 6.) But that he was more than easy-going is evident in xxv. 28. He was self-indulgent. (See also xxvii. 4, 9, 14, 25.) And in view of this we cannot wonder at the sad lack of spiritual discernment and forgetfulness of God's word (xxv. 23) that made him ready to bestow the great covenant blessing of Abraham upon coarse, idle, profane Esau (Heb. xii. 15). Fleshly indulgence always dulls spiritual faculties.

But we cannot forget, despite all this, the real devotion to God of this man, who, while yet a lad, could yield himself without a word of opposition to be sacrificed to the will of God. Chapter xxii.

IV. The Scripture ever alloweth that that is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural. (1 Cor. xv. 46.) Adam the First hath his day and his way upon the earth, even unto this present, while the New Creation must wait with patience. (Rom. viii. 18-25; James v. 1-11; 1 Cor. iv. 3, R.V. marg.; Psa. xvii., xxxvii., lxxiii., &c.) From the very first it is apparent that the time for the saints to possess the kingdom (Dan. vii. 22) is not yet. And the head of the serpent's seed is not fully bruised to this day; but how it hath busily bruised the heel of the other seed, how doth history show! This is one of God's plainest ways, and not till we have seen it, and surrendered to it, can we enter far into the divine counsels. Heart-consent to the "stranger and pilgrim" life, all subject to the bitter attacks of prince of this present country, is a condition of pleasing God in this evil age. Our Lord knoweth why we suffer. He will be here shortly. (James v. 6-8; Heb. x. 32-37.) But note how, thus far in Genesis, the natural men,

THE "MEN OF THIS WORLD,"

(Psa. xvii. 14), have prospered, and how they have outstripped the godly. First, there is Cain. Chap. iv. He does his own pleasure (even in religion, as most do to-day), he murders the righteous, he condemns God, he wholly quits God and prospers, he builds a city, founds a famous line, and waxes great in the earth to this day (Jude 11). But "Abel the righteous" (Matt. xxiii. 35) is allowed to suffer and die. And Seth, the appointed seed (iv. 25), is humble, quiet, unknown on earth, founding a few lowly prayer-meetings (iv. 26), and then passing on.

Likewise, in chapter x., we see the earth filled with mighty nations before the chosen Shemitic line, from which Abram is to come, is taken up (xi. 10, sqq). Nimrod is an emperor ere Abram is called. Again, Ishmael is born before Isaac—the child of grace has to wait till the child of nature has his opportunity and trial (xvi., xxi.) And before Isaac's generations are traced, we have Ishmael's (xxv. 12-18, 19). And Ishmael has twelve princes in his line just before Isaac is seen praying for his barren wife (xxv. 16, 21).

Once more, in xxv. 27 (a real key passage), Esau is the gentleman of leisure and sport, and Jacob the plodding, faithful (Heb. "perfect") doer of duty. It is Esau who wears the fine clothes (xxvii. 15, 27), Esau who attracts the eye of the world and brings fleshly admiration (xxxvi. 1-3, xxv. 28), Esau who marries quickly and "well" (xxvi. 34, xxxvi.). "Kings reigned in the land of Edom before there were any kings over the children of Israel" (xxxvi. 31). There are about forty settled dukes of Esau's line, while Jacob is still a "sojourner in a land not his own" (xxxvi., xxxvii. 1, Heb. xi. 9). Thus do the men of this world quickly get their portion. And in all his ways with them. We may not wonder if He passed over Esau in his bestowal of the blessing of Abraham, just as He had passed over Ishmael a generation before. If we object to God's loving Jacob and hating Esau, He simply recalls to us the fact that He is the Sovereign Creator, and that we are mere formed things (Rom. ix. 10-20); but if we humbly seek before Him the secret of his way with Isaac's sons, He tell us, "Esau was a profane person." (Heb. xii. 16). Such an one, caring nothing about God, or his favour, or his covenant, could never, as, indeed, he would never, enter into the divine counsels. It would be almost impious to think of the Lord's being known as the God of Esau. But He delights to call Himself, "The God of Jacob." And just here is the secret of all their history. There was in Jacob a susceptibility for divine things that, we may say, was ever the deepest element of his being, and that which finally mastered all else. Esau's god was his belly. See Phil. iii. 19; Psa. xvii. 14.

GOD IS RIGHTEOUS

If we read Gen. xxv. 30 literally, as one has shown, we see Esau: "Feed the red (pottage) to this red" (himself, verse 25). This boisterous, coarse pun is in direct accord with his reckless exaggeration in verse 32: "I am at the point to die." No wonder a birthright which was dependent for all its dignity and value upon God's covenant promise was of "no profit" to him (verse 32). Of course he despised it (verse 34). And shall be lightly esteemed (1 Sam. ii. 30). So we turn from him to the less prepossessing brother, whose heart is setting a trembling, priceless value on that birthright, the while Esau gobbles down his chosen pottage.

THEY THAT DESPISE JEHOVAH

V. We may outline Jacob's story so far as given in our lesson as follows:—

1. Patriarchal Pre-eminence	Promised, xxv. 23 Valued, xxv. 31 Purchased, xxv. 29-34 Stolen, xxvii. 6-30
2. Patriarchal Preparation	Sin-caused Exile, xxviii. 1-5 Seeing Heaven, xxviii 10-22 Serving Earth, xxix. xxxi. Meeting God, xxxii. Minding World, xxxiii. 17-20 Sorrow, xxxiv. xxxv. 18-20, 22 Sincere Surrender, xxxv. 1-4, 31-27
3. Patriarchal Testimony	Worship (Bethel), xxxv. 7, 9-15 Fellowship (Hebron), xxxv. 27 Succession, xxxv. 28-30

There are two great crises in Jacob's life which should be especially studied. The first is at Bethel, in the twenty-eighth chapter, when, fleeing from his outraged brother, he lies down at night in helpless weariness, with a stone for his pillow. God has an opportunity now in Jacob's weakness—to open heaven, reveal Himself, his grace and his purposes, and make anew to this poor wandered his mighty covenant promises, all unconditional and full to running over. There was no receptivity in the waking hours of this man, so full of self and meanness, for such a divine unfolding; it must be done when nature is dull and quiet in sleep. But mark Jacob on awakening. Fear, dread, haste to get away, a pillar set up, a bargain made with God for food and raiment and bodily safety (how low his thoughts compared to what God had promised!) and he is gone on his self-chosen way. The years of service for a hard master, and the increase of children, cattle and goods, fill out the story of his long exile.

Eleven sons (learn carefully their names and order of birth) and one daughter are born. But four wives, and the best-loved of them a half-idolater (xxxi. 34), and that to the end of her days (xxxv. 4, 16-18) did not tend to make

JACOB'S HOME-LIFE A MODEL.

Witness his son's behaviour afterwards. His keen device for the multiplication of his kind of cattle shows the real Jacob of these days—scheming, supplanting and swindling, depending on himself.

Though God is not forgotten, he is too self-strong and self-resourceful to need God much. The father's only resort with such children seems to be to put them where they must have have his help, where they can no longer go forward or back or to either side. Then they will cry to him. See if Jacob does not come thus into a corner directly—the second great crisis of his life.

Jacob's clandestine leave-taking of Laban comes now. God has told him to go, but he would not be Jacob if he were quietly to wait on God to get him away honourably. The disgraceful quarrel with his uncle over, and the gruesome Mizpah pillar set up, he goes on to face a worse trouble. Esau is coming, armed and vengeful, to meet him. He would fain flee on after his people, but a Mysterious Stranger stops him. He advances, but is grappled by a strong arm. Through the long hours they wrestle.

Jacob cannot, shall not, go on into the land of promise and inheritance until, with his pride and self-strength broken down utterly, and in humble confession of his real character name, Jacob, the supplanter, the swindler, he hangs helpless on God alone for the birthright he tried to buy and the blessing he tried to steal years ago from Esau. At last he is a prince—knighted by Jehovah's own hand—"Thy name is Israel . . . a prince." Now God will call Himself "the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," and that name Jacob will go on Paul's great catalogue of worthies in the eleventh of Hebrews. He is limping on his way—a victor because his strength is gone. He is leaning now on God. We will trace the discipline of Jacob by God in Chapters xxxiv.-xxxv. next week.

The next lesson will be Gen. xxxv.-1. Read the chapters over at least five times, till all is familiar.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE June issue of the "Young Men's Christian Magazine" (Glasgow) contains an appreciative life-sketch of Mr. M. H. Hodder, from the pen of Mr. Robert Burn.

Continental Y.M.C.A. general secretaries, to the number of thirty-seven, assembled for their annual conference at La Chaux-de-Fonds, near Neuchatel, from June 13 to 17. Officers were present from Paris, Berlin, Elberfeld, Stuttgart, Copenhagen, Stockholm, Geneva, Basle, and many other important centres. Mr. Charles Fermaud, the senior secretary of the Central International Committtee at Geneva, conducted the proceedings, with the co-operation of his colleagues, Mr. Christian Phildius, Mr. V. Schlappi, and Mr. von Starck, and much interest was evinced throughout the various sessions, which, it was felt, were all too brief. Many Association topics were discussed morning and afternoon in the pleasant building of the local Y.M.C.A., and devotional services were held each evening. The paper, perhaps, that secured the greatest attention and appreciation was one by Mr. Elsässer, of Stuttgart, on the subject of "The Secretary's Daily Life." There are now over one hundred men devoting their whole time to Y.M.C.A. work on the Continent.

The annual Conference of British Secretaries of Young Men's Christian Associations was held at Llandudno, from June 17 to 24, following the general conference of the Associations at Dublin. The attendance nearly doubled that of any previous gathering of the kind, and great interest and helpfulness attached to the proceedings. The arrangements included daily lectures upon the history, principles, and organization of the Y.M.C.A., by Mr. W. H. Mills; the business management of Associations, by Mr. J. H. Putterill; and a series upon "The Great Things of the Bible," by Dr. Monro Gibson. The last-named encouraged the secretaries to pursue, in a sympathetic attitude, inquiry upon all scientific questions affecting the truths revealed in the Bible, and showed that the results of modern criticism had left intact all the great facts of revelation. The warmest appreciation was expressed of Dr. Gibson's kindness in visiting the Conference, and thus promoting the general interests of Association work throughout the country.

Howard Street Gospel Mission. — We purpose having a country holiday home built for very poor children, by whom we are surrounded. We have been enabled to purchase a large piece of freehold land at Burnham-on-Crouch, Essex, through the kindness of several friends, and we are now very anxious to have the home built before the close of the summer. £340 will secure the building of the home and thoroughly furnish it. The poor children who attend the Mission need a holiday and change of air from the dirty slums they live in. John Soames.

Ragged School, Wandsworth Road, S.W.

A Flower League has been lately formed in connection with the Church Pastoral Aid Society, with the object of binding together all who love flowers and who are willing to promise to send them regularly throughout the summer months to the clergy and lady-workers labouring in our great cities. The names of those who will be thankful to receive flowers or text cards to tie on to bunches of flowers will be gladly sent to all who apply for them to "Heartsease," Church Pastoral Aid Society, Falcon Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Missions and Philanthropy.*

THE cultivation of the philanthropic spirit is a notable result of missions. Under direct missionary auspices, a large and impressive exemplification of the benevolent spirit of Christianity has been given. An impulse in this direction has been imparted not only to the native Christian communities, but, in a measure, to non-Christian society wherever missions are conducted.

Benevolence, both as a grace and a duty, has always been part of the historic outcome of Christianity. The Christian religion is still assuming, as part of its mission activities, the rôle of the Good Samaritan among the nations. A social system without the presence and the active ministry of philanthropy is doomed to selfishness and sterility, since the most powerful and winsome incentive to mutual helpfulness, and so to the development of social virtues, is lacking.

It is true that a theoretical, and, after a fashion, a practical benevolence, is part of other religious systems. Almsgiving is popular in the East, but it is identified with a meritorious system of religious observance. The giving of alms is inculcated as an act of merit, especially for the benefit of religious devotees, who live in filth and idleness, and are an incubus on society rather than a help to it. In some instances, the benevolent instinct seems to turn from living men and women to exhaust itself either upon animals or on an ancestral humanity dead and gone.

It may safely be said that the systematic, universal, persistent practice of philanthropic and helpful ministry to living humanity in its hour of need, for God's sake and for charity's sake, is characteristic of the religion of Christ in a sense unknown in other systems. It alone teaches in a clear and emphatic way the sacredness of the living body in its earthly environment, and seeks to brighten and cheer human lives, to assuage pain and deliver the sufferer from its dread mastery, to stay the ravages of disease, to mitigate the agony of incurable maladies, to care for the weak and helpless, to put a stop to bloodshed and savage torture, and to inspire that fine and human dread of inflicting pain which is characteristic of Christian feeling.

Its programme, in the words of its Master, is "to heal all manner of disease and all manner of sickness." Its aim is to dispel the darkness, to brighten the shadows, to give a home to the homeless, an asylum to the orphan, a refuge to the hard pressed, deliverance to the enslaved, and an uplift of hope and cheer to the despairing. It seeks to open up the path of honest occupation by placing the tools of industry in savage hands accustomed only to wield weapons of violence. Christianity has a whole round of expedients for the rescue of distressed humanity, the mitigation of its sorrows and sufferings, and the saving of lives that otherwise would be doomed.

The philanthropic spirit, with its complement of practice which those expedients represent, is a signal contribution of missions to non-Christian society. Medical missionary service, hospitals for the suffering, and benevolent institutions of various kinds, have sprung up on every shore where Christian missions have planted the Red Cross flag of humanitarian ministry. Suffering nations are already reaping a harvest of beneficent results, and as yet only the first-fruits have been gathered. Stimulus has here and there been given to philanthropic movements under non-Christian auspices which have brought some benefits where hitherto only neglect had been the rule. In South China, for example, what are known as Sacred Edict Preaching Halls, have been established to give instructions in Confucian ethics as an antidote to Gospel preaching. Native benevolent societies have also been formed to meet missionary philanthropy on its own ground.

A striking incident is at hand which reveals what Christianity can do towards the development of philanthropy among races the most ignorant and degraded, and apparently the least likely to respond to humanising influences. Many have no doubt noted the announcement in the English journals that among the contributions received by the Mansion House Indian Famine Fund was the sum of £844 from the people of Fiji. This is a Christian gift. "Let the fact be noted," remarks the editor of Work and Workers in the Mission Field, "and its significance be taken to heart. Sixty years ago, at the time of Her Majesty's accession to the throne, the entire Fiji group was inhabited by pagan cannibals. Its heathen darkness was unbroken by any ray of Christian religion or civilisation."

* Extracted from Christian Missions and Social Progress. By James S. Dennis. (Vol. II. 10s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

(824)

Enid Desmond.—I.

"ENID, dear, if your packing is done I would advise you to be off to bed soon, for your train starts early in the morning, and I don't want you to take faded roses to London."

"Oh, Joan, I am so glad you have come. I cannot find room for all these things," and Enid Desmond raised a bright, flushed face from the travelling trunk into which she was trying, with impatient fingers, to crush a miscellaneous collection of gloves, laces, ribbons, and various other appendages of a feminine wardrobe.

"My dear child, let me finish for you; you will ruin them hopelessly."

And Enid watched her methodical sister as she smoothed out and daintily arranged her millinery.

"That's something like!" she said joyously, as the lid reluctantly closed over her treasures. "What a jewel you are, Joan! I could pack splendidly for anyone else, but I am too excited to do it for myself. Oh, how lovely it is to be going away!" and she sprang up to vent her exuberant spirits in a wild war dance round the room, but stopped as she suddenly caught sight of her sister's face.

"Joan, you don't think I am glad to leave you, though perhaps it looked like it; but I have so wanted to see more of the world, and you need not be in the least frightened about me, you dear old saint, for it will be very mild dissipation I shall have in Lizzie's house, with a minister for brother-in-law and host. Now I believe you want to talk to me and give me no end of good advice; now that that horrid old box is shut, I can listen beautifully, and perhaps it will compose me, for my head feels like a whirligig."

Joan drew the young girl to her with a caress that was almost motherly in its tenderness "I can quite understand and sympathize with your longing for a change, and I could let you go so gladly—though I shall miss my sunbeam—if I only knew that you were taking the Lord Jesus with you as your Guide and Saviour."

"But I am not, Joan; you know that. I am so sorry to distress you, but I must be honest, and I cannot look at these things as you do. You seem to 'enjoy religion,' as they say, but I don't understand it; it seems to me an awfully gloomy thing, as if it would take every bit of enjoyment out of my life."

"And whilst you feel like that, dearest, I am sure anything I could say would be quite useless; but I know that prayer for you will be answered, and that Christ will reveal Himself to you; and all I ask of you, on the eve of this separation, is that when that time comes you will not be disobedient to the heavenly vision."

"But how will it come, Joan? I don't like visions, and I should have thought you were far too matter-of-fact to believe in them."

Enid was thoroughly sobered now, and spoke almost petulantly.

Joan smiled, a rare sweet smile. "It was sight rather than faith with me, Enid—so vivid, so real. I will tell you about it some time. Christ still shows Himself after his resurrection in many and unexpected ways, and I am sure He will come to you, and you will know; only do not trifle with what will be the golden opportunity of your life. Now, no more talking. Good-night, my darling." And with a tender kiss Enid was left alone, and her dreams that night were a strange mingling of earthly pleasure and heavenly visions.

She was the younger child of the home, where, since her mother's death, and the scattering away of the other brothers and sisters, Joan had been a true daughter of his old age to the stricken father, and had lavished on Enid, who was nearly twenty years younger than herself, a wealth of love that would have spoiled a less noble nature. And now that the first separation had come, and the young sister was stepping, with such eager feet, over the threshold of the sheltered home life, Joan's heart well-nigh failed her with fear for possible dangers; and oh, how she longed that her darling, in going forth into a wider life and untried surroundings, might first have taken unto her the whole armour of God! "I could have trusted her anywhere then," she said softly to herself as, an hour or two later, she stood watching Enid as she slept, and then remembering to whose care her darling had been committed, she thanked Him and took courage.

Three months had passed, and Enid was once more under the home roof. Energetic and affectionate as of old, and settling down to the quiet life and its regular duties without any trace of dissatisfaction or lessened interest, and yet, to Joan's quick intuition, there were evidences of change. She had left some of her girlish bloom behind her, and looked older and more womanly, and her impetuous manner was tempered by a self-repression that made Joan long for a return of the old girlish abandon. She spoke quite frankly of her life in London, but without any enthusiasm. It was evident that the glamour had faded on closer contact, but she never admitted this, and her sister was wise enough to wait patiently for her fuller confidence.

Then there came a time of spiritual blessing to the little church in the village where they lived. An evangelist visited the place, and his ministry and the Divine power that attended it were the means of bringing many to a decision for Christ's service.

Joan and her father were warm-hearted, delighted workers in this Gospel harvest, their only disappointment being that, from one cause or other, Enid constantly absented herself from the meetings. At first it seemed mere caprice and disinclination, but then a severe cold gave her a sufficient excuse for staying away, and as Joan returned home night after night, her own heart glowing with signs of the Master's presence, she was met by a growing hardness in her sister's manner that repelled all her attempts to excite her interest.

"I am quite tired of the subject," she said at length, with very unusual irritation of tone, and Joan, after that, took care to hold her peace. Then with a strange contradictoriness that completely puzzled Joan, Enid, on hearing that a class in the Sunday school was needing a teacher, volunteered her services. Joan had strong convictions about personal conversion being indispensable for such work, and would conscientiously have opposed Enid's decision, but her father interposed.

"Do not interfere, Joan. I am quite sure Enid would never have offered herself if the Holy Spirit were not drawing her in some way that we cannot yet see. Let us trust Him to carry on his own work."

And so they waited in the patience of hope.

M. C. F.

Open-Air Mission.—Sir H. H. Bemrose, M.P., writes in support of the work of this Mission. He says its great fields of labour are the racecourses and fairs. Of these, 811 were last year visited by the evangelists of the Mission, aided by a large staff of experienced and judicious voluntary helpers. The cases of well-authenticated conversions and restoration from among classes either otherwise unreached or considered beyond hope were numerous and striking. The number of towns and villages visited in England and Wales last year was 711, and some work has been done in Germany by the Mission. The nature of the work, and the blessing so manifestly given to it, are a loud call to all who are anxious for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom and the purifying and uplifting of their country. The secretary is Mr. Frank Cockrem, 11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

THE LATE

James Wood, LL.D., J.P.

THE Southport Convention will hardly be the same to many without the familiar face and voice of Dr. Wood. From the beginning he has taken the deepest interest in this annual gathering, and the early morning meeting has for years been in his hands. It was a common thing to see his sympathetic nature stirred to its deepest depths as he read the requests for prayer and pleaded for the burdened and broken hearts who sought to enlist the sympathy of others in their sorrow.

Dr. Wood was identified with the Wesleyan Church by ancestry, by early environment, by early conversion, and by life-long association. He was born in 1844, and was called home on February 15, 1899. He was in the zenith of his strength, and all who knew him looked for the ripe fruitage of a devoted and intense life. But his sun went down upon his earthly service while it was yet day; and, as Dr. Jenkins said at his funeral, he died, if not full of days, full of deeds, and instead of murmuring that he was not permitted to do more, we must glorify God for what he was permitted to do.

James Wood was consciously converted to God when eleven years of age. Those who have ever heard him speak of his father and mother, and of that sheltered sanctuary, his home, must have been impressed with his reverence for his parents. The atmosphere of that home was reproduced in his own. Supremely happy in his married life, and surrounded by his six children, those who were privileged with his hospitality had a glimpse of an ideal Christian home. Mrs. Wood is a daughter of the venerated Charles Garrett, of Liverpool.

An incident in his school life is prophetic. On the first night of his arrival at Wesley College, as he sat apart with the other new-comers, he overheard the boys questioning each other as to the kind of boy this new comrade was likely to be. Would he be one of the "good" sort or not? Sitting alone, James Wood said to himself: "I intend to let the fellows know that I mean to love and serve God—but must it be to-night, the first night—cannot I put off my confession of Christ to a later or more convenient time? No. I must do it now. I see I must do it at once." And there and then he nailed his colours to the mast, and never took them down. That decisive, courageous, fearless act was characteristic of all his after life.

On the death of his father, in 1877, Dr. Wood entered upon active municipal life, and played a conspicuous part in the remarkable development of the Borough of Southport. The tendency to separate political and municipal life from those spiritual influences which can alone preserve them from corruption, found no sympathy with Dr. Wood. It was one of his fixed principles that Christian men should be upon the governing bodies of our municipal and national life. Hence he gave of his best to the public weal of Southport for upwards of twenty years. He accepted manifold positions of honour and responsibility, not for what they were in themselves, but for what they enabled him to do for others. He carried the teaching of Christ as conscientiously into his public as into his private life. He knew nothing of expediency. His conduct was characterised by daring rectitude, and those who had no sympathy with his deep religious convictions were bound to admire the transparency of his character, and to confess that he was a force making for righteousness.

His efforts to raise the community, in whose welfare he manifested such a deep and abiding interest, to a high moral and spiritual level, gained for him universal respect and affection. He filled the chair of the Southport Corporation four times, and on a public occasion, during his last mayoralty, the present Viceroy of India, who was deeply impressed with Dr. Wood's sterling character and ungrudging service, said that Southport had for its Mayor a gentleman unsurpassed for his integrity and ability in the whole of the empire." Only a few weeks before his death the council conferred upon Dr. Wood the highest honour of his civic life—the presentation of the freedom of the borough.

Dr. Wood had a passion for evangelism. When Rev. Thomas Cook was set apart as a connexional evangelist, Dr. Wood co-operated with him for years, as opportunity allowed, and no form of service was ever more congenial. He was not unfrequently a little impatient at the slow movements of ecclesiastical machinery. While others were dreaming and devising, he wanted to be doing, his conception of Christianity being intensely practical. He was frequently sent for to visit the sick and dying, and had the joy of leading many in these sick-bed ministrations into the way of peace.

Dr. Wood was an enthusiastic temperance advocate, and he spoke on the subject with great persuasiveness and power. Some thought his attitude extreme, and his conduct fanatical, but he knew something of the dire nature of the disease; he had seen the multitudes of slain in the open valley; and the false optimism which prevails in certain quarters found no sympathy with him. When he entered the lists against this evil he felt he was combating the supreme hindrance to the spread of Christ's Kingdom.

From a Photograph by L. Partington, Southport.

He was a princely giver, rendering substantial help to countless benevolent and religious objects. His practical sympathy was ever with those who proclaim the great evangelical truths of our faith, and who labour for the uplifting of the degraded and fallen.

Long after he had been a Christian, Dr. Wood entered into a larger experience of rest and victory. He greatly helped others by his description of the way in which he was brought to the end of all his own efforts. He scarcely ever referred to this clearly-marked epoch in his spiritual life without quoting words which he said exactly described his experience at the time:

> Long my yearning heart was striving
> To obtain this precious rest;
> But when all my struggles ended,
> Simply trusting I was blest!

Shortly before his death he said: "Oh, how glad I am that I was brought to the knowledge of my Saviour's love when young! There have been many crosses, trials, temptations, and sins since then; but, thank God, I have never lost my hold of the Rock." On the last night but one of his life he seemed to imagine that he was directing an anxious soul. With great emphasis he said: "'The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin'—that is enough for me; is it not enough for you?"

Protestant Outlook.

WHILE the Government are busy adding to the endowments of the Church by means of the Clerical Relief Bill, now before the House of Commons, some of the leading Ritualists are becoming more and more reconciled to the possibility of having to face the ordeal of disestablishment. Obviously, the reason why Ritualists are veering round in that direction is their strong antipathy to the control of the State in matters spiritual, and their hope that freedom from such control will help their work of Romanising the Church.

Valuable service has been done on behalf of the crusade against Sacerdotalism by the extracts from "Manuals of Confession," published from time to time in The Record. Painful, indeed, is the exposure of what is being systematically taught in the Church of the Reformation on the efficacy of Sacramental confession. These books inculcate not merely that confession to the priest may be resorted to when the conscience is burdened with special sin, but that it may be habitual:—

> Practice makes perfect. If we wish to make good confessions, we must make a practice of it. This means that we should have regular and stated times for going to Confession.

Another, alluding to "Sacramental Absolution," teaches: "By his (Christ's) appointed minister, He here dispenses to you his precious blood, which flows through this channel, to wash your soul from the stain of sin, to heal it of its weakness, and to strengthen and refresh it with increasing grace." Can blasphemy be more flagrant? The pity is that the bishops do little or nothing to check this Romanizing of the National Church.

At a meeting of the Ladies' League for the Defence of the Reformed Faith of the Church of England, the Earl of Portsmouth, who presided, spoke of the far-reaching significance of the present struggle:—

> It does not merely involve a series of religious and dogmatic opinions; it means a revolt, and a righteous revolt, against an interference in family life, and an interference with liberty itself. There can be no possible compromise between those who favour a sacrificial priesthood and a revival of the system of confession, and those who care for the Established Church, and are prepared to support it so long as it maintains the Protestant faith as established by law.

One of the speakers was Prebendary Wace, who remarked that:

> The majority of men of cool judgment thought that Ritualism had no chance of becoming predominant in the Church of England, but, from the political point of view, there was the greatest danger, for if Ritualism was pressed for, there would be an uprising of the Protestant feeling of the country, which would shatter the Established Church, it might be, into atoms.

The Religious Tract Society is issuing a series of "Present-day Papers on Romanism," and the first, entitled The Supper of the Lord, is by Professor Handley Moule, of Cambridge. (3d.; cheap edition, 1d. nett.) This learned and well-reasoned essay should be widely circulated. If the entire series should prove equal to this, they will be of great service to students and scholars in the present time of unrest and discussion.

Kindness to Animals.—The Church Society for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals held its sixth annual meeting last week at 1, Great Stanhope Street, W. There was a large and deeply-interested audience. Lord Robartes, who presided, urged the importance of the officers of the Church inculcating systematically the duty of kindness to animals. Mr. G. W. E. Russell spoke of the desirability of introducing into Parliament a Bill for the protection of wild animals kept in confinement. Rev. Silas K. Hocking and Surgeon-Major Poole also spoke.

Is a Revival Possible?

By SAMUEL PEARSON, M.A., Manchester.

SOME may think that one is not needed. They point to the manifold activities of the Churches as proofs that Christians are sufficiently alive to their responsibilities. But suppose that these operations are not adequate to what has to be done, and that the resources of the Churches are not fully employed? Then we have a reason for the indifference which marks so much of our English life. The alienation of the masses from the ordinances of religion is in some measure accounted for by the want of vitality in Christian men and women. God works by the regenerate upon the unregenerate. If the former are feeble and flabby, then the latter will remain spiritually insensible.

No one has the right to bring railing accusations against the Churches of Christ; but this at least we may do, affirm that they might be stronger than they are. Every Christian man will admit this about himself; it is therefore true of bodies of Christian people. Religion exists; but it needs to be reinforced before any great impression can be made on the world.

Two conditions are necessary to bring about the renewed life which we so sorely need:—

1. We must pray for the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. The idea of holiness needs to be restored to our thought and desires. It is not the expedient or the outwardly successful that we must look for; but that which makes for God's righteousness. In trade, in politics, in literature, in social converse, and in the inner chamber of the soul, we must seek for this Divine quality. It was the absence of this which scattered Israel, and obliged Ezekiel to speak of them as a valley of dry bones. It was not merely that they changed their ritual, but that they altered their lives. It was their immorality which weakened them as a nation; and until their practice was altered there could be no new adventure in their national work of purifying the world. For the new reinforcement of their jaded powers they were to look to God. It is so now. A moral revival is much to be desired, but it can only come through the inspiration of the ever-present Spirit. We are not allowed to say that our Lord defers his coming when He has Himself put into our hands the power of prayer; and has Himself promised the advent of his Spirit in response to believing supplications. It is to intelligent and patient prayer that we must first look for the coming manifestation of Divine purification—the down-pouring of the Holy Spirit.

2. The Preaching of Truth is another important prerequisite of this coming change. There is already a visible drawing nearer to the centre on the part of many diverse minds—that centre is the Cross of Christ. But there is much to be altered in our presentation of the doctrines of the Gospel before we can hope to raise the tone of the Churches. The strain has to be taken off the ritual and ceremonial side of religion, and the emphasis has to be put on the moral and spiritual essence. What wasted minds there are amongst us! They give themselves to questions which are not worth an hour's consideration; and meanwhile, "the hungry sheep look up and are not fed."

Others insist on their own definitions of the doctrines of salvation as though they were salvation itself, and spend precious time and temper in casting stones at those who define the Cross in other terms. This process will have to go into the background; though we cannot expect it wholly to cease so long as we have minds that think.

But the main work of the witnessing Church will have to be in the presence and love of the Personal Saviour. When He is spoken of with a glistening eye and a throbbing heart men are moved by a mysterious power; and the dry bones begin to live. And this work must begin at the Christian's own heart. It is at the door of the Church that our Lord knocks; it is to the cold and backsliding Christian that He makes the appeal of love: "If any man will open unto Me, I will come in to him and sup with him, and he with Me." We do not preach the Gospel enough to believers, as release from sin, through the work of Christ for them and the work of the Spirit in them. Hence there is a conspicuous lack in many Christians of downright joy in their religion. They do not see that the Lord has done great things for them. A small religion will make small Christians. When we see the great salvation and feel it, then will they say among the heathen, "The Lord hath done great things for them." God is always ready to give us new life, but his conditions must be marked and obeyed.

If then we really and intensely desire a revival of inward religion and godliness, the one thing needful for its accomplishment is that the individual Christian should persevere with himself before God in prayer. What better supplication could some of us put up than: "Create within me a clean heart, and renew within me a right spirit!" The old result would soon be apparent—"Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto Thee!"

Revival of 1739.

"WHITEFIELD began the New Year as gloriously as he ended that which had just expired.

"He received the Sacrament, preached twice, expounded twice, attended a Moravian Love Feast in Fetter Lane, where he spent the whole night in prayer to God, psalms, and thanksgivings; and then pronounced 'this to be the happiest New Year's Day he had ever seen.'

"The Love Feast at Fetter Lane was a memorable one. Besides about sixty Moravians, there were present not fewer than seven of the Oxford Methodists, namely, John and Charles Wesley, Geo. Whitefield, Westley Hall, Benjamin Ingham, Charles Kinchin, and Richard Hutchins, all of them ordained clergymen of the Church of England. Wesley writes: 'About three in the morning, as we were continuing instant in prayer, the power of God came mightily upon us, insomuch that many cried for exceeding joy, and many fell to the ground.

"'As soon as we were recovered a little from that awe and amazement at the presence of his Majesty, we broke out with one voice—We praise Thee, O God, we acknowledge Thee to be the Lord.'"—Life of Whitefield, by Tyerman.

The White Slave Traffic.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS.

AN International Congress on the White Slave Traffic assembled in London on June 21, 22, and 23, convened by the National Vigilance Association. The meetings were held in the large hall of the Westminster Palace Hotel, and delegates were present from Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Norway, Russia, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and the United States.

Amongst the speakers were the Duke of Westminster, the Bishop of London, Prebendary Webb Peploe, Prince Serge Volkonsky (on behalf of Russia), M. Hugo Tamm (member of the Upper Legislative Chamber of Denmark), Rev. E. G. F. Olbers (Chaplain to the King of Denmark), Lady Aberdeen, Count Von Bernstorff (Chamberlain to the German Emperor), M. De Meuron (deputy of the Grand Council of Geneva), and Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P.

An immense amount of work was got through in the three days at the Congress by the process of a drastic condensation of a large number of the papers presented. The reports of each country were divided into two sections, one giving the dark side of the question and showing the facts relating to the White Slave Traffic itself, and the other the bright side, in a summary of the agencies employed in the various countries in the direction of preventive and rescue work.

Canon Scott Holland, in a powerful address, gave the raison d'être of the conference. All the resources of civilisation in cheap and rapid transit from one country to another are being used for evil purposes in the entrapping and keeping in some of the weakest of the community, and it is necessary that this vast and organised evil should be met internationally.

THE WORST OF THRALDOM

M. Sabourow, a state secretary of the Russian Government, quoted from the report of the chief of police of that country, that "agents living in Buenos Ayres or Brazil come to Russia three or four times a year. The chief markets are the provinces of Warsaw, Petrokov, and Kalisch; the agencies are situated in Geneva, Bordeaux, Havre, Cherbourg and Southampton."

Mrs. Henry Fawcett stated that the cruel persecution of the Jews in Russia has been the cause of a terrible increase in the number of Russian Jewesses as victims of this trade. They are sent to all parts of the world. It has been estimated that in the "tolerated houses" of the city of Buenos Ayres alone, there are 3,000 European women imprisoned. There the price of a woman varies from £30 to £50.

A memorial, signed by officers of the Women's Christian Temperance Union in Bombay, was presented to the Congress telling of a large number of young European girls, mostly domestic servants, brought to Bombay from Europe for evil purposes, from Russia, Austria, Germany, and Italy. From Bombay they are drafted on to the other great Asiatic seaports.

A memorandum, presented by the British Committee of the International Federation for the Abolition of State Regulated Vice, speaks of an enormous traffic, "perfectly organised," with its "agents and commercial travellers everywhere." Bohemia, Germany, and Switzerland, South America, Cuba, the Antilles, and Mexico are amongst the countries mentioned.

On the other hand, a large work has already been in existence in most of the countries of Europe in the direction of warning and prevention. Encouraging reports were presented of the work of societies having the same end in view as our English "Travellers' Aid Society," such as the widespread "International Union of the Friends of the Young Girl," with headquarters in Switzerland and representatives in thirty-two different countries.

The practical outcome of the Congress was the formation, by unanimous vote, of a permanent international organization for the suppression of the Traffic. A warning note, which had been already issued by Mrs. Josephine E. Butler with regard to the Congress, was emphasized by several of the leading speakers, to the effect that little reliance could be placed on the help of those Governments who continued to license sin.

Professor James Stuart, M.P., said that the hands of such Governments were already red with the blood of the traffic; and he asked what could be expected from them.

The memorandum of the British Committee of the International Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice, already alluded to, said that—"It may be laid down with certainty that where evil houses are licensed, or where, as in India, they were actually provided by the military authorities for the soldiers, it follows, with the certainty with which results follow causes, that means will be found for filling the houses from time to time with fresh victims. Those who maintain that prostitution is a necessity—who justify its supervision by the State in the interests of profligate men—and who advocate, as M. Lenaers does, the establishment, and even the multiplication, of licensed houses of debauchery—cannot logically object to the hateful traffic by which these abominable places are supplied with their human merchandise."

M. de Meuron, member of the Grand Council of Switzerland, concluded his powerful paper by saying: We would very seriously draw the attention of this Congress to the necessity of bringing official traffic in vice to an end. We know all the difficulties of the question, but if we systematically shut our eyes to it we shall be like a congress of doctors who would wish to study the means of cure or prevention of some grave infectious malady, the only condition of the study being that they must not pay any attention to the microbe—so insignificant!—which is the cause of it.

Prince Serge Volkonsky, one of the Russian delegates, gave some powerful reasons why the so-called "moral police" would not be likely to help in putting down the traffic in his country.

The final resolutions of the Congress were only passed after a hot discussion, led off by Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., who feared that the English standard on this question was being considerably lowered to suit the standard in other countries. Mr. Wilson only finally consented to abstain from dividing the Congress by the passing of one additional resolution declaring that the platform taken was the minimum which would be accepted.

London Children in Canada.

In a recent letter from the Boys' Home, Stratford, Ontario, Mrs. Wm. Merry writes to Miss Macpherson:—"The last party being small, gave us the opportunity of selecting the best homes; and as far as we can tell, each child has gone to live with good kind people. There has been a great demand this year. 'All things work together for good,' &c., comes true in our daily experience, especially as seen in the workings of the Children's Act, and Mr. Kelso's work. It is said that one reason for so great a demand for 'Home' children is the fact that Canadians realise the value of the training our children have received. The poor little destitute Canadians, just taken from poor homes or drunken parents, are nothing but bundles of bad habits—having had no Christian influence to help them at all. Well, we can select our homes in consequence, and go on working for His glory.

"The youngsters have behaved very well, and have made us like them, although here only for a short time. Everyone likes the Irish lads; they are so polite and willing. How kind of you to send me those useful dresses! Also, thank you very much for the little trunk of gifts. About six of the dollies, although so carefully packed, lost their heads; the banging of the boxes had caused it, so I gave them to the children to play hospital with. Nell and Ray were trained nurses, and they (I mean the dollies) were a source of comfort and joy these wet days.

Letter to the Editor.

China in Prophecy.—II.

THE rise and growth of Russia, the colossus of the North, is one of the most ominous portents in the world's annals. Essentially an Asiatic power in its origin, all the features which characterise eastern nations of ancient and more modern times are as prominent to-day in Russia as when it first made a place for itself on the stage of nations. Not the least amongst these are craft and cruelty, tumult and treachery. Its progress has been marked by these from the days of Catherine downwards. Its statesmanship at home and abroad has always been conducted on these lines, and the proverb, "Scratch a Russian and you find a Tartar," remains as full of force as ever in its application to its semi-military diplomacy. That diplomacy is protean; its changes are numerous as those of the chameleon; and yet, through all its changes, there runs one unvarying policy. Though baffled and defeated, bates not a jot of heart or hope, but still bears up and steers right onward.

Not without interest is the fact to the people of God to-day, that Russia's Christianity has the same Asiatic essence in it. The "Orthodox Faith" is an Eastern heathenism veneered or lacquered with a Christian material. It is a species of theocracy, of which the White Czar is head. He represents its ideal of God, and is honoured and even worshipped as his vicegerent, much as is the Pope by Latin Christendom. Curiously enough both caricatures of Christianity employ the word "papa" or "pope," and both pave the way for the coming personal anti-Christ, foretold by Paul and John,

> Who is to stretch his arm and empire far,
> To be as God, to be adored alone.

In this respect, as in many others, the Eastern anti-Christ bears a striking resemblance to that of the west—the Papacy. France, the servant-ally of Russia, represents this in China as elsewhere. Both are intolerant of all other creeds, and of all other forms of Christianity, and both are fiercely anti-Semitic. They have a latent sympathy of spirit, springing, as all anti-Christs do, from one origin. Your missionary and mercantile correspondents in China, writing independently, and far removed from one another, call attention to this common characteristic of the Greek and Latin Christendom, as represented by Russia and France; and they warn the British empire of the consequences certain to accrue to all Protestant and Evangelical missionary enterprise and organisation, should Russia and France be allowed to extend and rivet their domination over the Celestial Empire. In our previous article we have ventured, on the strength of political and prophetical evidence, which cannot be disputed, to suggest that the warning comes too late, and that Lord Salisbury's policy of "drift, or waiting to see," together with British and American indifference, has left Russia face to face with her opportunity to push what that portentous power calls "destiny."

> And now to-day he marches to his doom,
> He battles with his destiny.

It has been said, and it is largely thought, that Russia's final goal, according to the will of Peter the Great, is Constantinople. But such is not the case on the prophetic chart of the world's history in "the latter days." The King of the North seeks a more imperial city for his universal empire, antagonistic to the kingdom of Christ, in Mount Zion. Stamboul, or "The Golden Horn," as Constantinople has been called, is but the stepping-stone to Jerusalem. Thither one day, not far remote, the last anti-Christ is to convey his myriad militant millions from all the lands of Asia. The decadence of the two kingdoms of Turkey and the Papacy is preparing the way. It is a remarkable fact that the two great anti-Semitic kingdoms of modern history are Russia and France,—the two powers destined to acquire predominance, if not absolute possession of China. But France is only the servant-ally of Russia, utilised for the time being, and to be sacrificed in the coming "great tribulation." The decadence of Turkey and the Papacy, and the collapse of France, will prove Russia's opportunity—that opportunity for which the Great Bear has been watching and working for centuries; that opportunity which he boldly says in his journals is only his "destiny;" and that opportunity for which he is now making such superhuman efforts as to stagger both friends and foes:

> Weening to erect, where Zion's temple stood,
> The throne of universal wickedness.

Can arrest be put upon that? The Lion of England has allowed the great White Bear to fasten an iron grip upon China; and that hug will never be released. It is too late. When England awakes to Lord Salisbury's fault, to the supreme peril of the situation politically and commercially, and to the realization of the Bible's prophetic forebodings as to "the King of the South," Russia will be in actual possession—the doom of God. Great wars are coming over this, and over Russia's colossal conquests in Persia, Turkey, and Abyssinia. The Anglo-Saxon nations, Britain, Greater Britain, and the United States (suddenly become imperial), have to place the Jews in their own land, for various reasons,—not the least being the endeavour to checkmate the final effort of the King of the North to establish a politico-ecclesiastical universal empire on the heights of Zion. At the present moment Russian agents swarm in Syria and Palestine, and are actively at work paving the way. The two leading opponents in the God-sketched battlefield are Russia and England; under their banners the nations of the world are to range themselves—behold it being done before our very eyes! Their wars, truces, renewed conflicts, broken treaties, and alternating defeats and triumphs, lead up to Armageddon's fatal field. On that dread plain of Esdraelon, the myriad millions of Russia are to perish by the stroke of God, and amongst them the subject-hosts of Mongolia and Persia:

> Slain, one and all, by whirlwind of God's wrath,
> By storm, and tempest, and hot-burning coals.

Lesson I.—British statesmen and diplomatists would cause less strife, and make fewer mistakes, involving the needless sacrifices of money and of much blood, if they searched the Word of God for the right principles of national intercourse, and if they studied the Bible's prophetic chart of the world's history of nations, bearing upon providence and grace, and Jehovah's eternal predeterminate destiny for Christ and his people.

Lesson II.—God uses the terrible forces of nations, and the follies of their rulers and diplomatists, to advance the interests of Christ's kingdom of righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. And just as the upheavings and cataclysms of nature, whether on our own earth or in the rolling stars overhead, are under his control, unerring and invincible, so are the wars and tumults of nations for Christ's Kingdom.

Lesson III.—Britain's vaunting of "Anglo-Saxon grit having carried all before it" is unwise. The boast which our race to-day makes of controlling the future of the world is an offence to God. God asks, "What hast thou, that thou hast not received? Who made thee to differ, and set thee on high among the nations? Be not high-minded, but fear; for great is the coming tribulation for thy sons and their ships."

Lesson IV.—God's devout servants have a grand opportunity of benefiting the peoples of China and Persia, as well as of Egypt and of Ethiopia, by pouring in the soldiers of the Captain of our Salvation, armed with no carnal war-weapons, but with the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. To-day, as never before, the King's voice is heard, "Who will go for us, and whom shall we send , , , to bring captives from far: and, lo! these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim?"

> Then those myriad-number'd peoples
> Of old Sinim's crowded land,
> Saved from sin's bewild'ring snares,
> Shall rejoice, and praise God's name.

Wm. Adamson, Vicar of Old Ford, E.

[This and the previous letter may be obtained in pamphlet form, at 1d. each, or 1s. per dozen, post free, from Morgan and Scott, office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.]

Home Missions.

Holiday Homes at Maldon.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

In the under-world of London's toil and sorrow, among the painful sights and scenes of grinding poverty, few people are to be pitied more than the innocent wives and children of law-breakers. The sins of the fathers are visited upon the children; the wife is regarded with suspicion, and by a general consensus of action the family is boycotted and their efforts to obtain an honest living rendered difficult if not wholly abortive. Yet, not only are they, in many instances, highly deserving of aid, but a little judicious assistance will preserve the children from following in their fathers' footsteps in the dark and tortuous paths of crime.

For many years the Prison branch of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, in addition to dealing with the subsequent to their release, has alleviated the difficult circumstances of their wives and families, always on the sound, common-sense lines of providing, not charity, but a satisfactory means of earning an honest living.

BULK OF METROPOLITAN PRISONERS,

The newly-opened Holiday Homes at Maldon are, to a considerable extent, an outcome of this good work. They afford rest and comfort to the tired-out toilers of slumdom, and to the children of the gutter. On visiting the Homes one is quickly convinced of their utility, and of the spiritual character of the management.

Maldon, quiet and old-fashioned, gleaming chalkily white in the summer heat on the crest of a green slope overlooking the silver estuary of the Blackwater, is a drowsily ideal resort for the weary, and Mr. Wheatley has there secured premises which serve their purpose remarkably well. An old-fashioned residence, peeping out from a picturesque setting of orchard and flower garden, and commanding views which suggest the richness of Devonshire rather than the levels of Essex, is the central Home. It is flanked by several smaller houses, and a lengthy row of neat red brick cottages. The whole forms a kind of settlement or colony, a little removed from the town, and fronted by a long stretch of meadow land and an extensive kitchen garden.

Fitted up in economical, but thorough, fashion, the Homes, which are managed by Miss Wheatley, are a model of cleanliness and simple comfort. To the inmates, quiet with a serene enjoyment, the place is a little Paradise. A pathetic interest attaches to each of the poor women, who make their temporary home in these cosy cottages. Truly how little we realise what circle round the every-day people at our very doors? Here is a poor soul from Clare Market. Her husband is in a lunatic asylum, her son has just died, and she herself but slowly recovering from a severe operation, which resulted in the removal of one of her ribs. The Mission buried the dead lad, and will shield the fragile mother.

TRAGEDIES OF COMMON LIFE

Resting in the shadow of the bell tent is a group of pallid, anæmic factory-girls; dozing placidly on a garden seat is a gaunt warehouseman, from Covent Garden, whose laboured breathing tells how necessary was the doctor's imperative dictum: "Get into the fresh air immediately, or ——" Poor fellow! how should he, existing at the best of times on a pittance, afford a change of air? To such as these a fortnight's stay at the Holiday Homes is a blessing indeed.

On the fresh-mown meadow, too, between the fruit-laden mulberry tree and the long red-spangled strawberry beds, a group of boys have driven in wickets, while, laughing and crowing, sprawling upon pillows or weaving chains of golden buttercups, is a merry family of sun-bonneted little "tots." Some of these bronze-cheeked children belong to the Orphanage, which has developed, naturally enough, from the prison work. Others are being cared for whilst one or other of their parents is, in the common but meaning phrase, "doing time." All are enjoying themselves immensely, happily oblivious of such institutions as the Central Criminal Court or Holloway Gaol.

"I don't want to go home, I don't," observes a sturdy little lad, with a meaning glance in the direction of the kitchen.

"WE HAVES SICH GOOD DINNERS

here, we does;" and, he adds with an interrogating confidence, "I say, what d'you think? They sing grace here! Yes, they do." The meals are set in a long airy suite of rooms, which, in the event of wet weather, are kept clear for indoor games. Presently, the swelling sound of childish treble confirms the assertion of the sturdy lad, and a glance through the window reveals the troop busily discussing liberal helpings of savoury pudding.

The interior arrangements are excellent. Each of the three rooms has been made as spotlessly creditable as loving and appreciative hands could render it. In the spick and span grounds the industrious gardener points out, not without a suspicion of a certain good humoured pride, growing crops of cabbages, beets, and carrots, or regards with a sigh the young person from Drury Lane, who is confident that the potato plants are a remarkably prosperous species of brocoli.

Reading rooms, and "quiet" apartments, well fitted bath rooms, and sound sanitation complete a set of Homes, which are the more pleasing from the absence of anything like pretentiousness or expensive decoration. Everything is neat and simple. Nevertheless, there is one thing that might well be supplied by some lover of good work—a hall for Gospel services. A plain iron building would fulfil the double purpose of a meeting place for the Home inmates, and a useful evangelistic centre for the townspeople. The Mission exchequer is heavily burdened with the extra effort of securing and maintaining the new premises, in addition to the regular work of providing our ex-prisoners with a means of return to the ways of honesty and virtue. Communications may be addressed to Mr. W. Wheatley, Superintendent, St. Giles' Christian Mission, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, London, W.C.

The Work at Costers' Hall.

In his thirty-eighth annual report, Mr. W. J. Orsman states that in the Mission ranks there are between sixty and seventy who have assisted over twenty years. As regards the converts: "Some have become ministers of the Gospel at home and abroad, others are nurses in hospitals, whilst not a few, holding good positions in life, often speak with pleasure of their early association with us." There are fifty-six distinct operations carried on at Costers' Hall, of which seventeen are decidedly spiritual, twelve are social and educational, while fourteen are benevolent. The latter include free meals to needy children of the elementary schools. We find that "under the heading of thrift and temperance there are thirteen operations, with a membership of 2,215, and dealing largely with the savings of street traders, reaching a total of £4,303 last year."

The working mission church now consists of 426 members, and the honorary labours of Mr. Orsman, the pastor, are aided by 168 voluntary helpers. The Sunday school is as large as the building will admit of, and the Sunday services are conducted in the large room, capable of accommodating about 700 people. Members of the Evangelization Society render effective aid, as needed, at the Sunday services. Mr. Orsman's address is Milton House, Shacklewell Green, N.E.

The Stockwell Orphanage.

THURSDAY last was Founders' Day at the Orphanage in the Clapham Road, and, of course, the place was gay with bunting and other decorations. Unhappily, from one point of view, the day was wet, and the outside performances were somewhat marred. But the disappointment, as one speaker remarked, was tempered by the thought that the rain was blessing garden and field, and bringing grist to the mill in many a household. A special item of the occasion was the initiation of Pastor Thomas Spurgeon's presidency of the Orphanage, his appointment to that office having been "gazetted" a few days before.

If earnest prayers and good wishes, expressed with great heartiness and spontaneity, can secure for Mr. Spurgeon the Divine favour that rested on his departed father and uncle during their terms of presidential service to the institution, he will have no cause to regret having added one more to the many burdens that already rest on his shoulders. He said, as to the office, that he had neither sought it nor bought it, but had almost fought it; in complying with the wish of the friends to take the post he was glad to be assured of the invaluable help and guidance of the older officials, as well as the co-operation of his brother Charles, who had accepted the office of vice-president.

The rain was not sufficiently persistent to prevent the preliminary afternoon functions of music from the police band and the march past of the children, followed by songs from the open-air platform. The afternoon and evening meetings were held in the Memorial Hall which is adorned at the far end with a speaking piece of statuary representing the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon in the act of addressing an assembly. Of course there were, during the proceedings, many pathetic and heart-moving and his services to his generation; not the least being the inception of this Orphanage, in whose fortunes he ever took a deep interest. Tributes of esteem and thanks were also rendered to the late Dr. James Spurgeon, for his ungrudging and long-continued help in the management of the institution. But the fact was recognised that God, while calling away his workers, carries on his work, and the thoughts of the meeting were fittingly directed forward to the efficient maintenance of the Orphanage under the new régime.

REFERENCES TO THE BELOVED FOUNDER

A very pleasing interlude in the afternoon was the presentation of illuminated addresses to Mr. Charlesworth, the head master, and to Dr. Soper, the medical officer, both of whom have completed thirty years of faithful and effective work as servants of the institution. These presentations were very happily made by Mr. Thomas Olney, a long-standing member of the managing committee, and now treasurer. He extolled the many virtues of head master and of physician, and spoke so highly of these friends that both found it difficult to reply. Knowing, however, that they were in the midst of friends, they responded from the heart, and it was delightful to see the feeling of good comradeship that prevails among officials and supporters alike.

The chairman of the day was Mr. G. H Dean, of Sittingbourne, and a more sympathetic and homely president no gathering need desire. Before his address, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon briefly "read himself" into office, and declared his readiness to sit at the feet of the more experienced brethren and learn all they had to teach him. The Chairman having spoken, and the presentations being made, there was little time left for the addresses by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare (who had specially travelled up from Wales in order to be present) and Rev. J. W. Ewing. These two brethren, if they had each to compress their twenty minutes' talk into five, made up for it by being specially eloquent and impressive; their gracious, brotherly words of reference, not only to the two Spurgeons of the past, but to the twin Spurgeons of the present, and to the noble way in which the Orphanage is doing its part in meeting the social sorrow that renders it necessary, were very warmly received and applauded by the audience. Speaking of the audience leads us to say that these Orphanage annuals are always characterized by a feeling of homeliness seldom found in cognate gatherings. Nearly every one present seems to have a personal interest in the affair, either as relatives of the children, or as members of the great flock at the Tabernacle. In short, it is a family reunion, and devoid of all the stiffness that marks so many anniversaries.

The Treasurer had an apparently satisfactory balance-sheet to submit, but he made the unpleasant admission that the receipts for the year showed a decrease of over £1,900, as compared with the preceding year, and that the legacies had been drawn upon. Reference is made in the report to the new Seaside Home for delicate children which has been established, and in which the late Dr. James Spurgeon was specially interested. Of the amount needed to maintain that branch, £3,000 remains to be raised.

A second meeting was held in the evening, and throughout the day there were a number of "side meetings" in different parts of the Orphanage, all designed to awaken practical interest and elicit help for its good work.

Indigent Blind.

IN bygone days we have been wont to be asked, and have asked each other, to "pity the poor blind." And there are modern descendants of Bartimeus who sit by the wayside begging, and salute passers-by in the same doleful fashion. But we have learnt that the best, indeed the only true, form of pity, is to help these sightless friends to help themselves. For they are by no means helpless. Truly wonderful are the compensations of life. God has so framed us that when one faculty is marred or destroyed, other faculties grow keener and more capacious. Some of those who visited the Royal Normal College for the Blind at Upper Norwood on Wednesday afternoon last week had difficulty in believing that the students there were greatly in need of pity. The feeling that came into the mind was rather one of envy at the very exuberance of skill shown by them in many and varied departments of knowledge, and the abandon of enjoyment that they appeared to possess.

It ought to be said, however, that these students at Norwood are among the highly favoured blind—a sightless aristocracy, so to speak. The really poor blind, of which there are in London a great army, do need all the practical pity they can get; and it was to celebrate the anniversary of the

INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY

that the company met last week in the beautiful grounds of Dr. Campbell's splendid institution. The weather was favourable, and some time was passed before the meeting began in watching little groups of the students seated at tables on the lawn pursuing their studies. A most delightful prelude it was.

An adjournment was made in due course to the Chapel, where Bishop Barry presided over the gathering. Before his speech some of the advanced students rendered, with faultless expression and in perfect time, a fine setting of the Te Deum. What soulful music comes from the throats of these friends; and what an intense solace it must be to themselves, besides being an indescribable delight to the listeners.

The Bishop's address was a model of conciseness and point. Describing the work of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, he said it sought to help poor blind throughout London, first as blind and next as poor; and that help is given to them in their own homes, so that they are not removed from domestic associations. As blindness creates a barrier between those so afflicted and the world of nature and the world of humanity, the endeavour is made to develop the mental powers in other directions, while the work is done in a spirit of kindly human companionship and fellowship. There are twelve visitors regularly employed, who are themselves blind, besides voluntary helpers who deem it a privilege to visit the homes of the blind to read and converse with them. Classes held at different London centres are very helpful, and many of the objects of the Society's care are conducted to places of worship week by week. The Samaritan Fund is designed to render financial help in cases of special need, and its operations are invaluable in this direction. The Bishop was careful to emphasise the essentially and the efforts made for the spiritual as well as the physical well-being of these afflicted brethren and sisters. In closing his excellent little speech, he confidently claimed public sympathy and liberal support.

CHRISTIAN CHARACTER OF THE WORK,

Among the other gentlemen who spoke on behalf of the Society were Dr. Campbell, Rev. J. R. Byrne, Rev. J. B. Barraclough, Rev. J. G. Train, Mr. J. Tennant (one of the trustees), and Canon Coles. These friends were all loud in their praise of the achievements of the Society, and most of them testified from personal knowledge and experience of its operations. The name of Rev. Herbert Marston, of Belgrave Chapel (himself blind), was added to the committee, and gratification expressed that he is able to take a practical share in the work. Dr. Campbell made warm allusions to the invaluable services rendered to the cause of the blind by the late Mr. T. R. Armitage, and stated that his widow is equally sympathetic and helpful in the furtherance of the Mission. The report for last year details many beautiful examples of the practical help given by various friends, and a perusal of this interesting document may suggest to others methods of co-operation in this Christ-like service done to a class that has special claims on Christian solicitude. Copies of the report can be obtained from the Secretary, 27, Red Lion Square, W.C.

At the conclusion of the meeting, as before it, the visitors had a treat of no ordinary kind it witnessing the prowess and skill of the blind students of the College in the gymnasium, the skating rink, the swimming bath, and the cycle track, as well as in seeing the younger students being led into numerous pathways of useful knowledge, such as writing, reading, arithmetic, geography, botany, kindergarten work, Sloyd carpentery, &c. The way in which these gifted pupils can use their fingers and limbs as the servants of the mind, without the aid of the eyes, seems to us simply marvellous, and is only excelled by their still more marvellous musical attainments. We always anticipate with extreme pleasure a visit to the College at Norwood, and never leave it without devoutly thanking God for the existence and the work of such an institution.

Colportage in Ireland.

THE annual meeting of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland was recently held in Belfast. An encouraging report was presented of work done by the agents. Thankfulness to God is expressed for the financial assistance received, which has enabled the accounts to be closed free of debt.

The agents are now all under one board, with an auxiliary committee in Dublin; and the directors contemplate placing two additional agents in Roman Catholic districts, should there be given some indications of continued sympathy and support. The Society is interdenominational, and is now in its fortieth year of service. Rev. William Salmond, Templepatrick, Belfast, is secretary.

Boys' Home, Dublin.—The work in connection with Coombe Ragged Schools and Boys' Home, Dublin, continues to make progress. The year commenced with sixty-one boys in the Home, and of these twenty-one have been sent out—ten to situations, ten restored to parents, and one to the navy. Some of the children who come to the School are from wretched homes and vile surroundings. The unfortunate little ones are not only cared for in a physical sense, but receive scriptural instruction. Instances are forthcoming of Romanist lads becoming converted. Hon. Secretary, Miss Ellen S. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam Street, Dublin.

The Shaftesbury Institute.

THE sordid life of a London slum is nowhere more dreadfully expressed than in those lamentable, vice-ridden districts which intermingle so closely with the fashionable quarters of the West. Such a district is the Alsatia of Lisson Grove, whose reputation is now more happily associated, however, with the Christianizing influences of the good work founded and carried on at the Shaftesbury Institute, under the direction of Miss Meredith Brown. Many helpful institutions have grown out of the original effort on behalf of factory girls.

At a special gathering in aid of the work, held on Friday last at the Speaker's House, and graced by the presence of H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany, and a sympathetic audience, Miss Meredith Brown gave, in words of pathos and restraint, a modest account of the year's progress.

The Women's Shelter continues to prove a blessing to those who cannot earn sufficient to keep up a home of their own. It is not allowed to degenerate into a convenient asylum for the lazy, but exists to aid those whose earnings are so small that it is impossible for them to pay for the rent of a room, food, and clothing.

Some of the inmates have to go out at three o'clock in the morning so as to reach Covent Garden Market in time to purchase watercresses, fruit, flowers, &c., to sell again. Others leave at five, in time to reach the City in time to for pieces of string, bones, bottles, and rags, and by police regulations this has to be done before seven o'clock. Another batch go to their work of charing at seven o'clock, and those who are able to do so, remain for Shelter prayers at half-past eight, which are taken by the deaconesses in turn. The need for increased accommodation is most urgent. The Women's Labour Home, an important part of the work, provides employment for many in temporary difficulty.

RAKE IN THE DUST BINS

The work among factory girls calls for constant tact and loving firmness, for the West End factory girls are trying personages to manage. They are employed in jam and sweetmeat factories, in sorting waste paper, and in the summer in picking fruit for jam. There are also laundry and flower girls; while some are employed in what they term "day work," which means charing; and others are sorters in the Paddington dust-heaps. They rejoice in the home-like character of the Institute. Two evenings a week are set apart for needlework, when they are encouraged to make their own clothing. The deaconesses purchase the material, cut it out, tack it for them, and help them make it up.

Wednesday is recognised as the

BIBLE CLASS NIGHT,

at which the attendance is very good, and the behaviour quiet; and on other evenings, after the girls have thoroughly enjoyed themselves at some innocent game, they are ready to settle down quietly to sing a few hymns, and listen to a short Bible-talk, or a few verses of Bible and prayer. The need for such influences may well be gathered from Miss Brown's description of a characteristic home where—

The mother is suffering from cancer, and is almost wholly confined to bed. The father is a terrible drunkard, and he frequently comes home in a state of madness with drink, turns the whole family out, including the suffering mother, into the street, where they are dependent on the kindness of the neighbours. Again, at the end of the week, when he gets his wages, instead of coming home, he frequently goes to the common lodging-house, so that they have no money to provide food or to pay the weekly rent. C. is by no means strong, but she is a bright girl, and, in spite of all these difficulties, she keeps the home always clean.

The factory visitation work, the men's labour home and shelter, and the evangelistic efforts are vigorously maintained.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe, expressed his high sense of the value of such work among people who from their earliest infancy were exposed to the fetid air which destroys the body, and to an education in degradation which mars spiritual growth. But for such efforts as this for the reclamation of the multitudes who aim at the overthrow of all authority, England might be in the throes of a revolution.

After H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany had presented for the new Deaconess' House a neat banner-simply embroidered with the initials of the donor, Dr. Barnardo said it was a serious thought that in this great and wealthy city there are many who, although living on the brink of starvation, are neither degraded nor vicious, and would gladly work if they could but get it to do. The Shaftesbury Institute bridged the seemingly impassable gulf between those who had plenty and those who had nothing, and the workers were indeed messengers of hope, for they came with the joyful tidings of the Gospel.

Lord Reay, who presided, accentuated the usefulness of the work amongst slum children, and the meeting, which was of a stimulating character throughout, closed with an appreciative word from Sir Alex Mackenzie, Lieut.-Governor of Bengal. Communications respecting the work may be addressed to Miss Meredith Brown, Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson Grove, N.W.

Protestants in Dublin.

PERHAPS one of the most significant meetings ever held in Dublin was that over which Rev. T. Connellan presided in the Metropolitan Hall on Sunday, June 18. For days previously the meeting had been advertised by poster, handbill, and sandwichman. The admission was free, and all the speakers were to be converts from the Church of Rome. When the speakers took their places on the platform there were fully eighteen hundred people in the hall. The day was exceptionally fine, and the meeting lasted from 4 to 5.30 p.m. It will be seen, therefore, that the gathering created no small interest.

After conducting devotional exercises, the chairman explained that he and his brother converts did not come there in any spirit of opposition or controversy. They wished to preach the Gospel of Christ, the same Gospel which St. Paul, and St. Peter, and St. Stephen had preached; the wonderful story of Christ's redeeming love. Each speaker was allowed exactly ten minutes; as one of their number, Mr. O'Toole, was confined to bed from indisposition, Professor Bertrand, of Paris, took his place. Mr. Connellan then spoke for ten minutes, taking Gal. i. 4 as his text. He was followed by Mr. James B. Shea, B.A., Mr. Joseph Connellan, Mr. P. J. O' Beirne, Mr. Wm. Pentland, and Professor L. J. Bertrand.

There was a good sprinkling of Roman Catholics in the audience, and they were as attentive as the Protestants. One man objected to the term "Roman Catholics," saying "Call us Catholics;" but he did not persist in his opposition. Professor Bertrand told how his Society had helped twenty-seven priests to leave the Romish Church in Paris during 1898. Christian friends in Dublin are greatly cheered at the signs of the times, and a large number of delegates, who attended the Y.M.C.A. Conference, and waited for Mr. Connellan's meeting on Sunday, have described themselves as deeply impressed by the manifest presence and power of the Holy Spirit in the gathering.

Poor Ministers.—On Monday last week the annual meeting of the Poor Ministers' Clothing Society took place at the Pastors' College. It appeared from the report that fifty-two pastors had been supplied with parcels of clothing for themselves and their families. Mr. Thomas Spurgeon was present to receive parcels on behalf of the Society. Upwards of 600 garments were received at the meeting.

Soldiers' Home for Lydd.—An effort is being made to start a permanent institution at Lydd for the benefit of soldiers. Lieutenant Bird, R.A., writes that a very suitable house, with grounds, quite close to the camp, can be obtained for £1,600. At present the only accommodation is a small and inferior room, available for services and as a reading room. Although not a permanent garrison, there are generally 1,000 to 1,200 men at Lydd during the summer, and lesser numbers throughout the year. The small room has been the place of spiritual blessing to many. Communications may be addressed to Mr. F. E. Woolton, Ness Villa, Lydd.

(830)

Other Lands.

Ceylon and Indian General Mission.

AFTER about six years' absence, Mr. Davidson, Director of the Ceylon and Indian General Mission, has just returned home, on furlough, along with Mrs. Davidson. The Mission has six stations in the Madras Presidency; and God has richly blessed the labours of his servants. Between fifty and sixty converts from heathenism have been baptized, and others have given clear evidence of conversion. Intensely interesting stories can be told of some of these converts, illustrating the power of the Gospel to change the darkest and most hardened hearts.

Many Christians in Britain imagine because the cities and larger towns of India are fairly well supplied with missionaries, that India as a whole is being reached. But this is very far from being the case. Much the larger part of the population is rural. There are 700,000 villages in India, and comparatively few of these have yet had the Gospel preached in them. What need to pray the Lord to thrust forth labourers!

The Mission seeks to preach the Gospel in these unreached villages and smaller towns. Capable European young men, full of the Holy Spirit, are specially wanted to open new stations. The Mission, which was formed in 1893, is interdenominational, and is supported by the freewill offerings of the Lord's people. The present staff consists of seventeen members and about a score of native agents.

Friends desirous of communicating with the director or arranging for meetings, should write to the office of the Mission, 47, Carysfort Road, Stoke Newington, N.

Foreign Navvies.

DEAR SIR,—I should like to tell the kind friends who have responded to my appeal what I have seen of the great spiritual needs of foreign navvies, and of work attempted among them—at any rate, in one locality.

Reaching Gibraltar on April 25, I was introduced to Mr. C. Cambridge and his wife, who have taken up their abode in Linea on purpose to devote themselves to this work.

Every night, just before gun-fire, the men may be seen passing from the Rock in streams, and pouring into the uncomfortable town, which is built on the flat sand that connects Gibraltar with the mainland of Spain. They were often found sitting in rows on a low wall, as though very weary with their toil, and they were going to the miserable, over-crowded houses which represented "home." Yet they seldom drink, and there is a patient look in their dark eyes which seems to appeal for sympathy and help.

Among these Mr. Cambridge moves daily, visiting the various places at which they work—the Dry Docks, the New Mole, the vast water tanks, the stone-crushing at Catalan Bay, and the great cement works, where thousands of blocks, weighing thirty-one tons each, are in course of construction. He is wise as well as zealous, and has won the good will of nearly all in authority. He gives books and papers, has little readings, &c., in the dinner hour, and gets into conversation with many individuals.

The testimony of a Scotch foreman over 400 men was good to hear. "For myself, I love the man; he is the right one in the right place, and every man here respects him." I myself saw faces brighten at his approach, and young lads making a rush for his papers. "Not far from the Kingdom," he said of this one and that, looking lovingly after them as they went away; and some, we know to our joy, have already entered in.

On Sundays and on several evenings in the week, he holds meetings in his little humble hall, only formed of two houses put into one. Of course the congregations greatly vary, but it is often filled with listeners. We found ourselves to our own surprise singing "Songs and Solos" in Spanish, to the familiar tunes, and teaching them in the same tongue, "I believe God answers prayer." It seems a grand opportunity, and if we had wherewith to do it, the work could be greatly extended. There are 6,000 men altogether.

Another of our small committee, Mr. George Williams, of Bessbrook, Ireland, has returned from a visit to the Simplon, where thousands of men are gathering about the great tunnel. He was greatly pleased with Giovanni Gervasi, our young Italian evangelist, who is full of enthusiasm, and very attractive to the men. The great need is for a wooden building to serve as a preaching hall, a reading-room for the men, and rooms for the evangelist. Prices are rising enormously at Iselle, and now it could not be done for less than £300. This, besides the salaries of the two evangelists, we hardly know where to find; and feel constrained to make an appeal to those who can help us. These men are waiting for the proclamation of a Saviour's love—exposed as they are, each moment, to accident and sudden death.

(Miss) Gabrielle M. Maynard.

Hawkhurst, Kent.

New York Notes.

MADISON Square Presbyterian Church, of which Dr. Parkhurst is the pastor, has raised £20,000 for the erection of a new Church House. Negotiations for a site are under way.

Dr. Faunce, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, has resigned his charge to accept the presidency of Brown University, an institution holding a high position among our educational establishments.

The Christian and Missionary Alliance, of which body Rev. A. B. Simpson is the head, has lately despatched several missionaries to the Soudan and the Congo. Four of these have sailed, and four leave soon. Mr. Olssen, superintendent of the Alliance work in Venezuela, is here on a visit in the interests of his field. Dr. Simpson has commenced his summer round of work in Connexion camp meetings in many different States.

The summer campaign, to which I recently referred as proposed for Fifty-sixth Street and Broadway, is likely to be quite an ambitious and important affair. It is backed by two large Presbyterian churches, two Baptist churches (one of which is among the wealthiest and most important in the city), the Church of Disciples, and the Church of the Strangers. A tent has been purchased large enough to accommodate 1,200 persons, and this will be set up on a vacant lot 200ft. square; the use of which is given free. Mr. D. L. Moody is to preach the first sermon in it. Services are to be held on every week night except Saturday, and on Sunday afternoons.

The first tea saloon in New York, and, so far as I know, in the United States, was opened a few nights ago, in connection with the "Open Door" at No. 76, Allen Street. This place was a notorious dive, captured last winter by Colonel H. H. Hadley, the head of the United States Church Army, a few days after it had been raided by the police. This tea saloon is opened for the purpose of weaning the inhabitants of the neighbourhood from their taste for beer by supplying them with tea as a substitute. In the rear of the saloon, and separated from it by curtains, a stage provided with chairs can be seen. Singers and musicians will present spiritual truths in an attractive form to the guests.

In his opening address, Colonel Hadley said that if the experiment at the "Open Door" was successful, many more saloons of the same kind would be opened in different parts of the city. He also described a banking scheme devised to assist in the campaign against the "growler" department of the liquor traffic. A "growler" is a small tin pail holding about a quart, which is sent to the saloon by women in their houses and men while at work. The Colonel said: "Not one in a thousand working men and women who send three times a day for a pint of beer ever has 10dols. accumulated at one time, though they spend, at that rate, 7.20 dols. a month, or 87.60dols. a year. Now, for every labouring man or washerwoman in this vicinity who will stop drinking beer and send here for tea instead, paying us the money a pint of beer costs, we will take their first 24 cents., and adding 1dol. to it, open a special account for them in their name with a savings bank of their choice, and arrange so that they cannot draw it out for a year. At the end of that time we will add enough to it to make an even 100dols. to their credit." This experiment is likely to be watched with much interest by many people of all denominations interested in combating the drink demon.

Roger Martin.

The Mildmay Conference.

FOR the forty-third time this now ancient annual gathering began its proceedings at Mildmay on Tuesday morning in lovely summer weather. There was a great assemblage, though the hall was not so crowded as we have often seen it. Notwithstanding its goodly offspring in similar conferences throughout the land and throughout the world, the interest and importance of the parent gathering appear to abide in the fullest measure.

On account of poor health, Lord Polwarth was not able to be in his expected place in the chair, which at the opening meeting was filled by Captain Dawson, of Bournemouth. After the first hymn had been sung, and before prayer was offered, the Chairman said that Lord Polwarth desired the prayers and sympathies of the congregation on his behalf. Prebendary Barlow, vicar of Islington, following the custom of past years, led the assembly in earnest and comprehensive petition, in the course of which he mentioned one cause for thanksgiving in the preserved lives of the C.M.S. missionaries who it was thought had fallen victims to the animosity of the Chinese people. The Prebendary besought God that the great land of China, through its present vicissitudes, might be led into greater light and blessing.

Another hymn being sung, the Chairman read the proposed subjects of conference—

THE THREE APPEARINGS OF CHRIST, and some of the leading Scripture passages bearing upon it. He said it was a very comprehensive theme, dealing with the past, present, and future work of the Lord Jesus Christ. It would take all eternity to study it. He prayed that the practical outcome of the Conference might be that those attending it would return to their homes so greatly blessed that people might take knowledge of them—not that they had been at Mildmay, but had been with Jesus.

REV. HUBERT BROOKE

was the first speaker. The one purpose of our coming together, he said, is to see the Lord—first as the Perfect Sacrifice, then as the Great High Priest, and, lastly, as the Coming King. In this threefold look at our Lord there will be abundant cause for joy. After further preliminary remarks, he went on to speak of Christ's earthly manifestation as Saviour. In looking at the perfection of our Lord's work of atonement, the speaker said this is seen as to the time of his appearing. All the bygone ages of a past eternity had their climax in his appearing as Man. He came in "the fulness of time" foretold by prophet and seer. It was the meeting-point between the past and the future eternities. Christ came then, as the Scripture says, "to put away sin," or, as it is elsewhere expressed, for the "disannulling" and setting aside of something that stood in the way between the soul and God. Sin was as a great wall keeping us afar off from God; and it was a mighty slavery that kept us in hopeless bondage. Now the way is clear right up to the footstool of God. Christ came to "finish transgression," as it is described in Daniel—transgression, the worst phase of sin. He came also "to bring in everlasting righteousness," so that we may be ultimately perfected in his presence.

He did all this "by the sacrifice of Himself." "There was no other good enough," as we often sing. With joy and wonder we praise Him that He has done it; and at the same time we wonder at the folly and delusion of those who think that human additions to, or repetitions of, his work, can be possible. But we look around and also within, and we see that there is sin still working in the world. In Lev. xvi. we have a view of the two sides of the picture. The sin-offering there set forth teaches us that Christ came to meet the question of sin for the soul on its way to God. Even the holy place—"the heavenly things themselves" (Heb. ix.)—needed to be purged. Now for us sinners the way is open into the very presence of God, and we can come boldly to the throne of grace because of the perfect satisfaction and atonement made by Christ.

As to the human side, in the putting of the sins of the people on the head of the scapegoat, we see what was needed for us. We lay our hand on Christ's head—committing all to Him; He bears our guilt away, and we can share the blessedness of the man whose iniquity is covered, and whose sin is forgiven, to be remembered no more against us. Every difficulty is met, and every hindrance removed. We receive a present, a personal, and a conscious pardon, as the foundation of all our hope of blessing. Let nothing be allowed to come between our souls and God in the reception of this supreme and wondrous gift.

A season of prayer followed, Rev. J. B. Figgis voicing the adoring worship and the earnest petitions of the people. A number of requests were read out by Colonel Morton. The first was a long one from Finland, that its liberties, political and religious, might be preserved, and that God would intervene on behalf of a religious people. Then came requests for the continuance of peace in South Africa, for Christian work in China, for righteous dealings with the Chinese on the part of the European Powers, and for the preservation in safety of the missionaries there. Next came a petition that workers might offer themselves in far greater numbers for missionary service in the regions beyond. Dr. Baedeker sent a request on behalf of Austria and Bohemia. Audible prayer, mingled with confession, was offered by Lord Radstock and another brother on the platform.

REV. F. B. MEYER

gave the second and closing address of the morning. As our Christian life advances (he remarked) we are led to emphasize "the precious blood of Christ" in its efficacy, not only for justification, but for sanctification. There is in many quarters a growing disinclination to employ this term, "the blood of Christ," but we can never set aside or belittle that which speaks to us of the deepest mystery of God. When we speak of Christ's blood in this connection, we mean the very soul of his life. It was not that the blessed Lord stepped in between us and the Father; it was the Eternal God Himself who took our sins and bore them on our behalf. Much of the current misrepresentation has arisen from the want of clear thinking and speaking on the subject on our part. The phrase connotes to us at once the Incarnation, the obedience of the Son, the intensity of the Father's love, the all-sufficient sacrifice of Christ, and the daily cleansing of the soul.

I want to show how absurd it is to suppose that this blood can be re-shed. We find in the recent literature, even of those outside the Roman Catholic Church, that there is in the Lord's Supper a renewed sacrifice. We are not here for controversy, but we must contend for the fact that what our Lord did at Calvary was done once for all and for evermore.

When Christ died it was as the Son of Man, to relieve the race of the imputation of sin that rested on it as the result of the fall. Through this one act of righteousness on the part of Christ, He tasted death for all men, so that if any are lost it is not because Adam sinned, but because the soul loves darkness rather than light.

Again Christ "made peace through the blood of the cross." Here we are at the heart of such a mystery that human thoughts and words are unable to express it. The blood-shedding was needed, also, to open the way to God, as the former speaker has told us. Christ entered once for all into the presence of God—the most holy place—so that we can enter there and live in it. The blood of Christ was needed once more to redeem us from the curse of violated law. (Eph. i. 7 and Gal. iii. 13 were cited.) He redeemed us from the curse, having become a curse for us—as though He had absorbed into Himself the curse of a broken law. The blood is needed, too, for the confirmation of the second covenant (Hom. viii.). "I will be merciful to their iniquities, and their sins will I remember no more." In Heb. xiii. we read of "the blood of the Eternal Covenant." Christ's blood ratified and sealed this Covenant made with God, and with Christ as the representative of the race.

Then we need the precious blood for daily cleansing from sin and for sanctification. The constant, reverent repetition, especially at times of special need, of the words, "the precious blood of Christ" has been to me the secret of continual victory. Whenever we use this formula it means that we take up that position which Jesus gave us, in the purpose of God, when He died on the cross.

How absurd to imagine that in any of these aspects there can be a human repetition of this blood-shedding. The priest of old always stood when in the holy place; but Christ, having once offered Himself, sat down by the throne of God. His work as Saviour was finished and complete.

Personalia.

Rev. George Soltau has removed to 85, Lordship Park, Stoke Newington, London, N.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen John Alexander, evangelists, have removed to 42, Argyle Road, Ilford, Essex.

Bishop Tugwell.—The Queen's advocate at Lagos has entered a nolle prosequi in the case of Bishop Tugwell, who has accordingly been released from committal on the charge of criminal libel.

Mr. Henry Varley will be at his old scene of work, West London Tabernacle, St. James's Square, Notting Hill, W., on Sunday evening next, July 2, at 6.30. Letters for Mr. Varley may be addressed to our care.

Rev. Dr. Culross.—The Daily News is asked to say that, although Dr. Culross has been in feebler health for three or four months, there is no cause for the alarming reports that have been circulated within the last week or two.

Mr. A. S. Dyer.—Many will be gratified to learn, says The Sentinel, that there is a good prospect of Mr. Alfred S. Dyer's complete restoration to health, but to this end a further period of entire rest from literary and business engagements is deemed essential. Letters addressed to 19, High Street, Sandgate, Kent, will find him.

Dr. George Matheson, of St. Bernard's Established Church, Edinburgh, is about to resign his pastorate. He is only fifty-seven years of age, but his infirmity of blindness, and his desire to devote more time to authorship, are understood to be the causes of his retirement from public work. He has been a voluminous writer.

Major D. W. Whittle has returned to his home at Northfield, Mass., for the summer. Through overwork and exposure during his labours among the military camps last summer, Major Whittle contracted rheumatism, from which he has been a great sufferer ever since. It is hoped, however, that a complete rest during the coming months may restore his strength.

Rev. Thomas Champness, who has recently returned from his round-the-world tour, is thus referred to in The Southern Cross of Melbourne:—"He has left an impression on the minds of those who heard him in the Wesley Church not soon to be erased. Dealing with Scripture narratives of persons and events, he displayed a power of penetration and mental insight which mark him out as an original thinker and preacher of more than ordinary force. Clear statement, legitimate deduction, and powerful application of truth to personal experience and practical life are some of the features which characterized his addresses."

Mill Hill School.—Wednesday, last week, was New Foundation Day at Mill Hill School. A new chapel has been completed during the year at a cost of £8,000. Mr. Justice Cozens-Hardy presided at the distribution of prizes. Dr. McClure, the headmaster, after announcing the honours won during the year, said that through the generosity of Sir W. H. Wills the governors were now able to offer a second leaving scholarship of £70 for three years, and to provide a new laboratory, library, and class-room. Towards a leaving scholarship for the boy most distinguished in Scripture knowledge £500 had been subscribed by friends of the late Rev. Edward White. Sir W. H. Wills said Mill Hill needed more money, and if £10,000 could be got in the next year or two it could be well spent. Mr. Justice Cozens-Hardy urged the boys to be proud of the past history and present condition of their school. The object of a school was to turn out its boys as men of high principle. Let them remember that all the best specimens of the human race were supposed to have a backbone; and they needed not merely a physical, but a moral and intellectual, backbone. The day's proceedings ended with a short service in the chapel, the preacher being the Rev. H. Arnold Thomas, chairman of the Congregational Union.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Cast Down, but not Forsaken.

ABOUT fifty miles from London, in the beautiful weald of Kent, there is a quaint old-fashioned town called Cranbrook. It is beautifully situated in the midst of delightful scenery. It has a very large and fine old church, which if it could speak could tell many strange stories of days long gone by. One of its former vicars was a godly man named Fletcher, who was a great friend of brave Bishop Ridley, who was burned alive at Oxford for his faithfulness to God in the bad days of Queen Mary's reign. It is not, however, about him that I wish to tell you, but about a noble woman who lived in this old town in the days when it often meant martyrdom to be absent from mass at the parish church.

Her name was Alice Benden, and when the Popish mass was restored on the accession of Mary to the throne, she felt that she could not attend the services. This soon got her into trouble, first with her husband who, to his shame be it recorded, himself brought her before the magistrate for declining to go to church. After several delays the magistrate sent her to Canterbury to be tried for heresy, or in other words for refusing to obey man rather than God. Canterbury is a long distance from Cranbrook, and the constable was unable to take her for a day or so, but (would you believe it) her husband said he was willing to take her if he was paid for it! To this Alice Benden refused assent; she had too much regard for her husband's reputation than that he should further disgrace himself, so she placed herself under the charge of the little son of the gaoler, who escorted her to Canterbury. Here she was questioned, and every endeavour was made to get her to recant; but no, trusting in God, she remained firm. Her enemies thought that a little prison fare would soon make her change her opinion, so she was put in a horrible prison cell called Munday's Hole.

Here she suffered terrible sufferings. Rats were her companions, straw was her bed, and bread and water was her food. In addition to this, never once in the nine weeks of her imprisonment was she allowed to have water to wash with, or clean clothes to put on. This was sad enough, but to crown it all the poor woman was terribly tempted by the evil one to think that God had forgotten her. Why had He left her to the mercies of her enemies? Was his mercy clean gone for ever? Had He forgotten to be gracious? Oh, no; He never forgets his troubled children; but, sometimes, to try their faith and to make his presence more sweet, He waits to be gracious. One night while she was repeating to herself Psalm xlii., she came to the words, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him, who is the health of my countenance and my God." It was her Father's voice; the tempter's power was broken, and the light shone once more into her heart. She received comfort in the midst of all her miseries, and after that continued very joyful to the end.

On June 19, 1557, at the Martyrs' Field at Canterbury, Alice Benden and seven other Kentish men and women, "not accepting deliverance," were burned in one huge bonfire. It was all their enemies could do to burn their bodies; their spirits lived, and their testimony speaks to-day. More than that, to-day we in Protestant England enjoy our liberties fair and large because they were purchased for us at the price of the martyr's life. At the last moment Alice forgot not her old folk at home, so to a friend standing by she handed a shilling for her old father and a cambric handkerchief for her brother; and I doubt not that in her heart was hearty forgiveness for her unworthy husband.

Dear boys and girls, I hope that we shall know, love, and trust the same faithful God who supported Alice Benden in all her persecutions.

W. Stanley Martin.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Cranleigh, July 1, 2; Kingston-on-Thames, July 3; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Hove, June 29; West Tarring, July 2; Kemp Town, July 4; East Preston, July 5; Birchington Bay, July; Mr. Hankinson, Penge, July 19; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Tunbridge Wells, June 29; St. Matthew's, Redhill, July 1; Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, Portrush, Ireland, July; Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Glastonbury, June 29; Wells, June 30; Balcombe July 1; Malmesbury, July 7-9; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Kentisbeare, near Cullompton, Devon; Mr Frank McLaine, with caravan, Marks Cross; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Coolham Green, Shipley, Sussex, to June 30; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Bedingfield, Suffolk, to July 8.

1832

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

OUR FOURTEENTH

Quarterly Prize Competition.

April to June.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following rules is strictly observed, especially Nos. 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right nine times out of twelve.
2. Competitors will be divided into Four Divisions:—
   - I. Those under ten years of age.
   - II. Those over ten and under thirteen.
   - III. Those over thirteen and under fifteen.
   - IV. Those over fifteen.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "Prize Competition," and the Number of the Division to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom" as usual.
4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your Division, your Full Name and Address, and your Age last birthday.
5. Number your Answers exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be signed by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No Concordance and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. Competitors must not help each other.
8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Tuesday, July 11. The results will be announced on July 20.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, &c., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.
10. Chapter and verse must be given wherever possible.

Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and no papers can be re-examined after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do all the questions set for their division must do as many as they can, and will receive marks accordingly.

Prize Questions.

Division I.

1. (In Esther)—By whom, and to whom, were the following said:—(a) "Their laws are diverse from all people." (b) "What is thy petition?" (c) "How can I endure to see the evil?" (d) "What shall we do unto the queen?"
2. (a) Who was the queen referred to? (b) What did she do?
3. Tell all you know about (a) Esther, (b) Haman.
4. What rewards were received by (a) Mordecai? (b) Haman? (c) What lessons do you learn from their careers?
5. How many times is the name of God mentioned in this book?

Division II.

In Judges i. to xvi.—Give a list of (a) the Judges; (b) the tribes of Israel that did not obey God's command to drive out their enemies.

2. (a) Who lost his thumbs and great toes? (b) How? (c) Why?
3. (a) What do you know about Gideon's fleece? (b) What assurance was derived from it?
4. (a) What do you know of (a) Shibboleth? (b) Jotham? (c) Manoah?
5. (a) Who was Jerubbaal? (b) How many sons had he? (c) What became of them?
6. Of whom was it said (a) "And all to brake his skull? (b) "Let her beware." (c) "She went with her companions."

Division III.

1. (In Ephesians)—Write our *from memory the parts of "the whole armour of God."
2. What does Paul say about (a) Anger? (b) Forgiveness? (c) The love of Christ?
3. (a) What was his salutation to his friends at Ephesus? (b) What did he ask them to pray for on his behalf?
4. (a) Who wrote this letter for Paul? (b) Where was he at the time?
5. (In Acts)—Describe fully a notable event that occurred at Ephesus.
6. Acrostic—(a) The initials give the name of a prophet who reproved the people for neglecting God's house (b) The finals give that of one who reproved a king:—i., A singer; ii., A waverer; iii., An animal used as a sin-offering; iv., A giant; v., A river; vi., One who had thirty sons and thirty daughters.

Division iv.

1. (In Chronicles)—Who said (a) "Oh that one would draw me water from the well of Bethlehem," (b) "Thou knowest thy servant."
2. (a) Who "died in a good old age?" (b) Give his age approximately.
3. Find and explain the following: (a) Northward four a day, southward four a day, and toward Asuppim two and two. (b) At Parbar westward, four at the causeway, and two at Parbar. (c) And they cast lots . . . as well the teacher as the scholar.
4. (a) Give the names and characteristic acts of David's mightiest men. (b) What do you know of "the bands of the rovers"?
5. (General)—Tell all you know of (a) the Ark of the Covenant during David's life. (b) The Gibeonites (known by another name) after Joshua's time. (c) The Jews' quarrel with the Samaritans, in its origin, developments, and result.
6. Bible Puzzle—(a) A wilderness without water. (b) A man who was diseased in his feet. (c) Another name for prophet. (d) One who helped to stay another's hands.

(Out of the letters forming these names, make the name of one who made a great feast; and say all you know about him).

The following are eligible for Prize Competition:—

A—Ralph Aldwinckle, Violet Ashworth, Jennie Almond, Enderby Anderson.

B—Herbert Braddon, Phyllis Boyd, Ella Berryman, May Bligh, Ella Burton, Mabel Birney, Conyers Baker, James and Edith Barker, Leonard Bentall, Avory and Lilian Blackie, Stanley Boxer, Ernestine Buhl, Lucienne Brabandes, Dorothy Barrett, Mary and Susette Beck, Ashley Bowker, Dorothy Berry, Lily Boxer.

C—Anna Chanyen, Edith Chevalier, Lydia Cleary, John and David Colville, Ida and Mabel Cole, Kathleen and Brereton Code, Mabel Candlin, Daisy Clarke, Beryl Calvert, Duncan Campbell, William Charles, Richard Cornthwaite, Ethel Craigie, Walter Carter, Henry Cheney, Dorothy Cooper, Cicely and Millicent Craven, Gladys Calvert.

D—Pologhia Daws, Nellie Dowsett, Kitty, Ivy and Violet Donaldson-Selby, Hilda, Constance, Elizabeth and George Drayson, Stanley Drew, Dorothy Daintree, Vera Dickinson, Dorothy and Marjory Dyke, Violet and Mai Davidson, Marie Denizot, Constance Devenish-Meares, William Dilly.

E—Muriel Ecroyd, Muriel Edwards.

F—Marian Freegard, Mabel and Vincent Fleet, Hyacinth Fitz-Simons, Louise Filhol, Jeanne Faucon, Janet Fawkes, F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Helen Forbes, Kitty Fausset, Bessie Freeman, Flossy Fullarton, Agnes and Muriel Fry.

G—Kathleen Gough, Dorothy Garfit, Clarice Gale, Alfred, Ethel Mary, and Daisy Greenacre, Thos. Groombridge, Harry Gribble, Edith, Dorothy, Jack, Margaret, and Stuart Gray, Bertie Gale.

H—Hetty Hill, Elsie Hatcher, Ruth Hinder, Helen Hunter, Beatrice Hastings, Willie Hooper, Theodora Hill, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Georgette Hoffman, Jennie Holmes, Ella Hake, Marjorie Hogge, Ethel Hutchings, Evelyn and Dorothy Hewer, Florence and Francie Hoyte, M. J. Hill.

I—Isabel and Ami Inglis.

J—Betty Jacobs, Lizzie Johnstone.

K—Stanley, Max, and Eva Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Nellie Keeley, Lily Kinvig, T., Wm. and Isa Kay, Grace Kerr, Jeanie Kyle, Flossie Key.

L—Cecilia Lichtenstein, Gertrude Lambert, Margaret Lee, Sidney, May, Edward, and Henry Law, Blanche Lindup, Edith and Nellie Lockhart, Harry and Linda Lowe, Harriet Lynham.

M—Barbara Maconchy, Mildred Morgan, Evelyn Moir, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, Arthur and Grace Morice, Margaret and Dorothy Morris, Mabelle Mounstephen, Margie Marston, Nellie, Daisy, and Annie Mackenzie, Abraham and Bella Mack, Frank and Charles Medcalf, Tita Mackenzie, Hedley Meader, O. L. Morice, Annie Moule, Gwendoline Moir, Lewis McGregor, Lois Mewburn.

N—George and Edith Nash, Maude Nottage, Peter Nicholson.

P—Lizzie Pratt, Lilian Pearson, Mary Plumb, Daisy Phillips, Alice Palmer, Evelyn and Hattie Peters, Walter and Katie Picknell, Vera Petrides, Ruth Pledger, Kathleen Pincott, Isabel and Gladys Phipps, John Pearce, Winnie Page, Willie, Ada, and Jessie Palmer.

R—Kate Rosenbloom, Gwennie Ravenhill, Alice Reid, Nora Read.

S—Amy and Fred Stileman, Janet Speed, Solomon Stockfish, Douglas, Kathleen, and Minnie Shepherd, Betty Stocks, Joseph Stephens, Annie Shelley, Laura Standen, Flora Simmons, Ivy and Muriel Sherwin, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Gwendoline and Eric Shaw, Violet Salvesen, Elsie Slark, Mary Symon, Emma and Susie Sutton, Florrie Smith, Esther Simmons, Herbert Stuart.

T—Olive Taylor, Theodora Thorn, Eileen and Florence Tomlinson, Frank and Alice Thompson, Alice Truelove.

U—Queenie Upton.

V—Kenneth Vining.

W—Annie and Sarah Wood, Dorothy White, Sidney Wisdom, Digby and Greta Watson, Cecile, Noel, and Phillis Wright, Connie Wood, Helen and Fred Webb, Robert Weddell, Madge Wilson, Leonard Wall, Edward and Edith Wheeler, Violet Walker.

Y—Gladys Young.

* Parents, please see to this.

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 181).

1. Hosea xiii. 8.
2. Isaiah xi. 7.
3. Amos v. 19.
4. 1. Samuel xvii. 37.
5. David, while he guarded his father's sheep. 1. Samuel xvii. 34.
6. Samson. Judges xiv. 6.
7. When the youths mocked Elisha as he went up to Bethel, two she bears came out of the wood and killed forty-two of them. 2 Kings ii. 23, 24.
8. Beware of false prophets. . . . they are ravening wolves. Matthew vii. 15.
9. The lion. "Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness." Judges xiv. 14. "What is sweeter than honey? and what is stronger than a lion?" Judges xiv. 18.
10. The leopard. Jeremiah xiii. 23.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Ralph Aldwinckle, Violet Ashworth*, Jennie Almond.

B—Ella Burton, Mabel Birney, Rose Butler, Phyllis Boyd, Ella Berryman*, Gordon* and May* Bligh.

C—Edith Chevalier, Lydia Cleary, Carl and Kitty Cope, Mabel and Ida Cole, John* and David Colville*, Eleanor Chance, Dorothy Cooper, Daisy Clarke.

D—Nellie Dowsett*, Ivy and Violet Donaldson-Selby, Dorothy Daintree, Vera Dickinson, Stanley Drew, Pologhia Daws*, Violet and Mai Davidson, Margaret Davison.

E—Muriel and Miriam Ecroyd.

F—Kitty Fausset, Vincent* and Mabel Fleet.

G—Mary Gover, Kathleen Gough, Constance Gabbett.

H—Frances Harding, Beatrice Hastings, Ruth Hinder*, Evelyn* and Dorothy* Hewer, Claude Hutchence*, Hetty Hill, M. J. Hill, Jennie Holmes.

J—Emily Jones.

K—Nellie Keeley, Lily Kinvig.

L—Margaret Lee, Edward, Sidney, Henry, and May Law, Blanche Lindup*, Edith and Nellie Lockhart.

M—Hedley Meader*, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, Marie Meek, May Mills, Arthur, Grace and Lewis Morice, Ada Macnutt*, Beatrice Le Mesurier, Mabel Morris.

N—Eleanor and Valerie Noel, George Nash.

P—Lilian Pearson*, Walter, Katie and Leonard Picknell, Daisy Phillips, Ruth Pledger, Mary Plumb*, Hattie, Mildred and Evelyn Peters.

R—Nora Read.

S—Annie Shelley, Dryll and Amy* Stileman, Herbert Stuart, Douglas Stevens, Joseph Stephens, Alan and Mary Symon, Betty Stocks*, Douglas and Kathleen* Shepherd, Mary Sowden, Mary Seton-Karr, Flora Simmons, Ronald Studd.

T—Theodora Thorn*, Ruby, Eileen, and Florence Tomlinson, Olive Taylor*.

W—Digby and Greta Watson, Sarah* and Annie Wood, Cecile, Noel, and Phillis Wright, Dorothy White, Agatha Ward.

No. 180.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Muriel and Richard Annesley, Ambrose Adams, Enderby Anderson, Percy Allen, Ralph Aldwinckle, William Aston.

B—James and Edith Barker, Phyllis Boyd, Dorothy Benson, Rachel and Leah Blumenthal, Stanley, Gordon and Lily* Boxer, Leonard and Frank Bentall, Lilian, Teresa, Avory, and Frank Blackie, Ernestine Buhl, Lucienne Brabandes, Susette* and Mary* Beck, Conyers, Allen, and Massy Baker, Leonard Browne, Mabel Bailey, Ashley Bowker*, Colin and George Brown, H. C. and Dorothy Berry, Eva Browne*, Mary Bryant, Rex Bulteel, Ernest, Godfrey, and Gladys Bates, Dorothy and Maud Barrett, Louis Berthé*.

C—Millicent and Cicely Craven, Nora Clarke, Gussie Clark, Daisy Clarke, Mabel Caudlin, Grace Charik, Kitty and Carl Cope, Duncan Campbell*, Ethel Craigie, Dora and Edith Corrie, Walter*, Jessie*, and Maggie* Carter, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, Nellie and Janie Crawford, Willie* and Mary* Charles, Arthur Cox*, Dorothy Clarke, Alice Crang, Guy and Oscar Cross, Henry Cheney, Richard Cornthwaite.

D—Blossom Davis*, Vera Dickinson, Marie Denizot*, Violet, Kitty and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Gordon Duncan, Harold Davis, Dorothy and Marjory Dyke, Jean Dickson, William Dilly*, Ernest Davies, Esther Dickson, Constance Devenish-Meares.

E—Helen Eardley-Wilmot, Maud Eddey, Muriel Edwards*.

F—Bessie, Maggie, and Kate Fletcher, Sarah Finkelstein, Louise Filhol*, Jeanne Faucon*, Hyacinth Fitz-Simons, Aileen Figgis, Maggie*, Flossy*, and Lewis* Fullarton, James and Marian* Freegard, Helen Forbes, Agnes and Muriel Fry, Reginald and Arthur Findlay.

G—Esther Goodman, Norman Good, Daisy, Mary*, Ethel, and Alfred Greenacre, Margaret*, Edith*, Jack, Dorothy, and Stuart Gray, Harry Gribble, Dorothy Garfit, Alfred Gibbs, Thos. Groombridge, Winnie and Dorothy Grove, Minnie and Evelyn Giddings, Allen Gardner.

H—Violet Holford*, Edith and Winifred Harvey*, Willie Hooper, Dorothy Harris, Georgette Hoffmann*, Ruth Hinder, E. Henderson*, Ella Hake, Helen Hunter, Freda Hunton, Ethel Hutchings*, Theodora Hill*, Rosetta Hamilton, Marjorie Hogge, Willie Hopkins.

I—Isabel and Ami Inglis, Nellie Irving*, Daisy Iredell.

J—Betty Jacobs, Lizzie Johnstone, Norman* and Kate* Johns, Sinclair Jackson.

K—Alex*, Willie*, Agnes*, Thomas*, and Isa* Kay, Maurice Kalinsky, Stanley and Eva Kalb, Lily Kinvig*, Flossie Key, Dorothy* Kerr, Jeanie Kyle.

L—Mary Levine, Dudley Lewis, Linda, Harry, Edith, James and Norah Lowe, Harriet Lynham, Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Edith and Nellie Lockhart, Millie Laidlaw, Hannah Lovell*.

M—Margaret Macphee*, M. Mounstephen, Bella and Abraham Mack, L. R. McGregor, Daniel,* Dorothy* and Margaret* Morris, Bessie and Charlotte* Millar, Dora Muir, Winifred and Daisy Martin, Beatrice Le Mesurier*, Olive Mewburn*, Christina Marshall, Evelyn, Gwendoline and Howard* Moir, Mildred Morgan,

G—Kathleen Gough, Dorothy Garfit, Clarice Gale, Alfred, Ethel Mary, and Daisy Greenacre, Thos. Groombridge, Harry Gribble, Edith, Dorothy, Jack, Margaret, and Stuart Gray, Bertie Gale.

H—Hetty Hill, Elsie Hatcher, Ruth Hinder, Helen Hunter, Beatrice Hastings, Willie Hooper, Theodora Hill, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Georgette Hoffman, Jennie Holmes, Ella Hake, Marjorie Hogge, Ethel Hutchings, Evelyn and Dorothy Hewer, Florence and Francie Hoyte, M. J. Hill.

I—Isabel and Ami Inglis.

J—Betty Jacobs, Lizzie Johnstone.

K—Stanley, Max, and Eva Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Nellie Keeley, Lily Kinvig, T., Wm. and Isa Kay, Grace Kerr, Jeanie Kyle, Flossie Key.

L—Cecilia Lichtenstein, Gertrude Lambert, Margaret Lee, Sidney, May, Edward, and Henry Law, Blanche Lindup, Edith and Nellie Lockhart, Harry and Linda Lowe, Harriet Lynham.

M—Barbara Maconchy, Mildred Morgan, Evelyn Moir, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, Arthur and Grace Morice, Margaret and Dorothy Morris, Mabelle Mounstephen, Margie Marston, Nellie, Daisy, and Annie Mackenzie, Abraham and Bella Mack, Frank and Charles Medcalf, Tita Mackenzie, Hedley Meader, O. L. Morice, Annie Moule, Gwendoline Moir, Lewis McGregor, Lois Mewburn.

N—George and Edith Nash, Maude Nottage, Peter Nicholson.

P—Lizzie Pratt, Lilian Pearson, Mary Plumb, Daisy Phillips, Alice Palmer, Evelyn and Hattie Peters, Walter and Katie Picknell, Vera Petrides, Ruth Pledger, Kathleen Pincott, Isabel and Gladys Phipps, John Pearce, Winnie Page, Willie, Ada, and Jessie Palmer.

R—Kate Rosenbloom, Gwennie Ravenhill, Alice Reid, Nora Read.

S—Amy and Fred Stileman, Janet Speed, Solomon Stockfish, Douglas, Kathleen, and Minnie Shepherd, Betty Stocks, Joseph Stephens, Annie Shelley, Laura Standen, Flora Simmons, Ivy and Muriel Sherwin, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Gwendoline and Eric Shaw, Violet Salvesen, Elsie Slark, Mary Symon, Emma and Susie Sutton, Florrie Smith, Esther Simmons, Herbert Stuart.

T—Olive Taylor, Theodora Thorn, Eileen and Florence Tomlinson, Frank and Alice Thompson, Alice Truelove.

U—Queenie Upton.

V—Kenneth Vining.

W—Annie and Sarah Wood, Dorothy White, Sidney Wisdom, Digby and Greta Watson, Cecile, Noel, and Phillis Wright, Connie Wood, Helen and Fred Webb, Robert Weddell, Madge Wilson, Leonard Wall, Edward and Edith Wheeler, Violet Walker.

Y—Gladys Young.

Annie* and Elsie* Moule, Tita Mackenzie, Annie Macnair, Nellie*, Annie* and Daisy* Mackenzie, Charlie and Frank Medcalf, Maggie Munro.

N—Edith Nash*, Leah Niels, Peter* and Cissy* Nicholson, Amy and Maude Nottage, Mary Nathan.

O—George O'Beirne*, Eva and Maude Oakes, Kate Oliver.

P—Ernest and Nellie Potter, Ernest and Hilda Pearce, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Walter Perryman, Percy, Geoffrey, and Clarice Peach, Myrtle Perry, May Petrides, Winnie Page*, Edith Purkiss, Alice, Winifred*, Ada, Jessie*, and Willie Palmer, Violet Philips, Evelyn Pechey.

R—Evelyn Rashley, Gordon* and Winifred Roberts, Gwennie Ravenhill, Kate Rosenbloom, Jessie, Isabel, and Elmina Roe, Eva Roberton, May Reed*, Lorimer Romanes.

S—Violet and C. R. Salvesen, Evelyn Shaw, L. Soltau, Binford Sellwood, Bertha Stocker, Muriel, Rosetta, and Ivy Sherwin, Betty Stocks*, Dora Smith*, Ronald Studd, Mary Sowden, Gwendoline*, Llewellyn, W., Gladys*, Eric, Undine, and Mervyn Shaw, Dolly Salt*, Constance and Hilda Schaeffer, Edith Shepherd, Solomon Stockfish, Esther Simmons, Maudie, Janet, and Arthur Speed, Florence Smith, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Mabel Stembridge, Janey Sinclair, Bessie Scantlebury*, Susie* and E.* Sutton.

T—Malcolm Thomson, Frank and Alice Thompson, Alice Truelove*, Marjorie Tracey, Louie Tibbits*.

U—Queenie Upton*.

V—Phillis Vigers, May* and Edwin Vickers.

W—James and Georgina Wilson, Kenrick, Ernest, and Queenie Wakeford, Robert and Thomas Weddell, Joanna Woolnitzer, Connie Wood, Helen and Fred Webb, Greta Watson, Dorothy Woodforde, Pringle Wilson, Charles and Amy* Wingrave, George Willis, Sydney Wisdom, Violet*, Lissa*, Arthur, and Louisa Walker, Leonard Wall.

Y—Maurice, Gladys, and Eva* Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

Nos. 172, 173—Launcelot Knight (Texas). No. 173—Cuckoo and Maria Lister, Daisy McArthur (S. Africa). No. 174—Daisy McArthur, Alice* and W. B.* Henderson (Jamacia). No. 175—Llewellyn Dale* (India), Alice* and W. B.* Henderson. No. 176—Ivan and Rotha St. George (Canada). No. 177—Frank Sjöström* (U.S.A.), Dora Wallace (Canada). No. 178—Vera and Frank Sjöström.

Personal.

I am sorry there was a mistake in the Searcher No. 181. To question 5, it should have been (1 Sam. x.-xx.). Many thanks for the beautiful flowers received this week.

GUSSIE CLARK, VIOLET WALKER.—Thank you for the books; they were sent to little Hannah and the Children's Hospital, as requested.

FRANK AND A. GIBBS.—I am sorry you have been so ill, but am glad to welcome you back among the "Searchers."

DOROTHY CLARKE.—Poor little thumb! You were very brave to try and do your Searcher. I hope it will soon be quite well again.

THEODORA THORN.—Many happy returns of your birthday, if it is not too late!

GEORGE NASH.—You did not complete question e, and gave no reference to the Hidden Text.

RONALD STUDD.—You gave the wrong chapter to question 5 in No. 179.

Uncle Tom's Cot—Alice, 1s.; B.S., 5s.—Total 6s.

"A Strange Mistake."—There have been two! One was the title of an interesting article about South Africa given on June 15. The other was that I forgot to say the article and the picture were taken from an interesting little paper called Diamonds, published by Mr. A. Mercer, Secretary of the South Africa General Mission, 14a, Lingfield Road, Wimbledon, who will be glad to hear from any readers, young or old, who are interested in that mission field.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending July 8.

Sun., July	2	Acts xix. 13-27	Thurs., July	6	Acts xx. 25-38
Mon., „	3	„ xix. 28-41	Fri., „	7	„ xxi. 1-14
Tues., „	4	„ xx. 1-12	Sat., „	8	„ xxi. 15-26
Wed., „	5	„ xx. 13-24

Obituary.

MR. G. A. WEYMOUTH, M.A.

BY the death of Mr. George Augustus Weymouth, Oswestry loses a citizen of high Christian character, and the well-known ex-master of Mill Hill School is thrown into deep mourning. Death was from pneumonia after a few days' illness, at the early age of thirty-three. The proprietor and headmaster of the Modern School, Oswestry, Mr. Weymouth exerted a good influence, and will long live in the love and esteem of those who knew him. Many will condole with Dr. Weymouth and family in their sad bereavement.

REV. W. H. GRAHAM.

The death of Rev. W. H. Graham, at his residence, Homeward, Upper Norwood, removes a clergyman who resigned, on account of failing health, in 1894, "one of the most honoured and happy ministries which have been exercised in London." So The Record described his work in the metropolis. His early years were spent in Ireland, but nearly the whole of ministry was given to work in London. Mr. Graham was unswerving in his adherence to the teachings of the Evangelical Fathers of the last generation. These Scriptural principles he not only taught but lived, commending them to the acceptance of others by his faithful preaching, and even more by his consistent character and conduct.

Evangelism.

Evangelistic Mission.

FOR three weeks Gospel meetings have been held nightly in the large marquee at Harrow, concluding with a testimony meeting on Monday last. Services have begun at Seaside Road, Eastbourne, under the superintendence of Mr. Herbert Veasey, who conducts the services each night, delivering occasional Bible readings. A tent also is to be erected at Cardiff Road, Watford, and meetings to commence on Sunday next. Messrs. Loveridge and Owens, of Harley College, will superintend the work. Arrangements have been concluded for a nightly mission in the large Gospel tent at Hounslow Heath, a necessitous neighbourhood. The prayerful and practical sympathy of the reader is asked that these and similar movements to reach the unsaved masses may be visited with divine blessing and benediction.

C. RUSSELL HURDITCH, Director.

MR. W. MONRO COLLINGS is recovering from his recent nervous break-down, and hopes to be ready for work in September. During his absence in Egypt any letters relating to engagements will be attended to by a member of his family.

MR. G. BENNETT, of York, hopes to resume the seaside services for young people this season about the middle of July, at Blackpool (South Shore), and at St. Anne's. After about three weeks there he hopes to go again to Aberystwyth for some weeks. God graciously gave more blessing than ever last summer. Earnest prayer for guidance and blessing is desired.

MR. LEONARD WEAVER reports remarkable blessing in connection with the tent work at Tooting. Numbers of persons have professed conversion, and the district has been stirred. A deep feeling of reverent expectancy seems to characterise every meeting. On several occasions scores of seekers and workers have knelt in the sawdust and wept and prayed together. Mr. Charles Inglis and Mr. Vernon Harcourt have also taken part. At Battersea and Peckham local committees are entering heartily into the movement, and it is expected that tents will be erected and meetings commenced in both places.

Evangelists' Engagements.

MRS. E. L. BARYERTZ.—Jarrow-on-Tyne, July 16-31.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sun., July 2, at 7, Mr. F. Garrioch; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sun., July 2, Mr. H. C. Crawley; Bible lecture, Thurs., at 8, Mr. Thompson.

MR. JOHN ELLIOTT.—Till July 2, Central Hall, Pokesdown, Bournemouth.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE.—July 2-17, Ipswich; 23-Aug. 2, Teignmouth.

MR. NEWTON JONES.—July 30, Lowestoft Baptist Chapel; During August, Margate Sands (Nayland Rock).

MR. WILLIAM GROVE is conducting a mission in the Tent, Football Field, Maze Hill, East Greenwich.

MR. LEONARD WEAVER is conducting a mission in the Gospel Tent, Tooting (near the Tramway Terminus).

REV. THOS. COOK.—July 2, Old Market Street, Bristol; 9, Barnstaple; 16, King Street, Plymouth; 23, Stanningley; 30, Skegness; Aug. 6, Bridlington Quay; 13, Llandudno; 20, Colwyn Bay; Sept. 3, Blackpool.

MR. HENRY THORNE.—July 2, Farwig Mission, Bromley; July 4-14, Paris; 16 and 28, Haling Road, South Croydon.

THE EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.—The following missions, with others, will be in progress on Sunday next:—Birmingham, C. Lazenby; Wakes Colne, H. Collins; Chelwood Gate, J. Lovell; Thrussington, F. Holmes; Ashington, A. Clark; Mere, H. S. Smith; Wenhaston, J. Clark; Stratford St. Mary, J. Harris; Saltburn, H. R. Francis; Pirton, E. Bailey; Bulverhithe, N. Taylor; Melksham, C. B. Jolliffe; Ford Street, J. Simmonds; Gt. Barford, K. Lambert; Knowle, F. W. Pascoe; Brockmoor, S. Vivian; Scalford, G. Pell; Wallis Down, J. Brown; Blackburn, J. Shields; Yatton Keynell, W. F. Davies; Millom, T. W. Canning; Quatford, S. Bryant; Cranborne, H. Bray; Codicote, G. Attwood; Attleborough, C. Chenery; Riccarton, R. Hill; Blairgowrie, C. G. Roger; Largs, J. W. Moodie; Glasgow, D. M. Bayne; Ayr, H. Young; Kinghorn, J. W. Galletly; Torryburn, C. Galletly.

Requests for Prayer.

For tent mission to be conducted at Fishponds by Rev. John Mitchell.

For blessing on United Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist camp meeting to be held at Heacham on July 9.

For blessing on the United Mission for Ipswich and District, July 2-16, to be conducted by Mr. Geo. Clarke.

That souls may be saved at a service at Lansdown Baptist Chapel, Stroud, Sunday night, July 2, to be addressed by Mr. Ossie Rodway, the first service he has been able to undertake for a long time.

Prayer is asked that rich revival blessing may attend the preaching of the Gospel in the tents of the Evangelistic Mission, which are now at Eastbourne, Watford, and Hounslow Heath. Local co-operation is earnestly invited.

Continued prayer is asked by Lord Radstock for the West End of London, "which seems to be going farther away from God." Also for meetings at the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, on Sundays, that Christian believers may be "separated unto God."

Praise.

For blessing at Bedminster Tent Mission.

International S.S. Lessons.

July 9, 1899.

"Daniel in Babylon."—DANIEL i. 8-21.

GOLDEN TEXT.—DANIEL i. 8.

LESSON CONNECTION.

LAST week we read of God's warnings and loving invitation to his people who had fallen into gross idolatry. They did not repent, and soon afterwards the tribes of Israel who inhabited the northern countries of Palestine were conquered and carried away captives. About 100 years after, the punishment came upon Judah. Read the story in 2 Kings xxiv. 1-6; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1-7.

DANIEL.

Among the captives whom Nebuchadnezzar carried back with him to Babylon were Daniel and his three friends, lads of about fourteen or sixteen years of age. They were of noble birth and fine looking, well educated in the Jewish religion. It was the custom for the conqueror to take back to grace his court some of the principal young men. These four were put into training for public service. Daniel lived all through the seventy years' captivity. The book bearing his name is written in two languages, and divided into two parts, the history, i.-vi., the prophecies, vii.-xiv.

TIME.

605-3 B.C., Jeremiah and Habakkuk were prophets in Jerusalem when Daniel was carried away captive. Ezekiel, later on, prophesied when in captivity in Babylon and he twice mentions Daniel (Ezek. xiv. 14, xxviii. 3). Obadiah, in Judah, was also contemporary.

BABYLON,

a large and magnificent city, on the river Euphrates, about 500 miles east of Jerusalem. Its origin is given in Gen. xi. 4, but it was to Nebuchadnezzar it owed its splendour (Dan. iv. 30). Recent explorations have unearthed bricks and tablets whose inscriptions corroborate the Bible story. Its wall was nearly fourteen miles square, 300ft. high, and 8ft. broad.

EXPLANATORY.

Daniel i. 8 Nebuchadnezzar had changed the names of these captive princes from Jewish to heathen names, but giving them a heathen name did not make them heathen, any more than giving us a Christian name will make us Christians. Daniel's heart was right with his God; he loved God, and though only a boy, he said to himself, "No one shall make me break the law of my God." To eat the luxuries from the king's table would be very nice, and he could easily have made the excuse that he was a prisoner and must obey his conqueror. It was a greater temptation than any of us can have to do what might be wrong.

God had given laws as to what his people might not eat, and some of these forbidden fruits might be among the king's dainties (Lev. xi., Deut. xii. 23-25). (Press home this example.)

Verse 9. No one could find fault with this young prince, whose character shone with obedience, truthfulness, integrity and love, bearing all his captivity and the jeers and taunts of the heathen patiently. God enabled him to do all this. It was not in his own strength.

Verses 10-14. Note the wise way he went to work. Often good is spoiled by the headlong way we go to work.

Verses 15-21. The good results, physically, intellectually, and in their future advancement and career. After the three years of training they were examined before the king and were far above all the rest. God blesses those who honour Him.

LESSON POINTS.

Resisting temptation.
Love to God the strong motive.
Remembering and putting to practice early lessons.
No food will do us good without God's blessing.
Plain food and drink, best for the body and brain.
We are much better off than Daniel was.
We have Christ and the Holy Spirit to help us.
If Daniel could resist temptation, so can we.
No true success without God's blessing.

TEMPERANCE TEACHING.

One of the greatest temptations of to-day is strong drink. The only safety is to make God our King; let his laws rule our appetite and passions. Alcohol is a poison. Destroys body and soul.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, June 26th, 1899.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd."; this will effectually prevent loss.

	£	s.	d.
Famine in S. Russia—Bee, £2; J.B., 3s.; E.U., 10s.; S.S., 3s.; H.B.R., 10s.; J.C., 10s.; Alpha Beta, £1; M.M.W., 15s.; Bedford Household, £1 1s.; L., £1	7	12	0
Belgian Missionary Church—C.F.C., 3s.; G., £1 ...	1	3	0
Poor Jews, Jerusalem—Mrs. E.S.	0	2	6
Pastor Lecoat's Work, Brittany—Amico, ...	5	0	0
Free Evangelical Church of France—Amico, £5; G., £1	6	0	0
Friends of Armenia—L.B.R., 10s.; F.A.S., £1 ...	1	10	0
Armenian Sufferers' Relief—H.H.H., 1s.; Matt. xxv. 40, £10; Bedford Household, £1 1s.	11	2	0
Women's Armenian Relief Fund—E.U., 5s.; L., £1; (Dr. Raynolds, Van) G., £1; P.E., 4s.	2	9	0
Armenian Boys' Home (Professor Thoumaian)—E.U.	0	5	0
China Inland Mission—M.A.J., 5s.; Rosario, £2 2s.; L.B.R., 5s.; J.T., £2	4	12	0
Colportage Association, Baden Baden—G.	2	0	0
Aintab Orphanage—Newbattle F.C., S.S.	2	6	0
Church Missionary Society—(North Pacific) L.B.R., 5s.; (Famine, E. Africa) J.C., 10s.; R.O.M., 2s. 6d.; M.P.M., £1; O.A., 2s. 6d.; Miss H., 13s. 4d.; G.S., Oporto, £2...	4	13	4
Mr. and Mrs. Innes Wright's Work, Nepaul—A.McK.	1	0	0
Deacon Abraham's Orphanage—In Jesus' Name ...	0	10	0
Mrs. Wall's Work, Rome—H.B.R.	0	10	0
North Africa Mission—Rosario...	2	2	0
Moravian Missions—Rosario	2	2	0
Dr. Comandi's Orphans—Rosario	2	2	0
Bible Lands Mission (Armenian Distress)—Rosario	5	5	0
Meth. Episcopal Day Schools, Tientsin—A.A. ...	5	0	0
Work Among Priests in France—L.B.R.	0	5	0
British and Foreign Bible Society—J.T., £2; G.S., Oporto, £2	4	0	0
Dr. J. G. Paton's Mission (New Hebrides)—J.T.	1	0	0
Figueras Mission (Spain)—J.T....	5	0	0
Soldiers' Home (Gibraltar)—J.T.	2	0	0
Spanish Evangelization Society—J.T....	5	0	0
Persecuted Stundists—L.	1	0	0
S. Africa General Mission—G. S., Oporto	2	0	0
THE CHRISTIAN to Missionaries—Mrs C.	1	6	6
London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst Jews—Bee	1	0	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes—Bee £1; Wib, £10; J.T.A., 10s.; M.S.S., 4s.	11	14	0
Race Course Mission—Bee	1	0	0
Field Lane Institutions—Wib, £5; M.S.S., 4s. ...	5	4	0
Day in Country Fund—W., 2s.; Wib, £5; J.H., £1; W.P.E., £1; Nemie, 10s.; P.A.D., £1; T.W.P., 10s.; S.P., 2s. 6d.; Mrs S., 10s.; Alpha Beta, £1; E.C., £1; A.A., £2; S.A.T., 10s.; A.A., 2s. 6d.; G. S., Oporto, £2; H.K., 5s....	16	12	0
Friendless and Fallen—Wib, £5; M.S.S., 4s.; Rosario, £2 2s.;	7	6	0
St. Giles' Christian Mission—Wib, £5; J.T.A., 10s.; Rosario, £2 2s.; (Convalescent Homes)—L.B.R., 5s.; (Day in Country)—J.H., £1; S. and C.R., 1s.	8	18	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—J.T.A., 10s.; Rosario, £2 2s.; R. and E., 5s.; (Emigration)—S.A.T., 10s. ...	5	7	0
Flower Girls' Mission—J.T.A., 10s.; (Blind and Crippled Children's Holiday)—M.S.S., 4s.; L.B.R., 5s.	0	19	0
Gratuitous Circulation of THE CHRISTIAN—A Sinner Saved	0	1	0
Invalid Children's Aid Association—M.S.S.... ...	0	4	0
Country Holiday Homes—W.P.E, ...	1	0	0
Working Girls Homes, London (Holiday Fund)—Nemie	0	10	0
Uncle Tom's Cot, see page 25	0	6	0
London City Mission—J.T., £1; G.S. Oporto, £2; (Holiday for Missionary and Wife) E.G., £5 ...	8	0	0
George Yard Ragged School—Memorandum, £3; J.T., £1; (Day in Country) L.E., 10s.	4	10	0
Ragged School Union (Cripples' Home)—E.B., 2s. 6d.; (Cripples) L.B.R., 5s.; (Day in Country) S. and C.R., 1s.	0	8	6
Scripture Gift Mission—Heb. iv. 12, £1 10s.; P.E., 4s.	1	14	0
Church Army (Prison Mission)—O.A.	0	2	6
Liberator Sufferers Relief—Mel...	1	0	0
Open Air Mission (Ireland)—Mel	1	0	0
Mr. Charles Cook's Work (Scriptures, Foreign Prisons)—H.B.R.	0	5	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—Alpha Beta, £1; G.S., Oporto, £2	3	0	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—Alpha Beta, £1; J.T., £1	2	0	0
National Vigilance Association—Alpha Beta ...	1	0	0
Ruth-Eliott Home, Enfield—L.B.R.	0	5	0
Friedenheim Home for Dying—L.B.R.	0	5	0
Religious Tract Society—J.T.	2	0	0
Assoc. Free Distribution of the Scriptures—J.T. ...	2	0	0
Barbican Mission to Jews—J.T.	2	0	0
Blackdown Hills Mission—J.T.	2	0	0
Railway Mission—J.T.	1	0	0
Bible and Colportage Society (Ireland)—J.T. ...	1	0	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—G.S., Oporto, £2; (Yiddish Translation)—H., 10s.	2	10	0
R.N. Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—G.S., Oporto ...	2	0	0
Samaritan Free Hospital for Women and Children—G.S., Oporto	2	0	0
Children's Special Service Mission—G.S., Oporto ...	1	0	0
Total	£188	18	4

(ADVERTISEMENTS.)

St. Giles Christian Mission—Inasmuch. £1.

Ragged School Union—St. Matthew xxv. 40, 5s.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, 98, High Street, Homerton, London, N.E., beg to gratefully acknowledge the following donations for Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent, and for the relief of the poor:—J. B. McK., £1 1s.; O.L. 2s. 6d.; B., 5s.; J.P., 4s. 6d.; De B., £1 1s.

Kensit's Wickliffe Preachers' and Protestant Crusade.—Ritualism v. Protestantism, £1; The Misses Dymond, £2; Mrs Wilkins, 7s. 6d.; Mrs Proud, 2s. 6d.; P. B. Junor, £1; Mrs. Kemp, 2s. 6d.; A. M. Jameson, 10s.; Anon 10s.; Fight of Faith, 5s.; Mona, £1; Dr. Myles, 5s.; R. Hill, £1; Miss Williams, 2s. 6d.; Miss Blackburn, 10s.; A.W.J., 5s.—John Kensit, Secretary, 18, Paternoster Row.

(834)

AT THE SMALL COST OF

TEN SHILLINGS ONLY

A Blind or Crippled Child

CAN BE SENT BY THE FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION TO THE Pretty Holiday Home at Clacton-on-Sea for a Fortnight's Change

It is difficult to fully realise what a boon this Sea-side Holiday is to these poor neglected and suffering little ones.

Who will share in the privilege and joy of this effort for the Great Master?

Monetary help is urgently needed.

JOHN A. GROOM,
Secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission,
8, SEKFORDE STREET, CLERKENWELL, E.C.

Treasurer:
F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P.,
54, LOMBARD STREET.

THE MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

THE LONDON ASSOCIATION IN AID OF THESE OLDEST OF PROTESTANT MISSIONS EARNESTLY APPEALS FOR PRAYER.

THE NEED IS TRULY URGENT.

The LARGE DEFICIENCY caused by widespread misapprehension as to the terms of the Morton Legacy—which can only be used for commencing New Work, and not to help existing Missions—has by God's providence, and in answer to prayer, been met; but unless the regular Income be now, not only steadily maintained, but LARGELY INCREASED—withdrawal from some Mission fields, actually calling for extension, seems inevitable!
Will, therefore, friends of Missions

"PRAY WITHOUT CEASING."

that all needed funds may be forthcoming, so that the work be not hindered.
Contributions will be thankfully received by the Secretary—
REV. W. WETTON COX,
at 7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, London, W.C.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,

CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.

A HOME AND SCHOOL
FOR
500 FATHERLESS CHILDREN
And a Memorial of the Beloved Founder, C. H. SPURGEON

No votes required. The most needy and deserving cases are selected by the Committee of Management.

THE MANAGERS REQUIRE

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS

A YEAR IN VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary, F. G. LADDS, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

NOTICE TO INTENDING BENEFACTORS. Our last Annual Report, containing a Legal form of Bequest, will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME and ORPHANAGE.

FOUNDER AND PRINCIPAL:
REV. DR. STEPHENSON.

4,300 Children rescued. 1,100 now in residence. 46 waiting to come in.

Amongst the Children are the ORPHAN, DESTITUTE, CRIPPLED, BLIND, DEAF AND DUMB, or otherwise DISADVANTAGED.

IMMEDIATE HELP IS URGENTLY NEEDED.

ADDRESS:
REV. DR. STEPHENSON,
BONNER ROAD, LONDON, N.E.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY

14, BLOMFIELD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Now in its second century of work. Distinguished for its Catholic basis, its famous Missionaries (Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison, Ellis, Gilmour, &c.), its Pioneering successes, its enterprising Native Agents, its self-supporting Churches, its Bible Translation Work, its Contributions to Christian Literature, its Preaching to the Masses, its Women's Work for Women, its Schools and Orphanages, its Training Institutions, its Medical Missionaries, its Hospitals and Dispensaries, and its Leper Asylums.

Funds greatly needed. Special contributions for support of "Own Missionaries," or for Native Helpers gladly received.

Home Secretary: REV. ARTHUR N. JOHNSON, M.A.

THE SICK POOR

Both ADULTS and CHILDREN are aided by the

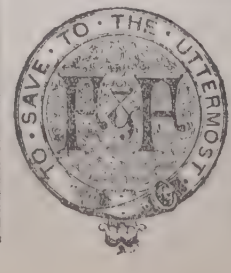
ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Will you help even ONE of the

HUNDREDS OF WEAKLY LITTLE CHILDREN

who urgently need, and are waiting for, the benefits of a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME,



Or of the numerous SICK and DESTITUTE MEN and WOMEN who equally need a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CONVALESCENT HOME?

FUNDS ABSOLUTELY INADEQUATE.

WM. WHEATLEY, Superintendent, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., a/c St. Giles' Christian Mission

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

THE FIVE HOMES and OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE

are greatly needing support just now. Will the Lord's Stewards kindly remember this need, and help us?

One Hundred and Eighty young women and girls are maintained instructed, and trained in the Homes.

A COPY of the NEW REPORT will be SENT TO ANY ADDRESS ON APPLICATION

Contributions may be sent to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, or to

W. J. TAYLOR, Secretary, 200, Euston Road, London, N.W.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

WE have given considerable space this week to our report of the addresses and smaller gatherings at the Mildmay Conference. The striking address by Mr. W. R. Lane on Wednesday evening, and those of the closing day, will appear in succeeding issues.

When the disciples, after their failure to heal the epileptic boy, asked Jesus, "Why could not we cast him out?" He pointed out three great conditions of success in spiritual work, which are of perpetual validity. The first was faith—the principle whereby we enlist God on our side in the battle with evil; the second, prayer, which helps faith to self-realisation and power; the third is fasting, the principle of self-discipline, whereby we are kept alert, watchful, and efficient in our work. (See Matt. xvii. 20, and Mark ix. 29.) When these spiritual activities are at a low ebb, we can do no mighty works for God; when they are in full activity "all things are possible" to us (Mark ix. 23). A study of this suggestive incident would reveal to many disheartened workers in the Church and in the world the secret of their non-success and the sure remedy for it.

The International Congress of Women has been an impressive object-lesson of the possibilities of good to be found in the union of women of all lands in movements of moral and social reform. The objects for which they have been pleading in these gatherings have been mainly humanitarian. The principle of arbitration formally endorsed by the Peace Congress at the Hague will gain an immense practical impetus from the interchange of opinion at the Women's Congress in London. There should be solid results also from the discussion of the question of restrictive legislation in regard to women's labour in factories. It would be an immense gain to all endeavours at reform if the leading women of various nationalities exercised their influence heartily on the side of pity and love and justice all over the civilized world. The Congress opens out a fresh possibility of moral, social, and religious progress in numberless directions.

In the discussion on an equal moral standard for men and women, Miss Hopkins raised an important point when she said that men look upon women as the greatest obstacles to a high standard of morality.

They are so indifferent to the character of the men they associate with, of the men to whom they give their daughters. They must be roused from this indifference. The mothers must be got hold of, that they may influence their children from the nursery. Many educated women stand aloof from this movement. These must be drawn into sympathy with it.

We fear that there is a great deal of truth in this statement; but what does it mean at bottom? Does it not mean that men and women are equally sinful, equally need to be born again, equally require the same moral standard, and equally are dependent on the grace of God? To speak as if woman had a superior moral nature to man is to cut away the ground of equality at a stroke. The Gospel of redemption recognizes "neither male nor female."

We are glad that the penetrating and arresting voice of Olive Schreiner has been raised in the interests of peace between Great Britain and the Transvaal. She shows in an impressive way, in a booklet issued by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, that war would be fratricidal, so closely are Dutch and British intermarried in South Africa; and that its consequences would be desolating, far-reaching, and long-enduring. Whatever there may be on the other side, in the way of wrongs to be adjusted and anomalies to be removed, they appear as dust in the balance compared with the evils of a war. Every true patriot and lover of righteousness must desire the right to be done—and the sooner the better—but he will wait a long time before resorting to war to get it done.

The turmoil in Belgium, which is said to be the most serious political crisis the country has ever seen since it had an independent existence, is attributed to the same cause as the trouble in France—viz., the plotting of the Romish party for dominance. Clericalism, privilege, and authority, are ranged against progress, fair play, and popular government. The Catholic party's avowed ambition is to rule over Belgium for ever, but of course so long a period as that must be taken out in instalments, and the Electoral Bill, which is now in dispute, would ensure the party thirty years of office. It is said that Romish countries are beginning to realise that their backward material condition is owing to the priest; surely they will come to see that the priest also is the cause of so much social bitterness and unrest. The claim to absolute power always provokes resentment and resistance, hence plotting, rioting, and bloodshed.

It is a disquieting fact that the steady decrease of births among the French nation marks the Protestant section as well as the Roman Catholic, in so much indeed that at a recent Synod of the Reformed Churches at Bordeaux it was stated that in some of the localities in the neighbourhood of the city there would be no Protestants left in the next generation, except by accession from other forms of religious faith. Meanwhile drunkenness is increasing in that country to such an extent that some of the secular newspapers, notably the Figaro, are sounding loud warnings as to the future of the race. These two moral questions convey a warning of the most solemn kind, and show how a few generations of Godless creeds inevitably tend to sap the ideas and the vitality of nations, as well as individuals.

It often happens in the history of human aims and ideals that the secondary results are more valuable than the primary. It would appear that this is to be so in the case of the Peace Conference. It is clear by this time that the direct object for which it was convened will not be attained; there is to be no disarmament, not even an arrest of the tendency to perpetual increase of European armaments. But even though disarmament is indefinitely delayed, international arbitration has been virtually secured, so that the Conference has done some solid work for humanity. Even this, twelve months ago, seemed a dream of the distant future; now the principle has received the unanimous endorsement of the great Governments of the world.

Is not the Dreyfus affair a parable of a much larger affair? The head and pivot of the persecuted captain's offending is his nationality. Dreyfus is a Jew. The anti-Dreyfusards are anti-Semites. Dreyfus is a burdensome stone to France. God will make Jerusalem a burdensome stone to all nations. Read and ponder the burden of the word of the Lord for Israel by his prophet Zechariah—xii-xiv, also Ezekiel xxxviii-xxxix.

The result of the popular vote in New South Wales on the question of Australian Federation is very satisfactory. A majority of more than 20,000 in favour of the Bill may be regarded as placing the measure beyond the reach of harm. The enthusiasm shown at Sydney and Melbourne has been very great. That English people in the colonies should wish this closer bond of union is only natural. Every strengthening of the cords which unite them means greater stability in all economical and commercial relations. This sentiment of oneness will also react most favourably on religious communities. They will see the need of drawing closer together for the common work of evangelization. Schemes of moral and social reform can be pushed forward with success when the disciples of Christ are at one concerning them. Isolation is weakness, unity is power.

While we may not agree with all the conclusions arrived at by Messrs. Joseph Rowntree and Arthur Sherwell in their exhaustive work The Temperance Problem and Social Reform, it is impossible to read without deep feeling the mass of well marshalled information with which that work is replete. The per capita consumption of alcohol in the United Kingdom is greater than it was in 1840 when the temperance reformation was in its infancy. The total expenditure last year on alcoholic beverages amounted to nearly one and a half times the amount of the national revenue, and was equal to all the rents of all the houses and farms in the United Kingdom.

Moreover, as things are at present, a large proportion of the working classes have absolutely no margin in their weekly incomes for expenditure upon alcoholic drinks. One result, then, of such expenditure is to create an enfeebled race of artisans, whose children are sent to school foodless and insufficiently clad. While temperance workers have been endeavouring to reduce the number of public-houses, publicans have been increasing their size. The modern gin palace continues to develop in attractiveness and accommodation for extended mischief. While crime generally has decreased 24 per cent. in England and Wales since 1861, drunkenness has increased 36 per cent. The value of licensed property in London has increased fourfold within the last twenty-five years. These few but terrible facts are only samples of many others which unitedly constitute an unanswerable indictment, and should call forth the earnest prayers of all Christian people, that ways may be opened for the removal of such a blight upon the well being of the community.

In a paper on "War's Aftermath," in The Forum, Mr. W. K. Rose, Reuter's correspondent in the Soudan campaign, states that among the causes that make the after results of war more fatal than battle itself alcoholism is the most destructive. In consequence of this, the best commanders now eschew alcoholic drinks. Havelock, Wolseley, Kitchener, and others, won their great victories on teetotal drinks. In the last Soudan war the army chaplains told the above writer that they "scarcely recognised some of their 'lambs' after a few weeks of drill and abstinence, so remarkably was their health improved." "Dutch courage" is thus finally discounted in war, which needs physical fitness as well as mental alertness for success. This testimony, coming from the pen of a keen observer, is a valuable addition to the armoury of advocates of abstinence. If the pitiless labours of war can be endured more efficiently by teetotalers, it follows that the labours of peace are better done without stimulants.

Plain speaking by one of themselves, kindled by deep conviction, will undoubtedly arouse to activity Christian women of the country in defence of the Protestant faith. The Ladies' League has a future before it of distinguished usefulness. English mothers need to have their eyes open to the insidious nature of much clerical instruction in schools. At the public meeting recently held, after emphasising the indifference that prevails on the serious nature of the Romeward trend in the establishment, Lady Wimborne stated that the religious education of the young was mainly in the hands of the clergy, and large bodies of these were at different stages on their way to Rome. Children were being won over to the side of their opponents. Her ladyship appealed to mothers to study the question for themselves, and unite with the League in its practical work.

The real trend of Ritualism may be seen in a pronounced form in the following extract from a speech by a ritualistic clergyman from Massachusetts to the Church Club of the diocese of Long Island, in denunciation of Sunday schools. He said:

> I do not believe in any Sunday school that ever was, or ever is, or ever will be. Sunday schools exist in order that some people may experiment with the souls of other people's children. They are totally and hopelessly wrong. I have talked with bishops of the Episcopal Church, and they have hung their heads in shame when they have spoken of the work of the Sunday school. The worst teaching in the United States is the teaching in the name of God under the rules of the Sunday schools.

The "suppressed premise" in this reasoning is the idea that religion can only be adequately taught by duly authorised and ordained persons—i.e., according to this exponent, by the priesthood. How false this is may be seen in the tremendous contrast between the state of religious education in Roman Catholic countries, where there are practically no Sunday schools, and in Protestant countries, where they flourish. They represent the difference between the value of ordination as a rite, and conviction as a power.

A valuable lesson on a large scale on the old-fashioned adage, "Honesty is the best policy," is given in an article by Mr. J. W. Wheaton on the development of dairy farming in Canada. From the start of this industry stringent laws for the safeguarding of its productions from adulteration were put in force, which have been splendidly successful in promoting honest and upright dealing. The result has been an extraordinary development of the industry in spite of keen and unprincipled competition, so that Canada is out-distancing all rivals in this direction. The cynical philosophy, that no man can succeed who is determined to be rigorously honest, is splendidly refuted in this instance on a national scale. In less than thirty years the amount of the Canadian output in dairy produce has increased, on its pure merits, from 1,000,000dols. to 150,000,000dols. in the matter of cheese alone. In secular as well as spiritual matters faith in one's principles ultimately brings success.

The Duke of Westminster is the friend of so many good causes that we never fail to regret his connection with the turf; and now he has expounded in public his views on betting. They are these:—

> He thought there was no great harm in betting itself; no great harm in the fact that money should pass from one to another; but the objectionable feature was that young men, and sometimes, he feared, young women too, would bet when they had not the means to pay for what they might unfortunately lose. It was there that the evil came in. If people betted in little amounts which they could afford to pay there was no great harm in it; but when they betted and were unable to pay, that led to a great deal of mischief.

We cannot regard his apology as satisfactory. The passing from hand to hand of money for which nothing has been done is bad in principle; betting in small sums leads on to betting in large sums; betting for a sum that the gambler can pay leads him to bet for sums he cannot honourably and honestly pay. Would the duke have reasoned as he did if for "betting" he had said "gambling"?

The sorrows of rich men have lately been laid before the public eye, and now we have those of monarchs exposed. Few suffer so much heart-break as some of the greatest in the earth. A morbid curiosity may be stirred to search it all out, but a humane and Christian feeling is moved by its lamentable afflictions. The humblest working-woman would not care to exchange places with the Queen of the Belgians, nor the hardest-wrought workingman with the Emperor of Austria. Mental derangement is one of the commonest diseases of kings. According to Mr. W. J. Corbet, M.P., who writes in the Arena:—

> The unrestrained exercise of despotic power, and the inordinate and illicit indulgence of sensual passion, destroy the dominion over self, and especially when coupled with the habit of intoxication, inevitably lead to mental deterioration, general paralysis, or lunacy.

Here is the note of warning against living as we like; the ability and the opportunity for unlimited self-gratification mostly leads to self-destruction.

The leader of the House of Commons said the other night that many of its members are above suspicion in money matters, the implication being, of course, that all are not in that happy and honourable catalogue. We suppose that both sorts are pretty well known to those in authority, and that there need be little difficulty in dealing with them according to their merits or demerits. Men who abuse their public position for private ends ought to be sternly discountenanced, especially such as practically sell their votes to promote certain commercial ventures.

The idea of "toy" services is one that might be profitably borne in mind in connection with Sunday School Anniversaries. If rightly conducted they could be made the means of giving great pleasure to children in Hospitals and Ragged Schools. These self-denying ministries of girls and boys to sick and suffering little ones, and to sad child-life in the slums, is a beautiful illustration of how children can manifest the spirit of Christ.

The partial use of a liturgy in public worship is being discussed in some Presbyterian circles. There is nothing, however, that demands more sanctified thought than the devotional portion of the worship of the sanctuary. It requires wide knowledge of men, deep religious feeling, and keen spiritual insight, to make the prayer and praise of God's house a veritable means of grace. It is because, in some instances, "extempore" prayer is so soulless, so conventional, and so wanting in expression of the heart's deepest need, that it has been imagined a liturgy might be introduced with profit. To some it seems most natural that the believing children of God should speak to Him in the simplest and freest manner. To others a liturgical form seems helpful. "Let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind."

Scripture Promises Proved.

ALL over the world to-day there are many souls who have never heard a missionary, but who have been led to Christ simply by the written Word of God; and you cannot exaggerate the blessing that it has been to many poor, troubled, tempted, sorrowing hearts. I do not know that I ever was more touched in my life than I was a few years ago in a mission station in connection with my own church. My assistant was visiting among the people who attended that church, and he met with an incident of which he told me afterwards, and I tell it to you simply as an illustration of the blessed work which this Book has done among the lowly and the poor.

There was a poor old labourer of seventy-four years of age who could just read this Book. To use Cowper's words, he "knew his Bible true, but knew no more." When my assistant entered his cottage he found the poor old man, bound fast with rheumatism, with his great big family Bible before him, with his horn spectacles on, and with his horny finger tracing out one by one the words of the sacred Book. My assistant went up to him and spoke to him, and, looking over his shoulder at the book, he noticed writing in the margin of the great Bible. Looking down still more narrowly, he found that the old man had written one word continually in the margin. It was the word "Proved."

This is what it meant. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."—"Proved." "My sheep shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand."—"Proved." "Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest."—"Proved." "Trust in the Lord, and do good, and verily thou shalt be fed."—"Proved." "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief."—"Proved." So he went on. The dear old saint had taken God's book and written out his own experience on the margin. Against each blessed promise of the book, as he had found it come true in his own life, he had written that one word "proved." Many of us to-day, with devout thankfulness to God, can say the same thing. We have proved that Word, and we have found it in very deed to be the Word of the living God.—Dr. G. S. Barrett at the Bible Society Meeting.

The Evangelical Alliance.—The first number of the new Quarterly, which is to be the official organ of this Society, has been issued, and contains a good variety of exposition and intelligence. The objects of the Alliance are equally as important as they have ever been; we hope many friends of Christian unity and religious freedom will subscribe to this Quarterly, and so keep abreast of the work of the Society. Copies may be had from the publishers of The Christian, price 1d.

Mildmay Conference.

THOUGHTS BY A VISITOR.

MILDMAY is the patriarch of Christian Conventions, and its features are familiar. Mildmay is the mother of many a Christly mission known world-wide, and perhaps a new photograph is not needed.

And yet to some this has been the first experience of Mildmay; and to all who attended it, the forty-third Conference will, we think, stand out with distinctness. The weather was so perfect, the attendances so well sustained, and, most of all, the subject under consideration was so timely and surpassingly important, that the gathering could hardly fail to be a notable one.

"There is no office of Christ," says John Owen, "that Satan labours so hard to obscure as his priestly one. Satan cares little, comparatively, for Christ the Prophet, Christ the King, as long as he can get men to forget Christ the Priest. That Christ is carrying on the office of a priest in heaven is the crown and glory of Christian theology."

The three appearings of the Lord Jesus—as seen in Heb. ix. 24-28—was the burden of the message from Mildmay. It cannot be said that every speaker kept strictly to the lines indicated; but with regard to the vital facts there was perfect agreement, and throughout the meetings the great subject was kept prominently to the front. It was cheering to notice that the most ultra-evangelical of the statements were those which were received with the greatest enthusiasm.

Ritualism were impossible if the eternal priesthood of the Lord Jesus were fully apprehended, and it is for lack of heart-knowledge of the Saviour in this supreme capacity that the Church to-day is faint and faltering, and altars to a (practically) unknown God are yet so common. The reports already given show how clear a note was struck from the very beginning, nor do readers of The Christian need to be told how Revs. Hubert Brooke and F. B. Meyer dealt with the first part of the subject. The present writer was absent from the evening meeting and some others of the sessions, but every one of them was spoken of gratefully and appreciatively. Wednesday, however, seemed the best day of all, perhaps because its special subject, the Priesthood of the Lord Jesus, and the very marked silence of the New Testament with regard to any new order of priests, was so exactly suited to the crying needs of to-day.

Everyone must have felt for the physical disability under which Rev. C. A. Fox delivered his mighty message, saturated as it was with saintliness and tenderness. It was a great pleasure to welcome him again, and if the laws of the platform were somewhat stretched, Rev. Dr. G. Hanson, his successor, had nothing to complain of in the heartiness of his own reception. The evening meeting was forceful and striking throughout. Nothing would have been better than the address in which Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas opened up the truth and prepared the way for Mr. Lane's convincing indictment of some of those "religious" ideas often cherished. Although it came down a little bit roughly on some of us, it was received with manifest enthusiasm, and will be long remembered.

On Thursday, the closing and crowning speech of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe—foreshadowing the coming glory of the Lord's return—(it was a torrent of earnest eloquence) was, to us, the event of the day—excepting, of course, the specially hallowed sweetness which gathers about the huge family assembled at the table of the Lord, in the United Communion. The conduct of this latter service was in the hands of Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor.

To choose from the afternoon meetings is a little distracting, and one feels well nigh torn asunder by the conflicting attractions; but it seemed as if the request for adherence to the choice made were faithfully observed.

The Bible readings were well attended, and the annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., under the well-known Mulberry Tree, was this year especially attractive.

No one could fail to be struck by the uniform kindness and considerateness of all stewards, attendents, and others connected with the Conference, and the readiness of everyone to give information.

It goes without saying that denominational differences are here obliterated; for "in honour preferring one another" is obviously a law of Mildmay. In few ways is this more strikingly manifest than in the beautiful self-effacement and hospitality of one who is so largely responsible for the arrangements made. For every exhibition of Christian love during these days of privilege, let us devoutly thank God, for "by this shall all men know" (John xiii. 35). For the manifest guidance of God in the selection of a subject so timely, for the unity and the unction of the speakers, for the fervour of the prayers, for the heartiness and praisefulness of the singing, we owe indeed, as we sung, "Ten thousand thanks to Jesus;" while of those supreme subjects for thanksgiving which we have had in contemplation we should more intelligently than ever, and more heartily than ever, say: "Ten thousand thousand more." "Now of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum: we have such a High Priest" (Heb. viii. 1).

"That I May Know Him."

Phil. iii. 10.

"That I may know Him!"
My soul, are not thy silent yearnings vain?
Can the dim taper of the finite mind
Pierce the high mystery of the Infinite?
Has not the world's whole wisdom strained each nerve
To pass the borders of the Unknowable?
Man's flickering lights have only paled and died
The further borne into the aye-deeper night.
Ah, me! must then my inmost need remain
Unsatisfied for ever? Must hope die?

Be still, my soul; there soars to heaven a voice—
"I thank Thee, Father,
Lord of heaven and earth,
That Thou hast hid these things
From the wise and prudent,
And hast revealed them unto babes."

The Guiding Star has risen; Christ is life's Light;
Fear not to climb the stair to Eternity
With such a flame to shine upon the steps.
E'en in the darkest cloud that o'ertakes
The ascending soul upon the mountain's side
Shines brighter still the vision, "Jesus only."
And on the mountain-top, with Christ the Lord,
All darkness is transfigured into light,
And heaven's self opens to the soul's full gaze;
For Christ, the Crucified, reveals—Himself.

Ruth Hurditch.

Summer Meetings.—An interesting summer meeting is announced by the Co-operative Holidays Association, in connection with the National Home Reading Union, to be held at Whitby for a week beginning July 22. In the list of lecturers we notice the names of the Dean of Durham, Dr. John Hunter, Mr. Hulbert Fulkerson, and others. The topics range from Mediæval Builders to Choral Music and Voice Production. What with picnics and biological excursions from this quaint old coast town of St. Hilda, the meetings are not likely to lack in interest. Circulars can be obtained from the Summer Meeting Secretary, the Abbey House, Whitby.

The Colour Question.

ARE they the Children of Ham, and has the curse on Ham's children fallen upon them? This is the standing question asked by both black man and white as soon as the subject of the origin of the Negro's colour is touched on.

The uncertainty of Scripture as to this is very instructive and complete. Were I a black man I should say the curse of Ham's children belongs to me by nature; for, as in the case of the prisoner to whom the king gave gold for weight of iron fetters, ounce for ounce, so misery and loss by nature can only increase the weight of blessing and gain in Christ; and our black brethren should never be offended by anyone hinting at such a thing. Still, as a white man, Scripture gives me no warrant to say the Negro comes under any curse not common to us all. The "unto the third and fourth generation" of the law surely suggests a limit to the curse on the succeeding generations?

The Negro colour cannot, however, be satisfactorily explained away by natural causes. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin?" shows that God hath done it.

The distribution of the Negro race shows clearly that their first home, and the point from which they were scattered, must have been in the neighbourhood of the Euphrates river, in common with all the human race.

India, the Malay Peninsula, and the distant islands of the sea beyond, were all peopled first by Negroes; and although the Aryan succeeded him in India, and the Mongolian in the Malay Peninsula, still they have all taken on the mark of his black skin, for black is a surviving colour, and white must give place to it. The first inhabitants of Africa were not Negroes, but the black colour now prevails from the Sahara southward.

The African's love of the grotesque and ridiculous, sometimes in religious matters, has all to do with his cheerful disposition and tardy emergence from pure devil worship. And those who were their teachers in the early days in the North American States, kept in with the slave owners and imposed upon the slaves a flimsy sort of "religion" of song and fear and ecstasy.

In the West Indies, and perhaps especially in British Guiana, may be seen to-day the fruit of real sober missionary work among large Negro populations.

The churches I visited there last year were practically entirely in the hands of black brethren. In Georgetown, however, it was beautiful to see black and white all mingling together in one large congregation, and sharing together the care of the church. Addresses also, given by the children of slaves, showed no extravagance in language, no assumption, and were accompanied with much spiritual power.

In no department of the work that the Lord has given us to do is there any room whatever for boasting, but the going back of four married couples from British Guiana to Central Africa within the past eight years has been no failure.

How those questions as to race and colour tend to dry up the springs of love and compassion! "Out of your bellies" surely means in the language of every day, "from the bottom of your hearts will flow rivers of living water;" so that while the Holy Spirit is the power, compassion is as the fluid that forms the stream that carries the Gospel ship along.

F. S. Arnot.

53, Belmont Drive, Liverpool.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, July 9. 1 Sam. xxiii.

DAVID teaches us that those who walk in the maze of life need constantly to look upward for direction. "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Our eyes need to be fixed continually on the Lord, that He should direct our way. Before he gave rein to his impulse to save Keilah, he waited to know that God was in it. When his men remonstrated, they only drove him back again to God to be quite assured. Twice, again, at Keilah, he sought the Divine direction; and surely it must have been in answer to prayer that the tidings of the Philistine raid forced Saul to abandon the pursuit which was so nearly successful. Psalms liv. and lvii. reveal the workings of his spirit in these terrible days.

This attitude of heart is what Jesus calls "abiding." It is the perfect rest of the believer in the Wisdom, Love, and Grace of his Divine Master and Friend, so that nothing transpires down here in this earthly human life, which is not at once communicated to the inner chamber of God's presence, to receive an instant attention and direction.

One of the most wonderful discoveries of this day of discovery has been that torpedoes may be steered by light. Light rays, which are themselves invisible, like the X-rays are transmitted through the air from a radiator on shore, or on shipboard, to a receiving apparatus attached to the torpedo, where they are converted into motive energy, sufficiently powerful to steer the rudder—and this at a distance of miles. May we not use this as an illustration of God's invisible guidance of his own in answer to their prayer? Invisible influences of direction are always proceeding from Him to us.

MONDAY, July 10. 1 Sam. xxiv.

This chapter reveals depths of piety and nobility in David's soul, which must always inspire our respect and arouse our sluggish souls to similar intention and behaviour. Men are so apt to think that opportunity always constitutes justification. Suppose, for instance, you have a strong assurance that a certain position or relationship is to be yours—an assurance which may be of God, or the reflection of your own strong desires—and suppose, also, that suddenly an opportunity is presented you of realising it, by means which seem justifiable by the circumstances, and even in the judgment of your friends, but which are not the best and would not tally with the highest morality—how strong the temptation becomes to think that God has put into your way the means of realising the hope on which your heart is resting; and how prone you are to act swiftly, suddenly, impetuously, instead of waiting on God to realise the good pleasure of his will.

This is the temptation, however, which David successfully mastered in this striking incident. He knew that he was to be king instead of Saul, that Saul had really been deposed by God, that the king had forfeited all claim by repeated violations of his word, and that, according to laws of human warfare, it was perfectly legitimate for the pursued to take the life of the pursuer if he had the chance. He was urged to this by his men. The chance of avenging his wrongs was so strange and unique, it seemed almost as though God had contrived it. But no, he would not touch the Lord's anointed, and insisted on waiting the Lord's leisure. It was one of the greatest hours of his life.

TUESDAY, July 11. 1 Sam. xxv.

What a contrast between the churl Nabal and his beautiful wife, as lovely in disposition as in face! It must have been a terrible ordeal for her to be united with a man, of whom his servant did not scruple to say, "He is such a man of Belial that one cannot speak to him." But with what admirable discretion she treated the situation! That she did not tell her husband when he was drunk with wine; that she made haste to deal with the crisis with her own gentle and judicious tact; that she marshalled her arguments to David with such admirable prudence—all indicated a remarkable amount of sanctified common-sense. Evidently the servants looked up to her as the true head of the home; and when evil menaced the whole household it was to her that they turned.

It is a blessed thing when husband and wife are so united that they are animated by one purpose, and move as one; but where this is not the case, let not the untowardness of one partner in the married tie hinder the devotion and grace of the other. Indeed, in the home-life, as in the scheme of redemption, where sin abounds, grace should much more abound, that where sin has reigned unto death, grace may reign in life. If these words are read by any who think that the difficulties of their home are a sufficient reason for abdicating their position of high and devoted living,—No, never. Let them follow a straight course; realising their highest ideal, never stepping down to the level of their circumstances, but striving to lift these to their own holy standing. "Hitch your waggon to a star," is good advice. "Be not conformed. . . . be transformed" (Rom. xii. 1, 2.)

WEDNESDAY, July 12. 1 Sam. xxvi.

Again the treacherous Ziphites conspired against David by communicating his whereabouts to Saul. But their treachery only served as a foil to the intrinsic nobility of David's character. God made the wrath of man to praise him, and restrained its remainder, so that his servant escaped as a bird from the snare of the fowler; the snare broke, and he escaped. Here also we may read Psalm liv.

It was a bold act for David and Abishai to dare to thread the narrow passages of the camp, passing between the watchfires and the sentinels, and standing together to talk in whispers over the prostrate body of the sleeping monarch. Surely David must have felt that he was specially commissioned and prompted to the deed by God Himself. As he said in one of his Psalms, "By Thee I run upon a troop, and by my God do I leap over a wall." And there seems some corroboration of this thought from the words, "a deep sleep from the Lord was fallen upon them" (verse 12). The Lord put the resolve into David's heart, and then co-operated with him in its execution. There are actions in life, which we are led to do as it were by a Divine impulse; but these are not to be followed as a rule or copied by others. In the present instance, there was a Divine reason for David's adventure, that Saul might be warned once more, and that the absolute integrity of the young outlaw might be approved. But do not forget the main lesson of this chapter, as of the former, that expediency and opportunity do not justify us in doing wrong.

It is pleasant to note David's frequent references to the living Lord (10, 16, 19, 23).

THURSDAY, July 13. 1 Sam. xxvii.

Ah! soul, it is sad to hear thee talk like this, "I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul." Remember how God has promised to make thee king, and to give thee a place beside Him in the glory; this promise has been solemnly ratified by his oath and by the blood of the cross. He cannot retract it, and He does not wish to. He loves thee too well to let thee perish by the hand of thy great adversary. If thou wert to perish, would not hell be filled with derision, and a fatal bar be drawn across the escutcheon of His honour? Might it not be said that He could redeem but was not able to help; that He could forgive but was impotent to cleanse and sanctify? Dost thou not see that He counted the cost before He translated thee from the power of darkness into the kingdom of his dear Son? He surely never would have done so much had He not known Himself able to keep thee from drifting back!

Thou art counting that Philistia is safer ground than Canaan. It is as though to conform a little to the world is better than to live altogether outside it. Ah! thou wilt live to rue thy fatal error. First, thou wilt, like David, be led into a life of deceit and fraud, which will fill thee with the constant dread of discovery. Next, thou wilt be duped into a position of extreme delicacy and difficulty, in which, like David again, thou wilt be thrown into apparent antagonism to thy brethren. And, lastly, this Ziklag of thine shall be burnt with fire, and thou shalt weep over it till thou hast no more power to weep; aye, thou wilt be within an ace of losing that very life thou art now so keen to save. No, the caves of Adullam are safer than the cities of Philistia.

FRIDAY, July 14. 1 Sam. xxviii.

The soul of man cannot live apart from the unseen world. Divorce it from God, and it will fill the empty space with demons. That was the cause of Saul's undoing. "The Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets. Then said he to his servants, 'Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her.'" We are sometimes asked how we can account for the rise and growth of Christian Science (which is as unChristian a system as could be desired), of Spiritualism, of Palmistry, and other delusions. The solution is simple enough When a man shuts God out of his life, and holds down the truth in the unrighteousness of his life, God gives him over to a strong delusion, that he should believe a lie.

That there should be an apparition of Samuel occasions no difficulty. We know that the prophet himself was at rest in God; but, without doubt, some demon assumed his form and voice, as demons still assume the characteristics of the departed in spiritualistic séances. And that the demon spoke the truth is not to be wondered at. The Devil can quote Scripture to suit his purposes, and often in Christ's life-time demons acknowledged Him as the holy one of God.

What a bitter thing it is to disobey God! Step by step the soul drifts further away from Him, and in the darkness, caused by the withdrawal of the true light, jealousy, hate, cowardice, murder, atheism breed. Remember that conjunction of adjectives: "It is an evil thing and bitter that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God" (Jer. ii.).

SATURDAY, July 15. 1 Sam. xxix.

David was in a strait, indeed! To what a pass had eighteen months of subterfuge and deceit brought him! On the one hand, was his natural unwillingness to deceive the trust of Achish, who seems to have turned to him for sympathy and chivalrous loyalty; and on the other hand, there was a yet stronger unwillingness to be found in arms against his people. Doubtless this strait drove him to a very agony of prayer. God must deliver him. And it is comforting to realise that when we have drifted into positions of intolerable perplexity, through our own fault, we have a perfect right to turn to God for help if we are prepared to confess our fault and to repair it so far as we may. Therefore, when the Philistine lords angrily objected to David's remaining in the army, he must have hailed their rough words as the very answer of God. Nothing would have been more opportune.

Poor Achish, he was destined to be disillusionized. He thought that David had been upright, good in his sight as an angel of God, no evil found in him. Ah! he would learn after a while that the whole eighteen months had been a tissue of lies (xxvii. 11, 12). What dishonour Christ has suffered at the hands of his professed followers! Is it wonderful that the world does not believe? Is it wonderful that men turn from Him with averted faces? Let us take care that our conscience is void of offence toward God and man, lest some guileless Achish be robbed of faith in both.

Enid Desmond.—2.

THE evangelist had closed his mission. The teacher whose place Enid was taking, because she was leaving the town, had only one more Sunday to gather around her the class she had so carefully and successfully taught; and Joan, confined to bed by a disabling headache, was reviewing the events and disappointments of the past weeks, and feeling something of the heart-sickness of hope deferred, when Enid came into the room. One glance at her face made Joan's heart thrill with fresh hope; its expression was so changed—softened and gentle and almost awe-stricken—and her eyes were red with recent tears. She was the first to speak.

"Joan," she said softly, "the vision has come!"

And then, as Joan could only take her hand and hold it with a pressure of joy that was speechless in its intensity, she told her story.

"I have had an awful struggle," she said; "it has been going on for weeks, and I don't know how I have kept it from you. How little you knew when you thought I was not caring! It began in London. I expected to be so happy, and instead of that I had the bitterest disappointment. I had sight-seeing and visiting to my heart's content, and every one was kinder than I had thought possible, and yet through it all I had the strangest feeling of DISSATISFACTION AND HEARTACHE.

"Of course I kept it all to myself, and I was continually congratulated on my high spirits; but they were just effervescence, and sometimes, even when I was seeing things that at one time would have fascinated me—picture galleries, for instance—I had the greatest difficulty in feeling any interest, and was really wretched, as though I had come to the end of everything—I suppose what is meant by the word blasé.

"But fancy me, Joan, a young girl fresh from the country, blasé! I was really a complete puzzle to myself, and I got quite cynical, and wondered if life was worth living! Then Ellen Arnot died. Lizzie would tell you about it; I never did—I was too sore-hearted, for I cared more for her than for any other friend I had met in London. We were just the same age, and alike in many of our tastes; but she was not so volatile as I, and far stronger, and I looked up to her, and was so proud when she seemed to like me. Then she went to stay with friends in the West End, and whilst she was there she heard a sermon on 'God is love,' from a minister who knew how to preach, and she was what you would call really converted. I don't understand these things—yet. And there was no fuss—Ellen was not that kind of girl; but Mary Arnot told me all about it, and she said Ellen was quite changed: so satisfied and happy.

"But I never saw her again. She took typhoid fever, and came home ill, and died only three days after. Philip was sent for, and he stayed till all was over, and I never saw him so moved. She was quite conscious, and knew she was dying, but it did not trouble her at all. She seemed only to think of speaking to the servants, and to everyone who came into the room, about Jesus, and the joy that his love could give even in dying. The old doctor who attended her, and was not himself a special Christian, told Mrs. Arnot afterwards that never but once in all his practice had he attended such a wonderful death-bed, and that was of an eminent philanthropist who had done no end of good.

"And this was only a young girl like myself! Joan, when I heard all this, I could not help beginning to think that, after all, Christianity was something really worth having. And yet I did not want to have it. Is it not unaccountable that in a girl brought up as I have been there should have been such a shrinking from religion?"

Then Joan found her voice: "It is not religion you want—

IT IS CHRIST."

"Yes, I know now," Enid said, softly; "but I want to tell you all. I had a pretty bad time after I came home—such a dreary feeling, as if all the sunshine had gone out of my life, no power of enjoyment left. I was so afraid you would see it, Joan, dear, and I did not want you to know. Then Mr. Moron came, and after that it was terrible—just as if a real personal power was close to me, struggling with me; and the more I felt it, the more firmly my will was set in opposition. I have paced the dining-room, when all else were at the meetings, and have actually lifted my hands in defiance, and said out loud, 'I won't yield!' Was it not awful? For now I know it was God the Holy Spirit whom I was resisting."

"How wonderful it is!" Joan interrupted. "I remember being so impressed with the powerful way in which Mr. Moron used to plead—that those who would not come to the mission might be specially wrought upon by the Holy Spirit in their homes; but I little thought how swiftly the answer would come—and to you, Enid!"

"Yes, that would be it, I suppose," Enid said. "And the same thing went on until Mr. Moron left—and then I thought I should have peace when I was not continually hearing about him and his meetings. But it has been far worse, until I really thought I should lose my reason. But all the time I never thought of giving away until this afternoon. I was standing before the glass brushing my hair, when suddenly it seemed as if a voice spoke, so pleadingly: 'You foolish girl, what are you striving against? You are fighting against your best interests.' My arms fell to my side, and in a moment my self-will was all gone, and, answering back, I said with all my heart, 'I won't strive any more;' and I was so strangely melted that I have been crying almost ever since. I cannot understand it all, Joan; but now I do want to be a Christian, and you must teach me how."

"You say I have only to 'come,' Joan; but how can I, so wicked as I have been? I am sure I have not repented enough."

"It is not I who say it, Enid. You can read the Saviour's own words about it: 'Come unto Me . . . and I will give you rest,' and 'Him that cometh, I will in no wise cast out.' From human lips you would think such assurances strongly conclusive, how much more from Christ's!"

But Enid—brought thus to the crucial test of simple trust in a Divine promise as an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast—found the very simplicity of the process its greatest difficulty, just as it is in the unstruggling committal of the body to the water in learning to swim, which is perhaps the closest earthly parallel to this supreme act of faith. Again and again the sisters talked and prayed together—Enid, docile as a child now, but with a keen intelligence that craved for demonstration; and Joan, in whose religious experience the foundations had been laid strong and deep in the plain truths of Scripture, showing her how the plan of salvation quite as much as to the heart.

APPEALED TO THE REASON

At last, with a trembling faith, Enid ventured really to trust the Divine record—that God hath given unto those who claim it "eternal life, and that this life is in his Son;" but the brightness and peace that she expected did not immediately follow, no doubt that the quality of her faith might be fully tested. But she was not long kept waiting. Once more it was when shut out from all human help and ministration that the "demonstration of the Spirit" came. Kneeling in dumb appeal before God, and feeling as if, after all, she had to keep herself in union with Him, and that it was a somewhat dreary and joyless process, she "suddenly felt," to use her own words, "as though, after being in a room where closed shutters kept out all the light, they were in a moment all flung back, and brightness indescribable surrounded her." The struggle was all over; she had beheld with open face the glory of the Lord, and those who knew and loved her so well needed not to be told of it by any words—the radiance of her whole aspect was sufficient testimony.

Enid has passed many milestones on the path of life since then, and some stretches of the road have been rough walking, and the clouds overhead have sometimes been very, very dark; but the assurance and inspiration of that first stage in her heavenward journey has never been lost. To her, Christianity is not a process of reasoning merely, a vague apprehension of a yet vaguer transcendentalism—it is a certainty; she knows whom she has believed. And as, in the Bible, and in providence, and in the communications of His grace, she learns more and more of the characteristics of her Saviour-Friend, she has the strong confidence that befits children of the great King Jesus, who by his atoning sacrifice on the cross became "the Lamb that was slain," and obtained eternal redemption for her.

M. C. F.

Summer Daybreak.

On the depth of summer gladness,
Oh, who can tell it all!
The cuckoo comes and wakes us
With his haunting mellow call.

And in each dewy valley
The dawn has left behind
Soft bridal dreams all silvered
Still floating on the wind.

And there the glorious vapours,
Caught in the morn's embrace,
Seem guardian angels stealing
Back to the holy place.

But hush, mid soundless rapture,
The cool earth re-appears,
Fresh bathed in dews of Lethe,
Fresh healed of all her tears!

Through depths of virgin stillness,
Through depths of prayerlike praise,
Glistening with benediction,
Earth glides upon her ways.

And the thrush upon the beech tree
Is now worshipping aloud,
And the lark has climbed the summit
Of the nearest shining cloud.

And the maybloom's on the thornbush,
Like a festive fall of snow:
How its perfume woos and wanders,
Yet will never let earth go!

Oh the woodlands and green thickets
Oh the breath of kine and dews!
And the widening blue horizon,
With new life's delicious news!

Oh the woodlands and green thickets,
And the hidden bluebell pools!
And the teeming wealth and wonder
Breaking through all Nature's rules!

Oh the visions and the voices!
As blue Heaven comes down to earth,
And Creation's grand old harpstrings
Murmur back primeval mirth.

And the air is brightly thrilling
With a joy it cannot stay,
Just as if some festal pageant
Had now passed it on its way.

And the leafless boughs have woven
All unheard a dainty shrine,
Where the nests are swung in secret,
And the watchers are Divine.

Ah! the life of God is boundless,
And the love of God is sweet;
And old earth is heaven's last suburb,
And hard by the Golden Street!

CHARLES A. FOX.

Midnight Meeting Movement.—Sir George Williams, according to annual custom, entertained the late frequenters of the Strand last Wednesday night. The thunderstorm which swept over London at an earlier hour in the evening than that fixed for the meeting, somewhat dispersed the young women, and they were very difficult to find. Still, a goodly number responded to the invitation, and were affectionately addressed by Sir George himself, Mrs. G. S. Reaney, and Mr. M'Cree, the secretary of the Midnight Meeting Movement, under whose direction the gathering was organised. Many of those present felt their position very keenly, and entered freely into conversation as to their rescue from a life of sin.

"Regions Beyond" Missionary Union.

THE sympathetic audiences that assembled to celebrate the twenty-seventh anniversary of the missionary work associated with the names of Dr. Grattan Guinness and his devoted family must have received deep spiritual blessing, no less from the heart-searching addresses that were delivered than from the stimulating recital of facts in connection with the evangelization of the heathen.

The proceedings began with an afternoon gathering in Harley Chapel, the capacious building being filled. Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, dwelt briefly on the words, "How shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent?" The work of preparation and sending called, he remarked, for organization, and it would be difficult indeed to find a more suitable organization than the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union. Mr. Denny referred to the early history of Dr. Guinness' missionary efforts in Africa, and therefrom. To accomplish lasting work in the mission field, it is necessary so to train natives that they may usefully fill positions as teachers among their fellows. That result can only be brought about by despatching, in the first instance, good men, capable of instructing and educating the converts. Such men are provided from Harley House.

THE REMARKABLE DEVELOPMENTS

Dr. Grattan Guinness gave a graphic sketch of the changed aspect of affairs in the Congo country where, at the outset of the work, heathenism reigned supreme; but where there are now numerous mission stations, with large numbers of converts. Yet the gross darkness of the world is appalling indeed. Look, for instance, at the Mohammedan and heathen populations of the world. Far away from the Mediterranean to Arabia and right on to Persia and India and the Far East stretches an enormous mass of Mohammedanism, whose votaries, it may almost be said, are more Mohammedan than we are Christian. They are up to prayers at 4 a.m.; five times a day they answer at the call of the muezzin. With respect to the scantiness of mission work generally, as compared with the giant need, Dr. Guinness said that nothing had been more saddening to him in travelling than the experience of coming again and again upon the edge of Christian work, and realizing that beyond was darkness, untouched and unrelieved. Concluding a comprehensive view of Asiatic and African work with a reference to India, the speaker vividly indicated that even in Madras it is easily possible to go into populous centres where the people are utterly ignorant of Christ. After a special reference to his recent visit to Egypt, and of missionary development opened up by the changed conditions of government and the railway to the south, "the new Nile door to Central Africa," Dr. Guinness traced the rise and progress of his work from the beginning in one house on Stepney Green, noting the additions of Harley House College, of Cliff College in Derbyshire, and Doric Lodge. God has blessed the work wonderfully. The students have carried the Gospel far and wide —they are toiling in forty different countries. In nearly every province of China they are to be found, and, when in the East, he (Dr. Guinness) came upon one missionary who had started a pioneer work in the islands south of Japan. In South America, too, the work had been blessed, and, in conclusion, the speaker made a pathetic appeal for an increased measure of support.

THE WONDERFUL PROSPECTS

Captain Gamble, recently returned from Fashoda and Sobat, gave a moving account of the Anglo-Egyptian conquest of the Soudan, describing the personal bravery of the dervishes and the cruel character of the Khalifa's rule. The speaker made special reference to the black tribes, whose country begins about 200 miles south of Omdurman. The name of Christ was unheard of among them. Indeed, they are entirely without any form of religion, unless the term could be applied to a malign influence which they propitiated in times of war by a slaughter of fowls. These people are amenable to good influences, and expressed keen satisfaction at the medical aid afforded them. Captain Gamble suggested the establishment of a medical mission amongst them, and expressed the opinion that, however valuable the Sirdar's new college might be, the true method of civilizing the Soudan was by Christianity.

Professor Newell, of Chicago, followed with a forcible address on prevailing prayer as a necessary factor in the evangelization of the world. A man's effectiveness is measured by what he can prevail upon God to do for him. The secret of the triumphs of the prophets was this power to prevail. It is not enough to join in Christian fellowship. That is an excellent thing in itself, but we must not allow a to send us away feeling we have done something when we have nothing. Each one is to receive reward according to his own labour. We must seek God in the spirit of Jacob, who, determined to have not merely a lamed hip but death itself rather than go short of the blessing, obtained power even over the angel. Thus he obtained his new name of Israel, and every man has the "Israel" in him, to wrestle and obtain from the Lord. The speaker added other familiar instances, germane to the subject, from the lives of Abraham, Moses, and Elijah, and concluded with a fervent appeal to Christians for more whole-hearted service. After prayer from Rev. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Harry Guinness made a brief financial statement. In addition to a sum of £2,500 still required for a steamer, £4,000 is needed, one half for the missions on the Congo, and the remainder for South America and for the maintenance of the extensive training centres.

BEAUTIFUL SENSE OF SYMPATHY

An adjournment was next made to a tea and conversazione in the grounds of Harley House. The many friends of the institutions rallied in large numbers, the students and deaconesses were present, and the occasion was both pleasant and stimulating. At the "garden meeting" which followed, reports of the various departments of work were given.

From Dr. Harry Guinness' statement, which was full of interest, it appeared that all the Training Colleges are in a thriving condition, as also is the Medical Mission and nursing work in East London. Thirty-two students have either left for the foreign field or are about to do so. The varied agencies in connection with Berger Hall have been maintained, while a large number of chapels and mission halls have been provided with preachers.

Northfield Extension.

ONE of Mr. D. L. Moody's latest projects is a sort of Northfield "Extension." For the past two years Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, has visited America, at the invitation of Mr. Moody, to give addresses in some of the leading American cities on lines similar to those at Northfield.

This year Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, has accepted an invitation to spend the months of August, September and October in a similar work. Already a number of pressing invitations have been received for Mr. Morgan to speak in some of the leading cities. The arrangements for these missions have been made by Mr. W. R. Moody, East Northfield.

Lucknow is the fifth largest city in India, with a population of 270,000 people, of whom 161,000 are Moslems. The Church Missionary Society has sanctioned a special mission for Mohammedans, and as soon as the men are forthcoming they will be sent out. Meanwhile, we who work in Lucknow are anxious to prepare the way for them by building a mission hall in the heart of the city, which will be of the greatest service in the carrying on of their work. At present we have about £100 in hand. But to purchase land and erect a suitable building will cost at least £600.

A. J. Birkett,
E. A. Hensley,
C.M.S. Missionaries, Lucknow.

International S.S. Lessons.

July 16, 1899.

The Hebrews in the Fiery Furnace.—Dan. iii. 14-28.

Golden Text.—Dan. iii. 17.

Lesson Connection.

RECALL last lesson. Nebuchadnezzar continued his victorious career, until he had become king over almost all the then known world. He had been back to Palestine and destroyed Jerusalem (see Jer. xxxix and xl). God had sent him a remarkable dream, a Divine revelation of the future. Great honours were accorded to Daniel because he was enabled to interpret this dream; and at his request his three friends had also been promoted to high government offices.

Introductory.

Nebuchadnezzar had returned from his victories, proud of his success. He seems to have been a man of deep religious feeling, and erected the huge "image in human likeness" in honour of his principal god, commanding all the chief people in his kingdom to come to its dedication and to worship and offer thanksgiving for all his glorious achievements. The image was ninety feet in height, and set up on the plain of Dura; a mound of brick some twenty feet high still remains in that plain, which, doubtless, is the ruin of the pedestal of this image. (Try to picture the whole scene, the gathering of the crowds, the huge golden image, the striking up of the music, the prostration of the multitudes, and the three standing figures arrayed in their gorgeous robes of office.) These three were now about thirty or thirty-five years of age; they had been faithful to God in their youth, and now He gave them strength to stand firm in their manhood. The oriental despot is enraged when he is told that they have dared to disobey him, and they are arraigned into his presence. (Another picture of magnificence.)

Dan. iii. 14-28.

Verse 14. "Is it on purpose that ye serve not my gods, nor worship my image?"

Verse 15. "If it be a mistake, I will give you another chance." This great King was their friend, and wanted to save them. Note his question. The cornet was a horn; flute, like a mouth-organ; harp, sackbut, and psaltery, stringed instruments; dulcimer, something like bagpipes.

Verses 16-18. "We have no anxiety in answering." Their minds were quite decided. Nothing should make them break God's law (Ex. xx. 5). Note their answer to the king's question: "God can?" "God will?" It is only those who serve God who can have this confidence.

Verses 19-23. The Babylonians bound their captives with chains; the fire melted the chains. Probably the furnace was that in which the gold for the image had been melted.

Verses 24-27. "A son of the gods." Nebuchadnezzar knew that only a Divine Being could nullify the effect of such a fire. It was doubtless the "Son of God." The Saviour who often appeared for the deliverance of his children. "The Angel of the Lord."

Verse 28. Nebuchadnezzar acknowledges God to be the highest of all gods, but not the only god. He had to pass through a great trouble himself before he could say, "Now I, Nebuchadnezzer, praise and extol and honour the King of Heaven" (chap. iv. 28-37).

Practical Lessons.

The great use of trouble and trial (Mal. iii. 2, 3 James i. 2, 3, 4, 1 Peter i. 7).

True trust in God takes away fear of all else. What kind of trust have I? "I will trust and not be afraid."

God can deliver from all trouble, but if He sees we need the test, He will deliver us in the trouble.

Fire refines, trials burn earthly bonds, and we walk with Christ in liberty of soul.

Even children who try to stand up for Jesus will often be persecuted by their companions.

Our Lord's words (Matt. xxv. 21, also Rev. ii. 7, 17, iii. 5, 12, 21, vii. 13-17).

Examples.

Deliverance. — Joseph, Noah, Hezekiah, Peter, Paul, &c.

Bearing trial.—Persecution of Christians. Many martyrs.

Promises.—(Isa. xliii. 2, Ps. xxiii. 4, Ps. xci. 14, promises there. Zech. xiii. 9, 2 Cor. iv. 17.)

Prof. Newell's Bible Course.

LESSON V.—GENESIS XXXVI.-L.

JOSEPH: SON—SUFFERER—SOVEREIGN.

ERE taking up the wondrously interesting story of Joseph, we must trace the career of Jacob, after Gen. xxxii.

We find, after Jacob's Peniel experience, that he is not ready at once to go on to the full patriarchal testimony. He had prevailed with God there, even having power over the angel, as we find in Hosea xii. 3, 4. The root on which the name Israel is built signifies one who has his own way, or rules victoriously, as a prince. Jacob had had his way with the Lord (through Divine purpose and empowerment, certainly), and his new name is given in view of that element of his spiritual nature which would not let God go.

But to prevail with God and get his blessing is not necessarily to be freed from all idols. Samson had a wonderful way of taking hold of God and prevailing to do mighty things. (The idea that Samson was a muscular prodigy is grotesque, in view of Jud. xvi. 5, &c.) But Samson never abandoned all for God; he kept his idols till they ruined him. Jacob had idols, even after his name became Israel. Indeed, it may be doubted if of himself to God was at all in his mind on that night of his wrestling. He was for getting from God rather than giving to Him; for prevailing over, rather than yielding to, the angel.

THE IDEA OF CONSECRATION

The kingdom of heaven does suffer violence; men of violence do take it by force. There is no disputing it—there is "royal power in the renewed will." Abraham, Moses, Samuel, Elijah, Ezra, and Daniel knew how to have their way with God, and actually had it, too, time and again. (See Gen. xviii.; Ex. xxxii. and Deut. ix; 1 Sam. xii.; 1 Kings xviii.; Ezra viii., ix; Dan. ix., x.).

But for a man to discover the secret of faith and have his way with God is one thing; for God to have his full way with the man is quite another. And Jacob has to be asked at Peniel, "Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after My name?" He has obtained the blessing, and it is given forthwith, but his newly-awakened desire to know God Himself must be searched out and purified ere it is answered. At Bethel, twenty years before, Jacob was afraid of God, and his spirit rushed out of God's presence into religion—he sets up a pillar, and vows (xxviii. 16-22).

At Peniel, in his dire need, he has set himself and prevailed. He gets the blessing he seeks, and no doubt that blessing included more than he realised. This we must see when we reflect that the name he got that night was given to his seed for ever. Somehow, the chosen people were born that night. But Jacob's prayer to know the angel's name is turned right back into his own heart. "Wherefore is it thou dost inquire?"

And we notice that Jacob does not press this prayer as he had done that for

HIS OWN BLESSING.

He does not use his Israel power here. And may we not see the reason ere we proceed far? In chapter xxxiii., after his clever ruse to elude Esau's importunity (xxxiii. 12-17), Jacob comes in peace into Canaan, where, instead of at once proceeding, according to his promise, to Bethel (xxviii. 21, 22) and on to Hebron, to take up the Abrahamic testimony, as he knew he must eventually do, he stops at Shechem and buys land! (xxxiii. 18, 19). This Abraham and Isaac had been content not to do. We see Jacob still avoiding the full pilgrim testimony. Of course he erects an altar at Shechem, for he must be religious, whether he is godly or not. (Just as to-day with the Ritualists, the greatest foe of real fellowship with God in Christ is the body of rites and ceremonies, partly Jewish, partly Pagan, that go by the name of the "Christian Religion.") But there is no record that God appeared to Jacob in xxxiii. 20. And chapter xxxiv. reveals the sad but sure result of such compromising.

But xxxv. 2-4 reveals to us the true cause of the compromise. Jacob knew these idols were in the family. Rachel had doubtless had them out once and again. But Rachel was herself the real idol; and since she cherishes them, they are not judged. But the ringing command of xxxv. 1 no longer permits delay. So the gods are buried and Bethel sought. At last God graciously appears to him. And he is willing to go on slowly towards Hebron. But he cannot reach Hebron with Rachel. Even if he could, she would have been a sad hindrance to

PATRIARCHAL LIFE AND TESTIMONY.

So God must take her away (xxxv. 16-20). And it is Jacob who lingers at her grave to set up the pillar of ardent devotion; but it is Israel who journeys on to Hebron (verses 21, 22). He is at last free. And now Isaac is called home after the years of lingering for Jacob to come. And Jacob, in the wondrous grace of God, is the third great patriarch!

The chapter names of our advance Lesson are:

XXXVII. Joseph Sold.
XXXVIII. Judah.
XXXIX. Potiphar.
XL. Butler and Baker.
XLI. Joseph's Exaltation.
XLII. Brothers' First Visit.
XLIII. Brothers' Second Visit.
XLIV. Brothers' Humiliation.
XLV. Reconciliation.
XLVI. Jacob in Egypt.
XLVII. Blessing Pharaoh.
XLVIII. Blessing Ephraim and Manasseh.
XLIX. Blessing Twelve Sons.
L. Funeral.

Drill thoughtfully on these name still you hold every chapter's contents in memory.

I. Condense the story into a simple and concise statement of its great facts, and give each fact a single word name if possible. Thus you have your topical outlined. Labour to make this outline as perfect and satisfactory as possible. Review the story repeatedly by means of it.

II. Before beginning the study of Joseph, it will be well to look at the thirty-eighth chapter, which makes a break in the narrative, to tell Judah's shameful story. A bad lot, these sons of Jacob, in those days. But what a marvel of God's grace that this dishonoured woman, Tamar, should be one of the women in the line of our Lord's birth! (See Matt. i. 3.) Three names—Tamar, Rahab and Uriah's wife—forbid all fleshly glorying in that genealogy.

III. Take up now the life of Joseph, according to Lesson II. Do this work most thoroughly. You will be entranced with the beauty of the character before you, and will be greatly profited by knowing him. Examine especially the following topics: The ingenuous lovableness of his youth; the peculiar love of his father for him—reasons for it, in Joseph, in his brethren, in Jacob; his prophetic dreams—arguing what and what present and future purposes of God? the exact state of his brethren's hearts toward him, and why? the startling special providences manifest in his whole life; God's reasons for allowing his imprisonment in Egypt; the side-by-side development of patience and power in Joseph; his marked ability—how manifested? his loyalty to God, and his faith in the covenant promises in the midst of dazzling worldly success; his beautiful filial fidelity. The word, I think, that best sums up his many sided character is used of his Great Antitype in Ps. xlv. 2, middle clause.

SPIRITUAL STATE IN JOSEPH,

Joseph is one of the most remarkable of all the human types of Christ. We will note some of the important respects in which his history foreshadows that of Christ. "The sufferings of Christ and the glories that should follow them" is the theme which Joseph's story so wondrously sets forth. Compare the question of Jesus to the two in Luke xxiv. 26; also Heb. ii. 9, 10; v. 7, 8. In the sense of 1 Peter ii. 21, John xv. 19, 20, Rom. viii. 17, and 2 Tim. ii. 12, we see in Joseph an illustration of the life of present suffering and future glory to which every believer is called. Of course, Joseph is peculiarly a type of Christ in his relations with his brethren after the flesh, the nation of Israel.

JOSEPH.	CHRIST.
1. Lived with his father in Hebron, "the place of fellowship" (xxxvii. 14).	Was with his Father before coming into the world (John xvi. 28).
2. Joseph was his father's beloved son (xxxvii. 3).	Christ was the beloved Son of his Father (Matt. iii. 17).
3. Hatred by his brethren (xxxvii. 4).	Hated by his brethren (John xv. 24); and at first by his own brethren in his Nazareth home (John vii. 1-7).
4. Received (in his two dreams) the revelation of God's purposes concerning himself (xxxvii. 5-11, xli. 9, xlv. 5-9).	Received the revelation of God the Father's will concerning Himself (Isa. l. 4-9, John v. 20-30, John xii. 27-28).
5. Faithfully and frankly testified to his brethren of what God had revealed to him (xxxvii. 5-6, 9-10).	Christ did the same to his brethren (John viii. 40, xviii. 37).
6. Was hated the more for his words (xxxvii. 8-11).	Was hated the more for his words (John xv. 22-25, vii. 7, viii. 40).
7. Was envied by his brethren (xxxvii. 11).	"Pilate knew that for envy the chief priests had delivered Him up" (Mark xv. 10).
8. Was sent down by his Father out of Hebron to minister to his brethren (xxxvii. 13, 14).	"The Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world" (1 John iv. 14). "He came unto his own" (John i. 11).
9. "They said, 'Behold this dreamer cometh; come, let us slay him'" (xxxvii. 19).	"They said: 'This is the heir; come, let us kill him'" (Matthew xxi. 38).
10. They sold Joseph for twenty pieces of silver, and delivered him over to the Ishmaelites (xxxvii. 28).	Jesus Christ was sold for thirty pieces of silver and delivered over to the Gentiles (Matthew xxvi. 14-15).
11. Put, innocent, into the Egyptian dungeon with two criminals (xl. 3).	Put, innocent, into the place of death with two malefactors (Luke xxiii. 32-33).
12. Raised up from the dungeon by the hand of Pharaoh, made second in the kingdom, and given all authority (xli. 14, 43-44).	Raised up from the dead by God's power, made to sit at his right hand, and given all authority (Acts ii. 32-36, Matthew xxviii. 18, revised version).
13. Was thirty years old when they proclaimed his kingly exaltation (xli. 41-46).	Was thirty years old when He began to proclaim his kingdom (Luke iii. 23, cf. Mark i. 14-15).
14. Took a bride to share his glory (xli. 45).	Jesus is taking a bride to share his glory (Ephesians v. 25-27, Revelation xix. 7-9, 14, xxi. 2).
15. When the seven years of famine came, his rejecting brethren were compelled to come to him for aid (xlii.).	When the seven years of great tribulation come (Daniel ix. 27, xii. 1, Matthew xxiv. 21), Christ's brethren after the flesh will begin to cry to Him for aid (Zech. xii. 10, Matthew xxiii. 39, Hosea v. 14-vi. 3, Isa. xxvi. 16).
16. Joseph dealt with his brethern severely at first, to try them and bring them to repentance (xlii. 7-17).	Christ will do the same with his brethren (Hosea v. 15, Ezekiel xxii. 19-22, Isaiah x. 20-21, Zech. xiii. 9).
17. Was reconciled to his brethren, and became their preserver and benefactor (xlv., xlvi).	Christ will be likewise (Isa. xl. - xii., xxxv., Jeremiah xxxii. 36-44, Mal. iv. 2).
18. All peoples came to Joseph for sustenance (xli. 57), and became the servants of Pharaoh through him (xlvii. 13-26); but he gave all the honour to Pharaoh, and took only second place.	All the earth will yet come to Christ for his kingly blessings, and will be subject to God through Him (Isaiah ii. 2-4, xi. 10, Psalm lxxii. 7-17, Zech. xiv. 16). But He will Himself hand over the kingdom to God, his Father—"that God may be all in all (1 Cor. xv. 24-28).

A most excellent book by Miss Ada R. Habershon, is "The Study of the Types" (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). It contains a remarkably full presentation of the wonderful typology of Joseph's life. This book is very earnestly commended to all Bible students, as of quite exceptional value.

The next lesson will be Exodus i.-xv., to be read four times.

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. T. C. C. SLOANE, who has been connected with the Liverpool Central Y.M.C.A. for twenty-six years, has been appointed general secretary of the association at Pietermaritzburg.

On June 24, at Tudor Court, Cobham, Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Scriven welcomed to a garden party over 400 young men. Cricket and various sports were engaged in during the afternoon, and after tea an address was delivered by Dr. Harry Guinness.

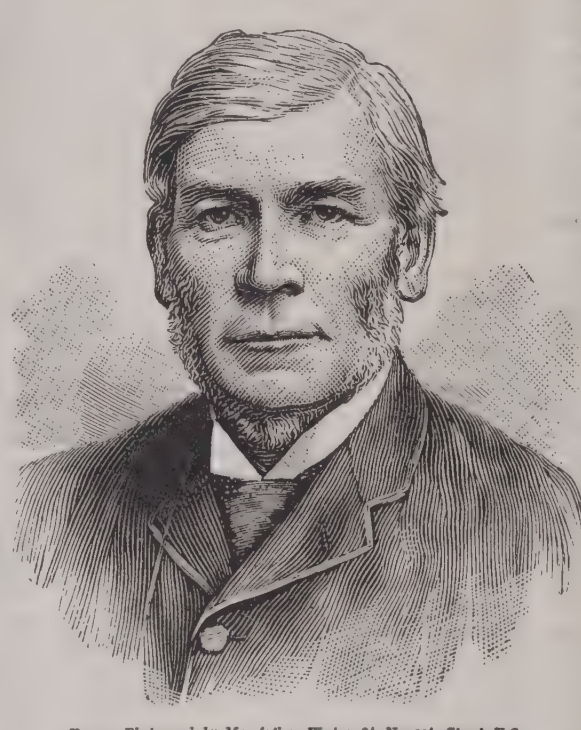
Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, LL.B., organizing secretary for Burma, gives a most encouraging account of the progress of the work in Rangoon. The membership is now over 100; the attendance at a Friday night Gospel meeting averages over forty young men; over forty soldiers are present every Monday evening; a good lecture course has been arranged; a local doctor conducts a weekly ambulance class, with an attendance of thirty-one young fellows; and a Sunday afternoon Bible class has been organized. The majority of those joining the association are Eurasians.

Epileptics.—The Duke and Duchess of York on Friday week visited Chalfont St. Peter, and opened four new homes at the colony, established there by the National Society for the Employment of Epileptics. The Duke, as president of the Society, gave a most interesting address, in which he described the history of the colony. When fully developed it would be an industrial village, whose inhabitants, although unhappily afflicted, would be usefully and heathily occupied. Though the Society had been started but a few years, its work had already been attended with the happiest results. After the departure of their Royal Highnesses, many of the visitors prolonged a highly successful and most enjoyable afternoon by roaming over the farm and gardens, conversing with the colonists, and inspecting the various homes and workshops. All who desire to know more of the excellent work in which this Society is engaged should communicate with the secretary, Mr. Penn Gaskell at the offices, 12, Buckingham Street, Strand.

The Late Mr. W. T. Paton.

VERY deep and very widespread has been the sorrow caused by the removal from his earthly labours of Mr. W. T. Paton. Connected as he was with many Christian movements and agencies, he won the affection of all his fellow-workers, and of numbers of those to whose spiritual and temporal good he devoted so much energetic and cheerful service.

William Theophilus Paton was a native of the Isle of Man. Employed in the days of his youth in the office of a large mercantile house in London, he was led by the patience and consistency of a friend in the same office to recall the spiritual lessons of his childhood; and his definite conversion to God was due, in part to the influence of that friend, and in part to the preaching of Rev. W. B. Mackenzie, incumbent of St. James', Holloway. Mr. Mackenzie was a clergyman of singular power with souls. He was not eloquent; he was not fervent; but he was the incarnation of Christian common sense as well as a faithful preacher of the plain old Gospel. Large numbers of business and professional men, lawyers, doctors, merchants, attended his ministry regularly; and the constant applications of such men to him for personal counsel gave him a rare knowledge of the human heart. For thirty years he ministered to a congregation of 2,000 persons, as large and as devoted as the congregations of his successors at the same church, Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter (now Bishop of Ripon) and Rev. E. A. Stuart.



Mr. Paton's conversion was in 1856—a great year in the religious history of England, which saw the appointment of Lord Palmerston's Evangelical bishops, the commencement of the Barnet (now Mildmay) Conference, and the conversion of S. A. Blackwood. Mr. Paton's labours as a Christian worker were not in Mr. Mackenzie's parish, but in the neighbouring parish of Holy Trinity, Islington. He became, of course, a teacher in the Sunday School, and subsequently superintendent. He also taught in the Milton's Yard Ragged School—not an inviting sphere in those days! In that Ragged School the present writer first met him, just forty-two years ago. The boys were a very rough lot. One trick of theirs was to turn off the gas and then "shy" the iron ink pots about, with results not entirely pleasant. No one got hold of those boys as Mr. Paton did. His bright and merry ways told upon them; and his addresses were always eagerly listened to. His influence upon both teachers and scholars in the Sunday school also was great; and extremely clever were the papers read by him at conferences of teachers. Some of these were published in the Church Sunday School Magazine; notably one entitled "A Few Directions how to Spoil a Sunday School."

Mr. Paton also took part in all sorts of evangelistic work, and in the united prayer-meetings which began with the revival of 1859-60, and which were for some years so great a blessing. In Mr. Moody's London campaign of 1875, particularly in the Agricultural Hall, Mr. Paton worked with untiring earnestness, and frequently had charge of the overflow meetings in St. Mary's Hall—in which a young Scotchman also worked, who was afterwards so well known as Professor Henry Drummond. In that same year Mr. Paton was invited to read a paper at the Church Congress at Stoke-on-Trent. It was the epoch of Parochial Missions, and some fervent but unbalanced High Church preachers, like Mr. Twigg and Mr. Body, had tacked on to them a mild kind of "confessional." This was defended on the ground that it was like Mr. Moody's "inquiry-room," only less irregular and less open to abuse. Mr. Paton being known to have considerable experience in the "inquiry-room," was asked to describe it at the Congress. The debate excited great interest, and may still be read with advantage in the official Congress report.

(856)

Mr. Paton's paper was a most admirable one. He pointed out that while in the confessional people confessed sins, in the inquiry room they confessed sin—all the difference in the world. In the one case they detailed particular acts done, and asked to be "absolved" by the priest. In the other case they acknowledged their general state of alienation from God; and the Christian worker dealing with them would not presume to "absolve" them, but would lead them by the hand to the throne of grace, where they might "obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need." Paton's experiences with Moody were renewed in the campaign of 1883-84, and he acted as hon. secretary of the mission in the temporary building at Islington known as the Priory Hall, built upon the ground belonging to the Church Missionary Society's College.

Mr. Paton was for a few years a partner in a City firm doing a considerable trade with West Africa. Being struck by the appeals of missionaries from that coast to English merchants not to send rum there, he was led to examine into his own business, and finding that it depended in part upon orders from the negro traders for ardent spirits, he resolved to retire from it. He made no reflection upon the firm; they were only executing the orders of correspondents abroad just as other firms did; but for himself he determined to have nothing more to do with the traffic, and thus he sacrificed for Christ's sake his prosperity as a business man, and was content to forego for the rest of his life the gains that might have been his.

From a Photograph by Mr. Arthur Weston, 84, Newgate Street, E.C.

He was afterwards associated with Mr. Quintin Hogg in the remarkable work for boys and youths which, beginning at an institute in Long Acre, issued in the great Polytechnic enterprise, which has been the type and mould of a host of institutions for technical education and for healthy recreation in all parts of the country. On Sunday evenings he conducted an evangelistic service in the large hall of the Polytechnic, and gathered there a congregation that might be called "Bohemian" in character—the very people not likely to go to a regular church.

Among many other good works in which he was engaged may be mentioned the Industrial Home for Boys in Copenhagen Street, of which he was for some time hon. secretary. The present Lord Kinnaird, when quite a young man, presided for the first time at a charity dinner on behalf of that institution, at Mr. Paton's request. In later years it was with Lord Kinnaird that Mr. Paton chiefly worked, acting for him in a great number of Christian enterprises. The Lock Hospital, the London City Mission, the Church of England Scripture Readers' Society, the Home for Little Boys, and (for a time) Dr. Barnardo's Homes also had the benefit of his counsel and co-operation. Still more closely was he identified with the Y.M.C.A., frequently attending its conferences and other gatherings in various parts of the country, where his papers and addresses were always highly valued. There was also a local Mission at Belle Isle, in North London, where he worked much on Sundays with the excellent founder and chief, Mr. Joseph Benson, L.C.M. None cherish his memory more gratefully than the poor people under the influence of that mission, who are now formed into a regular congregation with Mr. Benson as honorary pastor.

But in recent years the two institutions that occupied most of Mr. Paton's time and thought were the Y.W.C.A. and the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, of which the Misses Emily and Gertrude Kinnaird are respectively the hon. secretaries, and of both of which Mr. Paton was hon. finance secretary. For these two societies, representing work among women at home and abroad, he did untiring and admirable service. If money was to be collected, he was the man to do it. If powerful and effective speeches were to be delivered, he was the man to move an audience. If counsel was needed at the committee table, his generous large-heartedness and true sagacity were not looked to in vain. To both the Y.W.C.A. and the Z.B.M.M. his loss is to human eyes irreparable.

All this while, Mr. Paton's wife and daughter were carrying on a noble work for young women at the Cloudesley Institute, Barnsbury; of course Mr. Paton himself was much there, and won the grateful affection of scores of girls brought to Christ within those walls. In fact, great as his public work was, still more fruitful was his personal Christian influence. He was truly a "fisher of men," a "watcher for souls." Though the most humble-minded of men, he showed none of that excess of modesty which wraps the talent up in the napkin. He knew that God had given him special gifts, and he used them diligently for God's glory. For one thing, he was a delightful letter-writer. He could pour forth spiritual comfort and counsel with his pen as few men can. But perhaps his most conspicuous characteristic was the combination in him of brightness and solemnity. Pope's line describes him, though inadequately, "From grave to gay, from lively to severe;" but his gaiety was that of a happy follower of Christ, and his severity was only an intense realization of the solemnities of life and death and eternity.

Gradually, in the last few months of his life, his health failed, and, after a long illness, he entered into rest on March 14. "I have no rapture," he said to the writer of this notice, "but I know whom I have believed." Yes, he knew the Lord Jesus Christ as his own Saviour and Friend. What do any of us need besides that?

E. S.

Missionaries at Keswick.

AS many foreign missionaries desire to attend the Keswick Convention this year, a special fund is being raised to assist them in their expenses. Contributions will be gratefully received by Albert A. Head (Keswick Convention), Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon, S.W. An early response to this appeal is requested, so as to give time for the needful arrangements.

Missionaries to the heathen desiring assistance will oblige by writing, enclosing a stamped envelope with full address, to Mrs. Albert A. Head (Keswick Convention), Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon, S.W. The fund raised is to aid missionaries to the heathen only. Others desiring to attend can write to Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin Place, Keswick, who will give information as to accommodation. Meals can be obtained at the refreshment rooms at reasonable rates; but in neither case at the cost of the fund before named.

For special train arrangements to Keswick, apply to Mr. J. T. Budd, Ambleside, New Barnet, Herts, enclosing a stamped and directed envelope.

Robert Wilson.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

JUNE 27—29.

THE opening subject of the Conference was continued on Tuesday evening; it was, to use the phraseology of the official syllabus,

The Perfection of the Atonement.

After the usual service of praise and prayer, with reading of the Scripture, the first address was given by

REV. H. E. FOX.

We meditate to-night upon the greatest topic the mind of man can contemplate—the gift of God Himself to man. It is nothing less than this: man's greatest need met by God's greatest gift. Greater than creation, where God exhibited his omnipotent power; greater than preservation, where God displays his continuous love. God in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, is the one fact which is like the balance-wheel that keeps all the other doctrines of grace in their right place, and gives to them their real efficacy. It is this which raises the Atonement, far above a splendid example of sublime self-sacrifice, into an act whereby the moral Ruler of the universe vindicates the eternal law of righteousness and proclaims its harmony with infinite love.

I think the way in which we may best understand the all-sufficiency of the sacrifice is to fix our gaze upon the object "Himself," "to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself." When you regard who it is that does this, you are lost in amazement at the largeness of GOD'S UNSPEAKABLE GIFT.

"God was in Christ." There are words the depths of which we can never understand on this side of eternity, words which no uninspired lips would dare to utter. We read of "the Church of God, which He had purchased with his own blood." What that means, in its fulness, I humbly confess that I am utterly unable to understand; but I do know the fact which it represents. Christ not only came to die as a human being, but, in relation to the men with whom He had associated Himself, He became their Representative, and set the seal of his obedience to the eternal law of righteousness. More than that, He united God Himself with the sacrifice. This helps us to understand in Heb. xiii. 10. What do we mean by "We have an altar?" The Romanist says it refers to that structure whereon he, as he affirms, offers the body and blood of Christ. Others tell you that it was the cross upon which the blessed Master hung and breathed out his last. Some say it refers to the old sacrifices which have passed away. These explanations fall far short of the meaning, and miss a great truth. Our Lord expounds the prime conditions of an altar, namely, that it must be greater than the gift placed upon it. The altar, as I understand it, is God's representative; it is the hand of God, in which the gift is placed. It is the altar that consecrates the gift, making it—often an outwardly mean gift—of infinite value. It was on the altar that the gift was consumed, and it was to the altar that the Lord invited his servant to come and feast with Him. The Apostle's words can have but one meaning, namely, that sacrifice and altar are one. Jesus Christ, in his human nature, offered Himself, through the Eternal Spirit, to the Father; and it is the all-sufficiency of the Godhead in Christ which explains to us that deepest of all mysteries—how man can be reconciled to God through sacrifice. What no man could do for himself or another, God can do. To meet that infinite need of millions of men, the life of the God-man is given, the life of the Man who was "God in Christ." He who accepts this truth has, in the Atonement, that which is sufficient to satisfy all the yearnings of his soul, and to meet all the conditions which his reason requires in order that he may find restful peace with God.

A SADLY MISUSED PASSAGE

Let me attempt an illustration, remembering, however, that there is no field in the universe to which you may go for an exact parallel to the Atonement, which is unique and stands alone. One of the most beautiful New Testament stories is found in St. Paul's Epistle to Philemon. The runaway slave, who had robbed his master, took refuge in that city which, even in ancient days of wickedness, was the sink of the nations. But, in God's infinitely merciful providence, he meets with the Apostle Paul, receives the Gospel, and becomes a changed man. A sweet and sacred tie was established between the two men. The Apostle longed to keep his spiritual son at his side; but there was a higher duty to be performed, and the man must go back to his injured master, or the man's own conscience would not be at rest. Restitution to those who have been wronged is but there were obvious difficulties in this case. To meet these, the Apostle sends him back with a most beautiful letter, enclosing what may be called a blank cheque. "If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee aught, put that on mine account; I Paul, have written it with mine own hand." What a relief that must have been to poor Onesimus. "Ah!" he says, "the debt is paid. I can meet my master now, with open face. I am not ashamed to go back and tell him that I am very sorry for all I have done; for, at any rate, he will be no loser by it."

THE DUTY OF CONVERTED MEN;

What do you suppose Philemon would do? It is natural for you to regard it as impossible that a man with the smallest spark of Christian instinct could take the money earned by a poor prisoner to whom he owed his very life. But I carry the illustration further. Suppose Philemon and Paul were one and the same, and that he who had been defrauded was the very man who, for the sake of the sinner's conscience and future, had himself paid the debt. Yet that comes far short of the truth that the One against whom we have committed uttermost sin is He who steps forward and not only gives us pardon, but

SATISFIES OUR MORAL INSTINCT.

God gives you that which is truly a gift, but it is a righteous gift. You feel instinctively that God has honoured Himself in blessing you. He is not merely loving and kind, but "He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." God will not set one attribute of his nature aside in order that he may exercise another; but all the attributes of God combine to effect an Atonement which has strength and sufficiency for those who receive it. The sinner has all the majesty of Jehovah as a guarantee of his salvation. Righteousness is the girdle of God's loins; and it is this which keeps in their right place all his graces.

Who can tell the unknown agonies that rent the heart of Christ when He was bearing our sins? "He was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." Who can tell what that means? Here we have infinite righteousness putting away infinite guilt. It was the greatest proof of God's righteousness and mercy, that the mind of man can receive from God Himself, greater than creation, greater than preservation.

Is it not our privilege, then, to be ever gazing upon this Atonement with adoring love; to be asking God that we may know more of "the breadth, length, depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge"?

FOR WHAT PURPOSE?

Remember how that prayer closes, "That ye may be filled unto all the fulness of God." It is only in this way that we ever enter into and understand the possibilities of Divine grace, learn to walk in the paths of holiness, and increase more and more in the knowledge and love of God. We must begin by fully and clearly understanding the all-sufficiency of Jesus Christ in his atoning love; for, it is that which secures everything to us. In that you have the possibility of being lifted up to the fulness of God. The more you understand what Christ is to you, what He has done for you, in all the length, breadth, and depth of it, the more will you have that fulness.

We may say, as the last thing, that this is not so much a doctrine or an article in a creed as it is the fact of a living person. You may cloud your view of the Atonement by trying to systematise and dogmatise, weaving infinite theories about it, and spinning any amount of philosophy round it; and you will get into a mental fog sooner or later if you do that. Keep your eye fixed upon the person of Jesus Christ Himself, God in Christ; and whatever other difficulties you may have, there is the truth and the solution which will lead you straight into the very presence of God Himself, where Christ is now at his right hand, to appear in his presence for us.

Sufficiency of Christ's Sacrifice.

BY REV. N. VICKERS.

When we ask, in what sense has Christ made a sacrifice for sin? we are met, broadly speaking, with two totally different answers. One answer is, that by Christ's sacrifice for sin an effect has been made upon the moral government of God, though not upon his heart; for the latter must for ever be a heart of pure love. The other answer is, that the sacrifice has no effect upon the moral government of God, but is rather a presentation in a somewhat impressive and dramatic way of God's compassion for man.

These are respectively called the objective view and the subjective view; but we shall find that the objective and orthodox view also has a subjective aspect. Christ's sacrifice for sin having satisfied eternally the demands of God's justice, a way is made clear for the free flow of the righteous mercy of God. This view, received in its vitality, touches the heart; and, by the power of the Holy Ghost, every believer is gradually transfigured into the image of God's dear Son. I am not called upon to decide which of the two views is correct; but I accept the old orthodox view that Christ's sacrifice for sin affected the moral government of God, and I claim that, in that sense, the sacrifice is absolutely perfect.

This perfection is assailed from the rationalistic side on the one hand, and from the sacerdotal side on the other; hence the necessity for a clear view of what Christ's sacrifice really is, in respect of its sufficiency. A philosophy of redemption is beyond human thought; but we are called upon to use God-given reason, in connection with Divine revelation, that we may learn as much as we can about that glorious sufficiency.

IF CERTAIN CONDITIONS ARE REALISED

in Christ, his sacrifice for sin is absolutely sufficient; and I intend, in dependence upon God the Holy Spirit, to point out these conditions, and to see if they are met in Jesus Christ our Lord.

First, the sacrifice must be directly and vitally connected with those for whom it is made. This is an instinctive idea. God used animals to be symbols and prophecies of a vicarious sacrifice; but lacking like nature with man, they could not be the sacrifice itself. The same objection applies to angels. Man, in sinning, forfeited the life of the body and the life of the soul; and it is human life that must be surrendered. It is here that the doctrine of the Incarnation becomes precious, but it is being emphasised in the wrong way. God became incarnate that He might suffer in the Person of Christ. The cross, not the cradle, is the object of Christian thought; still, it was necessary for Christ to be "made of a woman." Being made under the law, He comes into direct vital union with that human nature which has fallen. Turning from angels, He takes upon Him the seed of Abraham, and is at once the Head of a redeemable humanity.

There must be absolute stainlessness in the victim offered. I need not remind you of the great care taken in Old Testament times, that the lamb offered to God should be perfect, teaching that the sacrifice which God shall accept must be without sin. Man, having sinned, can make no atonement; but there is One who claims to have made it, and to have fulfilled this condition. Under the most careful scrutiny of the life of Jesus, made with adverse intention, the verdict of history is,

"I FIND NO FAULT IN HIM."

Paul, Peter, and John, bear testimony to the same fact; but the most remarkable utterance, in this connection, is that "through the eternal Spirit, He offered Himself, without spot, unto God." The glory of God's holiness streamed upon Him, but discovered no blemish in Him.

The sacrifice must be at least equivalent in value with those who are to be redeemed. God could accept no less, or his holiness and truthfulness would suffer loss. Jesus Christ pays full value for all whom He redeems. The value of the soul is such that we know of nothing greater save God Himself; but Christ claims to be a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, an equivalent for that great value of a ruined race. Is this claim justified in fact? Not if it can be proved that Christ is but man. It is the connection of his Deity with the shed blood of his manhood that gives infinite value to the sacrifice of Christ. We speak of his precious blood; and the word conveys the idea of rarity as well as that of value. Thus is it that the perfection of the sacrifice made by Christ grows in our apprehension.

That sacrifice must be voluntary, otherwise, though God be in it, it cannot be accepted. If we represent this truth as God the Father compelling his Son to make atonement, we vitiate the sacrifice, and it is no longer effective for the removal of sin. Let us remember with thankfulness that not only was the Father willing, but so was the Son; for He says, "I lay down my life for the sheep." If there was any compulsion, it was that of Divine love for us. The apparent conflict between the Redeemer's will and that of the Father, when Christ asked that, if it were possible, the cup might pass from Him, and when He cried, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" This was no more than the instinctive revolt of a pure nature from contact with guilt.

If the sacrifice were not full, we could have no abiding comfort. Does it cover all sin? Isaiah says that God made to meet upon Him the iniquity of us all. The prophet seems to put himself into and, looking backward and forward, he claims that God has made to meet upon Jesus Christ, not only the original sin of a broken humanity, but the sins which are to come. When, as St. Peter tells us, Christ bore our sins in his own body on the tree, He removed the penalty and the guilt of our transgression.

THE CENTRE OF HUMAN HISTORY;

Christ's sacrifice is continually operative. "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin." As we consciously abide in Him, and trust Him moment by moment, we prove the glorious efficacy of his blood to take away sin, and He gives us a sense of sweet communion with the Father and with Himself. He has made a full sacrifice for all the sin of all his people for all time.

Yet if his sacrifice be not accepted of God, it is in vain. Some Christians, speaking unguardedly, make it appear that Christ offered his sacrifice to the devil. The thought is too revolting for contemplation, but it teaches us to be careful in the use of words. God provided the sacrifice; God in Christ made and offered it, and God accepted it. It is God's offering to God Himself. Our sacerdotal friends do not teach that Christ is crucified afresh upon their altars; they do say, however, that his sacrifice is represented upon the altar by human priests, in connection with Christ in heaven, who is supposed to be now offering his blood to the Father. But we have visible, experimental, and celestial proof that Christ's sacrifice was offered as well as made on the cross, and that the Father has accepted Christ's finished work. The visible proof is the rent veil, open tomb, ascended Christ, and outpouring of the Holy Ghost. An experimental proof that Christ's offering has been accepted, whether out of heaven or in heaven, is the consciousness of eighteen centuries of Christian life. Millions of Christians throughout the ages can testify to sins forgiven, and a sense of personal acceptance with God. And the celestial proof is the session of Christ upon his Father's throne. Now the accepted sacrifice has become the mediatorial sovereignty; and to reign there until He comes to take his people to be with Himself. With a clear apprehension of this truth, we are safe from sacerdotalism. The sprinkling of blood is separate and distinct from the shedding thereof.

CHRIST SITS UPON THE FATHER'S THRONE

Is the sacrifice irrevocable? There is not the shadow of a hint in God's Word that Christ's sacrifice shall ever lose its efficacy. "He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." The redemption which he has made is an eternal redemption; the apocalyptic glimpses of the future represent Christ as a Lamb in the midst of the throne; and the song of those who surround Him in the ages to come, is "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain." There is no thought of revocation by God; but it is all finished, and there is no more sacrifice for sin.

Christians may say, "Have we no sacrifice to make?" None whatever in a propitiatory sense; your sacrifice is to be that of consecration. Some of my brethren may differ from me as to the ground I take, when I say that namely, a sacrifice of consecration and a sacrifice of expiation. Old Testament sacrifices may be broadly divided into these two classes. The order was: First, expiation represented by the sin-offering; then, consecration in the whole burnt-offering. In Christ both sacrifices were realised, but the order was reversed. First came the sacrifice of consecration, in a spotless life devoted unto God. Then, as a spotless Priest, Christ offered his own blood a sacrifice for our sin.

CHRIST MADE TWO SACRIFICES,

In this last we cannot imitate Him; but the first sacrifice we also are called upon to make, and we are to be a whole burnt-offering unto God. It is a great demand. Who can meet it? Nevertheless, God requires it. Here is our comfort: Under the law, whatsoever touched the sin-offering was accounted holy, and our spiritual offerings, brought into contact with the offering of Christ for our sins, are, by the Father, accounted immaculate. Day by day, the child of God is called upon to present his entire being a living sacrifice, acceptable unto God through the merits of Christ.

The way is made clear, for Christ has died. We can come with confidence to the very throne of God, for, through the blood of Christ, the flaming barriers have disappeared. Peace is made, rebellion is expiated, sin is purged, justice is satisfied, our eternal inheritance and weight of glory have been fully purchased, heaven is open, Christ is on the throne, and his attitude is, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

WEDNESDAY.

In weather that was somewhat "fresh," there was a goodly gathering on Wednesday morning. After prayer by Rev. John Wilkinson and Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, the hymn beginning "Help us, O Lord, to praise!" was heartily sung. The chairman was Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who in some opening words called attention to Heb. v. 1-6, wherein the Melchizedek priesthood of Christ is affirmed. There is, he remarked, nothing more pathetic in the history of our fallen race than the spectacle of man seeking after God. We remember the cry of Job, "O that I knew where I might find Him, that I might come even to his feet." Concurrently with that desire is the craving for a mediator, as we remember Job to have complained, "Neither is there any daysman betwixt us that might lay his hand upon us both"—no one to take the hand of me, the sinner, and put it into the hand of God with assurance of his reconciliation. There is, at the same time, nothing more grievous than the sight of men lending themselves, as many have, all down the ages, to false systems of priesthood and to sacrifices that can never take away sin; and again to witness the humiliating sight of men deciding for the false rather than the true, the pretentious rather that the real.

Lord Radstock having led in confession and prayer, another hymn was sung—"Break forth and sing the song." Thereafter the morning's subject—our Lord's appearing in Heaven as High Priest for his people—was opened up in two excellent and thoughtful addresses.

The Better Priesthood.

By Rev. C. A. FOX.

"Now to appear in the presence of God for us" (Heb. ix. 24).

That Christ is in the presence of God for us, is a blessed truth. It means that Christ is our representative, and much besides. The beginning of priesthood, as recorded in Scripture, is in Gen. xiv, where we read of the royal priesthood of Melchizedek. There was an earlier priesthood—individual, as in the case of Cain and Abel, each of whom built altars and brought offerings; patriarchal, in which men served for their family companies; and parental, as at the Passover in later days, when the father represented the household in intercession.

After that came the official and state priesthood, as appointed by God Himself, and which remained until the time of Christ's manifestation in the flesh. It is a significant fact that while in the Old Testament the priests were spoken of with the greatest respect by God Himself, in the New Testament times the priesthood as a body was opposed to Jesus Christ. The last sacrifice of the Jewish priesthood was the offering of Christ, the Lamb of God, who was offered unconsciously, though vindictively, upon the cross of Calvary.

So few Christian people seem to know what priesthood is, according to the Scriptures,—how it began, developed, and ceased. One meets with few who know that in the Gospels, Acts, and Epistles, there is no reference to a CHRISTIAN MINISTRY OF PRIESTHOOD.

That fact destroys at once much that is so predominating at this moment in the Church of Christ. Again, in connection with the Christian ministry, the word "altar" is not found; its only occurrence in the Epistles is in Heb. xiii. The Christian minister and the Christian offerings are entirely independent of the word "altar." And so, again, the word "priesthood" never occurs in the New Testament in connection with the Christian ministry.

There are three books in the New Testament which refer to priests:—(1) The Epistle to the Hebrews, which is the Gospel of the Pentecostal priesthood; (2) the First Epistle of Peter, which is the Gospel of the universal priesthood of the Church—even St Peter, the patron, so-called, of the Infallible Church, declares that all believers are priests, royal priests, a truth which destroys the Church of Rome in a moment; and (3) the Book of the Revelation, in which we have a remarkable unfolding of

WORDS OF SACRIFICIAL AND PRIESTLY IMPORT.

There seven times over we have the word "altar," as if to show that all priesthood is now taken up into heaven—as indeed it is!

In the last book in the Bible, Christ is twenty-seven times called the Lamb of God; three times believers are styled kings and priests unto God; and at the outset of the book we have a most wonderful picture of the Lord Jesus Christ as the great High Priest moving in and out among the seven churches, or the golden candlesticks which represent the churches. He appears to view as the great and present High Priest, leaving no place for any other; in fact, excluding all other, abolishing all other. How can we pass by the Lord Jesus Christ, and go to some man who calls himself a priest?

I take it that Melchizedek represents a glorified priesthood. Adam was the first and head of the fallen race; Melchizedek the head of the glorified race. What about the present priesthood of Jesus Christ? The veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom.

That means a better priesthood, one far more human than before (Heb. iv. 15). Christ is one who "can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities"—the only place in Scripture in which the word "feeling" is found in connection with spiritual things.

NO CONFESSOR CAN BE SO HUMAN

as the Lord Jesus. Again, look at Heb. vii. 26, and see how intensely Divine He is: "Such a high priest became us—holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this He did once, when he offered up Himself."

Confession is going about all around me every day. Recently a lady, a relative of a High Church clergyman of the parish, requested me to visit her lady's maid, a very superior person. When I began talking of the Lord Jesus, the young woman, in a desperate condition through heart disease, said "That is what I want." She told me that she had had other visitors who had forced upon her the Holy Communion, but had never said a word about Jesus. Twelve times, she said, they have pressed the Communion upon me, but never once have they mentioned the name of the Lord Jesus!

We have not only a Better Priesthood, but also a Better Tabernacle (Heb. x. 19-22). "Having boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus . . . . let us draw near." There is no place that belongs to the child of God but the Tabernacle. We enter by a new and living way—a freshly-slain and yet living way; we tread upon a living way, upon Jesus Christ, who has been slain for us. So when we speak to God in prayer—that is, through the rent veil—it is through the crucified and riven body of Christ. A third point is made with the children of God in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ (Heb. viii. 10). This covenant is an indelible indenture of the child of God—written in a new heart. The fourth point is Better Sacrifice (Heb. x. 12). Here we have three "no mores"—no more conscience of sins (v. 2); no more remembrance of sins (v. 3); no more sacrifice for sins (v. 26).

A BETTER COVENANT,

Fifthly, there is a Better Altar (Heb. xiii. 10); the cross of Christ has superseded the altar of the temple. Hence there are two or three things that we must do: (a) Having this altar, let us go forth with Him without the camp; all worldliness, therefore, must be dropped. (b) We must present our offering, the sacrifice of praise to God continually. (c) We must be surrendered without any reserve to the Lord Jesus Christ, and then we may present our offerings of good works and almsgiving. If, like John, we fall at Christ's feet as dead, we shall also have the Apostle's other experience: the Lord, the Living One, will raise us up from the death of sin to a life of righteousness.

MILDMAY INSTITUTIONS.

Captain Dawson followed with some account of the work which has its home and centre at Mildmay. He said that "Mildmay" is an Evangelical association of workers seeking to win souls for Christ; primarily an institution for training women for home mission work and nursing the sick, both in hospitals and in private families, also for missionary work abroad. The band of Mildmay workers, including the deaconesses and nurses, numbers at present about 250. The deaconesses are now labouring in fifteen London parishes. There are eighteen mothers' meetings held, and sixty-seven classes of various descriptions, without counting mission services and Sunday school classes. Upwards of 35,000 visits are annually paid in the districts, irrespective of many hundreds of visits by members of the medical mission staff. Rescue and preventive work is undertaken in the Borough, also at Oxford. The medical work is conducted through two hospitals, one at Mildmay, the other at Shoreditch.

Other agencies named were the Medical Missions at Bethnal Green and Victoria Park, and the Convalescent Home at High Barnet. Abroad there is a medical mission at Hebron; also deaconesses are at work in Jamaica, and nurses in Malta. In the Mildmay Orphanage from twenty-five to thirty little girls are trained for domestic service. These undertakings involve an expenditure of about £27,000 per annum; the workers not only give heart and time and life, but they give liberally of their substance towards the total amount raised. The new orphanage building will cost about £4,000; and towards this and the general maintenance of Mildmay work, Captain Dawson invited the sympathetic interest of Christian people. Many old supporters have passed away, a fact which is calculated to emphasize this Captain's appeal, as well as show younger disciples the urgency of present opportunity.

Christ the Mediator.

By Rev. Dr. G. HANSON.

"This man, because He continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood"—(Heb. vii. 24)—a priesthood that is inviolable and untransmissible.

The term priest has come to be almost the synonym of the religious pretender or spiritual dictator. And yet the idea that underlies the most mistaken form of priestly assumption is of the most profound significance. A mediating priesthood between God and man is one of the deepest needs of the human soul. The heart cries out for someone to represent God to man, someone to represent man to God—someone qualified and commissioned to speak for God to man, for man to God. Who has this right and this competency? Is it given to frail and fallible man so to understand God as to interpret Him worthily to mankind? Can a man, however wise and experienced, so fully comprehend even a fellow-creature's heart, motives, temptations, difficulties, infirmities, as to be able properly to plead his cause and fairly to administer rebuke or comfort according to his need? To ask such questions is to answer them. I, for my part, do not understand how any intelligent mortal can accept the intervention between Him and God, of any human being, whatever title he assumes, or succession he claims, or absolution he bestows.

THE NEED OF A MEDIATOR.

Let us first notice The Need of a Mediator. (a) Consider the vast distance that lies betwixt God and man. Separated from us as greatness is separated from nothingness, how great God is! I try to realise the power and wisdom needed to uphold the universe, to regulate the wheeling orbs, globes of measureless mass. I essay to grasp the majesty of Him who summoned all this magnificence into being, and to picture the heaven of heavens where the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. I endeavour to conceive myself, the creature of a day, passing through the long file of attendant angels and archangels to the throne of glory, to the presence of Him who is from everlasting to everlasting—God. My mind staggers in the effort. Who am I that I should draw nigh to the Eternal? What is man that God should have regard to him? No one can ponder, however briefly and superficially, the distance that lies between the Creator and the creature without feeling the necessity of some one in close relationship with God to open the way to his august presence—some one in deep sympathy with man to encourage us to draw near.

(b) Still further we are separated from God, as sin is separated from holiness. No one can fail to acknowledge that there is some sad and persistent element of discord in human history and experience. The sorrows and sufferings of the race, the weariness and melancholy of the human spirit, the deep silence of the grave, the struggles of men for the mastery, the trampling under foot of the weak and the triumph of might over right, the confused noise of battle and the sight of garments dyed with blood, the crimes perpetrated under the very shadow of our churches, the ambitions, treacheries, envyings, wantonness, backbitings, murders, and such like, which crowd day by day the columns of the newspapers—all these indicate the presence of some evil spirit among men. What is the cause of the blight that seems to fall on generation after generation? The Gospel says that it is sin that has entered in, and death by sin. Is that an unreasonable solution? Does it not seem as if this world were shut out from God's presence, and we were exiles from heavenly joy? Take away Christ, and what is left but the blackness of despair. Looking fairly and frankly at life as it is—bearing on its face only too clear traces of God's displeasure—do we not recognize the need of someone to come between us and a righteous God, to cope with the sin that curses us, and to give us ransom from the law that condemns us? Sin is a palpable reality, and he who would mediate beween the world and God must deal with sin, not as a sentiment, but as a fact.

THE MEDIATOR THAT WE NEED.

This brings us to the second part of our subject—The Mediator that we Need. Suppose that you, in view of God's greatness and the world's sin, sat down to describe to yourself the kind of mediator that would commend himself to your acceptance, I think your thoughts would take something like this shape. (a) You would say that, if it were possible, you would like one to stand between you and God who would be both Divine and human—Divine enough to interpret God infallibly, human enough to invite man's advance and trust; one who would be in full sympathy with God, and in full sympathy with man—one who with one hand would reach up to God, and with the other would stretch down to man, bridging the vast distance that lies between heaven and earth, binding together God and man as one. (b) Further, you would say that, if possible, whoever is to remove all barriers betwixt man and God should be prepared to make what amends he can for any dishonour done to God's holy law. Reparation, so far as possible, must be made if wrong has been done. If it were possible that one should arise from among men who should live a life of spotless purity, one who should make himself, by the resistless charm of his personality and the glory of his matchless character, the living centre of humanity, becoming, by virtue of his own intrinsic excellence and dignity, the Son of Man among men, the very consummation and flower of humanity: and if such a peerless being should offer Himself on behalf of mankind, declaring "O God, Thou art holy and just and good, I bow to thy will; I delight to do it; I love it supremely, and am ready to suffer whatever Thou art pleased to lay upon me in witness of my sense of the absolute righteousness of thy law." And if He bared his back to the smiter and tasted the last penalty of sin, in testimony of his absolute acquiescence in the Divine estimate of sin, would that not be a sufficient vindication of God's holy law, and a sufficient ground for God to offer forgiveness to sinners if only they accepted their great representative's condemnation of sin as their own, and consented to forsake sin and follow after holiness?

In thus picturing the kind of mediator one would desire, one is but in all essentials. What is He? He is "God and man, in two distinct natures and one person for ever." What is He in relation to God? He is the only begotten Son of the Father, who lay in God's bosom. "The Word was with God, and the Word was God." What is He in reference to man? He is the Son of Man, and is "not ashamed to call us brethren." He took upon Him "the likeness of sinful flesh;" He was "tempted in all points like as we are," and He can be "touched with the feeling of our infirmity." And what has He done? He came under our law, He became a servant obedient unto death. During the thirty years of a crowded life he magnified God's will, and by his sinless devotion, even unto death, bore testimony to God's sovereign rights. And last of all, by his voluntary suffering on Calvary, He set his seal to God's sentence on iniquity—the wages of sin is death—delivering the "Amen" to God's verdict upon sin. Willingly and lovingly he laid down his life. "No man taketh it from Me," he said; "I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again."

DESCRIBING CHRIST

How marvellous is this identification of Christ with us, consummated by his bearing our sins in his own body on the tree! To some it seems incredible, inconceivable, that God should thus stoop to man; and, indeed, the mystery of "God manifest in the flesh" may be impenetrable by any finite mind. But, after all, the difficulties are intellectual, not moral. There is nothing but what is morally sublime in such condescension and compassion as Christ has shown. So far from his self-sacrifice, his surrender of heavenly glory for earthly sorrow, his assumption of human burdens and responsibilities, his bearing our very sins—so far from this identification of Himself with humanity being incompatible with Divinity, could anything be more noble or Godlike? Nothing can transcend that infinite gift of God's grace—Christ Jesus. No one can ask for a greater proof of Divine interest in man, or deny its entire consistency with what might be expected of a real, living, loving God, worthy of worship, trust, and love.

Nor did Christ's surrender of Himself to human interests begin and end with his sojourn on earth. He did not leave his humanity behind Him when He passed within the veil. He continues to be God and man for ever.

HE PLEADS BEFORE GOD

with a human voice. He is ours, our very own brother, for ever and ever. God so loved the world as to give his Son; and the Son so loved us as to give Himself; and now, in simple continuance of his free and unreserved surrender of Himself, "He ever liveth to make intercession for us." Such is the basis of our approach to God. We stand only on the ground of Christ's mediation and intercession; to all eternity we stand there. We shall never pass beyond our need of our great High Priest, his atonement and his advocacy. "He is the same, yesterday, to-day, and for ever;" the link, the bond, to all eternity, between God and man.

In conclusion, the speaker showed that all priesthood but Christ's must be repudiated. One can hardly help wondering why men should assume to themselves any of the prerogatives of "the Apostle and the high priest of our profession"—interposing offices of theirs between the sinner and the Saviour, between the penitent and pardon! Who among men priests can pretend to be more wise and tender than "that merciful and faithful High Priest," who was made in all things like unto his brethren? Who among them can offer a better sacrifice than He who "through the Eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God?" Who among them can understand us better or help us more than He who "was tempted in all points like as we are," and can "succour them that are tempted?" What do we want with the sons of Aaron when "this Man hath an unchangeable priesthood?" Why concern ourselves with the keys that hang at their girdle, when we have a new and living way into the holiest of all by the blood of Jesus? "He openeth and no man shutteth; He shutteth and no man openeth."

Wednesday Evening.

Priesthood and Ministry.

Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS.

In the Old and also in the New Testament there is revealed to us what may be termed "Ministry." The ministry of the Old Testament generally consisted in the functions of two different classes or orders of men—the priests and the prophets. Each had a work to do, for the most part clearly defined, absolutely necessary, and divinely appointed. The work of the priests was of one kind; that of the prophets was of another. The essence of priesthood is the representation of man to God; the essence of the office of the prophet is the representation of God to man. The priest represented man to God by means of sacrifice and intercession, and his work is summed up in the word Mediator. The prophet represented God to man by means of revelation and instruction, and his work is summed up in the word Ambassador. The work of the priest spoke of propitiation; the work of the prophet spoke of revelation. The work of the priest referred to man's way to God; the work of the prophet spoke of God's will to man. The work of the two ministries therefore was complementary, and together practically summed up all the relations of God to man and man to God, and all the requirements of man's life in relation to the divine.

(CCC)

When we turn to the New Testament we also find ministry, but with several NOTABLE DIFFERENCES.

In the first place, the ministry of the New Testament is not a ministry of any particular class or order. There is no special order of priesthood. The only priesthood distinct from that of our Lord is the spiritual priesthood of all believers. With regard to the ministry of the Word which we find emphasized as the ministry, there is much that corresponds to the work of the prophet in the Old Testament. But again with this difference, that while the prophet of the Old Testament constituted a particular order of men, the ministry of the Word in the New Testament is not the exclusive prerogative of any particular class of believers. It is at once the duty and privilege of all. From these differences emerge our subject to-night. The title given in the propramme is "The Silence of the New Testament concerning any new order of priests, and its insistence on the Ministry of the Word."

First, then, we have the silence of the New Testament with reference to any new order of priests. My first point, as to the silence of the New Testament on this matter, is that it is a Simple Fact. We have twenty-seven books, and no reference to a special class of believers as priests. But this is not all. We need to remember that the New Testament is

NOT A VOLUME, BUT A LIBRARY.

When we regard this, the evidence is much more remarkable.

We have first of all the four Gospels, with their instructions by Our Lord concerning the future; in these we find absolute silence with regard to the priesthood. Secondly, there is the Acts; in that first record of early church history there is absolute silence on the subject. Then we have the earliest picture of perhaps the most difficult church in New Testament times—that of Corinth; here again there is no reference to the human priesthood of any class of believers. Next we come to the two great doctrinal Epistles to Romans and Ephesians; absolute silence again. Then we come to the Epistle to the Hebrews—the great doctrinal epistle for the Jewish Christians; absolute silence as to human priesthood. In the three pastoral Epistles representing the final instructions of Paul concerning ministry of every kind; no provision for any special priesthood. Last of all the writings of the two great Apostles of the Circumcision, Peter and John; absolute silence with regard to the priesthood. If we take any one of these, the evidence is striking; when we put them together it is cumulative and

ABSOLUTELY OVERWHELMING.

I remark again that this silence is a Striking Fact. The New Testament represents the Church history, and a great deal of the Church experience, of forty or fifty years, during the formation of Christianity. It records the Christian life of various races, under various circumstances, during those years; but through it all there is no provision for the office of a special human priesthood. I go further; so far as we know, with perhaps one exception, the writers of the New Testament were Jews, and as Jews they were simply steeped in sacerdotal ideas and associations and language, from their youth up; yet not one of these Jews has used a word to distinguish the minister of the Gospel from the ordinary believer.

How does this come to pass? We might say, remembering who these men were, that the chances against their avoidance of such a term so familiar were about ten thousand to one. We believe it was due to the overruling inspiration and control of the Holy Ghost. Bishop Westcott has said that it is the nearest approach to verbal inspiration that he knows. We would go a little further, and say that it is an absolute proof of verbal inspiration.

Thirdly, we say that this silence of the New Testament is a Significant Fact. It is, as Lightfoot says, "the eloquent silence of the apostolic writings." Why eloquent and significant? The reason why there is no reference to a human priesthood in the New Testament is because there is no need of a human priesthood; and as there is no need of one there is OBVIOUSLY NO PLACE FOR IT.

The Old Testament priesthood spoke of alienation from God, of the way to the Holiest not open, of sin not put away. Hence the need of mediation. Now the way to the Holiest is open; sin has been removed, and there is therefore no need of any human mediation.

The Epistle to the Hebrews has one significant word about the priesthood of the Lord Jesus Christ. It says He hath "an unchangeable priesthood" (vii. 24): an undelegated priesthood, that does not pass over to anybody else. It is unique and permanent, because it is perfect and divine. Any human priesthood is utterly opposed to the spirit and the letter of apostolic Christianity. Lightfoot says: "This is what characterises Christianity as compared with older religions; it has no human priesthood." We are told that the discussion is all about words, and that what we want is not the word but the thing. I may quote again from Bishop Lightfoot in his essay on Philippians: "True; but words express things, and the silence of the apostolic writers requires explanation." And he also says: "The kingdom of God has no sacerdotal system."

Let us now look at the insistence of the New Testament on the Ministry of the Word. If there is silence about the former, undoubtedly

THERE IS UTTERANCE ABOUT THIS.

First of all, in the New Testament, there is great emphasis placed upon The Need of this ministry. The ministry of the Word is twofold. There is the ministry of evangelization to the sinner, and the work of edification for the saint. In the New Testament you will find seven series of titles associated with the ministry that practically sum up the whole revelation concerning its nature. One series describes the minister as a herald; another describes him as a messenger; another as a witness; another as an ambassador; another as a minister; another as a pastor or steward; and, lastly, as a teacher or prophet.

Notice, too, the emphasis placed upon The Message of the ministry. There are two titles which practically sum up the whole of the message: one refers to it in relation to God—the Word; and the other in relation to man—the Gospel. In the New Testament there are seven series of words associated with this message—the Word of God, the Word of the Lord, the Word of Christ, the Word of Righteousness, the Word of Reconciliation, the Word of Truth, the Word of Life. As to the Gospel there is also a sevenfold description—the Gospel of Christ, the Gospel of Peace, the Gospel of the Grace of God, the Gospel of your Salvation, the Gospel of the Kingdom, and the Gospel of the Glory of God.

Notice next the emphasis laid upon The Purpose of the ministry. It is, first, intended to bring God and man together, to bring God face to face with man, and man face to face with God—

GOD REVEALING, AND MAN RESPONDING to the revelation. Regeneration is associated with the Word of God; sanctification is associated with it; edification is associated with it. It is intended to call forth man's trust. The great emphasis in the New Testament is upon the word "Believe." Because the Word of God and faith are correlatives. Faith is the only—and it is the adequate—response to the revelation of God.

You will see at once that this was not something merely for the first fifty years of the Church's history. It is a permanent element of the history of the Church, of the very existence and continuance of the Christian Church on earth. You will find, accordingly, that the last words of our Lord were, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." The very last words of Paul were, "Preach the Word." The very last words of Peter were, "Born again of the Word of God." The very last words of John were about abiding in the truth.

In the ministry of the Word we have a threefold guarantee. There is first of all a guarantee of The Purity of the Church. Whenever the Word of God has been neglected, the Church has deflected. When the Word of God has been honoured, the Church has been pure. Every revival of individuals and in the Church has come through fresh emphasis put upon the ministry of the Word.

Again it is a guarantee of The Progress of the Church.

HONOUR THE MINISTRY OF THE WORD,

and there is an extension of the Church; neglect it, and there is the stagnation of the Church. All missionary operations at home and all progress abroad depend upon the ministry of the Word of God.

Thirdly, it is a guarantee of The Power of the Church. This is true as against Romanism. There is nothing that Rome fears so much as the ministry of the Word, and there is no more powerful weapon against her. It is not because it is a danger to morality that Rome opposes the Word, but because it cuts at the very root of the priesthood. It is also a power against Ritualism. Exalt the priesthood, and you debase the teacher — the New Testament prophet. In Russia you find the teaching element is of very secondary importance; so it is in all sacerdotal systems. As the Jewish priest had no necessary connection with teaching, so there is nothing essentially pastoral or instructive in the work of the priest. Let us ever remember that in God's Word we have the greatest power against the pseudo-Romanism that threatens to overflow our land.

It is a power also against worldliness in the Church. Preach the Word of God in all its high standard of holiness, separation, and surrender, and many of the doubtful methods that some Churches use

WOULD VANISH LIKE A DREAM.

It is the power for the edification of believers. The more we study the Word, the more will our souls be built up. The stronger our Bible classes and the more expository our preaching, the more real and true will be the Christian life of our congregations.

I close by asking you to honour the Word of God—in the individual life, in the study, in the family, in the congregation, in the divinity college, and in the university. Let it be received by faith, welcomed by love, and proved by obedience, and we shall have no fear about the present or about the future. The incorruptible seed is still powerful. That sword has still power to defend; that honey is still sweet to the taste; that food still invigorates; that milk still sustains; because it is the Word of God which liveth and abideth and overcometh for ever and ever.

Afternoon Gatherings.

THE SCRIPTURE GIFT MISSION.

The good work of this Society was interestingly described on Tuesday afternoon to an appreciative audience. A more sympathetic chairman than Prebendary Webb-Peploe it would be difficult to find. He advocated with refreshing energy the extension of Bible knowledge by means of the Mission.

Mr. W. Walters, hon. secretary, said the governing idea of the organisation was to prepare the Scriptures in such a way as to arrest attention. Two artists of ability had, as the result of a visit to Palestine, executed 300 paintings illustrative of Eastern life, and these, reproduced to accompany the Gospel portions, had proved highly successful in attracting the careless to read. From many parts of the world came words of gratitude for grants of Scriptures. A Mexican mission reported: "There is a thirst for the Gospels. The native helpers find the books the greatest possible help to the work. Ten out of the eleven millions of people in Mexico have never seen a Bible." A message from Peru assured Mr. Walters that "the simple Word of God is the most successful of all missionaries." So pleased and touched were the recipients that, when ordered by the priests to destroy the Gospels, they refused to do so. A Demerara letter said that in no case had a copy been refused. In France large quantities had been distributed with excellent results. Mr. Walters went on to describe the efforts which it is hoped to make in connection with the forthcoming Exhibition at Paris. Three million copies of Gospels are to be prepared in one or another of seventeen languages, the cost being estimated at £14,000.

Mr. W. Hodson, of the Racecourse Mission, related some experiences at Epsom, where during the recent racing festival twenty thousand Gospels, provided by the Scripture Gift Mission, had been given away on the course. The most frivolous holiday maker treated the Word of God with reverence.

Mr. Chas. Cook, in a sketch of his Bible distribution, spoke of the invaluable aid rendered to workers at home and abroad by Mr. Walters.

Pastor Faithfull, of Madrid, brought good news of Gospel work in the villages of northern Spain, and Colonel G. Philips spoke of members of the English expeditionary forces in Egypt not only receiving Bibles with gladness, but carefully reading them; and it was a noteworthy fact that those soldiers who so studied were remarkable for their good behaviour. Christian workers of all denominations could not but pray for the continued prosperity of the Mission which equipped them so generously.

NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

The gathering of the North Africa Mission on Tuesday was of a stimulating character throughout. After Mr. G. T. Edwards had traced the history of Christianity in the "Dark Continent," and had rejoiced in the obvious signs of revival, Mr. E. H. Glenny gave a spirited account of progress. Referring especially to Egypt, he had found increased willingness to give a sympathetic hearing to Gospel preaching. At meetings held nightly in Alexandria numbers of Arabs stayed behind until a late hour to inquire into the salient facts put before them. The interest was spreading among the students at the Mohammedan universities at Cairo. The development of the country by English civilizing processes was opening up fresh fields, and but for the comparatively slender resources of the Mission much more could be accomplished in the interests of religion. Mr. Glenny added a graphic description of gradual advance in Tripoli and Algeria, and concluded with a forcible appeal for more workers.

Dr. Terry, from Morocco, described Mohammedanism as a masterpiece of satanic invention, giving an assurance of paradise in the future while allowing every kind of sinful indulgence in the present. Yet there were signs of blessing. At Tangier the natives evinced great interest in the Medical Mission, and, indeed, some came for treatment from the far away oases of the Sahara. It was remarkable to notice how such wild characters—unconquered even by the Sultan and living in a lawless independence — became amenable to the "Nazarene" nurses. It was the more noteworthy, since their native women were regarded as so much cattle. A women's hospital had also been opened, and in other centres of the district good results had followed visitation and medical work.

Dr. Churcher spoke graphically of the progress of the work in Sousse, where, but five years ago, there was not one witness for Christ. The Medical Mission has now become a power in the land. The natives flocked to it in large numbers, and were wont to wait outside the doors all night ready to make early application for treatment on the following morning. A rough shelter erected for their accommodation was utilised for Gospel services, the people hearing and accepting the message with gladness.

MEDICAL MISSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

A meeting was held in the South tent on Tuesday afternoon in connection with Medical Missions, Dr. Maxwell presiding. He said that the great overwhelming attestation of Christ's Messiahship lay in the mighty deeds of healing that He performed. Christ has gone, but the work of healing and helping must still be carried on. The evidence that the Spirit of Christ is in the Church is shown in the manifestation of the love of Christ through the Church; surely this work of ministering to the sick and needy at home and abroad is one of the noblest, and it is by ministries such as these we are enabled to back up the message of the Kingdom of God.

The Bethnal Green Mission, in connection with the Mildmay Mission, was represented by Dr. Percy Paton. Some of the hospitals, he said, though doing excellent work, could hardly be called missionary agencies; but at Bethnal Green all who take any active part in the work are directly concerned with the missionary as well as the medical side. This did not imply that the medical work done is second rate; on the contrary, it was their aim to make it as thoroughly efficient as possible. The hospital had recently been inspected and reported as an ideal one in every way. Great interest is taken in the affairs of the patients, and it is sought in every way to make them happy. On out-patient days, a short Gospel service is held, doctors and nurses joining in it. There are also ward services. Then, again, the hospital is a training ground for nurses going abroad, and the applications for admittance from these are more than can be dealt with. Where possible, assistance is rendered to other hospitals, and the Convalescent Home at Barnet is found most beneficial. In these and other ways it is their aim, not only to heal the body, but to bring the Gospel of Jesus Christ before those who came for help.

Dr. Owen, on behalf of the Medical Mission in South London, spoke of the growing need for more adequate premises, and also for more helpers. The mission is only three years old, but the number of patients increased from 4,000 during the first year to over 15,000 last year. In addition to this there were 3,169 cases attended to in their homes. The Gospel message is brought before every one coming to the hospital; the work is followed up by house-to-house visitation, and much blessing has accrued.

Dr. Lankester, of the C.M.S., pointed out the value of medical missions abroad. The medical missionary often gets in touch with people with whom the ordinary missionary would have no footing at all; in this way many doors have been opened for the preaching of the Gospel. Medical missions help to break down the prejudice against Christianity, which is felt in many countries, especially amongst Mohammedans. The Government of India has recognized this, and has given a grant of land on which to build a hospital. The Sirdar has also given some land at Khartoum. There is a wonderful power of attraction about a medical missionary; people come many miles to be healed. They thus come in contact with Christian men and women and carry impressions back to their homes. The C.M.S. is using this method of reaching the heathen much more than in former years. It is our duty to help to send forth qualified men and women to heal the sick, and to say unto them, "The Kingdom of God is come nigh unto you."

WORK AMONG SOLDIERS.

The South Tent was full to overflowing on Tuesday afternoon, when Sir George Williams took the chair on behalf of the Soldiers' Christian Association. He remarked that this Association was started six years ago as a Military Branch of the Y.M.C.A. It was formed in order that we might fight the enemy in our soldier. Branches have been formed amongst both officers and men, troop ships have been visited, meetings are held during manœuvres, literature is distributed, and every effort made to bring the men to a knowledge of God. The members enrolled up to the present time number 3,277. It is an army in the army to do the army good, and to lift it up.

Colonel Philips quoted a letter from soldiers in India, expressing their appreciation of 5,000 of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons, which Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster sent out to them through the Association. Such a response forty years ago would have been impossible, and it was made possible only by the valuable work carried on by this Association. Prayer is a great factor in the work and the secret of its strength. If every soldier were a godly man, then the world would soon be evangelized, for these men have a mighty influence for good or evil, not only on each other, but on the natives amongst whom they mix.

The next speaker was Miss Sandes, who represented the Soldiers' Homes in Ireland and India. These homes, she said, are the link between the soldier and the Soldiers' Christian Association. To them the men come for recreation, for social intercourse; while the Gospel message is brought directly before them. What is wanted is that God would raise up a band of earnest Christian men in every regiment to witness for the Lord Jesus, and to prove to their companions that it is possible to be a good soldier and a Christian. Now, during the time of peace, is our opportunity. The doors are opened everywhere, but workers and money are needed. At the present moment there are many hundreds of soldiers being slain, not on the battlefield, but through the curse of strong drink and vice, and we need to use our utmost strength to save them for the sake of humanity, for the sake of our country, and for Christ's sake.

Mr. W. R. Lane pointed out that a soldier, if he is converted, must become out-and-out from the start. There can be no half-and-half measures of Christianity in the Army; a man must stand firmly to his colours. Capt. Gamble, Sergts. Luchford, Lazzell, Grant and others during the afternoon gave very cheering testimonies as to the blessing accruing from the work carried on, and referred in very appreciative terms to the work of their secretary, Mr. Wheeler. News from the Front is the monthly magazine, which can be obtained from the secretary at Room 24, Exeter Hall.

NATIONAL WAIFS' ASSOCIATION.

Work for Christ among the children was the subject of a meeting under the Mulberry Tree on Tuesday afternoon. Canon Fleming warmly advocated the claims of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. In his eloquent appeal, he said that efforts on behalf of children are always hopeful, and such work as this lays our country and its churches under deep obligation. There is no Christian institution in our land that has a wider door of entrance than these Homes for the Destitute, carrying on a system of training which, under God's blessing, turns the nettles and thistles of our social system into flowers in the garden of the Lord.

Christ's compassion for those who are ignorant and out of the way was the starting point of an address by Dr. Barnardo, who secured close attention on the part of the many who stood around as he drew graphic word-pictures of personal experience among the pitiable child-wreckage of the great sea of life. Last year the family in the Homes numbered 6,342. In the last four years 9,784 fresh cases were admitted to the permanent benefits of the institution; and last year alone the number was 2,406. "How did we do it?" said the doctor. "Because you made my arms long enough; but they're not nearly long enough for all the work we find to do."

Immediately following, another meeting was held in connection with the

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Rev. E. A. Stuart briefly surveyed the whole range of the Mission's operations. There are services, by invitation of clergy and ministers, at all seasons of the year; and there is a wide-spread Scripture Union for systematic and comprehensive study of God's Word. The publishing work is a department which has been greatly blessed of God, and much of the literature is translated into foreign languages. But the work by which the Mission is most generally known is its seaside services, held in some forty to fifty places each year. Great personal good is derived from taking part in these services, which are often found to afford training for larger usefulness. An appeal was made for workers, particularly among the boys. While the speaker appreciated the benefits which are conferred by the Universities' Camp for Schoolboys, he felt that there is increased difficulty in getting helpers for the ordinary work of the Mission at the seaside. There is also ample scope for lady workers among the girls.

The joy of getting among simple-minded, trustful children with the Gospel was a fruitful theme for Rev. A. G. Doddridge. He trusted that one practical outcome of the Mildmay Conference would be an increased disposition among Christians generally to give the advantage of their presence and co-operation at the places all round the coast where there are God-given opportunities to win the children for Christ. Helpers who have some measure of Divine and human sympathy, and who can deal with children in a natural manner, will be heartily welcomed; and it is quite possible to take part in this blessed work practically without physical fatigue.

Mr. H. Hutchinson testified that the work of this mission seems to perpetuate the freshness and brightness of youth in the hearts of those who engage in it. He urged that summer is, of all seasons, the favourable time to influence for good the spiritually neglected children of the upper classes; and such work affords Christian business men opportunity for that recreation which is not idleness, but a change of employment.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE IN THE MISSION FIELD.

The work of the Religious Tract Society was the chief topic of consideration at an interesting gathering on Thursday afternoon, arranged to consider the question of the literary needs of the mission field.

Rev. George Owen, of Pekin, referred to the important position occupied by literature in the evangelization of China. A deep reverence was felt by the Chinese for any form of printed matter, and evangelists find a ready sale for tracts, which are, consequently, to be found in thousands of homes, silent but effective messengers of the Gospel. A great impetus had been given to the power of the printed word by the interest displayed in literature by the Chinese Emperor, who had purchased and read copies of the Bible and of important western books. The news of this action spread with wonderful rapidity, and there followed a wide-spread demand for copies, especially on the part of the official classes. At the present time there is a marvellous opportunity for reaching the more cultured Chinese, but the supply of translations of sound religious works is sadly scanty.

In a telling appeal, Mr. D. J. Legg, of the R.T.S., remarked on the immense increase of publications of a degrading character, and urged the need of more vigorous efforts in order to cope with the evil, as well as to spread the Gospel in all lands by means of religious literature. The third speaker was Mr. Eugene Stock, who said that from the point of view of the missionary societies there could be no question as to the need. Mr. Stock referred to the admirable results of tract distribution in missionary work, and, as an example, instanced the effects on the Maori tribes, who, when turning from their old savage customs, eagerly read any religious literature they could obtain. One good work was started as the result of a young chief picking up a single leaf on which the ten commandments were printed. Coming to later days the work in Uganda was largely attributable to the labours of Alexander Mackay and others in teaching some of the young natives to read. They in their turn taught others, and there are now 150,000 people there who can read perfectly well, the amount of Christian literature they consume being remarkable. Mr. Stock, pointing out the important effects of tract work in Madagascar, and the glorious evangelistic work being accomplished by the various tract societies of India, which were aided by the R.T.S., concluded with an expression of hearty concurrence with Mr. Legg's appeal.

Homeless Children.—The annual meeting in connection with "The Haven for Homeless Little Ones" was recently held on the lawn of the new Home at Walton-on-the-Hill, Surrey. A goodly number of friends were present, and were greatly cheered by the reports of progress and blessing during the past year. Some very touching and tragic cases had been received and helped with marked good results. The work had been greatly helped by a council being formed to undertake the responsibilities of trusteeship and management, and Mrs. Wallis was enabled to devote much more time to the details of the work. Pastor Fuller Gooch, Mr. Fegan, and Mrs. Crossfield spoke at the meeting. Mrs. Wallis will send a copy of the past year's report on application to her at Copthill, Burgh Heath, Epsom.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

FROM notices that have been published from time to time, our readers will have learned that the Barbican Mission to the Jews, though engaged in steady and settled work, has of late had much of the tent-life experience. First from one centre and then from another, Prediger Lipshytz has conducted the mission and organised its various agencies; and, all along, he has never wanted warm-hearted friends and earnest supporters to encourage him in his toils.

At length the time has come to "settle down"—i.e., to provide the Mission with a home. For the evangelization of Israel there is no centre like London, whither Jews from all nations gather, and whence, in turn, Jews go forth to the ends of the earth. There is, moreover, every indication that the opportunity will become more important as the years go by. Accordingly, steps are being taken to provide a Mission House in which the work may proceed under the most favourable conditions.

It is in East London that the Jews chiefly congregate, and thither, in particular, go the missionaries with the Gospel. Of late the headquarters of the Barbican Mission have been there—at 262, Commercial Road—and God has given the workers favour in the eyes of many of the sons and daughters of Israel. Friends of the work have thought well to associate the proposed new building with the name of one who was for years a tower of strength to the Mission—the late Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, a man who combined a sincere interest in the evangelization of Israel with Christian sympathies that secured for him the love and esteem of believers of all names and orders.

The Gordon Calthrop Memorial House is therefore the present concern of the Mission. In goodly numbers friends have come forward with sums in aid, and already about £2,600 is in hand. Land in East London, however, costs a great deal of money, and buildings are only erected at large expense. Yet Christian liberality will be equal to all demands, and in that confidence the committee is pushing forward arrangements to realise the scheme without needless delay. Altogether, about £5,000 will be required for site and Mission House. The president of the work, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, has exerted a singularly helpful influence, and it is hoped that the entire amount needed will be available when the top-stone of the building shall be raised—to the glory of God and for the good of Israel.

The growth of the work of the Mission during recent years fully justifies the present enterprise; and the special requirements of Gospel effort among the Jews, including daily classes and a round of Christian and philanthropic agencies, emphasize the importance of the Mission's premises being freehold, as distinguished from hired, and moreover, arranged in a manner that will facilitate the work and promote its greater efficiency. Meantime, friends of the Mission will be glad to hear that negotiations are in progress for a site in a very desirable locality, and it is hoped that, with these completed, plans will shortly be prepared. Then, provided with a home and centre suited to its needs, the work will go forward, and, it is hoped, continue to receive the Divine blessing by being made instrumental of good in opening blind eyes and turning children of Abraham "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God."

Communications to Prediger Lipshytz should be addressed Vine House, Walthamstow.

Temperance Week in London.—The National Association of Official Temperance Advocates, which includes amongst its members all the leading permanent officials and advocates of the temperance movement in Great Britain and Ireland, is holding its third annual conference in London this week. The proceedings began on Saturday with a reception and garden party by the Archbishop of Canterbury and Mrs. Temple, at which there was a large attendance of members and friends. At the business session on Monday morning the president, Mr. Walter N. Edwards, F.C.S., delivered a weighty address on the teaching of science regarding temperance.

The Shaftesbury Institute.

DEAR SIR,—Perhaps you will kindly allow me to supplement your kind report of our annual meeting at the Speaker's House, Westminster, on June 23, by some details as to the founding of our new Deaconess House. The presence of the Duchess of Albany was no mere form, for, as Lord Reay, the chairman, stated, her Royal Highness investigates in detail every work she countenances; therefore, it meant a great deal, and one could feel there was hearty sympathy. Although the occasion was the annual meeting of the Shaftesbury Institute, yet the real centre of interest was the new Deaconess House, for which the means had been sent by the giver in such a remarkable way, and in answer to continued prayer, and which the Duchess had consented to name, to open, and to present to the Deaconesses.

Instead of reading our report, we asked Her Royal Highness to do us the honour to accept of a copy of our new illustrated pamphlet, and that each of the audience should take a copy also, adding that time would only permit of our touching briefly on one or two departments of work. For the full account, we must refer your readers to the pamphlet just published (price 6d., to be had of the Secretary), entitled "A Glimpse of West London Life" for 1899, of which the introductory chapter is "The Story of our Deaconess House." We have given it in detail to the praise and glory of Him who has proved faithful, as the Answerer of prayer and the Giver.

At this point, the Deaconesses all came forward to the front, forming themselves into a group; and, turning to the Duchess, we said we had hoped to be able to ask Her Royal Highness to honour the Deaconesses by presenting to them their house; but this was not possible, for the house was not yet finished. Although the dwelling was not ready, the work was ready and the workers were ready. "So instead of presenting the house we said: Will your Royal Highness graciously present this banner (handing the banner), the gift of the family of the late donor, which will be hung in the house and will be a permanent memorial of answered prayer, of the donor, and of this meeting to which you have lent your Royal name?"

Her Royal Highness said in clear and distinct tones: "I have pleasure in announcing that the house 49, Great James Street, will be henceforth known as 'Jane Barclay House,' in memory of the late donor, and I present to the Deaconess-in-charge this banner (handing the banner to the senior Deaconess), which I hope will be hung in the house as a permanent memorial." The Duchess then received purses on behalf of the Deaconess House, the first containing a cheque for £200, for the complete furnishing of the house.

The banner, which was the gift of Miss Barclay's sister, was simple, but richly embroidered. At the top were the words, "Pray without ceasing," and at the bottom, "In everything give thanks," was worked on a ribbon scrol.

In the course of his admirable address Dr. Barnardo said: "The one bright thing is that this work helps to bridge, as nothing else can bridge, those deep and impassable gulfs which, alas! exist in this great city of ours. It is, to my mind, pathetic to read the story, which is given so fully in the beautiful report, the adoption of which I have to move, viz., the account of the Women's Shelter. How little we know, those of us who have never lived among the poor, what a want that supplies.

"We are here to sympathize with and to support those who are living devoted Christian lives among a most unhappy class. Do we want an evidence of Christianity? We shall find it in the lives of those ladies who have come here to tell us their pathetic story. All who are co-operating with the founder have one great object in view, namely, the extension of the Kingdom of Christ. Nothing short of this could sustain their lives, living as they are in places where they cannot sleep. I trust it will never be said that in one of the great slums of the metropolis, upon the margin of the West End of the wealthiest city in the world, any part of that work shall be allowed to languish for want of the means which can be so well supplied."

At the close of the meeting the Duchess inspected the work done in the training home, and made some purchases of work made by our knitting machines.—Yours truly, MEREDITH BROWN.

Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson Grove, N.W.

Palestine and the Bible.

MR. NEIL'S COLLECTION OF PICTURES.

ONE of the last, but not the least, of the many functions of the busy London season now drawing to its close will take place on the afternoon of Thursday, July 13, when lady Augusta Mostyn and Lady Isabel Bligh have asked a large and influential company to meet Mr. James Neil, M.A., and to see some of his exquisitely beautiful pictures.

Mr. Neil's collection of life-sized oil paintings of Palestine, manners and customs, sixty-five in number, apart from its intense interest to Biblical students, forms probably the most complete, vivid, and accurate series of pictures of a people's life that has ever been given on canvases of such a size. Their chief value, however, lies in their power to illustrate Holy Scripture—light from the Land on the Book. Mr. Neil has supervised throughout the preparation of the series.

The artist, Mr. James Clark, spent eight months painting in Palestine to fit himself for the work. He was assisted as to the animal subjects by Mr. J. B. Carhill, and as to the scenery and floral portions of the work by Mr. J. Macpherson-Haye.

Mr. Neil's collection may be said to form a new and true school of Biblical art in the way of Biblical illustration.

Mr. Henry A. Harper, in his matchless water-colour drawings, has given us with wondrous realism the glorious beauty of Palestine landscape, its high lights and neutral tints, the exquisite brightness and clearness of its early Asian morning, the awful glare of its Asian noon, its never-to-be-forgotten ink-black shadows, the ethereal, dream-like, tender, unearthly beauty of its infinite distances, its azure skies and seas, its purple mountains, and its joyous wealth of high, pure colour, born of an absolutely dry atmosphere, rainbow hues of sunrise and sunset, which dwellers in the grey and dull north-west are tempted to call exaggeration, but which are nevertheless perfect pieces of truthful realism. And what Mr. Harper has so well done in water-colours for the land of Palestine, Mr. James Clark and his helpers have now done in oil colours for its life.

The smallest of the pictures is six feet by seven, and the largest is ten feet by fifteen. The following testimony from an eminent artist will show that Mr. James Clark's work, from an artistic point of view, is one of great power. Mr. W. Holman Hunt wrote to Mr. Neil the following letter after a private view of a few of the pictures.

Draycott Lodge, Fulham, S.W., March 3, 1895.

DEAR MR. NEIL,—I have been greatly interested in looking over a dozen of the paintings executed by Mr. Clark—with one by another artist whose name I cannot at the moment recall. These commend themselves to my mind as remarkably true to Syrian life and character as seen by an observant student in the land at the present day, and as well calculated to illustrate as they do the unchanging facts and habits of the people—to point out the living meaning existing throughout the Old and New Testaments in unnoticed words and phrases. The full collection will be most interesting to the visitors to your exhibition, not only to those who have not seen the country itself, but also to those who have passed through it without the guidance of a master like yourself, who can draw attention to the instructive points of each scene.

The work has necessarily had to be done in bold and fearless manner, but I can avow that truth of feature has not thus been sacrificed, and that the handling and colouring, though broad and large, is recognisable as what only a well-practised painter could perform, in respect to the actions of figures and also the harmonies of tints; the latter merit is remarkable in the gradations of sky and in the foregrounds with varied foliage and flowers.—Yours faithfully, W. HOLMAN HUNT.

With these pictures Mr. Neil gives his "Popular Palestine Talks," in which all the ten or twelve curious Bible points in each painting, throwing often a flood of new light on Bible difficulties, are brought out in the most surprising and delightful manner, and the combined interest of verbal and painted picture is irresistibly fascinating. A committee has now been formed to arrange for the constant public display at a West End centre of these pictures, with Mr. Neil's explanatory "Talks," at certain times in the day, as a Bible-teaching effort for young and old, learned and simple. For preachers, teachers, and Bible students in general, such an effort as this is to-day of the highest importance, used as it will be fearlessly to defend sound views of inspiration, and to proclaim with no uncertain voice the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Young people—and indeed, for that matter, the great mass of their elders—can be taught by pictorial illustration as in no other way; and it may be safely said that never before on these branches of Bible study has such illustration been afforded. It is an effort to meet materialism on its own ground, and in the best sense of the words a truly modern treatment of "the old, old story," but in such a way as the strictest Puritan can heartily approve.

A United Christian Demonstration.

A STRIKING and successful meeting was held on Sunday last on Peckham Rye under the auspices of the South London Christian Union. This is the third annual demonstration of a similar character that has been arranged by the S.L.C.U., and it has been a remarkable example of united testimony for God.

Early in the afternoon, some thousands of friends assembled in Rye Lane, and headed by two Salvation Army bands and the Nunhead Christian Band marched to the fine old Common. There, a vast gathering of people had assembled around a large platform, which the L.C.C. had permitted to be placed on the ground. For two hours an attentive, orderly, and deeply impressed audience listened with manifest pleasure to the various speakers. There were present local ministers of various denominations, Revs. J. H. Knight, H. Mann, and Frank Smith, who spoke with power and fervour. Several well-known evangelists and friends also addressed the assembly, including Ned Wright, William Groves, and Leonard Weaver. Brigadier Hacquard, of the Salvation Army, deeply touched the hearts of many of his hearers by his earnest appeal to the people to decide for Christ, and H. Cook, the leader of the Nunhead Christian Band, met with a hearty reception.

Madame Annie Ryall sang with wonderful tenderness several delightful melodies from "Songs and Solos." During one of them a sudden storm of wind and rain swept over the assembly, but the lady continued singing, and contributed greatly to prevent the audience dispersing. Indeed, when the sun burst through the clouds once more, there was probably a larger audience than ever, to listen to Mr. Weaver's closing words, which evidently went home to many hearts.

Although the weather was somewhat unsettled, the meeting was a wonderful manifestation of unity amongst all classes of Christians; it was a pleasing fact that all the different companies that usually meet on different platforms, should for one day, at any rate, assemble in such a united testimony for God, and for the truth of his word.

A prayer meeting was held at seven in the morning at the same place, and, although it had rained heavily during the night, many Christians of all denominations assembled, and it proved to be a time of spiritual refreshment.

It is proposed to hold the second annual meeting of the South London Christian Union in the Peckham Public Hall, on September 4, when an afternoon conference of Christian workers will be held, followed by a public meeting in the evening. It is hoped on this occasion to consider the possibility of extending this effort to other parts of the Metropolis.

Finland.—Rev. J. D. Kilburn is starting on a long journey to the North of Finland, during which he hopes to visit Kopio, Idensalmi, Kajana, Uleaborg, Brahastadt, Wasa, Tammerfors, and Javastchas, and to attend two large conferences. He asks for the prayers of friends. God seems to be working in Finland. The terrible troubles through which the poor people are passing seem to be leading many nearer to God.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Have You Seen the Sea?

"Of course I have," you reply. And at once you think of lovely spots on the coast—north, south, east, or west—which you have visited; and you recall happy hours on the sands, or rocks, or cliffs, or in the boat or pleasure steamer on the beautiful sea. I can imagine some of you taking the map of Great Britain, and marking the places where you have spent your holidays; and really the coast is dotted all round with your pencil marks, and here and there I see an extra mark because of the unbounded delight you experienced in those particular places.

Well, I suppose you are thinking and talking about your coming holidays, and I expect your parents are just now studying the railway time tables, and finding them quite as fascinating as your story books are to you. It is wonderful how interesting these pages are while the holidays are anticipated, but how uninteresting they become as soon as they are over! However, I hope you will have the happiest holiday you ever spent, and that you will return stronger and happier and wiser for having seen the handiwork of God in nature, both by land and sea.

A few weeks ago I went for a week-end to Bognor, and in "Arthur's Home," one of the seaside homes of the Ragged School Union, I found about a dozen girls, ranging from seven to sixteen, who had been sent by their kind Sunday school teachers from very poor homes in East London to spend a fortnight in the lovely air at this favourite resort. And it was to each of them I put the question, "Have you seen the sea before?"

I was pleased to find that some of them had seen it—not that their parents had taken them to the seaside as yours take you. No, alas! that had never been the case. But their teachers had sent them away through the Ragged School Union, and they had lively recollections of playing on the sands, and enjoying themselves on the beach, and in the water, as other children do. But I was pained at the answer I received from six of the little girls, for they had never seen the sea before they came to Bognor! One girl of sixteen summers had lived in London all her life, and had never seen the beautiful country which an hour's ride in the train affords! And when I put my question to her, I was much amused by her reply, though I felt very sorry for her. "No, I have never seen it before—except at the canal in Haggerston, close to where I live!"

The reply of another maiden of twelve was very similar: "I have only seen it at the Tower Bridge," she said.

Most of you, I expect, know that the Tower Bridge is very many miles from the sea; and of course the canal at Haggerston runs through London into the Thames. I was delighted, however, that for a time at any rate they were far removed from the great City, and from the river and the canal, though these had evidently afforded them some pleasure in the past. I rejoiced, too, that the faces of these dear girls looked so rosy and so happy; for they were enjoying their holiday immensely.

But I thought of the numbers of boys and girls—particularly in East London—who had never yet seen the sea; and how great would be my delight if I could only afford to send away to the seaside for a fortnight all the little ragged children who are pent up in the courts and alleys of London! I thank God for such an institution as the Ragged School Union, which is doing good in so many ways, and especially for the Holiday Home branch, which I know from personal experience has been such a blessing to so many young lives. This Society, besides having special homes for cripples at Southend-on-Sea and at Bournemouth, also has seaside homes at Bognor and Margate, and country homes at Brenchley, East Grinstead, and Windsor. Cottages are also engaged at Hove, Brighton, Folkestone, the hamlets around Salisbury, and in some of the villages of Essex, Kent, and Bucks. To these places the poor children in the schools connected with the Society are sent for two or three weeks holiday in the summer, and are well fed and looked after during their visit.

Last year alone upwards of 6,000 boys and girls—who would not have had a holiday but for this institution—spent a very happy time, some at the seaside, and others in the fields and lanes of the country, and gladdened the hearts of their parents by the fresh life and vigour which had come to them during their absence. The average cost of each child to the R.S.U. is 10s.; the friends of the child—or, as is often the case, his teacher—undertaking to contribute the remainder, about 6s. This includes railway fare and board and lodging for a fortnight. Would not you, who are so much better off than these poor children, like to contribute or collect among your friends during the next few weeks the sum of 10s., so that one boy or girl through your effort may be sent away for a fortnight's holiday as soon as the Board schools break up? The Secretary of the Ragged School Union, Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk Street, Strand, London, W.C., will be very pleased to acknowledge such contributions, and to furnish any further particulars concerning this or any other branch of the institution.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

New Quarter.

RULES.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. But no answers can be dealt with which are received later than the Thursday morning following the issue in which the Competition appears.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

A Prize Competition is given the last week of March, June, September, and December. To be eligible, every child must have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

Those whose 10th or 13th birthdays occur during the quarter may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age. There is no limit of age for weekly competitors; but no one above 20 years of age can enter for the Quarterly Competition.

All communications must be addressed to "Uncle Tom," the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 183).

New Quarter.

As the holiday season is approaching, many of you will be enjoying yourselves by the seaside. You will sometimes think, I hope, of the little ones mentioned in the article, who are not so fortunate as you. Suppose we try and find something in the Bible about the sea.

Find and complete the following three texts.

1. "He turned the sea into dry land" (Psalm lxiv.-lxvi.).

2. "He gathereth the waters of the sea together" (Psalm xxx.-xxxv.).

3. "——— cast all their sins into the depths of the sea" (Micah vi.-to end).

4. To what are the wicked compared? (Isaiah lvi-lviii.).

5. Whose house was by the seaside? (Acts viii.-xi.).

6. What parable did Jesus teach after He sat by the seaside? (Matthew x.-xv.).

7. When did Jesus prove his power over the sea? (Matthew v.-x.).

8. Where was Paul going when, we are told, he and his friends kneeled down on the shore? (Acts xviii.-xxii.).

9. What happened when Jesus walked on the sea? (Matthew x.-xv.).

10. What comparison is made between the Lord and the waves of the sea? Say where it is found. (Psalm xci.-xcv.)

(Children under ten do any four; under thirteen any seven.)

No. 181.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Ambrose Adams, Percy Allen, Gladys Allan, William Aston.

B—Ethel Benger, Colin and George Brown, Robert Browne, Lily Blackman, Charlie, Maggie and Alan Banks, Florence Blackman, Emily Bridgewater*, Gordon Boxer, Mabel Bailey, Leonard Browne, Edith and James Barker, Rex Bulteel, Dorothy Benson, Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Buhl*, Louis Berthé*, Maud, Dorothy and Sylvia Barrett, Eva Browne, Mary* and Susette* Beck, Dorothy Berry*, Allen Baker*, Ashley Bowker*, Massy Baker.

C—Nora Clarke, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, Janie and Nellie Crawford, Phyllis Cotterell, Duncan Campbell*, Bessie Cheale* Gussie Clarke, Maggie*, Jessie* and Walter* Carter, Richard Cornthwaite*, Flavelle Caldwell, Edith and Dora Corrie, Guy and Oscar Cross, Ethel Craigie, Henry Cheney, Susie Cumbers, Alice Crang, Cicely and Millicent Craven.

D—Elsie, Catherine and Agnes Darke, John Davies, Ralph Daintree, Esther and Jean Dickson, Dorothy and Marjory Dyke, Marie Denizot, William Dilly*, Constance Devenish-Meares, Elizabeth, Constance, Hilda and G. Drayson, Ernest Davies.

E—L. N. Ewin*, Helen Eardley-Wilmot.

F—Francie and Aileen Figgis, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Bessie, Kate and Maggie Fletcher, Jeanne Faucon*, Louise Filhol*, Helen Forbes, James and Marian* Freegard, Muriel and Agnes Fry, Arthur, Reginald and Ernest Findlay.

G—Tom Garfit, Frank and Alfred Gibbs, Alfred*, Ethel*, Daisy* and Mary Greenacre, Thos. Groombridge, Norman Good*, Jack, Stuart, Edith*, Margaret* and Dorothy Gray, Harry Gribble, Mary Glass*, Dorothy Grove, David Gardiner, Dorothy Garfit, Minnie and Evelyn Giddings.

H—Violet Holford, Nellie Hatchett, Bessie Hope, Edith Holms, Willie Hooper, E. Henderson*, Freda Hunton, Winifred* and Edith* Harvey, Helen Hunter, Ella Hake, Theodora Hill*, Dorothy Harris, Georgette Hoffmann*, Mary Haines, Ethel Hutchings*, Rosetta Hamilton, Willie Hopkins.

I—Daisy Iredell, Isabel and Ami Inglis, Nellie Irving.

J—Norman Johns, Sinclair Jackson, Lizzie Johnstone, Kate Johns.*

K—Philippa*, Grace* and Dorothy Kerr*, Isa*, Alex* and Agnes* Kay, Flossy Key.

L—Edith, Norah, James, Harry and Linda Lowe, G. and Murray Lloyd, Harriet Lynham*.

M—Olive* and Lois* Mewburn, Harry Malaher, A. Moule*, Mildred Morgan, Dorothy, Margaret and Daniel Morris, Gwendoline and Howard* Moir, Christina Marshall, Eileen and Francis McClure, H. Macartney, O. L. Morice*, J. Maconchy, Margaret Macphee, Gordon Main, Mabelle Mounstephen*, Ian McGregor, Dorothy Morgan*, Charlotte Millar*, Dora Muir, John MacMurray, Evelyn Moir*, Daisy Mackenzie, Bella* and Abraham Mack, Winifred and Daisy Martin, Charlie Medcalf.

N—Edith Nash*, H., Mary and J. W. Neligan, Dorothy, Mary and Henderson Nathan, Amy and Maud Nottage, Cissy* and Peter* Nicholson.

O—George O'Beirne, Eva and Maude Oakes, K. and Sidney Oliver.

P—Ethel* and Kathleen* Pasley Winnie Page*, Ruth Patient, Willie Petter, Mary W. and Louie Penny, Winifred Perry, Hilda, and Ernest* Pearce, Kathleen Pincott, Evelyn Pechey, Walter Perryman, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Edith Purkiss, R. Partridge*, Ada*, Willie, Jessie and Winifred Palmer, Laura Percy, Percy, Clarice and Geoffrey Peach.

R—Gwennie Ravenhill, Alice Reid, Herbert and Marjorie Rainey, Jessie, Isabel and Elmina Roe, May Reed*.

S—Violet Salvesen, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Janet Speed, Evelyn* Shaw, John Smith, Fanny Stileman, Constance Schaeffer, Bessie Symes*, Dolly Salt*, Mary Seed*, Binford Sellwood, Bertha Stocker, Lucy* and K. Soltau, Gwendoline*, Undine, Llewellyn, Mervyn, Gladys and Eric Shaw, Muriel, Ivy and Rosetta Sherwin, Florence Smith, Susie Sutton, Mabel Stembridge.

T—Frank Tomkins, Ethel Taylor*, Marjorie Tracey, Louie Tibbits*, Frank Thompson.

U—Queenie Upton*.

V—Kenneth Vining.

W—Pringle Wilson, Louise*, Lissa* and Violet Walker*, F. and Helen Webb, Charles Williams, Edith and Edward Wheeler, Connie Wood*, Robert Weddell, Sarah and Georgina Wilson, Amy* and Charles Wingrave, Kenrick and Queenie Wakeford, George Willis, Sydney Wisdom, Leonard Wall.

Y—Maurice, Gladys and Eva* Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

Nos. 164, 165 166, 167, and 168—E. Selby Little (China.) No. 174—Hermina* and Cuckoo* Lister (S. Africa). No. 175—Charlotte Cane (S. Africa). No. 176—Eliza and Jean Scott (Canada). No. 177—Ivan St. George (Canada). Nos. 179 and 180—Nellie, Kate* and Will* Thompson (Bulgaria).

HONOURS LIST.

The following have been correct each week during the quarter:—

A—Ralph Aldwinckle, Violet Ashworth.
B—Ernestine Buhl, Lucienne Brabandes.
C—Beryl Calvert, Henry Cheney, Cicely and Millicent Craven.
D—Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Hilda and Elizabeth Drayson, Marie Denizot.
F—Mabel Fleet, Jeanne Faucon.
G—Mary and Daisy Greenacre, Thomas Groombridge.
H—Ella Hake.
K—Nellie Keeley, Lily Kinvig.
L—Blanche Lindup.
M—Margaret Morris, Mabelle Mountstephen.
P—Lillian Pearson, Gladys Phipps, John Pearce.
R—Gwennie Ravenhill, Alice Reid.
S—Joseph Stephens, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Violet Salvesen, Susie Sutton.
W—Connie Wood.

Personal.

Many thanks for several boxes of flowers received last week.

Frank Wilson.—No, there was no mistake made. You were incorrect in answer 4 of No. 179.

Uncle Tom

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Boston, July 9; Lincoln, July 10; Highgate, July 13; Mr. Hankinson, Penge, July 19, Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Malmesbury, July 7-9; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birchington Bay, July 9-23; Rev. A. D. Dodderidge, Portrush, Ireland, to July 30; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Broad Hembury, near Honiton, Devon; Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Mack Cross, near Tunbridge Wells; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Coolham Green, Shipley, Sussex, to July 7; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Bedingfield, Suffolk, to July 8; Stradbroke, Suffolk, from July 8; Mr. F. P. Rowe and Mr. L. H. Ingram, with caravan, Greenstead Green, Essex.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending July 15.

Sun., July	9	Acts xxi. 27-40	Thurs., July	13	Acts xxiii. 18-35
Mon., "	10	" xxii. 1-16	Fri., "	14	" xxiv. 1-16
Tues., "	11	" xxii. 17-30	Sat., "	15	" xxiv. 17-27
Wed., "	12	" xxiii. 1-17

The Coloured Race in America.

A RECEPTION was given by Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Brooke Herford at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, on Monday afternoon, to meet Mr. Booker T. Washington, a coloured gentleman, who is the founder and principal of the Normal and Industrial Coloured Schools at Tuskegee, Alabama, and Mrs. Washington. After the reception, Mr. J. H. Choate, the United States Ambassador, presided at a meeting at which Mr. Washington gave an address on the condition and prospects of the coloured race in America.

The Chairman expressed the pleasure which he felt at having been asked to preside and to introduce to the meeting his friend Mr. Booker T. Washington. There were 10,000,000 coloured persons in the United States living side by side with some 60,000,000 of whites. The freedom of which the Negroes had been deprived for more than 200 years had been restored to them, but the question was how best they could be enabled to take advantage of it. The blacks were an interesting race. Fidelity was their great characteristic. During the civil war, when the South was stripped of every man and almost every boy to sustain their cause in arms, the women and children were left in the sole care, he might say, of these slaves, and no instance of violence or outrage that he had been able to learn was ever reported. He thought it would be admitted, therefore, that on that occasion they amply manifested their loyalty and fidelity to their masters. The black people had done much for themselves. About one-tenth of the men had acquired some portion of land, and they had made a certain advance. Mr. Washington was a pupil of the late General Armstrong, who devoted many years of his life to the establishment and maintenance of the leading school at Hampton, Virginia. Mr. Washington had qualified himself to follow in Armstrong's path. He also had founded a school, or training college, at Tuskegee, Alabama, where the pupils were not only given a primary education, but were afforded the means of earning a livelihood. There were now 1,100 pupils in the school. About half the number of those who passed through it went out as teachers to spread the light and the knowledge they had acquired there among their own race, and the other half were put into a position to support themselves by manual trades. The Government of the United States thought well of the work. It gave the school a grant of 25,000 acres of land in Alabama only last year. The State of Alabama, in which it was placed, gave it an annual donation. In addition it derived something from the funds left by the great philanthropist, George Peabody, and from another fund founded by an American philanthropist. The remainder of the sum needed for carrying on the work—some £15,000 a year—was derived from voluntary contributions, which were stimulated by the appeals made by Mr. Washington, whom he regarded as

THE LEADER OF HIS RACE IN AMERICA.

Mr. Washington in a brief and interesting speech described the condition and prospects of the coloured race in America. Immediately after receiving their freedom, he said, the Negroes, for the most part, got into debt, and they had not been able to free themselves to the present day. In many places it was found that as many as three-fourths of the coloured people were in debt, living on mortgaged land, and in many cases under agreements to pay interest on their indebtedness ranging between 15 and 40 per cent. The work of improving their condition was far from hopeless, and he was far from being discouraged. If his people got no other good out of slavery, they got the habit of work. But they did not know how to utilise the results of their labour; the greatest injury which slavery wrought upon them was to deprive them of executive power, of the sense of independence. They required education and training, and this was gradually being provided. Starting in 1881 in the little town of Tuskegee with one teacher and thirty students, they had progressed until in the present day they had built up an institution which had connected with it over 1,000 men and women. They had some eighty-six instructors, and in all that they did they tried to make a careful and honest study of the condition of the Negroes and to advance their material and moral welfare. Industrial education was a vital power in helping to lift his people out of their present state. Twenty-six different industries were taught, and every student had to learn some trade or other in addition to the studies of the class-room. The coloured students came from upwards of twenty states and territories, and the labour which they performed had an economic value to the institution itself. There were thirty-eight buildings upon the grounds of the college, including a chapel having seating capacity for 2,500 persons, built by the students themselves. The value of the entire property was about 300,000dols. Seeing that one-third of the population of the South was of the Negro race, he held that no enterprise seeking the material, civil, or moral welfare of America could disregard this element of the population and reach the highest good.

Mr. Bryce, M.P., expressed his cordial agreement with what Mr. Washington had said as to the importance of basing the progress of the coloured people of the South upon industrial training. Having made two or three visits to the South he had got an impression of the extreme complexity and difficulty of the problem which Mr. Washington was so nobly striving to solve. It was no wonder that it should be difficult seeing that the whites had such a long start of the coloured people in civilization. He believed that the general sentiment of white people was one of friendliness and a desire to help the negroes. The exercise of political rights and the attainment to equal citizenship must depend upon the quality of the people who exercised those rights, and the best thing the coloured people could do, therefore, was to endeavour to attain material prosperity by making themselves capable of prosecuting these trades and occupations which they began to learn in the days of slavery, and which now, after waiting for twenty years, they had begun to see were necessary to their well-being.—The Times.

West London Mission.

DURING the next two months every one who possibly can will escape from the heat and close air of London to fresh sea breezes, cool mountain air, and quiet country retreats. May I appeal to your readers to think of those for whom no such joy is possible, and who will have to remain during the stifling weeks of July and August in the close courts and baking streets of London, unless some friendly aid is given to them?

I think at this moment of one young girl, about twenty years of age, who works all day, and often until 9 o'clock in the evening, at buttonhole making. She is the eldest of a large family, and she and her sickly father, who works as odd-man, are the breadwinners of the family. At 9 o'clock, when the weary girl gets home, she has to help with the housework, and year in year out she plods on bravely, and has never had a country holiday. Who will help us to send this poor child away for a few days where at least she may see the trees and fields and breathe the fresh air, and have release from the interminable button-hole?

There are hundreds and thousands, alas! in like circumstances, and if everyone who is looking forward to a country holiday themselves will only send us a little help, we shall be able to bring joy and lasting good into many a weary life.

Katharine Price Hughes.

8, Taviton Street, Gordon Square, W.C.

"Northfield Echoes."—The first number for the current season, of this very attractive serial, has reached us. It is beautifully printed, graphically illustrated, and full of most profitable reading. There are deeply interesting papers on "Andrew Murray in South Africa," and "Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe," with portraits. "Student Life at Mount Hermon," is very readable and profusely illustrated; the same may be said of "Every-day Life at Northfield Seminary." Mr. Moody, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, Mr. Murray, and Prebendary Webb-Peploe are amongst the contributors. The set of four monthly issues can be had by readers in this country for 5s., post free, on application to Messrs. Morgan and Scott.

Evangelistic.

The Tent at Tooting.

THE Gospel mission being conducted in this large tent, by Mr. Leonard Weaver and other friends, is proceeding with not a few tokens of encouraging success. Last Sunday evening about 300 persons stood for prayer, and there have been inquirers at every meeting. Some of the scenes witnessed are said to have been most touching. Applications for missions are being received from many other parts of London, and it is hoped soon to erect tents at Battersea and Peckham.

We are desired to state that the conference usually held at Epping Forest at this season of the year will this year be transferred to the Tooting tent, and will meet in about a fortnight's time. Further details will be given in a later issue.

Great Assembly Hall.

COURAGE and manliness, humanly speaking, are always at a discount in spiritual things. In the solemn moments of silent prayer, surrounded by 4,000 to 5,000 fellow-creatures, it is a hard task even to lift your hand as an indication you wish to be prayed for. How much more difficult to stand boldly upon your feet at the invitation of the man of God who has been dealing out the truth of the written word in no unmistakable terms, yet this has been the case during the mission that has just closed in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, London. Mr. E. P. Telford, who has visited the Mission yearly for twenty-three years, saw, in response to his appeals for immediate decision for Christ, Sunday after Sunday and during the week nearly 150 rise before thousands of people and audibly say, "I will."

Some very interesting cases were recorded; among them, a publican, a churchwarden, a gambler, and men who had long been addicted to the influence of strong drink. There gathered around the Evangelist on his last night not only those who had recently been brought into fellowship with God's people, but many who, years ago, under his ministry, had been blessed by salvation. Truly the Lord is gracious, and wherever his blessed truth is faithfully proclaimed there are those waiting to accept the salvation wrought out for them by his dear Son at such a sacrifice. How delightful and blessed to think of the homes made happy in benighted East London through his visit.

Mrs. Baeyertz.

THIS evangelist has concluded a sixteen days mission in the little border town of Annan. From the commencement of the mission the interest has been intense; the first night anxious ones were in the inquiry room where Mrs. Baeyertz deals with them in her own inimitable way. Over the word of God explained by his servant they were delivered from the bondage of sin and went away rejoicing in the assurance of sin forgiven.

The meetings grew night after night, and, notwithstanding the lovely summer weather, the largest hall in the town was crowded. The conviction of sin has been very marked. Two young men told a worker that they would not for anything again go through what they had endured for four and twenty hours. Next night they came in to the after-meeting and took their stand on the Lord's side. One of the most pleasing features of the mission has been the number of young men who have decided for Christ.

The Bible Readings have been greatly blessed to God's children, and the result is that many of them realize, as never before, what it is to have God the Holy Spirit in their lives, and there is no doubt that this will tell in the churches with which they are associated. Mrs. Baeyertz has a most wonderful knowledge of God's word, and her personal experiences of the joy and comfort of a full surrender to his will are most practical and stimulating. The prayers of all those who have received blessing will go with her wherever God calls her.

Wm. S. Peebles,
Minister of the Free Church.
George Hayton,
Minister of Congregational Church.

Mr. J. S. Harrison has concluded a very helpful month's services at the Edinburgh Castle. The expositions have been of a very helpful character, so that believers have been much refreshed. The messages to the unsaved were heart-searching. Congregations were well sustained.

Walter Notman, Secretary.

Writing from Clifton Terrace, Barrow-in-Furness, on June 29, Mr. James Wharton says:—"I am home again once more from the Southern States after one of the most encouraging winter campaigns I have ever witnessed among the coloured people. All along the line, from New York to Florida, wherever I went, God owned his Word. The buildings were packed, and the 'mourners' many; better still, we had conversions at every service, while Christians were quickened and backsliders restored. It was a joy to find wherever I went those who had been converted on previous visits years ago standing firm, many of them holding useful positions in life and who were among my best workers in the revival."

A thirteen days' Gospel Mission was lately held at Negapatam, South India, in the Evangelistic Hall, where a steady sowing of the seed has been perseveringly carried on by Mr. Samuel Pedro for a number of years. Mr. Arthur Davis, of London, preached the Gospel, and suitable Gospel hymns were sung nightly by Mr. Arthur Reddell, of New Zealand. The attendance and interest were most marked, and there were evident signs of blessing. A feature of the meetings was the number of Roman Catholics and educated natives who, night after night, listened to God's way of salvation. The preacher was visited by several intelligent natives who desired to know more clearly the truth of God, and he had the joy of leading them to trust in Jesus.

The American Tent, Tramway Terminus, Tooting. Every night, except Saturday, at 7.30, until further notice. Quickest route from City, King William Street to Stockwell by Electric Rail, thence by tram. Tents will be pitched near Peckham Rye Station, and at Star Athletic Grounds, Battersea, in a few days.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till July 16, Bethany Hall, Glasgow during August, Great Assembly Hall, London.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Jarrow-on-Tyne, July 16-31.

Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sun., July 9, at 7, Mr. P. Garrioch; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sun., July 9, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch; Bible lecture, Thurs., at 8, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. George Clarke.—Till July 17, Ipswich; 23-Aug. 2, Teignmouth.

Mr. Newton Jones.—July 30, Lowestoft Baptist Chapel; During August, Margate Sands (Nayland Rock).

Mr. William Grove is conducting a mission in the Tent, Football Field, Maze Hill, East Greenwich.

Mr. Leonard Weaver is conducting a mission in the Gospel Tent, Tooting (near the Tramway Terminus).

Rev. Thos. Cook.—July 9, Barnstaple; 16, King Street, Plymouth; 23, Stanningley; 30, Skegness; Aug. 6, Bridlington Quay; 13, Llandudno; 20, Colwyn Bay; Sept. 3, Blackpool.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Till July 14, Paris; 16 and 23, Haling Road, South Croydon.

Mr. J. J. Sims.—During July, Pavilion Theatre, Edinburgh

St. Winifred's Mission, Rotherhithe.

THE St. Winifred's Mission, Rotherhithe, has done an extensive and ever-growing work for the past ten years. It is conducted on an unsectarian basis, and all the helpers are voluntary. Mr. Morriss has conducted the Gospel services for eight years gratuitously, and has borne the financial responsibility from the start. The work among the young is a good one, and visitors' reports speak in highest terms of praise of the Sunday school work. Much expense has been occasioned by the rapid growth of the Sunday school, by forming new class rooms and purchasing of new seats. The congregation is one of the largest in Rotherhithe. The Bible classes are full, and God is richly blessing the work. In order to reduce the debt of £150, and to raise a further £100 to effect a saving of £25 a year in the working expenses, the president and founder, Mr. Henry F. Morriss, has arranged to give a series of ten Thursday evening lectures. Tickets for the series will cost 2s. 6d. each, and can be had from Mr. Morriss, 112, Lower Road, Rotherhithe, S.E.

Friendless no Longer.

ON Saturday last a most interesting gathering was held at the Homes, 5 and 7, Parson's Green, Fulham, connected with the Society for Friendless and Fallen Young Women and Girls. The occasion was the summer meeting of workers and friends of the institution, constituting a large attendance. Visitors had a good opportunity of judging the kind of industrial instruction imparted to the inmates. Specimens of cookery, sewing, washing, &c., were exhibited, all done by the young girls of the Training Home, many of whom had been rescued from a condition of imminent moral peril; while in the extensive laundry of the adjoining Rescue Home (itself a picture of cleanliness and convenience) were on show all kinds of laundry operations.

The visitors were invited to tea, and afterwards spent an enjoyable hour in the grounds attached to the Homes. It was felt that there is much cause to thank God and take courage because of the success which has attended the efforts of the Society to seek and save the lost.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

THE Bishop of Llandaff has written a letter to all the incumbents of the diocese urging them to do their utmost in the cause of temperance.

By means of the Bishop of Liverpool's Sustentation Fund, the stipends of vicars of large parishes have been raised to £500 a year, and of small parishes to £280.

Dean Farrar has forbidden Roman Catholic processions to enter Canterbury Cathedral, as they have been in the habit of doing yearly in honour of Thomas à Becket.

It is proposed to build a new church in a district of Rawtenstall. Services are at present held in the day school. The newly-appointed vicar, Rev. D. S. Johnson, has issued an appeal in connection with the matter.

Rev. H. W. Campbell Baugh, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Walton Breck, Liverpool, in his yearly report speaks of increasing congregations and an enlarged number of communicants. The work among the young is also going forward.

An open-air service has been conducted in New York by Bishop Potter, one of the most conservative prelates of the Episcopal Church in America. A brass band led the singing, and electric lights furnished brilliant illumination.

Rev. W. A. Cooke, who four or five years ago resigned his living in the Church of England and conformed to the Roman Church, has been readmitted into the Church of England, and has resumed his ministry as curate of Longnor, Buxton.

The Church Missionary Society has again received disturbing news from China. It is announced from Kienning-Fu, the scene of the recent anti-foreign outbreak, that a large number of placards have been posted up there, at the instance of the local gentry, offering a reward of 1,000dols. for the heads of missionaries.

At a meeting of the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels, Canon C. F. Norman presiding, the following grants were made:—Building new Churches at Beckenham, St. Michael and All Angels, £400; Clementswood, St. Alban, £1,000; and Waltham Cross, St. George, £1,000.

At the recent Ridley Hall Reunion Dr. Moule took formal leave of his former students and introduced to them his successor, whose presence added an additional element of interest to a remarkable occasion. Dr. Moule spoke with gratitude of the affectionate relations which had always subsisted between his students and himself, and enlisted their prayers for the future of the Hall.

At the meeting of the London Younger Clergy Union of the C.M.S. statistics of painful interest were given by Rev. E. A. Stuart with a view of showing the absolute lack of missionary interest and activity in the vast majority of home parishes. Rev. H. E. Fox followed with the practical aim of enlisting volunteers for missionary work. He spoke of the immediate and pressing difficulty of deciding the relative urgency of the cries for help arising from every part of the mission-field in view of the scarcity of candidates for the work. Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe closed the meeting with prayer.

Congregational.

Dr. Horton's congregation at Lyndhurst Road, Hampstead, has resolved to raise £5,000 towards the Twentieth Century Fund.

Rev. J. Calvert, of Emmanuel Church, Margate, has been unanimously elected President of the Conference of the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion for 1900.

Rev. Arthur Hall, of Mount Pleasant Church, Hastings, has completed his fortieth year of pastoral work, and, on a recent Sunday evening, gave some interesting details of his life as a minister.

At the International Congregational Council, which meets on September 20 at Boston, U.S.A., for a ten days' session, Principal Fairbairn will preach the opening sermon and take part in discussing "The Urgency of Foreign Missions;" Dr. Barrett will speak on "The Pastoral Function;" Rev. J. H. Jowett, of Birmingham, on "The Obligations and Opportunities of Congregationalism;" Dr. John Brown, of Bedford, on "Independence and Fellowship amongst Congregationalists;" Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson on "Missions;" and Dr. J. Parker on "The Living Christ."

Baptist.

Rev. W. F. Harris, of Derby, has received a hearty and unanimous call to the pastorate of the Old Baptist Church, Rushden.

A number of persons have been baptized at East Street Church, Southampton (Rev. G. Whitefield Brooker). Most of the candidates yielded to Christ in connection with Mr. George Clarke's recent mission.

Rev. H. Patrick, late missionary at Tangier, is now assisting Pastor Sydney J. Jones in his mission and other work connected with the East London Tabernacle. The arrangement made leaves Mr. Patrick free on Sundays, and he will continue to supply other churches as before.

Special morning services held at Abbey Road Chapel, St. John's Wood (Rev. H. E. Stone), were largely attended. At 7 a.m. the pastor delivered an address to young men and women. Breakfast was subsequently provided in the schoolroom, and at 9 a.m. a conference on Sunday observance took place, among the speakers being a cabman and Mr. Paton, of University College.

A meeting was held in the Boilermakers' Hall, Govan, West, on Wednesday evening last, to bid farewell to Rev. Alfred Wilson, who has been pastor of the church for the last two years, and who has now accepted a call to Fenton, Staffs. The chair was taken by Prof. A. H. Sexton, and a feature of the proceedings was the presentation to the pastor by Mr. R. Campbell, on behalf of the church, of a token of esteem.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the Cornwall Association, the President (Mr. J. B. Haddon) pointed out that since 1855 the membership of the Baptist Churches in Cornwall had steadily increased, and was now nearly double what it was at that time. They must look, however, not so much to the ministers as to the laymen, and he urged upon Cornish laymen that they should arise to a keener sense of their duties to the churches.

The question of the union of Nottingham and Rawdon Colleges was discussed at the annual meeting of the governors of the latter. Rev. Dr. Tymms presided, and the Committee reported that the general principle of union, which had been previously accepted by the constituency of Nottingham College, was accepted by the constituency of Rawdon College, and the Committee were authorised to continue negotiations with the Nottingham Committee with a view to the preparation of a practical scheme. No scheme had yet been formulated, but an arrangement for the joint working of the two colleges had been agreed to.

Methodist.

Last week more than a third of the Methodist New Connexion ministers who are in active service in England removed to their new circuits, and began work in their new spheres on Sunday.

The late Dr. Pollard, of Dunkineely, co. Donegal, has bequeathed £1,000 to the Methodist College, Belfast, to several other Methodist funds £800, and to the Home Mission Fund the residue of the property, which will probably amount to £2,300.

The Primitive Methodist Conference, at Grimsby, decided that it should be compulsory that all churches should pay a minimum stipend of £100 a year, in addition to the free provision of a furnished house, to all ministers who obtained a place in the approved list after passing the usual probationary term. The new law will become operative at the next quarterly meetings.

The Wesleyan Chapel Committee has lately sanctioned the erection of forty new chapels, involving an estimated expenditure of £76,500. In addition £10,750 is to be expended on chapel and school enlargements. These, with other cases sanctioned during the past few months, bring up the aggregate expenditure to nearly £500,000, making altogether an outlay of £1,000,000 for the past two years in Great Britain alone.

The Wesleyan Chapel at Oldfield Park, Bath, is being extended. At the stone-laying ceremony, Rev. J. S. Simon said Wesley founded Wesleyan Methodism upon the instruction of the children, and upon the fellowship of Christian people. The result was that Methodism was the largest Protestant community in the world; but if they wanted to maintain their position they must keep it on the lines Wesley did, while the study of their Bible should become the very essence of their life.

Presbyterian.

Rev. R. C. Gillie, late of Willesden, has been inducted to the pastorate at Eastbourne, in succession to Rev. H. Carruthers Wilson.

A Presbyterian Church for Penang is found to be necessary, and those promoting it will need a fair proportion of the cost—at least £500—to be supplied from home.

Reopening services have been held at Belmont Church, Belfast, which has recently been much enlarged and redecorated, and had a memorial organ erected. Rev. Dr. MacEwan preached to large congregations.

Arrangements are being made for the visitation of all the Presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church of England by Rev. A. Connell during the autumn. It is hoped that he will deepen and widen the Church's interest in the welfare of her missionary enterprise in China, Japan, and India.

Society of Friends.

At the annual meeting of the Friends' Prayer League, the proposal to hold another conference this autumn at Devonshire House was approved, the dates decided on being Oct. 30—Nov. 2.

The Norway yearly meeting met in Stavanger. On the first day the house was filled with attentive and appreciative congregations. The Spirit of God was poured out upon the people, and the name of the Lord was magnified. The meeting sent a word of cheer to Sören Stakland, now imprisoned for refusing military drill.

New York yearly meeting was a time of blessing. The various departments of Church life appear to be effective in promoting a deeper spiritual growth; very many of the younger members are found in all the branches of work. The scope of the Evangelistic Committee is to be enlarged, and it is now known as the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee, the desire being not only to succour needy meetings, but as way may open, and the Lord shall lead, to enter into new fields.

Fallen Asleep.

Mary Ann Priestman, aged eighty-two, a beloved and honoured member of the Society of Friends. In the women's meetings, monthly and quarterly, she filled a most useful place, and as president of the Yorkshire Women's Temperance Association she laboured to advance the cause of sobriety.—Sir Wm. Flower, late director of the Natural History Museum, South Kensington. In the front rank of the men of science of the day, he was also a man of serious religious convictions, and would never admit a conflict between science and faith.—Mrs. Hannah Cochrane, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Born on June 10, 1799, she had survived her hundredth birthday by the short space of one week. The session of Jesmond Presbyterian Church, of which the venerable lady was a member, took recognition of the exceptional event.—Mrs. Leigh, of Bramhall, a devoted Wesleyan Methodist. Every form of Christian service received her liberal support and warmest interest.

Notices.

Applications for Tracts.—Pastor J. Onions, 2, Transfer Villas, Drove Road, Swindon; Robert Turner, jun., Oakford, Bampton, Devon; William J. Young, Alleyn's Road, Stevenage, Herts; Mrs. Oakeley, The Cottage, Milton Keynes, Newport Pagnell; Mr. David Blackstock, 91, Duncairn Gardens, Belfast, Ireland; A. Horne (for children), 39, Westbury Road, Barking, Essex; Mr. George Pearce, Lending Library, Camelford, Cornwall; Lillie Bishop, 97, Kingsland Road, N.; Sydney D. Cowdery, 191, Purves Road, Kensal Rise, W.; T. B. Frizelle, 26, Clifton Park Avenue, Belfast; Miss Nellie Pimm, 30, Sandover Road, Camberwell; Mr. H. G. Potts, 36, Great King Street, Birmingham; Alfred Butcher, The Manse, Wickhambrook, Newmarket.

Communications Received with Thanks.—T.L.C. F.S.A. J.L.N. A.F.B. Dr. B. J.G. T.A.L. G.P.G. J.H.R. L.B.A. E.T. E.J.M.D. E.C. E.B. K.W. H.E.D. C.W. J.W. E.T.S. B.J. E.A.H. S.F. F.T. E.H.K. W.R.N. A.R. A.J.K. J.K. C.H. W.D. K.A.H. J.W.A. J.G.W. J.G.A. W.J.T. G.B. ; Hon. Mrs. F. G.A. S.V.C. N.P. Mrs. W. F.E.W. R.H. W.C.B. J.T.R. A.F.H. F.W.E. F.S. A.H.

Caution.—A correspondent sends a note of warning with reference to Mr. Samuel T. Cephas, who has been collecting funds, ostensibly for the relief of sufferers from the disastrous cyclone in the West Indies. Our correspondent states that Mr. Cephas professes, at times, to belong to the Methodist Free Church, but at other times to the Wesleyan body. He gives the name and address of a London agent, but letters sent thereto have been returned through the dead letter office.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

MANY of our readers were personally acquainted with our Assistant Editor, Mr. George Rettie, who had been engaged on this paper for nearly thirty years, and whom we highly valued for his many estimable qualities. With very great regret we have to report his sudden death from the bursting of a blood-vessel on Saturday afternoon. He had been failing in health for the past two years, but his medical adviser thought there was no immediate danger, and that he might live for years. There appears, however, to have been an unsuspected weakness which terminated his life so suddenly and sadly. The funeral, which was necessarily soon, took place on Tuesday at Norwood Cemetery. Mr. Rettie accompanied Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey on their last tour in Scotland, and his graphic reports were highly appreciated. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe thought there was no one like him for the reporting of evangelistic meetings. We are sure our readers will unite with us in prayerful sympathy towards the bereaved relatives, and especially the young wife, to whom our friend had only been married a few months.

That was a searching question which Dr. Dale asked of his brother-ministers—"When we have prayed most earnestly has it not often been when our preparation for the pulpit has been over?" This is necessary, no doubt, but it may be more like asking God to come and help the minister to do his best, than asking Him to complete and honour his own work already begun. From the Acts of the Apostles we learn that prayer preceded the impulse to preach, and obtained the requisite power.

A fresh illustration of the growth of the spirit of union in Christian work comes from Boston, U.S.A. As a result of the "Vermont Convention," five home missionary societies, each organized independently, are giving consideration to a scheme of practical co-operation. The proposal is > that instead of a possible voting membership of several thousands, each society shall have a corporate body of two or three hundred members elected by the churches for a term of years. . . . . To secure unity, the same persons might, to a large extent, be chosen corporate members of all the home societies.

Very much can be said in favour of focussing the forces of religious organizations for the salvation of the unChristianised masses of the people. Subscribed funds are made to accomplish wider ends, workers understand each other better, a united front is presented to the world, official expenses are reduced, and the common spiritual weal more successfully promoted. The oneness which is in Christ thus becomes a manifest reality.

It is hardly credible that serious exception should be taken to the children's sermonette, as introduced by many ministers into their Sunday morning service. Yet it is so. We cannot believe that the opponents of this useful innovation are numerous. Everything points to the desirability of interesting the children of Christian families and Sunday school scholars in the public worship of their own church. By all wise means the boys and girls of our day must be won for Christ, and inspired for active service in the Lord's Kingdom as years increase. Their love for the House of God should in every legitimate way be fostered. How can this be accomplished if there is no portion of the service in which they can specially share? If we want the youth of our Churches to love the sanctuary and to sustain the Christian ministry, it can be done only by making public worship attractive to them.

In a striking article on "The Local Church and the Community," Rev. Charles M. Sheldon contrasts the two conceptions of a church (1) as a place to work in, and (2) as a force to work with. Too many ministers act on the former idea. All the effort they put forth is not to fight the battles of the Lord outside, but their own inside their church. But that is not the Scriptural idea. The Church is Christ's instrument for the evangelization and uplifting of the world. Its own internal life will be kept vigorous and sweet and happy by the activity of its members in the community outside. The main force of an army goes into battle, not into hospital. If churches were busier in doing good, and in endeavouring to extend the influence of the Gospel on the surrounding population, they would be far healthier and more peaceable within; and they would fulfil their Master's purpose for them, which is that his Body should be the instrument of his will in establishing the Kingdom of God on earth as it is in Heaven.

We are glad to see that the Salvation Army is opposing the bills for conferring powers upon the local authorities at Rhyl and at Ramsgate to restrict open-air preaching. This ancient right, through the use of which England has over and over again been evangelized, should be sturdily maintained; and we trust that all lovers of the Gospel who can do so will join in the opposition to these reactionary measures.

Rev. Dr. Mackennal thinks it is quite possible that the first years of the new century will be marked by an advance in religion comparable to the Methodist movement of the eighteenth century, but that it will be a movement not so much of individual evangelists as a great united movement of the churches.

> The result will be that the marked individualism of the Evangelical Revival will be replaced by a sense of the fellowship and the social obligations of religion.

How the Spirit of the Lord will operate none can say; He bloweth where He listeth. Perhaps we do not realise sufficiently that in every great movement the great bulk of the work was not done by the few whose names were prominent, but by the crowd of loving toilers whose names are unknown. And, further, no such movement has exalted individualism above collectivism. Where the Spirit of God works, as at Pentecost, at the Reformation, at the Evangelical Revival, a new sense of brotherhood is born, which raises the standard of social obligation.

The re-opening of the Cathedral of Methodism last Friday was an occasion for much jubilation of the best kind. Wesleyan Methodism has accomplished so much for the true emancipation of the souls of men that memorials like those preserved in Wesley's House become a helpful inspiration. The growth of Methodism, its remarkable power in revival services, and its permanent results, may be traced to the zeal of its earlier ministers and their absolute dependence upon the living Christ. Evangelical in doctrine, and practical in exhortation, this Christian Church has its adherents in all lands who cherish the warmth and spiritual enthusiasm of its illustrious founder. It has grown to be more than a sect. It is one of the many religious forces which the new century will know how to utilise for the further extension of the Kingdom of God.

It is a singular irony of events which deprives women of their right to a share of power under the London Government Bill just at the time of the famous Women's International Congress, and that, too, when they have a champion in the Prime Minister himself. When we get fairly face to face with overcrowding and the decent housing of the poor and of our working classes, we may perhaps come to regret the loss of women's knowledge and faculty of suggestion and power of execution. Common-sense and the sense of justice seem to be scarce in some high places.

One subject discussed at the Women's International Congress claims earnest consideration from all educationists in our own country. No other topic perhaps aroused deeper interest than the co-education of children. It seems to be proved that up to the age of thirteen years the teaching of boys and girls together is much to be preferred to the separation of the sexes. To adopt the best methods possible for training our youth must be the ardent concern of everyone who would promote the country's good. We desire to make our young people morally as well as religiously strong, and if the cultivation of habits of "fraternity, comradeship, and friendship," apart from sex distinctions, will aid this great purpose, there should be no hesitation in adopting it. Where we have seen the system in operation, we have been more than satisfied with its results, both morally and educationally.

The Board of Trade report on Domestic Service, edited by Miss Collet, contains some instructive matter, and disposes of some widespread misconceptions. It is surprising, in the face of the reiterated complaint that "there are no servants nowadays," to find that there are no fewer than 1,748,954 women who earn their living in this calling, more than a third of the great army of female wage-earners in the kingdom. In spite of the supposed increasing restlessness among domestics, it is found that the average length of service is satisfactory, except to those mistresses who say that "it does a girl no good to stay too long in one situation." At the time of this inquiry, all the servants included in the returns (5,568 in number) had stayed on an average three years in their present situations, and 8 per cent. had been ten years in them.

The final impression left on the reader's mind in this report is that the condition of domestic servants in these days is improving, both as regards treatment and remuneration, and that even though "they form on the whole the hardest worked class in the community," they have many compensations denied to other wage-earners. The great drawback in the lot of a servant, from her own point of view, is that she has no time she can technically call her own; but thoughtful mistresses are doing much to remove the pressure of this disadvantage; and, in other respects, the chances of a happy and useful life in domestic service are steadily improving. By sympathy and thoughtful care, mistresses can do much to make the lot of those who serve them in the home one of great comfort, and to give a direction to their characters which afterwards reacts for good on the community when they become wives and mothers.

In a carefully-guarded statement, and without taking a direct vote, the delegates at the Peace Conference have practically vetoed the Czar's suggestion to arrest the armaments of Europe at their present point. Technically this has been done on the ground that it is impossible to estimate what are the effective fighting forces of a nation, and to regulate these by an international convention. The Conference concludes its report on this point with "a pious wish" to see something better done at some future occasion, when the conditions are more auspicious. The nett results of the Conference will therefore be the new scheme of international arbitration, and the revision and expansion of the German convention as regards treatment of the wounded, &c.

The friends of peace will, of course, be disappointed at the comparatively poor outcome of the Conference, but there are two consolatory reflections to be borne in mind. First, all progress, in order to be certain, is bound to be slow; and to expect that full results should follow the first International Conference on so tangled and difficult a matter would be too much. Secondly, the fact that the Powers have met in consultation on this matter is bound to have a widespread though indirect influence in preparing men's minds for better things, and in making war less popular. Often the incidental effects of such efforts are more valuable than the direct, and it may be so in this case. And we have thankfully to remember that, even as it is, some valuable benefits are likely to accrue to the world. The Conference may have largely failed in its ostensible purpose, but it has not met in vain.

The majority and minority reports of the Licensing Commission have at last been issued. The differences between the two reports are not so vital in some directions as we had been led to suppose, though in others they are irreconcilable. The minority recommend entire Sunday Closing; the majority fear the people will not stand it. They differ as to the treatment of bonâ fide travellers, as to the right of compensation, and other matters. But there is much in the direction of reform on which all the members are agreed, especially as to making the serving of drinks to habitual drunkards and to children under sixteen a penal act, the registration and careful regulation of clubs, the exclusion of members of the trade from serving on Watch Committees, the reduction of Sunday hours, &c. If these common points of agreement were carried into law a great step towards betterment would be made. Here is a modest but very efficient list of reforms which temperance advocates would do well to press to an issue.

The story of the Dreyfus "affair" is most pathetic in what we may trust are its final stages. The arrival on French soil, the present imprisonment after the Supreme Court of Justice has pronounced the evidence on which the prisoner was convicted to be absolutely worthless, the periodical visits of Madame Dreyfus to her husband in his cell, the Captain's absorption in an attempt to familiarise himself with all the details of the infamous intrigue, the righteous indignation of everyone who loves justice, give to the case at this point a pathos which thrills the heart. The whole persecution has been more than political or military from the beginning. If the accused had not been a Jew the probability is that we should never have heard of the false charges at all. But the hour of deliverance draws nigh.

For the time being things are quieter in Belgium, but in Spain there are rage and violence, all caused by the people's resentment of Church ascendancy. It almost takes one's breath away to read of the Spanish Chamber of Deputies allowing a motion to be brought forward demanding the expulsion of the Jesuits, and also a proposal for the complete expulsion of all the monastic orders. They have suffered grievous things in that priest-ridden country at the hands of "the black brigade," and we can understand their wrath; nevertheless, expulsion is not the remedy. Liberty for all religions, and privilege for none, is what is wanted in Spain and everywhere else. When that time comes, the State will cease favouring any particular church.

But it must not be liberty to tyrannize. True liberty prohibits tyranny. It is not God's liberty which permits the apostasy of Rome to establish and maintain prisons for monks and nuns, and not even to insist upon inspection of them. This is, in the deep-seeing words of Tennyson,

> Freedom free to slay herself,
> And dying while they shout her name.

Signs are not wanting that the war cloud overhanging the Transvaal is beginning to disperse. The tension is not quite so acute. In a pacific and reasonable spirit President Kruger and Mr. Hofmeyr have discussed further franchise possibilities, and agreed upon a modus vivendi, which it is fervently hoped will bring about a satisfactory settlement.

Our country is just adding to its enormous empire the most populous and valuable area of tropical Africa by taking over the territories of the Niger Company. It will probably be done without any division of opinion or delay, and yet how great is the responsibility it entails, and how serious the consequences it may bring. We shall have an additional reason for carrying the Gospel into those parts—that is one responsibility. And one consequence may be the hastening of conscription. If we cannot by voluntary enlistment obtain enough soldiers to rule our world-wide territories, then the cry will be raised for compulsory enlistment.

The late Archbishop Benson had greatly interested himself in the case of the Nestorian Christians, for the benefit of whom he organized his Assyrian Mission, which did good work in Persia, though the attitude of the Turkish Government checked its progress in Asia Minor. His successor has taken up the work, and is appealing for help for the Nestorians, who at present are persecuted by Turkey at home, and when they flee to Russia are pressed to join the Greek Church. Friendless, homeless, and often starving, many of these poor people are yielding to the pressure. The faithful remnant is in sore need of encouragement and help.

The public interest in inter-University Sports at this time of the year makes Bishop Mitchinson's remarks, as Master of Pembroke College, on the importance of keeping this recreative element in University life in its proper place, peculiarly appropriate. He declared himself shocked at the amount of devotion to sports at his own college, where the prospect of getting their own man into the "University eight" was considered a higher honour than to win a "double-first in the exams." His charge of idleness against the rank and file of undergraduates, through over-devotion to the exercises of the river and of the cricket-field, is a very serious matter, and should be specially attended to by the friends who often thoughtlessly encourage them in this very low ideal of university life. Our historic centres of learning are in danger of degenerating into mere athletic clubs if this sort of thing goes on. Even healthy sports become a snare when they take the place of higher things. Life is too serious a battle to be adequately prepared for on the recreation-ground.

The recently published Gifford Lectures for 1896-8, by Prof. James Ward, of Cambridge, who is one of the foremost psychologists of the day, illustrate how completely the mechanical and agnostic evolutionism of Herbert Spencer is being left behind by the leading thinkers of the day. That theory, which was so fashionable twenty years ago, and which seeks to deduce life, mind, and society, from a single mechanical principle, is declared by Prof. Ward to be futile and inadequate in attempting to account for what "actually goes on behind what we see and feel." This position is very much the same as that developed by the late Prof. William Wallace, of Oxford, in his posthumous volume in the same lectureship. A warmer air is thus blowing through the philosophic world, in which it has long been hard for the devout believer to breathe. The truth of religion does not depend on philosophic theory, but the latter has a great influence in helping or retarding faith in our great centres of learning. The signs just now are encouraging.

The Bishop of Norwich has spoken some words about baptismal regeneration which ought not to be passed by without a strong protest. In a recent interview he is represented as saying: "I see nothing revealed in the Bible or in the standards of the Church which would warrant me in saying that an unbaptized infant will enter heaven." This mildly-worded remark, when its inner meaning is extracted, is simply the negative form of Augustine's bold but horrible doctrine that there are "infants a span long in hell." And that is exactly what this fearful dogma, when pushed to its logical conclusion, must mean. Let those who are in danger of succumbing to the sacerdotal heresy reflect whether this conclusion to which it leads them does not discredit the premises on which it is built up. The whole spirit of the New Testament utterly discredits such teaching, which arose during a later period, when primitive Christianity had been contaminated by the stream of heathen thought.

The Lord's Prayer.

By Dr. J. R. MILLER.*

I. The Gate to the Place of Prayer.

The words "Our Father" stand here as the golden gate of prayer. This is the way we must enter as we approach God. There is no other entrance. It was Christ Himself who set up this gate. Not until He came was this way consecrated and thrown open. There were many previous manifestations of God through the prophets, but the Divine Fatherhood was not revealed save in the dimmest way in those ancient days. Only a few times in the whole Old Testament is God spoken of as Father, and not once are men taught to pray to Him by this name. But when Christ came all things were made new. From the beginning He spoke of God as Father. Indeed, He scarcely ever called Him by any other name.

This revelation never could have been made until Jesus came, for no man knew the Father save the Son, and no other one could have made Him known. Always men could pray, and God would hear them—the Old Testament has many an example of prayer, and many assurances that God hears prayer—but it was not until Christ had offered Himself on the cross that

THE WAY OF ACCESS WAS FULLY OPENED.

It was as He was dying that the veil of the temple was rent in twain from top to bottom —a miracle-parable signifying that the way to God was open now to every weary one who would come. There was a reason, therefore, why this gate of prayer could not have been set up before Christ came and taught and died. Through Him we may call God our Father, and come as children when we would pray.

The name we use for God in prayer is very important. It is not the same whether we call Him King, Creator, Judge or Father. If we think of Him as our King, royalty is suggested to us—majesty, splendour, and power; but not tenderness, nor ease of access, nor love. If we call Him Creator, the name carries us back to the beginning, when all things came from the divine hand, and we think of power, wisdom, goodness, beauty; but He is not brought near to us. Some people begin their prayers by invoking God as the incomprehensible One, a God of majesty and holiness, the Lord of hosts. All these names or titles have their suggestions of attributes or qualities of the divine character. But none of them present to us thoughts of God which make approach to Him easy. When we speak to God as our Father, the vision which arises before us assures us of welcome when we come to Him.

In the midst of the splendours of royalty, when men of highest rank are admitted to the king's presence only at the king's pleasure, the children of the king's household always have free access. No court rules shut them away or prescribe any ceremonious manner in which they must approach the throne.

THE KING IS THEIR FATHER.

To be a child of God is to have assurance of access to Him at all times. This golden gate of prayer, "Our Father," leads into the innermost sanctuary, into the very secret place of the Most High; and it is shut neither day nor night to any child of God.

The first word in this form of prayer is important. It is not "My Father," but "Our Father." Thus we are taught the danger of selfishness in praying. The tendency is to pray for ourselves alone. This is one of the dangers of private devotions. We are taught to enter into our closet and pray to our Father who is in secret; and the natural tendency is to think only of ourselves when we are thus alone with God. Here we are taught, however that we may never forget others when we come before our Father.

This does not mean that we should never present our own particular needs in prayer. In a sense each one of us lives his life alone—apart from all others. Our relations with God are personal and sacred. We are to bring our own wants, our own yearnings, our own infirmities and dangers, our own sorrows and trials; but in doing so, even when most engrossed with our own affairs, we may not fail to include others and to think of them. "When thou prayest alone, shut thy door"—shut out as much as thou canst the sight and notice of others; but shut not out the interest and good of others.

The word "our" takes in the whole family. But the duty of intercession is also definite and particular. We are especially taught to pray for those who may have injured us. "Pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you." Our prayer, like our love, should be exercised especially toward those who are in trouble. When we enter the golden gate we should remember those who are in sorrow, those who are in temptation, those who have failed and fallen, those to whom life is hard. We should never go for ourselves alone into the presence of our Father. If we do

WE SHALL MISS THE BLESSING.

When the Emperor of Rome was in the field with his army, it was forbidden that anyone should approach his tent at night. The penalty was instant death. One night a soldier was seen approaching the tent of the Emperor bearing a paper in his hand. He was promptly arrested, and was sentenced to die. The Emperor, however, within his tent, heard the commotion outside, and asked what it was about. He was told the cause, and said that if the soldier's petition was for himself he must die, but that if it was for others his life should be spared. It was learned that the petition was for three fellow-soldiers who had been found sleeping at their post. This soldier was coming to the Emperor with the plea that their lives might be spared. So the Emperor gave command that because of the nature of the petition the soldier should live, and also that his plea should be granted.

When we come to God only for ourselves, our prayer may not be pleasing to Him. It may be selfish, unloving. But when we come with intercession for others He is pleased, for in our hearts is love. When we pray to God, therefore, we should speak not only on our own behalf, but should bring the burdens and the needs of others. There must be no exclusion in our prayers—

THEY MUST BE ALL-INCLUSIVE.

"Our Father, which art." This is one of the great present tenses of the Bible. God is. He is not a being who merely was in the remote past and is now only a memory. Nor is He a God who is to manifest Himself some time in the future as our Judge. He is. He is the living God. He is evermore our Father. There is never a moment when He is not near us, when his ear will not hear our faintest cry, when his hand is not ready to help.

It is our Father in heaven to whom we pray. Thus our thoughts are lifted up above this earth. While the blessed Name assures us of all tenderness, affection, and accessibleness, the place of God's abode suggests to us his glory, greatness, and holiness. He is not like one of us. We bear his image, but He is infinitely above us. All the visions and representations of God in the Scriptures show Him to us as dwelling in light to which no man can approach. Thus we are assured also of the power of God. He is our Father—infinite in love, but infinite also in strength. We are safe in his hands. No power can harm us if we are sheltered in his strong keeping.

This revelation of the Fatherhood of God suggests to us what an exalted privilege prayer is. It is free access into the presence of the God of heaven. In our continual approaches to God we are in danger of forgetting the meaning of the act. Moses was bidden to take off his shoes before the burning bush, because the ground whereon he stood was holy. Isaiah was awed into deepest reverence as he beheld the vision of God in the temple. Yet these were only glimpses of divine manifestations. Every time we speak God's name in prayer we are in the presence of than that of any theophany human eye ever saw. It becomes us, therefore, to be reverent, to be sincere, to be true-hearted, when we pray. We may come boldly and with confidence, for it is to our Father we are drawing nigh; but we should come remembering that He is our Father in heaven, the glorious One before whom highest angels veil their faces while they sing.

A GLORY GREATER AND MORE REAL

On the other hand, this revelation of the Fatherhood of God assures us of the infinite love that continually surrounds us. There is nothing in the divine majesty and glory that should ever make us afraid, if we are truly trusting in Christ, and faithfully following Him. To some persons the thought of God's presence brings terror. Children are sometimes told that God sees them, as if this should make them afraid. God always sees us —we cannot hide from Him for a moment. This should lead us to live ever to please Him. Yet it is in love that He watches us. "Thou God seest me" meant mercy and deliverance to Hagar and her child. No truth should bring greater comfort and joy to the Christian than this thought of God's ever-nearness. It means all of a child's privilege in a father's house—safety, care, help, satisfying communion, all of love's blessedness.

This revealing suggests also the true glory of the Christian life. We make too little of this—we fail to realize the dignity of our calling as God's children. "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called children of God": and such we are. There is a picture which shows a man dying in a wretched garret on a bed of straw, amid lowliest surroundings. But a close inspection reveals a vision of angels waiting to receive the man's spirit into heavenly glory. We should think more of our privilege as God's children in this world, and should

WALK WORTHY OF OUR HIGH CALLING.

The Fatherhood of God also implies the brotherhood of all who are God's children. All are members of one family, who therefore should dwell together in love. It was said of a good man, "He treated every man as if he were a blood-relation." This is true brotherhood. The strong should help the weak. Those who have plenty should share with those who lack. The joyous should sing their songs of gladness in the ears of the sad. The victorious should help those who are still struggling in life's battles. All social problems would find easy solution if the love which Christ taught were to become indeed the law of life in all human relations.

These are only hints of the vast and deep meaning of this wonderful invocation. We have found enough at least in it to assure us of welcome whenever we come as children to our Father. We need to strive more and more after the child-spirit; for only when we have it can we find our way to the innermost warmth of divine love.

* Copyright by Dr. J. R. Miller in the United States and Great Britain.

Christian Life Boat Crew.—"One thing needful," formed the keynote of the July muster of the crew held at Miss Child's Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town. A cheering report of the work in all its branches was the special note of praise. Deacon Abraham, from Persia, gave an interesting account of the Kurds' dealings with him. Much prayer is asked that the work throughout the summer may be sustained.

The National Refuges. — The Earl and Countess of Jersey have generously invited the boys and girls of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, including the sailor boy of the Arethusa and Chichester training ships, Greenhithe, Kent, to spend the day at his lordship's beautiful park at Osterley, Isleworth, on the 19th inst. Boys from the Bisley Farm Schools, and 200 girls from the Society's Homes at Sudbury and Ealing, will share in the festivities which the noble Earl (who is president of the Society) always provides for these poor children.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, July 16. 1 Sam. xxx.

IN this terrible calamity David behaved himself as a strong and noble man. It was an awful discovery when, on their return from Achish, they found smouldering ashes where they had left a populous city, though they must have felt there was some justice in their being treated as they had dealt with the neighbouring tribes. The one man who seemed to rise to the emergency was the leader, of whom it is said, David strengthened himself in the Lord his God. A moment like this is the supreme test of a man. He will naturally turn to the source of help which is most often in his mind. In bereavement and commercial loss be sure to turn at once to the Strong for strength.

More than this, inquire of the Lord. His summons to the priest is equivalent to our appeal to Him who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and even waits to answer the appeal of the soul. With us the answer may not come in so many words, but as we submit our judgment to the Divine light, God's thought will become impressed upon it, and our circumstances will corroborate the impression.

The man who has laid hold on God's strength will be courteous in his manner towards the weak and oppressed, and will not quail before the popular clamour; hence it was that on his return David asked the 200 of their welfare (R.V. marg.), and insisted that they should share the spoils of war. Will God do less for you, who long to go to the front, but are constrained to tarry by the stuff? Girls staying with their parents, young men supporting their mothers, invalids confined to their rooms—let all such be of good cheer; they shall share in the glory of that day when Christ sees his desire on his enemies.

MONDAY, July 17. 1 Sam. xxxi.

A fatal day was this! It was the Sedan of Israel. A defeat like this indicates something more than the temporary failure of an army on the battlefield, it indicates that the national life is rotten to the heart, that the moral fibre is impaired, that the blood of its life is thin. It was as though Saul's reign of Israel, favoured and abetted as it must have been by many of its leaders, had come before the judgment-seat of God, weighed in the balances, and dismissed as being accursed. These are solemn thoughts for ourselves at the close of this century; amid the universal devotion to amusement, the accumulation of wealth, there is serious danger to fear for the impoverishment of our national moral life, and demoralization inevitably precedes defeat.

How much had happened since Saul as a young man had stood before Samuel, in the first flush of modest hesitation, to obey the will of the people! Who could have supposed that he would ever fall upon his sword, and take the coward's deliverance from the ills of life by suicide? But to this he had drifted from the moment that he admitted the first suggestion of jealousy of David. The borer worm had eaten out the heart of this noble forest tree, which crashed to the ground beneath the force of the tempest.

The only gleam of light on this terrible day was the gratitude of the men of Jabesh Gilead. They, at least, with almost a woman's devotion, could not forget what Saul had been in those early days of his kingdom. Gratitude is a trait of a noble nature. Let us be sure to manifest it to others, as we hope that they shall show it to us.

TUESDAY, July 18. 2 Sam. i.

The scene changes from Gilboa to Ziklag, whither the tidings were brought by an Amalekite. It is remarkable to notice the manner in which David received his tidings. Though he had spent years in the rough and terrible life of a freebooter, surrounded by strong course-natured men, he did not lose the refinement and delicacy of a noble nature. It was as though he breathed another air, and saturated his spirit in the sunshine of God's presence. To men like Nabal he seemed an outlaw, but those who knew his inner life realised that there was a whole heaven of difference between him and men with whom he was compelled to consort. See to it that by fellowship with God, purity, truth and love, you keep your nature from being coarsened by the speech and manners of your comrades.

Any gratification that his enemy was dead, that he would no longer be hunted as a partridge in the mountains, that the last barrier had been removed between him and the kingship promised so long before, was submerged in a tidal wave of noble sorrow. It was genuine grief which made him rend his clothes and fast, and genuine patriotism which led to the execution of the king's confessed assassin. And so from the depths of a guileless heart there poured forth the Song of the Bow, which ranks amongst the noblest elegies in any tongue.

Accustom yourself to look always on the excellencies of your friends. Forget the slights and injuries in which you were personally concerned, in your desire to do justice to the nobler qualities of their nature. Attribute as much as you like to illness, over-strain, and misfortune, and cherish ever the ideal of your soul.

WEDNESDAY, July 19. 2 Sam. ii.

In the day when, through Saul's death, David stood on the steps of the throne, he was still as eager to inquire of the Lord as when a fugitive in the field of Ziph, or in the presence of the disaster as Ziklag. He would not go up to the cities of Judah until he had inquired of the Lord, and received specific direction.

In this account of his anointing over the house of Judah at Hebron, the second of the three anointings of his life, we seem to have an illustration and type of our Lord's anointing as king over his own people, which will be preparatory to his coronation as king of the world. David's anointing in Bethlehem in the secrecy of his father's home has its parallel in the anointing of Jesus at the Jordan. This anointing at Hebron is parallel to our Lord's recognition by his own people, which cannot surely now be long delayed. David's further anointing over all Israel is parallel to the time when this whole world shall acknowledge the supremacy of the Prince of Peace.

In the meanwhile the house of Saul is strong, and has its seat on the other side of the river of separation and death. Jabesh Gilead, across the Jordan, is a type of the government of this world, and of the influence of those who refuse the waters of separation. Between the unspiritual and spiritual, the world and the Church, Babylon and Jerusalem, there must be long war, until the day breaks upon us at Hebron, the city of fellowship and peace (v. 30).

THURSDAY, July 20. 2 Sam. iii.

God's promise to David was evidently well known in Israel. Abner speaks of it as perfectly familiar, and this makes his own action the more unjustifiable. It is bad for a man when he deliberately sets himself to frustrate or resist God's purpose. Our great object in life should be to ascertain in what direction the current of God's purpose is moving, and to place ourselves on its flood. We may spend all our life abortively unless we are prepared to work with God in the majestic movement of his programme.

We are not anxious to defend David's treatment of Michal. It was a stroke of policy by which he reminded the people of his connections with the house of Saul through marriage; at the same time it inflicted bitter pain on an apparently happy married life, and was probably needless in the face of God's distinct transference of the kingdom to his hand. We should allow our lives to be ruled as far as possible by principles of humanity and reverent respect for natural feelings. When a man is strong in the blessed help and guidance of God, he can afford to dispense with many of those precautions to which ordinary people resort.

Abner's death elicited a nobler trait in David's character. He was genuinely moved at the tidings of his treacherous murder, and instantly relieved himself of all suspicion of complicity. It is peremptory that Christians should disavow connivance with the evil deeds of those with whom they happen to be associated in public movements. We must stand clear of the wreckage which floats around us. Not for our sakes alone, but for the cause of God, which is dearer to us than life, we must make it clear that we are not responsible for crimes that our associates may perpetrate.

FRIDAY, July 21. 2 Sam. iv.

How little men of coarser mould understand a refined spiritual nature! They judge by their own standard, as Rechab and Baanah did. These men reasoned that, were they in David's place, nothing would please them better than the removal of Ish-bosheth; therefore David would reward them munificently if they would murder him. Be very careful how you judge other men by yourself; and do not suppose, because you are animated by base and sordid passion, therefore they are thinking or feeling after the same fashion. Things that you interpret in your direction do not bear the meaning that your base nature may impart to them.

In this moment of subtle temptation the strong fibre of David's character asserts itself. He refuses to exonerate these men, though the benefit accruing to himself was patent. He dealt with them with absolute impartiality. Be just and fear not. In your dealings with men, put aside all selfish interests, all thought of personal gain, all those softer views which tone away the absolute rightness and wrongness of acts for personal considerations. Stand clear in God's light. See things as they are, and act as one who utters the sentence and wields the sword of absolute intergrity.

Again we come on David's devout spirit. How perpetually the loving Jehovah was present to his mind! And here notice especially his ascription of redemption to the tender mercy of God. Oh, Christian soul, believe that some day you will reach the sunny height on which you will be able to say, "He hath redeemed my soul out of all adversity." The night is long and dark, but it must end.

> "Be the day dreary, or be the day long,
> At last it bringeth to evensong."

SATURDAY, July 22. 2 Sam. v.

David's third coronation was the consummation of a promise made years before when, as a stripling, he bent beneath Samuel's hand. In God's own time, and that the ripest, the harvest of the autumn fruit came to maturity. The fall of Jerusalem before his arms, the assistance of Hiram, king of Tyre, the repeated defeat of the Philistines, were so many steps towards the consolidation of his kingdom. David waxed greater and greater, for the Lord, the God of Hosts, was with him.

It is remarkable how at this time the clear perception spread through David's soul that the Lord had established him king over Israel, and that the kingdom was exalted for Israel's sake. In our earlier life God's purpose is largely hidden from us, we know not whence or whither; but as the years proceed we witness the evolutions of God's programme, and realize why we were born, redeemed, and trained. At such hours we obtain a clue to the maze of life, and become convinced that from the first God had a plan. At such hours also we see that our own personal gratification has been, and must be, secondary to the needs of others. Whatever Israel stands for in your life, whether the destiny of one person or many, be sure that for this cause you were born, and for this you came into the world. Only be very careful to be warned by David's example. The season of his prosperity led to his increase of luxurious and sensual gratification, out of which came the troubles of his after-life (vv. 13, 15). But as yet his own religious life was vigorous, as was manifest in his constant waiting upon God for direction in his conflicts with the Philistines. Oh, for the quick ear to detect the footfall of God's angels in the still air, or in the quivering leaves of the mulberry tree, as twelve legions of angels hasten to our help.

"What Would the Master Say?"

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

"They also serve who only stand and wait."

THAT chair in the window over the balcony was a sacred place. It had stood there for three long years. In winter it was drawn nearer to the fire, and curtained round; in summer, turned toward the garden and surrounded by flowers. She who sat there was not old and worn, for Elice Fontaine was but twenty-seven.

The afternoon had been cloudless. One and another had looked in, glad to rest in the quiet room and hear words from the lips of one who always inspired to better thoughts and feelings. On a fancy calendar the date stood before her, "May 18." A tear trickled down her fair young face as she lay back and let her eyes travel away over the hills that stood at a pleasant distance.

Four years ago that very day, Oswald Fontaine claimed her as his bride. No healthier or brighter lassie could be found. He was busy at his office during the day; helping at times in the church where he attended; and, with her beside him, all seemed glad.

Then came a blow to all the life and energy. From a railway accident Elice recovered, only to find herself disabled for the rest of her life. Her class on Sundays, and her work in the week, were laid down with tears. Gradually sufficient power returned to allow her to be placed in a large easy chair, and there month after month she sat, beloved and sought unto by many.

But on this fourth anniversary a shadow fell across her way. To her God's will seemed plainly written in this very sorrow that had come; to bear her grievous disappointment nobly, and use her influence for his glory, seemed the way to follow Him. Yet her husband had distressed her of late by his new ideas of what he ought to do as Christ's disciple.

Entering the room gently, he discerned the altered look. "Where is the smile I always see, Elice?" he asked, dropping languidly on to the couch opposite.

"You have stolen that from me to-day, Oswald. I was thinking of your strange notions of what Christ would do in your place. Are you still determined to give up your calling?"

He held a rose between his fingers, idly pulling leaf from leaf. "Elice, do not you reprove me; it is hard enough to give up place and position too, and go out to save the lost. Surely you will encourage, not hinder me. Yes, if Christ were here He would not sit in that cramped office, and bear the worry of those I have to deal with. He would leave all and go out and preach."

His countenance fell as he uttered these words, for he knew how she had been obliged to give up all outward pleasures and activity, and needed all his care and attention. He knew, too, that he had been sharp and hard on some who might have expected better things from him, and he felt uneasy.

She did not speak, but opened a note just handed in. "I am dispirited and sad; may I come and see you? You always put new life into me," said the writer.

"Poor, suffering Elice," he said, pitifully. "You must put up with your dull do-nothing life; but all the more need that I should go and work among the lost, and those who need teaching."

"Who are lost? And who need teaching? Are they all in one class and place, Oswald?" she softly asked.

"You are like the rest of the ordinary Christians; you would place difficulty in my way. Elice, I must be all for Christ, so do not hinder me." He rose in a would-be-martyr kind of spirit, and left the room, muttering: "Ah, He said, 'Leave wife and all for Him.'"

Meantime, around that easy chair the atmosphere of Christ's own Spirit dwelt. Three-downcast ones came there and received a blessing, each going forth re-inspired to carry on a better work for souls. With no changes of scene, yet all the eager longings within her heart for activity and life, she asked herself, "What would Jesus do in my place now?" Instantly the answer came to her, "He would say about this suffering, 'Lo, I come to do thy will,'" and a sense of peace came to her as she said:

Thy way, not mine, O Lord,
However dark it be;
Lead me by thine own hand,
Choose out the path for me.

. . . . . .

Oswald Fontaine received applause from those who, like himself, had mistaken their Master's will. That evening he stood up and delivered a fine speech, offering to work among the poor for Christ. Long and late he argued with those about him, and then returned along the road. In his heart two feelings strove for mastery. He felt himself heroic, almost to martyr degree, that he had thrown up his place in business to go out in the footsteps of Christ, preach and labour, content with the smaller income he already had. Yet he also felt himself a coward to have escaped the spheres where it was hard to be a Christian, and to leave the one whose opportunities for active service were denied.

Reaching the corner where two roads met, a figure draped in a large black shawl came suddenly upon him. The shadows of night were gathering in, and he had not noticed anyone near. With face and head covered, the woman began to speak.

"I knew you would come back this way. Now hear me, Oswald Fontaine. You talk about following in the Master's steps. I've heard of all your fine talk. You are going to leave your business because Jesus would not engage in it if He were here. In that much you are right. Not as you conduct it. Answer me; when you deal hastily and sharply with those who try to serve you, and look to you for help, what would the Master say? When it lies in your power to encourage and cheer, and you speak never a word of hope, what would the Master say?" She paused, overcome by emotion, for that man before her could have saved her husband from his present despondency had he treated him as Jesus would have done. Instead of poverty, they might have had comfort; but in Fontaine's service he had been harshly used and badly paid.

"I will not go," she said, as he tried to push her aside. "I have the power that right always has over wrong, and you must hear."

"I am giving up my business; I cannot help you."

"Poor, deluded man, think! To carry on business for selfish ends, regardless of other people's interests, and then say it is the business Jesus would not touch! He would use it for large and grand purposes, and treat those concerned with generous care. 'Tis the spirit that He would spurn. He sees it all, and knows you have gone out stained with soiled hands to take up other work, and dare to say that is what Christ would do."

The black figure hurried off, and Oswald went home, indignant and annoyed.

"This day has seemed long," said his wife; "but I thank God if I have glorified Him in any way. Sometimes I wish to serve Him otherwise; but I try to say as Jesus did, 'to do thy will, O God.'"

Oswald sat down strangely silent. She spoke cheerfully to him. "Are you tired?" at last she asked. Then he repeated all the woman had said.

"What is your answer? Do not be angry, Oswald; she is a wounded Christian."

"This is my response, Elice: God helping me, I go back to carry on my business in such a spirit as Jesus would. I know He would right the wrongs of life, not shirk the duties. He would seek to do his Father's will in every place. Your gracious influence has helped me to this, for in your chair, away from slum or suburb, you follow in the Lord's footsteps."

The light that shone out from her face, bespoke her inward joy. "Oswald, I have prayed for this," she said; "would to God those who call themselves Christians could know that to walk in the Saviour's footsteps means to be and do the noblest and best in the sphere where each is situated!"

Weeks following saw changes. Employer and employed worked with a better understanding and common interests, and the name of Fontaine rose out of its misty surroundings. The slums did not claim all his attention; but, living Christ in his own vocation, many were helped and blessed who also need uplifting.

Beside Elice's chair one evening there sat the woman who had so sharply accosted Oswald that night. She was telling her good news, and listening to the usual message of grace from the consecrated sufferer.

"Life is altered for us now, since the Spirit of Jesus has moved through all the business transactions. Oh, you cannot think how different——"

The door opened and, unexpectedly, Oswald stood there. "Will you pardon my sharp words, Mr. Fontaine? I was grieved that night," said the visitor.

"Say, rather, you were inspired. Thank God for your question! When I think of the good it has led to, I often ask, 'What will the Master say to you, and to my patient wife who serves in her waiting?'"

Be Thou my pattern, make me bear
More of thy gracious image here;
Then God, the Judge, shall own my name
Amongst the followers of the Lamb.

Words to Workers and Others.

THE DOCTRINE OF INFALLIBILITY.

THE portentous doctrine of infallibility, as it is employed in the Catholic Church, stamps an entirely new character on the Christian religion, and substitutes a new object of faith and dependence, deifies what is human, hides and cancels what is Divine, and transfers our allegiance from God to mortals. Robert Hall.

THE FOLLY OF PROCRASTINATION.

The man who observes himself and his ways through life hath little to do in examining them when he comes to die. It is a piece of strange folly that we defer the whole or a great part of our day's work to the twilight of the evening, and are so cruel to ourselves as to keep the great load of our life for a few hours or days, and for a pained, sickly body. He who makes it his daily work to observe his ways is not astonished when that day comes which long before was familiar to him every day.

Archbishop Leighton.

SPIRITUAL PARADOXES.

As there are mysteries in the ways of God and his providences, so there are also in the ways of religion and godliness. As God is a hidden God, so his people are a hidden people—not only for safety, but for secrecy. They are alive, and yet dead; they have nothing, and yet possess all things; they love themselves, and yet loath and deny themselves; they are not satisfied with the whole world, and yet are content with little; they abound in works of righteousness, and yet abhor all righteousness of work.

Philip Henry.

A TIMELY REPROOF.

A man of a proud spirit, after a serious conversation with Dr. Nettleton, the New England evangelist, said: "I will thank you not to speak to anyone of my case, for it is doubtful as yet what the result will be." Dr. Nettleton well understood the haughty motive which prompted the remark, so he replied: "I agree with you perfectly. It is best your case should not be known. It is, as you say, doubtful how things will turn out. You may soon give up thought of religion, and lose your soul!" The reply went home, and the man experienced such a deep distress that he cared not if all the world knew of his interest in Christ. Needless to say, he very soon found peace.

THE GROUND OF FORGIVENESS.

"Accepted in the Beloved," our sin is virtually, and our liability to punishment is actually, destroyed; we are, as to legal consequences, placed in the condition, and clothed with the character, of those who have vindicated and established their personal virtue; we are regarded and treated as if we were just; we are pronounced free; we have liberty and life secured to us; we are pardoned; we are justified by faith. That is to say: With respect to God, we are justified in consequence of his perception of the inherent sufficiency of the work of Christ to constitute the ground of forgiveness; with respect to ourselves, we are justified in consequence of our reception of the Divine testimony concerning it.

Thomas Binney.

THE LATE

Benjamin Wills Newton.

BY ONE WHO KNEW HIM.

THERE has recently fallen asleep, at the age of ninety-two, one long valued as a many-sided teacher of Scriptural truth, Mr. B. W. Newton. His Christian course began in 1827. A few years before then, he had become, at the very early age of eighteen, a fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. My own knowledge of him, as an attendant on his ministry, and one privileged to have much private intercourse with him, began in April, 1868. About 1835 he met S. P. Tregelles, of whose conversion he became the instrument. It may interest some who are still shy of "Prophetic Truth," to know that Tregelles was drawn to the Gospel by means of a prophetic tract given by Mr. Newton. Space forbids dwelling on the career, for the next forty years, of the man who thus became Mr. Newton's life-friend. It should, however, be known now, as it might not be, by his strict injunction, before, that, but for his liberality, seconded by his influence with others, Tregelles might not have been able to pursue, for over thirty years, his life-work of establishing, from the most ancient documents, the genuine text of the Greek Testament.

Among the services in which the two worked together (1860 and onward) was that of ministering to the needs and alleviating the sufferings of Manuel Matamoros in his witness for Gospel truth in Spain.

The events in Devonshire which culminated in the disruption of the "Brethren" cannot be dealt with here. Much help in forming a judgment will be found in Dr. Tregelles' "Three Letters to the Author of 'A Retrospect of Recent Events among the Brethren.'" (Houlston.) It is the writer's belief that the disruption was mainly due to deep-seated variance of views on prophecy, though in the result it was made to rest on other grounds. Mr. Newton's connection with the "Brethren" ceased after 1848.

His ministry in London was one never to be forgotten. When in March, 1868, the writer, then a babe in Christ, was craving (surely not of himself) more systematic teaching than his own spiritual parents could give, he was led to Mr. Newton, the friend who was the link saying, "There is only one man who can do what you need. You can get Reformation truth elsewhere, but Apostolic truth only from Mr. Newton." This was soon illustrated.

In the controversy which, alas! promises long to divide true Christians, Mr. Newton was a firm Calvinist. His hearers were reminded that the language of Scripture was not so much the "perseverance" of the saints as their preservation (Jude 1; compare Rom. v. 10). Two other doctrines to which, in view of the conflicting teaching current, he attached vast importance, were (1) the position of the Old Testament saints as an integral portion of the Church, (2) the Coming of the Lord as not secret nor for a select part of the Church, but in manifested glory, and for all believers as such. On these two points his conviction was so strong that he had doubts as to receiving at the Lord's Table any who held what he felt to be grave error.

Mr. Newton was often regarded as too dogmatic. Doubtless the fast growing laxity of our days on truths all but vital made him seem intolerant at times. Yet he knew that on some points allowance for honest difference must be made. He once gave the writer his view on "The Spirits in Prison;" adding that such seemed the natural sense, but he would not speak dogmatically.

As to the extent of the Atonement, he held firmly "particular" redemption, in this agreeing with the great Puritan writers. In putting the Gospel before the unconverted, he went with the words of his warm friend, Dr. Horatius Bonar—"It is not the Gospel (though it is God's truth) to say, Christ died for the elect; nor again, to say, Christ died for everyone.* The Gospel is: Christ died for sinners."

As to the ministry of the Word among God's people, he held that it should be "stated, but not exclusive;" viz., there should be plurality of ministry in a congregation, whenever there were found in it a plurality in whom is the ministering gift. His own practice in London of ministering alone, he did not view as the Scriptural ideal; but believed that in the sorely broken up condition of the Church of Christ it was the best thing he could do.

On Baptism, Mr. Newton regarded the ordinance by immersion as one, like the Lord's Supper, for believers only. Still, he would not keep from the Lord's Table any who showed true marks of conversion, though not baptized according to his view of Scriptural order. His words are: "Many whom we know to have formed wrong conclusions are markedly owned by God as his servants. Are we, because of an outward ordinance, to cast out of the visible Church those whom the Lord even honours in it? It is ill for us to sit in judgment where Christ acts in grace; to reject from the Lord's Table those whom the Lord receives." Some will remember that on this very point Mr. Müller and Mr. Craik, when settling in Bristol, after much exercise of spirit, came to the same conclusion, on the ground of Rom. xiv.-xv. 7.

Just now, the "National Education" question is looming ominously before us. In 1870, in view of the discussion on Mr. Forster's measure, Mr. Newton said to his congregation that, as the measure was a Government one, the utmost Christians could expect was that in the new schools the Bible should be simply read as the Word of God. Amid the Babel of voices around us, have we improved on that advice?

Let all who can read for themselves, and not once only, the "Retrospective and Prospective Outline" of the history of Christianity, found at the close of Mr. Newton's "Babylon and Egypt" (ed. 3; 1890). It may be doubted if any other servant of God could have written matter so suggestive and far-reaching.

[* With every respect for the memory of these two good men, we must express our conviction that it is both the truth and the Gospel that Christ died for every one. It is written in Heb. ii. that "Jesus tasted death for every one;" and in 1 John ii., that "He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only but also for the sins of the whole world." If He died for sinners, surely He died for all, for all are sinners. The Lord Jesus was God manifested in flesh, and was therefore of infinitely more value than all mankind. It would have required an arbitrary decree to have limited the efficacy of his death to a particular number. We find it impossible to conceive of the God of love and righteousness excluding any man from the possibility of benefit by the atoning death of the Man Christ Jesus.—Ed.]

Pass It On.

Throw the Father's robe around him,
Closely clasp his trembling hand;
Lost and helpless, Jesus found him
Wand'ring in the "far-off land;"
Tell the story
For his glory—
So that all can understand!

Pass it on! the word of healing:
Hearts are crushed by sin and woe;
Let thy life his love revealing,
Lead where living waters flow;
Tears are falling—
Christ is calling
For thy service—who will go?

Blessed news of free salvation,
Onward roll the cleansing tide,
Till the saved of every nation
Swell the chorus—"Jesus Died."
Tell the story
For his glory,
Preach the Gospel far and wide!

Pass it on! the word of gladness,
Borne by earnest hands and brave,
Mid the haunts of sin and sadness
Let the Gospel banner wave:
Time is flying,
Souls are dying—
Tell them Christ can fully save.

From "Gospel Arrows" No. 1. Post free, 1s. 6d. per dozen, or 100 for 5s., bronze blue on card. (From the author, Ernest Rickman, 26, Cavendish Terrace, Cavendish Road, Clapham Park, London, S.W.)

International S.S. Lessons.

July 23, 1899.

The handwriting on the wall.—Dan. v. 17-31.

Golden Text.—Psalm lxxv. 7.

Lesson Connection.

THE previous chapter records the great Nebuchadnezzar's pride, punishment, penitence, restoration, and acknowledgment of Jehovah as the only true God. The great kingdom of Babylon did not last long after this. Isaiah xiii. 1-22, xxi. 1-9, xlv. 1-4, predicts its doom. Our lesson to-day gives events which happened forty or fifty years after that of last Sunday. On the death of the great king, there had been rebellion and anarchy; finally Nabonidus, the son-in-law of Nebuchadnezzar, was made king, and reigned for seventeen years, his son Belshazzar reigning with him during the last two or three years. Cyrus, king of the Persians, came against Babylon to conquer it, and while Nabonidus went out to meet him, Belshazzar was left in charge of the city. (Jer. xxvii. 6, 7).

Belshazzar

was only about fourteen to sixteen years of age. The armies of Cyrus surrounded the city, yet the wicked young king spent his time in revelry and impious feasting, adding to all his wickedness the using of the vessels of gold and silver which Nebuchadnezzar had brought away from God's temple. This was open defiance of Jehovah. Belshazzar was drunken with wine when he did this great wickedness (v. 2). A great many bricks and tablets which have been dug up in late years from the ruins of Babylon have the names of these kings and this history on them. When all the wicked people were drinking from God's vessels (v. 5), the hand of God wrote four words in shining letters on the wall. Picture the scene of terror and confusion. No one could interpret the words, and the Queen-mother, hearing the confusion in her own apartments, comes on the scene and tells her son about Daniel. Daniel, who is now getting to be an old man, is sent for, and the king promises rewards if he will decipher the writing.

Explanatory.

Verse 17. Contrast the two characters. The young king and the old prophet. God's prophet cannot be bribed to speak, he must give God's message.

Verses 18 to 21. Recapitulate the story of Nebuchadnezzar, emphasizing v. 20.

Verses 22, 23. The condemnation of Belshazzar. 'You knew all this, and yet dared to do all this wickedness." "Sinning against knowledge and not glorifying God," the two great charges brought against him. Refer to 2 Chron. xxxiii. 23, Judges xvi. 23, Ps. cxv. 5-8, Acts xvii. 28, 29, Rom. i. 21.

Verses 25 to 28. God's message, "Numbered, numbered, weighed, divided."

Verse 29. Daniel was reinstated in the high position he held under Nebuchadnezzar.

Verses 30, 31. History confirms the truth of this story. "The river Euphrates ran under the walls and through the city. Cyrus diverted its course and marched his soldiers, guided by two deserters, into the city up the river bed. He found the Babylonians carousing at an annual feast of their gods."

Darius.

The name is found on inscriptions, and probably means "Lord-king;" it is a title prefixed to several kings' names. This Darius Cyaxares II. was a weak and sensual man, and gave up the authority greatly to his nephew, Cyrus, who headed the armies sent against Babylon (Dan. ix. 1). Prophecy fulfilled (Jer. li. 31, 57, 58).

Important Lessons.

1. Drunkenness leads to crimes which without drink would never be committed.
2. Taste not that which may lead to your destruction.
3. God's dealings with others are meant to be a warning to us.
4. Our bodies are vessels made for God's glory: how are we using them?
5. We know: what use do we make of our knowledge?
6. Is my heart lifted up or humbled?
7. I could not draw another breath without God.
8. Am I glorifying God?
9. There is a handwriting of warning for every sinner.
10. Our character, actions, motives, are weighed in God's balances. "Weighed and found wanting; cleansed in the blood of Jesus, or not cleansed?" Weighed and found wanting; but with Christ in the scale with me, then it is overweight.

Prof. Newell's Bible Course.

LESSON VI.

I.—BRIEF REVIEW OF GENESIS.

1. Review the book by chapter-names and topical outlines till wholly familiar with it.

2. Condense the topical outlines now into the few theme-words that suggest the contents of the book. Creation, Reconstruction, Man, Fall, Deluge, Nations, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph—you can group all of Genesis about these words.

3. Next, we must find the key-thought of Genesis, the great central idea set forth in it, about which, as a centre, the book arranges itself; or which, as a theme, explains the book. We believe that this idea is Human Failure becoming the occasion of Sovereign Grace. Man failed and fell in Eden; fell lower when left to himself before the flood; fell into daring apostasy at Babel; fell into hell itself in Sodom and Gomorrah (Jude 7). Grace must intervene or the race is gone. Grace came, and those who desired it easily found it (iii. 21, v. 22, vi. 8, xv. 6); God even thrusting it upon those who as yet knew little indeed of its meaning, as in xxviii. 12-15, xxxii. 1, xlix. 8-12 (compare xxxviii.). As to those who will not honour God by becoming beholden to his grace, they simply, sadly perish in their pride. God would, but Cain, Ham, Nimrod, Ishmael, and Esau would not. Search if it is not so (Rom. i. 28). See if Gen. xxv. 34, xxvi. 34, 35, and Heb. xii. 16, Gen. xxvii. 36, 41 (compare xxv. 32, 33), and xxxii. 6, do not explain the hard words of Mal. i. 2, 3, and Rom. ix. 10-13.

4. The key-word of Genesis should next be found. I would suggest Selection. Those who would prefer to elide the initial "S" may do so.

THE RACE AS A WHOLE HAVING FAILED

three times (once in Adam, Rom. v. 12 R.V., then before and after the flood), God chooses a people to represent Him on earth, suffering the other nations to walk in their own ways for the present. (See Acts xvii. 16.)

5. The great beginnings in the Book of Genesis may be traced with profit. Twelve, perhaps, are pre-eminent: The beginning of the created universe; of the present world; of man, the Sabbath, marriage, human sin, prophecy, sacrifice, human death, human government, nations, Israel.

6. The types in the book of Genesis are many and marvellous. The types of Christ should first be carefully found and studied. (See Lesson I. for those of the first chapters.) In Melchizedek we see Christ's eternal royal priesthood (study Heb. v.-viii.); in Isaac we see the beloved Son yielding to the Father's will, even unto death, and received back by resurrection (see Heb. xi. 17. 19); while in the ram, whose sacrifice spared Isaac, we see Christ substituted for us. The 24th chapter is an exquisite picture of the Holy Ghost, who speaks not of Himself but of Christ, going forth

TO CALL THE CHURCH TO BE THE BRIDE

for the inheriting Son of the Father, showing her Christ's things to attract her to Him, and finally bringing her to meet Him as He comes out from his Father's dwelling. (See John xvi. 13-15, Eph. v. 25-27, 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17, comparing the word "caught up," in verse 17, with the same Greek word in Acts viii. 39.)

We notice that Sarah, who typifies Israel after the flesh, dies (i.e., is set aside) before Isaac gets his bride. (See Rom. xi. 25, Acts xv. 14.) For Abraham's subsequent fruitfulness, Gen. xxv., compare Rom. xi. 26, Acts xv. 16. Jacob's ladder speaks beautifully of Him who gives us access to God and brings us heavenly blessings and ministry. (See John i. 51; Heb. i. 14.) Joseph as a type of Christ has been already spoken of.

The book of Genesis traces in type the spiritual history of a believer from his salvation by the word of promise and his covering with Christ's righteousness, in Adam: through his self-struggle with the flesh, the old nature, and his defeat by it, in Abel (compare Rom. vii.); the way of victory by the surrender of the old creation in him to judgment and death, and the entering upon newness of life, in Noah (compare Rom. vi.); the calling and separate walk of faith, in Abraham (Heb. xi.); the life and privileges of conscious sonship, in Isaac (Rom. viii., Gal. iv.); discipline and service, in Jacob (Heb. xii., Rom. xii.); seeing, hoping, enduring, and finally reigning, in Joseph (2 Tim. ii.).

II.—EXODUS: THE BOOK OF REDEMPTION.

Genesis left us with the apostate world rejected, a seed chosen and covenanted with by grace, and allowed to go down into Egypt to wait for their promised inheritance till the cup of Canaanitish iniquity should fill and the pride of the Pharaohs should head up for punishment (Gen. xv. 13, 14); until, moreover, the patriarchal families might multiply into a nation, and through bitter affliction be brought to realize their need of God, and be ready to be

SEPARATED TO HIM AS HIS PEOPLE; and until, finally, their human deliverer should be chosen, trained, and ready (see Ps. cv. 23-26).

Now in Exodus we shall find God remembering and visiting Israel, judging their enemies, redeeming and delivering his oppressed people, and graciously sustaining them in life and victory in the danger-fraught wilderness. We shall then see Him testing them by the great legal covenant at Sinai, and will be forced to witness their utter breakdown; but in the instructions concerning the tabernacle and its service, which precede the failure of the people, and which speak throughout of Christ, we shall discover the plans and workings of grace, above and over law, and shall be made to remember constantly that the law is but the schoolmaster to lead to the only One in whom is salvation (Gal. iii. 15-29). Finally, in the renewed form of the broken legal covenant we shall discover that mixture of law and grace under which the people were educated for centuries in the land of Canaan, and to which Paul gives the appropriate name, "the ministration of death" (2 Cor. iii. 7).

So much by way of introduction. We shall find the book of Exodus falling naturally into four great parts for our study.

Part I. Exodus i.-xi. Afflicted, Remembered, Visited.

I. Read the chapters seven times. Do this work faithfully; do not shirk it. Only by such repeated readings will you come to grasp a Bible lesson as a whole; and it is only after thus grasping it that you will be able to comprehend its great truths. In this book of Exodus we are to discover a history that occupies the greater part of the Old Testament. Surely it will abundantly pay us, then, to master the contents of the book, especially when this can be done in so easy and simple a way. Read the chapters over quietly seven times, each time, if possible, at a single sitting, and you will have in mind their contents, ready for consideration in arrangement, study and meditation.

THE KEYS TO THE WHOLE HISTORY OF ISRAEL,

II. We would suggest the following chapter-names: I. Bondage; II. Bulrushes; III. Bush; IV. Signs; V. Straw; VI. Jehovah; VII.-X. Plagues; XI. Firstborn for Death. The four plague chapters may be given distinctive names if desired. The order of the plagues should be learned thoroughly, together with all the details of the story.

III. Study out next the great themes of the lesson: 1. The bitter bondage (ch. i.). 2. The deliverer's preparation and call (ii.-iv. 26). 3. God's testimony to Israel (iv. 27, iv. 27.) 4. God's testimony to Egypt (vii. 28-xi.).

IV. The following lines of study are now suggested:—

I.—THE EGYPTIAN BONDAGE.

a. Its cause: Apparently Ex. i. 8-10; really Psa. cv. 25, Gen. iii. 15.

b. Its object on Pharaoh's part (Ex. i.).

c. God's purpose in permitting it:

(1) As towards Israel. (See Ex. ii. 2, 3, and Deut. xxxii. 36, Psa. cvii. 12, 13, also Ex. xx. 2, 3, Deut. vii. 6, vi. 20-25, xxvi. 3-11; xv. 12-15.) Study out yet other objects toward Israel, as revealed in their history.

(2) As toward Egypt (Gen. xv. 13, 14).

(3) As toward all the earth (Ex. ix. 14-16, Rom. ix. 17, Ex. xv. 11-15, &c.

d. Its results.

(1) The revelation of the true character of the Egyptians, as deserving of and ripe for Divine judgment. Nothing so discovers the real state of heart of this world as the presence in its midst of the people of God (John xv. 19). The world's hatred of God's own is no marvel (1 John iii. 13), in view of the origin of the enmity of Gen. iii. 15. The Cross of Christ is still the great revealer of the thoughts of the heart (Luke ii. 35). As it was in Egypt, so it is now, for Egypt is ever a type of the world, with all that is in it (1 John ii. 16). Since the Cross exposes sin because it proclaims exactly what God thinks of sin, it naturally follows that those who take shelter under that blood and proclaim that Cross, must be hated by those whose sin is thus exposed, but who refuse to be saved from it in God's way. Thus the attitude of men toward the people of God ever reveals their real attitude toward God Himself. Be a Christian's testimony for God never so weak, he is yet one of God's people, and those that are of God hear and love and minister to Him (1 Jno. iv. 6, Psa. xvi. 3, Matt. x. 14, 15, 40-42, Matt. xxv. 34-36); while those who are not of God, but of Egypt, which is the true type of this world, neglect, despise, and persecute Him (Gal. iv. 28, 29, 1 Jno. iv. 6, Jno. xv. 18-25, viii. 37-44, Phil. i. 28, 1 Peter iv. 3-5). Indeed, I believe the real root of the present hatred of the Jews by the nations of the earth is found in Rom. viii. 7, "The mind of the flesh is enmity against God." Not, indeed, that the Jews of the present excite the world's enmity by their likeness to God in character; but it is through their being inevitably of the true God, a constant, evident, unconquerable proof of the existence of the God of the Bible; for these are his ancient people, and there is no escaping it. The answer of Frederick the Great's chaplain to the sudden demand of the Emperor for a proof in one word that the Bible is true, was simply, "The Jews, your Majesty." It is surely not his astuteness and shrewdness in worldly dealing that has made the Jew hated; precisely the same traits displayed in a Yankee are lauded nowadays.

A REMINDER TO MEN

We have dwelt on this point, because it is all-important in the study of the remainder of the Old Testament, in understanding the favour shown by God to his people, to remember that the nations were each brought to the test of the presence of the chosen people of God, and were judged according to their treatment of them by the great principle we have described. The hatred of the people against Israel was simply the out-working of their deep rebellion against God's sovereignty, which God thus brought to public manifestation ere He punished it. God has the right to choose, elevate, and bless whom He may please; to despise the objects of his choice is to show the real spirit of the world, as described by Christ in his words to the disciples, "Because ye are not of the world, therefore the world hateth you." If we keep this well in mind, we shall have no trouble in accounting for God's ways with Israel and the nations, either in the past or in the future, as revealed by prophecy. For Israel is yet the elect people, the destined head of the nations, the touchstone by which every people shall yet be tried (Isa. lx. 12, Obad. 15, 16, Joel iii. 1, 2, 11, 12, Matt. xxv. 31-46).

(2) The increased fruitfulness of the people of God is another great result of their oppression. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church." Study the results of other persecutions of the saints, e.g., Acts iv. 1-4, v. 17-26, 42, vi. 7, viii. 1-4, and of other bondages, e.g., Phil. i. 12-18.

(3) The reduction of the people to extremity, that they might seek their God. (Chap. ii. 23-25, iii. 7.) This is the end of all God's afflictions of his people, that they may turn to Him. (See Heb. xii. 1-11, Psa. cvii., Hos. v. 14-vi. 3, also the seven sweet verses on affliction in Psa. cxix. 50, 67, 71, 75, 92, 107, 153).

(4) The opportunity for the display of God's almighty power in the redemption and deliverance of his people, and the judgment of their oppressors (Rom. ix. 17).

Owing to the exigencies of space, the remainder of the address is held over until next week. The next lesson will be Exodus xii.-xxiv., the chapters to be read six times.

Old Ford Mission.—The report of this organization is an interesting and well-written account of the many-sided work maintained at the "East End Lighthouse," Bow, E. In the midst of depressing surroundings vigorous efforts are made to evangelize the people. By house-to-house visitations, Gospel meetings, a "mothers' association," and other familiar departments of work, a great deal of good is accomplished. The Coffee Palace continues to prove an especial boon to the poor. For threepence two quarts of pea soup and a two-pound loaf may be had, which quantity is sufficient to supply a family of five or six persons with a substantial dinner; and when it is known that families have no means to pay, the food is supplied gratis. The people are encouraged in habits of thrift, but there still remains a large number who are beaten down and for a time made helpless in the battle of life. To aid such the well-managed benevolent agency has laboured hard; widows have been helped to support their children, and the aged and afflicted have had their burdens lightened. Communications may be sent to the Hon. Superintendent, Mr. Arthur Farnan, Melcombe House, Gascoigne Road, South Hackney, N.E.

The Late Mr. Edgar Fennell.

"DILIGENT IN BUSINESS . . . SERVING THE LORD."

"WHATSOEVER thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," would be fitting words to describe the latter part of the life of that faithful servant of Christ, EDGAR FENNELL, of Newport, Mon., who fell asleep in Jesus early this year.

Mr. Fennell was born at Bath in 1834, and at an early age went to Newport. He started business in a small way, and subsequently, mainly through the energies of his wife, purchased an established business in the High Street. There for many years he traded successfully, but his life was profligate, and he was addicted to intemperance. His wife, who was a devoted and earnest Christian, patiently bore with him, and tried to win him for the Master by a godly, consistent life, and continual waiting upon God in prayer for his conversion; but his drinking habits increased. However, it was the dark before the dawn.

One night he was found on the glass roof of the arcade adjoining his house, suffering from delirium tremens, trying, as he believed, to escape from the evil spirits who pursued him. This was the result of a fortnight's heavy debauch. In going upon this roof he cut one of his feet severely, and was confined to his bed for the next few days.

During this confinement he was brought by God's Holy Spirit under deep conviction of sin. He sent for one Christian man after another, seeking their help, and at length he lighted upon a passage in Bogatzky's "Golden Treasury"—"Weep not! Behold the Lion of the Tribe of Judah hath prevailed." Immediately he realised in his own soul that Christ had destroyed the works of the devil, that his bonds were indeed broken. At once he leapt into the life and liberty of the Gospel. From that point he never looked back, nor ceased his clear and faithful testimony to the saving and keeping power of the Lord in whom he believed.

When a man of strong passions and natural gifts turns from a life of open sin to God, it is as a light which cannot be hid. The change in Mr. Fennell's life was so clear and so thorough that his conversion was immediately known in the town, and he became a bold and outspoken witness for Christ. In 1871, during a visit of the late Rev. Robert Aitken to Newport, Mr. Fennell, with many others, received much blessing, and he at once launched out into great activity as a preacher of the Gospel. In the Young Men's Christian Association, of which he was one of the leading members, and in many chapels in the town and country, he preached a full and free salvation, and was greatly used of God. He was then associated with the Wesleyan Society at Newport, and frequently officiated as a local preacher, but towards the latter part of his life he was undenominational in its truest sense. Some spoke of him as "a wandering star among the churches;" he was fond of saying that he "belonged to a bigger firm," the Church Universal.

While not slothful in business—for he was one of the leading wholesale and retail fishmongers in the principality—Mr. Fennell was always willing to preach the Gospel or to assist any endeavour to extend his Master's kingdom. He had considerable gifts as a preacher, and his labours extended as far north as Yorkshire and as far south as Cornwall. Wherever he went he was welcome, and he was greatly used of God in the salvation of souls. Originality, vivid imagination, directness and aptness of expression, combined with deep spirituality and considerable knowledge of the Bible, made him an exceptionally able preacher. His preaching was dramatic and realistic. He always had a definite aim in his preaching, and his addresses were illuminated by homely illustrations gathered chiefly from his own experience. He had great power over his audiences, and often carried them away by his enthusiasm and earnestness. Many throughout the kingdom have to praise God for the words they listened to, and the truths they learned, from Mr. Fennell's lips.

In addition to his public preaching, he sought for and availed himself of opportunities of dealing personally with individuals. At this work of "button-hole theology," as he was fond of terming it, he had great aptness and considerable tact, and many were led to Christ through his personal dealing with them.

Once when a farmer in Herefordshire was driving him to the station, a distance of several miles, Mr. Fennell seized the opportunity and pressed home the need of the Saviour. As they drove down a long hill to the station the Spirit of God opened the eyes of the farmer, and there and then he accepted Christ. It was thirty miles from the farmer's home, but, in his joy at realizing that his sins were forgiven he cried to Mr. Fennell, "I have a good horse, let me drive you all the way," so anxious was he not to part from the man who had directed his steps to the way of salvation.

One of the latest incidents in Mr. Fennell's active service for God was a visit to this farmer's sick bed in answer to a letter from his wife. At the bedside the farmer said to him, "I have longed, Mr. Fennell, before my departure, to remember the Lord's death with you;" and in simplicity these two partook of the emblems of the dying life of Him who had redeemed them at such infinite cost. Mr. Fennell afterwards related this as one of the most heavenly scenes in his career. In answer to the farmer's last request, Mr. Fennell promised to bury him, and this he did. Amid a great gathering of friends and neighbours, he told the story of the farmer's conversion, and more than one passed from death into life on the occasion of this memorable funeral.

From a Photograph by Messrs. Villiers and Quick, Bristol.

With all his deep earnestness and his sense of spiritual verities, Mr. Fennell had a very keen sense of humour; his ready wit, quickness of repartee, and fund of anecdote helped to make him one of the most popular of preachers wherever he went.

There was a village in Monmouthshire where the church was empty when Mr. Fennell preached in the chapel. The vicar was a customer of Mr. Fennell's, and on one occasion he came into the shop, saying "Fennell, I can't have you coming into my parish preaching—my church was empty." "Can't help that, sir," was the reply; "like John Wesley, I say 'the world is my parish.'" "But, Fennell, you are not ordained," said the vicar. "Well, I don't know about that; at any rate, Peter was a fisherman, and so am I."

As another illustration of his button-hole theology, it may be mentioned that he was once travelling in a railway carriage, when, as the train approached a station, an old gentleman, who was about to leave, pointing out of the window, said "That's my property over there." "Well, I haven't much down here," said Mr. Fennell, "but I've a bit up above—freehold, paid for by the blood of Jesus. Can you say the same, old friend?" The old gentleman's eyes filled with tears, as he said, "I thank you. I am getting near eternity, and I'll see to it that I can say so soon."

Some years ago Mr. Fennell retired from business, and gave himself almost entirely to public preaching. He was also a strong temperance advocate, and his presence upon the platform was eagerly sought after by all who were interested in the temperance movement.

For many years he was in the habit of sending to Mr. Müller's Orphanages and Dr. Barnardo's Institutions, sixpence for every salmon caught at his fisheries at the mouth of the Severn, and in his will he expressed a wish that his successors should follow his steps in this respect.

For many years before his death he suffered from an acute affection of the heart and throat, but in spite of all difficulties he continued in active service until almost the close of his life. He died at the age of sixty-five, worn out in the Master's service. His later life was a striking instance of what the grace of God can do in an exuberant character—a proof of how it enables a man who, to use his own expression, is "out and out for Christ," to do good amid the busy occupations of life.

"A Good for a Bad."

Lev. xxvii. 10.

IN Lev. xxvii. 10, 11, we are told that any beast that the children of Israel might bring to the Lord as an offering was holy, and they might not change it and substitute "a good for a bad" or "a bad for a good."

Then is added what seems like a contradiction: "If he shall at all change beast for beast, then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy." What beautiful truth is brought out in this seeming contradiction! The soul that sinneth, it shall die; "the beast must not be changed"—"a good for a bad." But "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son;" "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter"—"the good for the bad." The holy, spotless "Lamb of God" took the sinner's place.

What is the result? Look carefully at verse 10. "It and the exchange thereof shall be holy." Christ and his people, "Partakers of his holiness" (Heb. xii. 10). "Be ye holy for I am holy" (1 Pet. i. 16). In these passages we get quite a different aspect of truth to the scapegoat in Lev. xvi. There we see our sins carried away never to return again, but here we see the sinner made holy because the great exchange was laid on the altar. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." "It and the exchange thereof shall be holy."

Are we holy? Are we sanctified and "meet for the Master's use" (2 Tim. ii. 21)? In the verses here considered, we get something of the meaning of "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God." "Christ our passover was sacrificed for us," that we might be able to "present our bodies a living sacrifice." May we so realise our vital union with Christ. "It and the exchange thereof shall be holy," also our "holy calling," that we may indeed be "holy, and without blame." (Eph. i. 4.) E. R. B.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—The monthly muster of the Christian Harbour Lights was held on Thursday evening at the Society's headquarters in Ratcliff Highway. Rev. G. J. Hill gave a cheering account of the progress of the work during the past month, and referred to interesting cases of conversion of seamen attending both the indoor and open-air services. Letters were read from Christian seamen telling of their efforts for the Lord among their shipmates. One of these seamen dated his conversion to attending the noonday prayer meeting at the Society's headquarters two years ago last March. Helpful words of testimony were given by English and foreign seamen. Deep regret was felt at the continued absence of Mrs. Hill through long and serious illness.

MILDMAY ADDRESSES.

THURSDAY, JUNE 29.

As indicated last week, the subject at the Conference was "The Three Appearings of Christ." On the first day the addresses dealt with Atonement—the appearing "to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself;" and on the second day with Priesthood—the appearing "in the presence of God for us." The subject on the third day was the Blessed Hope—the "glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ."

The morning meeting was presided over by the Hon. R. Moreton. Among those who led in prayer were Rev. Dr. Grattan Guinness and Captain Dawson. The special petitions were presented by Mr. W. R. Lane, and included one in some such terms as these—that God will raise up a witness among the Jews in Eastern Europe to carry on work such as for some years was done by his servant Joseph Rabinowitch, recently called home.

The Second Coming of Christ.

By Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY.

Founding his address on Heb. ix. 28, the speaker took up the points in order—(1) to them that look for Him; (2) shall He appear a second time; (3) without sin; (4) unto salvation. The "looking" is waiting, as the R.V. indicates. All intelligent, instructed Bible-reading Christians are waiting, in regard to the great future, but not all exactly for the same thing. In Romans and Philippians we have "waiting for the adoption"; in the Corinthians we have "waiting for the coming"; and so on. Here, in the Epistle to the Hebrews, we have waiting for Him. Are we concerned about the reign of righteousness, or the prevalence of peace? Let us wait for Him, whose coming will bring all good things. The Apostle said to some of his people: "I have you in my heart." Can we say that of Christ—"Lord Jesus, I have Thee in my heart, and nothing will be right until Thou shalt come again."

Speaking of the three appearings—the first to destroy the works of the devil; the second now to appear in the presence of God for us; and the third, the revelation of Christ at a still future day—Mr. Macartney asked permission to "slip in another," a fourth, between the second and third—Christ's coming to his people individually, as promised in John xiv. 18-23. "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come unto you. . . . I will manifest Myself unto you. . . . My Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." It is a blessed truth that Christ abides with his people upon earth in the power of the Spirit, and it is possible for them to abide with Him in heart and mind in heaven. We may be the Bridegroom will see his destined bride ere the time comes when she will be presented with joy in the house of the Father.

EVER EXCHANGING VISITS;

"He will appear a second time." A friend once set forth three great facts of the Christian religion as follows: (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is not here; (2) The Holy Ghost is here; (3) Jesus is coming again. If our heart is wrapped up in Christ, and we understand Him as the lover of our souls, frequently visiting us and always by us in spirit, we shall not feel like meeting a stranger, or anticipate the coming with undue curiosity. In the olden times all the hopes of Israel depended on Aaron's life within the veil; and the people waited for his reappearance and benediction.

"Without sin." Sin is put away. In Levit. xvi. we find that two goats were required for the sin-offering—one for Jehovah and one for Azazel. One goat died, as Jesus also did; the other was sent away, typical of the living and ascended Lord. The blood of the goat that died was carried into the holiest, and sprinkled on and before the mercy seat.

THE SINS OF CHRIST'S PEOPLE are put away—never again to be remembered. Laying his hands on the head of the other goat, the priest confessed the transgressions and iniquities of the people, and let the animal go forth into the wilderness. That was for Azazel, which is another name for the old serpent, the devil and Satan, with whom Jesus had to deal—him that had the power of death. It was in the wilderness that the fiery serpents bit the Israelites; there also, in later days, the Lord met the evil one. As the claims of Jehovah in righteousness were met by the blood within the veil, so Satan in his lonely habitation hears that the debt has been paid, and that sin, as touching the believer, is gone for ever. There is groaning in hell; there is a triumph song in heaven. Having, as the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, borne the sins and sorrows of men, the Lord Jesus shook the millstone from off his neck and rose, passing right up to the throne of God. Jesus is now on the throne; God has no claim against us. Satan has no charge against us unanswered; but Jesus has a claim on us: heaven is ours, and God is ours.

"Unto salvation." We do not so much mean forgiveness; that is settled long ago. Our concern is with the Church and her travail, Israel in his banishment, the world in its darkness. When Jesus comes He will make an end of the Church's pilgrimage; already her anchor is within the veil whither her Forerunner is entered. He will bring home the Bride He has loved; there will be joy in heaven when the Lord brings back his own. Then will come Israel's turn; he will blossom and fill the face of the world with fruit. The Church may well make way for this time of blessing, for she has not done her work as she should: she has just done what she could not help doing. Israel, as a ransomed nation, will not work through societies, but all the ransomed will go forth, with the result that nations shall be born in a day, and all men shall know the Lord from the least unto the greatest.

Things Present—Things to Come.

By Rev. ALFRED BIRD.

There is a theory current, taking large possession of the minds of good men, that the Church of Christ is rapidly invading the territory of the world, and that she is lawfully and honourably winning the world's approval; and in that proportion her wrongs, sorrows, sufferings and difficulties are rapidly decreasing. We are being told that there is a bright outlook for the Church of God, and the young are being urged to brace themselves up with confidence for a grand and triumphant future.

I know there is a bright uplook, but is it true that there is a hopeful outlook? In the early days of Christianity it meant something to be a Christian: it meant scorn, reproach, sorrow, and suffering, often the dungeon and stoning—yea, the stake, the rack, and the arena. In the Middle Ages, when the witnesses of Christ lifted their heads in Bohemia, Germany, France, and England, the same treatment was extended to them; and not only the leaders but also those who followed them; indeed, all faithful servants of the Lord had to bear their testimony amid and often with the further penalty of cruel death.

SORROW, SUFFERING, AND SHAME,

Things are greatly changed now. The Church is no longer called to the baptism of physical suffering; humaner and juster laws prevail, and even the old persecuting religions find themselves so discredited as to be no longer able to persecute in the old way. I am willing to admit that all this is owing to the widespread preaching of the Gospel and the diffusion of Christian principles; and for these ameliorations of condition we may be profoundly thankful. Also we recognise an improvement in the lot of the people, and a raising of the moral tone of the community; but is it true that, if we are the true followers of Jesus Christ, we may expect exemption from persecution and suffering, which belong to, and are identified with, our Christian calling and profession? I do not think it is true.

The Church has been a sufferer ever, and is a sufferer still; and the reason for that is this: she is the Bride of a rejected Lord. Jesus is still despised and rejected of men, a Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. It is quite true that He is not suffering on the cross to-day. He suffered there once for all, and put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. It is also quite true that He is now on the throne, high above all principality and power, and waiting for his Kingdom; waiting until his enemies shall be made the footstool of his feet. But in his members here on earth, Jesus is a sufferer still. What do men say about us?

Do they not say that our piety is hypocrisy, and our loyalty to truth bigotry; also that our zeal in the propagation of the Gospel is fanaticism? Are we not constantly being told that our fidelity to truth and to our Lord is a miserable narrowness, and that our spirituality is other-worldliness? The Christian is not in society:

HE MAY BE TOLERATED,

but he has no place in the world's society. Its leaders will have none of him; its literature lampoons him. You will say that these things do not involve very much suffering. We do not very much mind being left out, passed by, on the part of the people of our time; but when this treatment comes from our own kindred, from members of our own family and friends of a lifetime, then we know and understand what it is to suffer at the hands of the world—in fact, to suffer because of the reproach of Christ.

But the Church of God is called upon not only to suffer at the hands of the world, but to suffer most acutely and intimately through its own ills and miseries and failures and coldness and backsliding. Just in proportion as we are in fellowship with our Lord shall we feel the low estate of his Church. A heart in sympathy with Him knows many a heart-break.

Then there are the sufferings that belong to our individual life through the presence of sin. How we long for one day free from the assaults of temptation on the right hand and on the left—leading to unfaithfulness, and discovering evil where we little thought it to be lurking! And again, the recurring sorrow which comes to us through death—the long-drawn agony of bereavement. He who is on the throne suffers in us, and sorrows in us, and every pang we feel rends his heart. But it is only for till He comes again. He has said, "Behold, I come quickly." Knowing all that was before us, He said, "Let not your heart be troubled . . . . I will come again, and receive you unto Myself." He did not make light of our suffering. True, the Apostle Paul speaks of our "light affliction" in comparison with the glory that shall be revealed in us. The Apostle Peter, moreover, advised believers—"Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you . . . . but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings." There is no attempt to minimise the trial or to call it by any euphonious or poetical name. It is God's fiery trial for his golden saints. The fire means pain, agony, destruction, death; in fire nothing can live without a miracle; but the atmosphere of our being is miracle. God is with us in the fire—with us in every hour of our sorrow and heart-break. He will be with us to the end—throughout the "little while" to the morning when weeping shall be past and joy shall have come. That will be the "morning without clouds;" and then He will come and renew us with immortal youth, loveliness and purity.

"A LITTLE WHILE"—

EVERY PRECIOUS PROMISE

will be fulfilled in that mighty moment. All tears will be gone, all sorrow over. The Bride will be perfected, glorious, spotless, pure, ready for her Bridegroom Lord; and she will be caught up to meet Him in the air, and so shall she be ever with the Lord.

Does it not lift up the heart to realize that He trod the wine-press alone, and is therefore enabled by experience to enter into our weakness and our need? He who cares for us with the tenderest affection, is coming to receive us unto Himself. He is waiting for his recompense, but He wishes to share it with us, his suffering Bride. Hence we are not to think the trial "strange," but to rejoice, inasmuch as we are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed we may be glad also with exceeding joy. When He shall appear, we shall see Him as He is, and be like Him, and be with Him for ever.

Thursday Evening.

Possession and Prospect.

By Rev. W. R. MOWLL.

We are considering, this evening, "The Glory of the Church Postponed until her Lord's Return, and the Manifestation of the Sons of God." "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory" (Col. iii. 4). In that passage we have three propositions: (1) the priceless possession of the believer, "Christ our life"; (2) a positive declaration of the believer's hope, "Christ our life shall appear"; and (3) the perfect prospect which lies before the believer, "then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." We must never lose sight of fundamental truth, otherwise prophetic truth will be of little value to us.

These are indeed days when the Church of Christ must look to the foundations upon which she rests; and that first proposition brings before us very clearly the ground of faith—"Christ our life." But there is no knowing Christ as our life until we have participated in his death. We stay not at the Cross, but pass on to the tomb. The words, "He is not here, He is risen," never came to me with such force as when, a year ago, I stood within what is thought to be Christ's empty tomb at Jerusalem; and we rejoice together to-night in this glorious truth.

There are thoughts that naturally flow from the fact that Christ is our life. First, He is the source of our life. Very earnestly do I ask every hearer, has He quickened you, my friend? Can you say "Eph. ii. 1 is true for me?" If not, God give you grace to do so now. Then, He is the substance of our life. "He that hath the Son hath life" (1 John v.); and real happiness is

NOT KNOWN APART FROM CHRIST.

Again He is the sustainer of our life. John vi. 53 is interpreted by verse 35: "He that cometh to Me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on Me shall never thirst." It is by continued trust that my soul is fed by the bread of life. He is the solace of our life. We look in vain to-day for the face of some loved one who was here last year; and, when that sorrow came, who solaced us? No earthly friend, but He who is our life.

Once more, He is the sole object of our life; for as St. Paul said (Philippians i. 21), "For me to live, Christ." Thus doth our life become intensely real and blessed. Again, He is the sacred example of our life. If we would participate in the fulness of the glory that awaits us at his coming, his example must be ever before us. It is not, What do I wish to do? or, What does my neighbour ask me to do? but it is, What wilt Thou have me to do? Christ, too, is the security of our life.

We pass to the positive declaration, the ground of the believer's hope, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear." There are many uncertain things in life. There are many things connected with the glorious Scriptures which we have to speak about with a certain amount of diffidence; but here is a truth which, in these times of restlessness and uncertainty, stimulates our faith—namely that

THE MASTER IS COMING AGAIN.

Some of us look upon the signs of the times as indicating his near approach. To-day there is going up from the hearts of thousands of his people the cry, "Come, Lord Jesus; come quickly." Let faith find its resting-place on the "shall" of God's promise; and if everything else fails, may God's "shall" and God's "will" ever stimulate our spiritual life!

Then, "we shall appear with Him in glory." The dismal prospect of the grave is for the dead soul, not for the living one. We talk not of dying; for the believer, that is past. We talk of his coming and of our appearing with Him in glory. There are many here to-night who are mighty in the Scriptures; yet with one voice they would say that they have never yet fathomed the meaning of the statement that we shall "appear with Him in glory." One able writer has said that God's glory is the unfolded fulness of Divine power; and some of us love to think of that last clause of Eph. i., "the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." Let us lift up our hearts with gladness to-night and rejoice with a holy hope.

Ere I take my seat, I would make one appeal. These conferences are blessed times to us; but are they not doubly so when a soul is brought from darkness into light? In my Master's name, lovingly, earnestly, I would ask one and all who are here to-night: Is He yours? Are you his? If not, let me beseech you that the decision be made now. He offers Himself to you; and you may accept Him at this moment. We may not all meet in this hall again; but if we all rejoice in a personal knowledge of Him, we shall be able to say: "When Christ, who is my life, shall appear, then shall I also appear with Him in glory."

The Coming Glory of the Church.

By Rev. Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

At the close of these meetings, we seek to understand, as far as possible, by the teaching of the Holy Ghost, what it is that the Church of the living God is expecting when "unto them that look (or wait) for Christ shall He appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation."

In connection with this Conference and its subject, we speak of the final appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ as, in one sense, the third appearing. Could we fully understand what we are to expect at the coming of our Lord, we should find a perfect incentive to the life of holiness. Christ came to earth as the image of God, and we beheld his glory, as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. It was not only for Himself, but for his Church upon earth that He passed into the heaven of heavens in his glorified humanity. We rejoice in the glory now bestowed upon Him by virtue of his finished work of redemption for the world; and, from the moment that finished work has personal appropriation by faith, there is a communication to us in measure of the glory of the Lord, in that we are made partakers of the Divine nature.

Our Lord has fellowship with God in heaven; and, as St. John says, we have fellowship with God the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ. He has all power in heaven and upon earth; and He communicates to his Church that she may glorify God in her body and in her spirit, which are God's. We share his glory in showing forth the virtues of Him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light.

THE GIFT OF POWER,

As we turn to think of the third appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, our thoughts are lifted up from earth, with all its degradation, to some contemplation of the transcendent glory which is hidden from mortal eyes within the veil. The Lord Jesus Christ is coming, not in humility, as when He saved us through the Cross; not even as the glory of God, in a spiritual sense, now in the heavenlies; but in a manner which shall make Him manifest to the eyes of all. His glory then shall be a visible glory connected with his person, and it will be, to us, something touching upon his past departure, when He ascended through the clouds, far above all principalities and powers, to be seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high. From thence He is to come forth, actually filled with the very glory of God, that He may transmit that glory to his Church upon earth. Our conception of the nobility and purpose of the spiritual life cannot fail to be enlarged by a contemplation of the fact that all who love the Lord Jesus are destined to be conformed, in every sense, to his glory.

Without detailing events in chronological order, without even daring to say that the advent of the Lord Jesus must be immediately at hand, we fix our thoughts upon the spiritual and physical realities of that of which we shall speak as the third appearing of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. Where shall He appear? Dare we localise it, for a moment, so as to fix our thoughts upon some particular sphere in which He shall be revealed? The answer is given by the Master Himself, in Matt. xxiv. 30: "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory."

IN THE CLOUDS OF HEAVEN—

such was the last sight of Him permitted to men; and such shall be the first sight of Him permitted to his expectant Church. Once He hung between heaven and earth, forsaken of the one, and despised of the other; but there cometh a magnificent vision for the eyes of the redeemed, when, glorified from heaven, and yearned after from the earth, Christ Jesus the Lord shall appear in his glory, connecting heaven and earth together.

To whom shall He appear? Unto them that look for Him (Heb. ix. 28). True, every eye shall see Him; but they who look upon Him without being joined to Him by faith, will mourn in utter anguish of heart, calling upon the rocks and mountains to hide them from the wrath of the Lamb, and from the everlasting destruction which awaiteth the wicked.

For what shall we be waiting at that moment? The answer is given very clearly in the several passages where we have that remarkable Greek expression equivalent to "looking for" or "waiting for," applied almost invariably to the advent of the Lord Jesus in his glory, and to that which He shall bring to them that are waiting for Him. In Rom. viii. 23 we are "waiting for the adoption, the redemption of our body." In 1 Cor. i. 7 we are "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," or for the revelation, the manifestation of our Lord in all the perfection and beauty of his being. In Philippians iii. 20 we wait for our Lord and Saviour, who shall change the body of our humiliation, that it may be fashioned like unto the body of his glory. In Gal. v. 5 we, who are endowed with the Spirit, wait for the hope of righteousness. In 1 Pet. iii. 20 we have the only place where the particular Greek expression is used in connection with anything but the coming of the Lord. Grasp the deep meaning of the fact that God waited in long-suffering in the days of Noah. Now, man waits to see how he shall be glorified in the advent of Him who is hereafter to be much more than a Saviour to them that rightly expect and look for Him.

What shall the revelation of the Lord's glory be to them that are truly waiting for Him? He Himself has given us some very remarkable answers to that question. He tells us, in Matt. xxiv. 30, already alluded to, that He will come "in power and great glory"; in another Gospel it is, "in great power and glory;" and in Luke ix. 26 it is, "in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." Looking back upon his first advent, we think much of the facts. Our present idea of his appearing in the heavens is concerned with a mystery which is but every fact connected with the final appearing in his glory seems to centre in the Person of the Christ. And that Person, as it appears to us in the clouds of heaven, will bear his own glory. He emptied Himself of his glory that He might become your Saviour. He now conceals his glory, lest it should utterly overwhelm sinful creatures; but when He cometh again our eyes shall gaze upon Him in his own glory.

BEYOND OUR UNDERSTANDING;

He was begotten of the Father, before all time, in the past eternity, that He might represent the Father through time and future eternity; and, at his commanding, we shall see Him in his own essential glory as God. Not until He comes in his own true glory shall we see the perfect Man whom we have pined for amid prevailing impotence and sin. He shall come, too, in the glory of his Father, so that in that day we shall not need to say "Show us the Father," for we shall have the fullest revelation that soul can desire. Then the glory of the angels shall be revealed for the first time. We shall see incalculable myriads with the highest glory that can be granted to the creature, namely, doing the will of God in perfection, and to have part in this shall absorb our faculties to all eternity.

In what character shall He come? As King of kings, to take his great power and reign over all the earth. We look for Him, too, as Judge. Psalms xcvi. and xcviii. declare that "He cometh to judge the world with righteousness, and his people with equity;" and, as a prelude, the Psalmist says, "Give unto the Lord the glory due to his name . . . worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." But one title is far dearer to us than any other. He shall appear as

THE BRIDEGROOM OF HIS CHURCH.

It is for Him, the loved One, that our hearts cry out with yearning.

We are told that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, and we think of the perfected body which He wears. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, as the trump of God sounds, we are to be changed from our condition of humiliation into the same image, the manifestation of his own perfect glory. This is what the Church waits for, "the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body."

Recognising our entire unity with Christ, let us also remember for a moment our separate personality, which we retain even while we are members of his body. What shall it be for us when we are actual partners in the glory of his kingdom (Dan. vii. 22; Matt. xix. 28; Rev. iii. 21.)! Moreover, as God has made Christ heir of all things, we are told (Rev xxi. 7) that we are to have like possessions. We need not envy the rich and honoured of the earth, when we think of an approaching inheritance, not only everlasting, but infinite. The privilege which Christ enjoys of holding constant communion with God shall at his appearing be granted unto his Church. We come now to

THE SOLEMN CONCLUSION

of the whole matter. In view of these things, "What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God," when all the things that now drag our thoughts and hearts downward will be burned in a fire stronger than any that earth has yet known! Read the story in Mark x. 35-40, and ask yourself whether you can stand the preparation there mentioned.

"Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself." See, also, in this connection, Matt. v. 8, xxii. 37; Luke viii. 15, xxi. 19; Heb. x. 36, and John xii. 26: "If any man serve Me, let him follow Me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve Me, him will my Father honour." The Lord's grace, as pictured in Luke xii. 37, is marvellous; but like service is to be our glory and that of the angels to all eternity.

I stand before my Lord, knowing that everything connected with my being is his gift; but, in view of the eternal glory which awaits me at my Lord's return,

I HAVE ONE PRIVILEGE.

I am allowed, in God's grace, to win crowns to lay at my Saviour's feet. Of these there are four: the crown of life (Rev. ii. 10), the crown of righteousness (2 Tim. iv. 8), the crown of rejoicing (1 Thess. ii. 19), and the crown of glory (1 Pet. v. 4).

The day is near when we must hand in our account for the grace bestowed upon us. Grace is intended to lead to glory; for conformity in glory is the corollary of conformity in character and conduct. I charge myself and my hearers, in the name of the Lord, that we each have at least one of these crowns; even though they hang not upon our arms, because too many to hold in our hands. Then shall we bow the head before Him, who is the everlasting portion of our souls, saying, "Not unto us, but to thy name be all the glory, for thine it is for evermore."

New Testament Ministry.

MR. W. R. LANE.*

Those of you who are familiar with Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress"—and I hope you all are—will remember whereabouts in the allegory the author places the Palace Beautiful, which is intended, I think, to represent the earthly Church—the congregation of God's faithful people. Mark well the situation of it! Not before the Cross, but after it! How significant this is! Forgiveness at the Cross first. Fellowship at the Palace Beautiful afterwards.

Note also that it was by the way. "He lifted up his eyes, and behold there was a very stately palace before him, the name of which was Beautiful, and it stood just by the highway side." If Bunyan had been a Romanist, or a High Churchman, he would not have put it by the way, but across it, to indicate that there was no way to the celestial city except through the palace. But no, he knew his Bible too well for that. The Bedford tinker was pretty accurate in his theology. He knew that salvation is not in the Church, but in Christ, and so he shows us Christian joining the Lord's people after he has joined the Lord.

Mr. Watchful, the porter, who is one of Bunyan's true ministers, asked him his name. "My name," said he, "is now Christian, but my name at the first was Graceless." "May I lodge here to-night?" he inquired. The earthly Church is a lodging place, that's all. Just an inn standing by the wayside for the "relief and security of pilgrims" on their journey to the eternal city. Once inside he sits down to supper with them. It is a lovely at his first communion service. He rests at night in the chamber of peace ("great peace have they that love thy law"), and before he resumes his pilgrimage, he is taken into the armoury and there arrayed from head to foot with proof armour. He went in as a Pilgrim, he sets forward now as a Pilgrim warrior clad in the whole armour of God. We must not and will not make light of the public worship and fellowship of God's people, nor of the ordinances appointed by the Lord; only let us be careful to hold them in the place and proportion given to them in the New Testament. We come to the Lord's table not to get salvation, but because we have got it. We rest for our salvation and peace upon the work of another. The work of atonement, which is the sole ground of a sinner's acceptance, is a finished work. Have you noticed in Heb. x. 11, 12 the contrast between the work of the Old Testament priests and the work of Jesus? They stood day by day offering the same sacrifices; Jesus offered one sacrifice, and sat down.

PICTURE OF A YOUNG CHRISTIAN

WHAT DOES THAT INDICATE?

Why, that his work is complete. And where did He sit down? On the right hand of God. What does that mean? That his work is accepted! Yes, blessed be God, He whose laws we have broken, whose name we have dishonoured, has accepted that finished work of atonement, and the moment that we look away to Jesus, and accept Him as our Redeemer and Saviour, that moment God accepts us. Our sins were imputed to our perfect Saviour and Surety when He took our place, and his unspotted righteousness is imputed to us by faith. We are then "found in Him, whose infinite meritoriousness is the sole ground of the sinners acceptance with God." Oh, that we all might be able to say in simple faith and love: "God, the righteous God, is satisfied with the sacrifice of the Cross; I will be satisfied with it, too! God has accepted the atoning Saviour and enthroned Him at his right hand; I, too, will now accept him, that He may be enthroned in my heart, my Saviour, my King, my All!" It must then, I think, be clear to all of you by this time that the Divine message of grace to the sinner is not "Come to the Church," "Come to the ordinances," much less "Come to the priest," but come to Christ. Not the ordinances the way to Christ, but Christ the way to the ordinances; not the Church the way to Christ, but Christ the way to the Church. This cannot, in these Romanizing days, be emphasized too strongly, nor said too often.

Do not let me be misunderstood here; I trust I can sincerely say that I love the Church of Christ for which He shed his blood and broke his devoted heart, and I desire to devoutly revere our Lord's own appointed ordinances. But is there not a danger lest we exalt these into a place not warranted by New Testament teaching and New Testament example? But I must turn your minds at once for a short time to the subject which has been given to me—viz., "The ministry of the Word," as seen in the New Testament. Read 1 Cor. iii. 5-9. We have here some words of an inspired minister about the ministry. Some in the church at Corinth were making too much of the ministers, and some too little. Some said, "I am of Paul," some "I of Apollos," these almost worshipped ministers; others said, "I am of Christ;" these ignored ministers. They practically said, We have Christ, what need have we of men? With Him we can teach ourselves and guide ourselves.

Each party was wrong, and how interesting it is to mark the way the Apostle corrects their error. "We are labourers together with God. Ye are God's husbandry," or God's tillage; better still, perhaps, God's farm. "We," Paul, Apollos, &c., "are labourers," not owners or proprietors. Ye are GOD'S farm. These Corinthians, in their misguided zeal, were speaking of Paul and Apollos as if each had started a bit of farming on his own account. But Paul says to them: You have mistaken us, we never did, nor do we now, claim to be mastermen. We are just "farm labourers"—that's all. It is a beautifully if we had time to gather up all its lessons. Brethren, our God is a husbandman, as we see, —a Farmer—and all his servants, whether presbyters or bishops, elders or deacons, pastors or teachers, evangelists or Sunday School teachers, and all the rank and file of servants too numerous to mention—all are labourers, just farm labourers. The metaphor means work; not "office" or "position" or show, but hard work. There must be no loiterers hanging about in the fields of God.

SUGGESTIVE METAPHOR, "THE FARM,"

In the New Testament, to be a Christian is to be a worker. Let them be synonymous terms in our lives. Look back now at verse 5, "Who then is Apollos, and who is Paul, but ministers through whom ye believed?" God was the Master-worker. They were the channels of his working. "He that plants is not anything." This is not what someone else said of Paul. It is Paul's own estimate of Paul. "Not anything."

In another place, he says, "Though I be nothing." Mr. Spurgeon once preached a sermon on those words, "Though I be nothing," and he called it "a sermon on a nothing by another nothing." And I think if there ever was one since Paul who felt his own insufficiency and could sincerely say, "I be nothing," it was that ever-lamented and eminent servant of God, and so there seemed scarce a limit to the use his Master made of him. It is when we get a little of that spirit that we shall be grateful for a bit of service in any

OUT-OF-THE-WAY CORNER OF THE FARM.

"There is," said a Christian to me years ago—"there is always room in the Church of Christ for lowly-minded workers." It was a commonplace remark, but how often we forget it! There is not always room for "gifted" and "talented" folk (too often they want far more space than you can spare); but for the lowly-minded, who never waste their time looking for a big opportunity, there is always a space and always a work.

> Perilous is the lofty mood
> That will not yoke with lowly good;
> Right life for me is life that wends
> By lowly ways to lofty ends.

There is a great variety of work on this farm. The labour is divided, as we see in verse 6—"I have planted, Apollos watered." That is a principle we do well to bear in mind.

Paul does his work of "planting," and then goes on his way, without any feverish anxiety as to the future of the plant. He knows that God is the Owner of it, and He can lay his hand upon another labourer to do the needed "watering." Apollos, on the other hand, is not envious of his fellow-worker. He cheerfully falls in with the Divine plan and purpose, and with all his heart goes round with his watering-pot to refresh and encourage another man's converts. He does not mind coming second to some one else. Some people will not be anything if they cannot be number one! Not so Apollos!

* An address delivered on Wednesday evening.

The work is varied and manifold, and yet it is one. There is variety in unity here, as in all God's work. The labour is divided and every man has his special work apportioned. But the farm is one. "He that planteth and he that watereth are one."

WE ALL COVET TO BE REAPERS.

This is natural, and maybe it is spiritual too. But the ploughing and the sowing, the weeding and the watering must be done, or there will be no need for the reaper! Do not worry yourself about how many souls one worker may lead to Christ, but rather take comfort in the thought of how many workers God generally uses to bring one soul to Himself. You are not the whole chain; but, thank God, you are a link!

A lady who conducted a large class of women came to me at the close of a fruitful mission and said, "I thank God that nearly twenty of my women have professed to decide for Christ. But you know, Mr. Lane, I somehow feel a bit envious of you," she said with a smile. I knew, of course, what she meant. I said, "I might well be envious of you, for you have had the privilege of doing by far the greater part of the work. It is your ploughing and sowing during these waiting months and years that has MADE THIS HARVEST POSSIBLE."

By and bye, when the Master who gives us our work comes to apportion our reward, that godly woman will of course hear far more about that converted class than I shall; for it says, "Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour." It is the work, and not the fruit, that will be rewarded. The truth is, dear friends, it takes some skill and patience to plough the land and sow it, but almost anybody can do a bit of reaping. Why, if the farmer is a little pushed and the harvest is waiting, he will give a start to any wild Irishman who comes along, if he has but a sickle across his shoulder.

The word "minister," in verse 5, is exceedingly interesting to me. It is the word that is translated "deacon" in 1 Tim. iii. "Let them use the office of a deacon." Don't let the word "office" mislead you. There is no word in the original for "office." It is not really needed there at all in order to give the Apostle's meaning. It is simply "Let them minister," or serve. I am not a Greek scholar, and I do not wish you to think I am; but I do aspire to be a student of God's Word. But you can ask any of the Greeks here about me on the platform if my interpretations are correct or not. You see, according to the translation of this word as given in the Epistle to Timothy, both Paul and Apollos were "deacons." Our modern notions and accommodations are apt to confuse and prejudice us, so that we

MISS THE TRUE MEANING OF THINGS.

Do not misunderstand me if I borrow an illustration right at hand. In the Church of England, for instance, a young minister at his first ordination takes "deacon's orders." In the Nonconformist Churches the brethren who look after the temporal concerns of the Church are the "deacons."

You come to Mildmay and you find a band of godly and devoted ladies who are the "deacons." Not "deaconesses," for that again is a modern accommodation of the word. We find, however, from the usage of the word in the Acts and Epistles that it covers a much wider area than this, and includes a great variety of Christian service.

One of the Scriptures given on the syllabus is Acts vi. 4. "We will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry (diakonia) of the word." The same Greek word is translated "ministration" in verse 1. The seven were to be "deacons" of the tables and the Apostles "deacons" of the Word. Let us link with the two other passages, 1 Cor. xvi. 15. "The house of Stephanas . . . addicted themselves to ministry (diakonia) of the saints," and (Ephesians iv. 11, 12) "He gave apostles . . . pastors, and teachers for the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry (diakonia). In these three passages we have three spheres of service or "deacon" work.

In the first circle (Acts vi.) we have men evidently called of God to separate themselves to the special ministry of prayer, and the Word of God. Here, then, we find the principle for the Church's guidance as to "the ministry" in the emphatic sense of the term. But how simple it all is as compared with some of our modern ideas of "the ministry"! We have here not a word of priesthood or ritualism.

How little is said in the New Testament at all about the "ordination" of ministers (bear with me, brethren), and yet how much is being made of this to-day! Why, friends, that great preacher, perhaps the greatest since the Apostles, C. H. Spurgeon, had no "orders" at all in the ecclesiastical sense. He was never ordained, as we say, to the ministry, and yet, who among us can doubt his divine call and ordination to the ministry? Did he not by his life of prayer speak of man to God, and by his godly and faithful preaching speak of God to man? We must in these days, if we are to go to the root of abounding errors, go for our conceptions of the ministry, not to the monks of the Middle Ages, not even to the Fathers of the early Church, but to the clear light and

PURE AIR OF THE APOSTOLIC TEACHING.

The great Head of the Church has ever raised up (as we doubt not He will continue to do) holy and gifted men for the sacred work of teaching, ruling, and shepherding his people. Let us, though, on our part humbly seek to be clear on this point, viz., that all true ministerial gifts are the sovereign and gracious endowment of our risen Lord and Master Himself. No human ordinance whatsoever can bestow them. Nor, on the other hand, can the lack of any human ordination whatsoever nullify them. "He . . . gave gifts unto men" (Eph. iv. 8).

In 1 Cor. xvi. 5 we have the second and wider circle of ministry or deaconing. A family of good people have devoted themselves to ministering to the saints. It is not here "The ministry" (there is no article). It is simply "ministry," without specifying the nature of it. The word does not seem to imply any "official" service, and yet they are evidently counted amongst God's true ministers.

Now look at Eph. iv. 11, 12, and note the third and widest circle of ministers. He gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers. What for? "For the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministering" (R.V.). These chief ministers, then, according to this passage, were to use their gifts with a view to the fitting of each one of the saints, to fulfil his appointed ministry. Each one then has a ministry. Are we fulfilling it? The word "perfecting" here is very interesting. It is translated "mending," in Matt. iv. 21. They were mending their nets. Many of us need this "mending," repairing ministry! A fisherman knows that if he does not take time to mend his nets, a good deal of his labour on the sea will be fruitless. Oftentimes, we workers go home disappointed, having caught nothing; not because we were not in earnest about our work, and not because there were no fish to be caught; but just because we have failed to give heed in our hearts to that ministry which was intended

TO MEND US FOR OUR WORK.

"For the perfecting of the saints unto work of ministering." "As each hath received a gift minister it among yourselves" (1 Pet. iv. 10). The grace of God can be carried to graceless lives only as each believer becomes in his measure the minister of it. The seed of the kingdom, which is the Word of God, must be scattered far and wide across the world, but how shall this be done unless every Christian carries his own handful of the seed, and does his appointed bit of work?

I do not mean that we are all to become ministers, or preachers, or teachers in the special sense. All are not to be leaders, else where would be the led? If all were shepherds there were no sheep. But all and each of us must hand on the bread of life to a famishing race—pass on to the next man the blessing that God has passed into our own hearts. The work can never be done if largely left to what we call the ministry, or even to the wider circle of "Christian workers." It can only be done when we all do our bit, as God meant we should, old and young.

I heard a beautiful story the other day at a missionary meeting. A missionary, recently home from China, told of a dear little Chinese boy who was converted to God, and gave up his that idol-worship. When one of the annual feasts for idol-worship came near, he told his father he could not go to it. He said: "I cannot worship anyone now but Jesus." The father got enraged, and on the morning of the feast he savagely flogged the little chap because he would not go. However, he held out, saying that he could no longer bow down to an idol, because Jesus was his Saviour and Lord.

After awhile, when the time came for the feast, the father did not go, but just sat down in the house. "Are you not going to the feast, father?" said the boy. "No," he replied; "if you won't go I won't go." And he did not go! But that is not all. Soon afterwards the father was seen with his boy at the mission service. The missionary noticed during his talk about the love of Jesus that the boy from time to time looked earnestly up into his father's face, and whispered to him.

The father looked very anxious and miserable. Presently the little fellow's heart got so full that he called right out, and said, "Oh, father! do you know Jesus yet?" "No, my boy, I don't know Him yet," the father replied.

"GO ON TEACHER, PLEASE GO ON,"

cried the lad. The missionary went on, and again the son broke out, "Father, father, do you know Jesus yet?" "No, my boy, I'm afraid not," said the man sadly. "Please go on again, please go on," said the lad in great earnestness, and the teacher proceeded with his sweet Gospel story. After awhile the man's face brightened, the light had come; and once more the boy said, "Father do you know Jesus yet?" "Yes, my boy, I think I do," replied the father. Then the delighted little fellow turned to the missionary and said, "All right teacher, all right teacher, that'll do." He had got a very heaven in the salvation of his father.

Oh! that we may all catch the spirit of that dear Chinese boy. God fill our hearts to-day with that sacred enthusiasm and fire. Let me say to you, if I may use that little fellow's language, "Go on, teacher, go on" with your lessons, and your love, and your prayers, till all those boys in your class are converted. "Go on, pastor, go on," till all those who hear you have obeyed the Gospel. "Go on, mother, go on" with your daily instruction and example, till all those whom God has given you are safe in Christ. "Go on, evangelist, go on" with the old Gospel message, for there are multitudes, multitudes, at our very doors, who are yet living in darkness, death. "Go on," ye missionaries to other lands, and God make you a thousand times as many more as you are, till all in every nation shall have heard Heaven's message of peace and love. Preach the Word.

The Word. THE WORD!

It has been to me instructive and refreshing, in reading through, again and again lately, the Acts of the Apostles, to mark how emphatic is the preaching of the Word. Chap. iv. 4. "Many heard the Word and believed." In chap. iv. 29, they prayed, "Grant Thy servants boldness to speak thy Word;" v. 20, "Go, speak to the people all the words of this life;" vi. 4, "Give ourselves . . . to the ministry of the Word;" viii. 4, "Disciples went everywhere preaching the Word;" viii. 14, "Samaria (through Philip's preaching) received the Word of God;" viii. 25, "Peter and John preached the Word of the Lord;" xi. 1, "Gentiles received the Word of God;" xii. 24, "The Word grew and multiplied;" xiii. 5, "Barnabas and Saul preached the Word of God;" xiii. 26, "To you the Word of this salvation sent;" xiii. 44, "Whole city gathered to hear the Word of God;" xiii. 48, "They glorified the Word of the Lord;" xiii. 49, "The Word of the Lord was published everywhere" (there's a grand Bible Society for you!); xiv. 25, They preached the Word in Perga; xv. 7, Peter said, "God ordained that the Gentiles should hear from my lips the Word of the Gospel;" xv. 35, Paul and Barnabas in Antioch preaching the Word of the Lord; xvi. 32, He spake to jailer the Word of the Lord; xvii. 13, The Word of God preached at Berea; xviii. 11, Paul at Corinth eighteen months teaching the Word of God; xix. 10, Paul two years at Ephesus teaching the Word of the Lord Jesus; xx. 32, Paul commends them to God and to the Word of his Grace.

These quotations make it clear what the emphatic element in apostolic work was. The stress of the story is laid plainly, not on ordinances, but on the preaching and teaching of the Word of God.

Now, may I beg another minute while I just call your attention to some of the wondrous results of this preaching of the Word. God's people are often lamenting the sad lack of conversions! Is there not a cause? We have in the Acts an inspired record of "results," and what an inspiring record it is!

Chap. ii. 41, "The same day there were added about 3,000 souls;" ii. 47, "The Lord added to the Church daily."

iv. 4, Many believed; the number of the men about 5,000; v. 14, Believers were added to the Lord, multitudes of men and women; vi. 1 The number of disciples was multiplied; vii. 7, Number of disciples in Jerusalem increased greatly, and a great number of priests obeyed the faith; viii., Great revival in city of Samaria; viii. 25, Work takes hold in villages of Samaria; viii. 39, Eunuch converted; ix., Saul converted; ix. 31, The disciples were multiplied; chap. x., Cornelius with his family and relations turned to the Lord; xi. 21, "A great number believed;" xi. 24, "Much people was added unto the Lord;" xiii. 42, Great awakening among the gentiles; xiv. 1, A great multitude of Jews and Greeks believed; xvi. 5, Churches increased in number daily; in xvi., Lydia and jailer and household converted; xvii. 4, A great multitude believed and consorted with Paul; xvii. 11, Many believed; xviii., Many Corinthians believed and were baptized, a chief ruler among them. I will close by leaving with you three other texts from this wonderful revival story. They show to us what a living, mighty, conquering message the Gospel word is.

Acts vi. 7, "The Word of God grew." Acts xii. 24, "But the Word of God grew and multiplied." Acts xix. 20, "So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed."

Afternoon Gatherings.

MISSIONARY MEETING.

The capacious room appointed for this gathering on Wednesday afternoon proved too small to accommodate the large audience that assembled.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone, who presided, gave a searching spiritual address on the many calls to the mission field and the feeble response given thereto by Christians as a whole. There is more hope, the Bishop contended, in preaching the "old, old story" to the heathen, than in preaching the command, "Arise and go," to believers. Drawing a lesson from the willing obedience of Philip in leaving Samaria to proceed upon a difficult and unpromising errand, the speaker passed on to contrast the rebellion of Jonah against the missionary call to Nineveh. If we, in our day, were bidden to such a city, we, too, might tremble at the prospect; but our call is to fields of an entirely different character, for missionary after missionary could stand up in that meeting and declare thrilling truths of fields white unto harvest, as well as of fields not yet sown. In view of the scarcity of workers, the Bishop appealed for volunteers who would give part of their time, returning to England for such periods as might be necessary.

Mr. Eugene Stock followed with a brief sketch, on similar lines, indicative of the difficulties of the C.M.S. In the early days of the Society people were ready to pray and to give money; but not to go. The idea of giving one's self to the work only dawned upon the Church by degrees. Even the great spiritual revivals of the century, such as that of 1859, did not result in any great outburst of enthusiasm for Foreign Missions, although they were a powerful stimulus to labour among the neglected classes at home. When Mr. Moody's meetings stirred the country, and when the Keswick convention came to exercise so great an influence, still there was no rushing tide. The Christian conscience is slow to realize its responsibility. Nevertheless, they should praise God for what had been done. It would be an easy matter to give instances of blessing, but it would be more profitable to consider the question of our personal duty. It was cheering to recognise the vast improvement that had taken place in the quality of foreign mission workers. In type as well as quantity, progress was observable; in spiritual qualifications and in whole-heartedness, as well as in social status and education. More medical men, too, had come forward, but the committee were at their wits' end to fill up gaps when considering the question of advance.

Rev. C. Jukes, from Madagascar, gave a pathetic description of the persecutions to which the native Christians had been subjected, especially from the French Jesuits, who took advantage of their race and position to create official prejudice against Protestants, and who subsequently laboured industriously to terrorise the blacks into a profession of Romanism. Many of these poor people, however, held sturdily to the truth. Captain Gamble, just returned from the Soudan, added a pithy description of that country, and advocated the gradual establishment of missions, preferably of a medical character, with Khartoum as a base of operations.

MISS LEIGH'S HOMES.

On Wednesday afternoon, in Room 5, the Hon. Winifriede Sugden addressed a meeting on behalf of Miss Leigh's Homes in Paris. Mr. J. G. Pilkington was in the chair.

Miss Sugden said that comparatively few people know how important it is there should be Homes like Miss Leigh's in Paris for the protection of women and young girls. No one ought to take employment in Paris unless they thoroughly understand the French law, which indeed seems to favour employers and not employées. There are two Homes—one at 77, Avenue de Wagram, and one at 18, Rue de Milan for governesses, artists, maids, and business women. A free registry is attached to each, and over 5,000 appointments have been found for the inmates. The Orphanage at Neuilly is also full.

The following incident was related as showing the necessity of these Homes: A young girl having lost her father, being very poor, was anxious to get an appointment. She obtained, as she thought, an excellent one as governess to a French countess at £80 a year. The first month passed and no salary was paid, and so on for six months, when the girl demanded it. She was paid one month, "Oh," she said, "it is six months' salary that is owing me." "No," replied the countess, "you did not ask for it before witnesses, and so it has lapsed." The governess was then turned out of the house. Fortunately she knew of the Home at 77, Avenue Wagram. She was received, and told her story. The lady in charge went to the solicitor to the Homes, who, after hearing the case, said, "Well, we can send the countess a summons and she may pay, because she may be ashamed of having it known; but it is no use to bring it into court, as we should lose. The French law is that wages must be applied for every month before witnesses, or the payment lapses."

The meeting closed with a few words from Mr. T. A. Leigh, of Liverpool.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

A meeting was held in support of this Society on Wednesday afternoon in the South Tent. The attendance was good, but many friends of the Society had written regretting that prior engagements prevented their being present. Among these were Lord Radstock, Preb. Webb-Peploe, Canon Fleming, Rev. W. E. Burroughs, Rev. Lindsay Darling, Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, and Lord Bangor.

Having lived amongst the Irish for many years, the chairman, Major-General Hatt Noble, was able to speak in the most cordial terms of their character. They are warm-hearted and affectionate; though, on the other hand, they are bigoted and very much under the influence of the priests, but firm and loving treatment goes a long way towards breaking this down.

Rev. Dr. J. Spence, of Belfast, gave an interesting address on the scope and power of the work, which has now been in existence three-quarters of a century. He mentioned that on one occasion he travelled for seven and a half hours in the train with a Romanist priest, who was struck by the great difference between the condition of the people in the south-west and north-east of Ireland. That difference was caused by the fact that in the north-east the people had an open Bible, and the Gospel of Jesus Christ was preached to them freely. Dr. Spence emphasized the fact that the Society is entirely a lay one, not a solitary clergyman deriving a penny of salary from it. Having been connected with the work for twenty years, he was able to speak of the faithful work carried on by the readers. They are not always well educated, but they are a band of Christian men fired with the love of God and the power of the Holy Spirit. The results of their work may not be always apparent, but he knew of many who had been brought to God through their efforts. They rendered great help to the clergy in this way, as single-handed a minister would find it absolutely impossible to reach all those in his enormous district.

The one object of the Society is to bring the people of Ireland into direct touch with the living Christ, and to place in their hands an open Bible which they can study for themselves. The priests profess to give them the Bible, but they do not; or even when they do it is a modified edition, and permission to read it is only gained by a special licence from the priest.

Ireland is awaking and is beginning to wish to free itself from the thraldom of the priest. Doors are opened in all directions and the readers are gladly welcomed; but more workers are needed, especially in the south and west of Ireland. We must step in and use the growing opportunities for putting into the people's hands the words of everlasting life, so that the Ireland of the future may become a light which shall shine before the world and cause men to glorify God.

Mr. R. C. Morgan appealed for increased support for the Society, and was followed by Mr. Leng, Rev. Preb. L. B. White, of the Religious Tract Society, and Colonel Morton, of Mildmay, all of whom spoke of the effective work being carried on by the Scripture Readers, under the vigilant directorship of Capt. J. Kearney White.

SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION.

Mr. A. A. Head took the chair on Wednesday afternoon on behalf of this Mission. The tent was crowded, and an enthusiastic meeting was held.

The Chairman remarked that on account of the recent difficulties in the Transvaal, all men's eyes were turned towards Africa. The South Africa General Mission was started in 1889; is undenominational, and has a threefold aim: to evangelize the heathen, to rouse the Christian Church to a holier life, and to aid existing evangelical missions and churches. The president of the Mission is Rev. Andrew Murray, who through his writings has spoken to the whole world as to the needs of Africa. The work has grown considerably, and there are now branches in Cape Town, Johannesburg, Durban, Pondoland, Basutoland, Swazieland, Zululand, &c. The work of the Mission amongst the Europeans is most essential, for many who come out in the mad rush after gold have lost their hold on Christianity and their faith in God, and need converting as truly as the natives. Meetings are held indoors and out, in the market place, amongst the sailors at the docks, and in every way it is sought to bring the Gospel before them. Hundreds of natives come down from the villages to work in the gold mines. They only stay a few months, but during this time there are splendid opportunities for speaking to them of Jesus Christ, and in this way they are enabled themselves to take back the message to their kraals. With regard to the Swazies, the great drawback to work amongst them is the King, who objects to the Gospel being preached in his villages. In Basutoland the French Mission and the S.A.G. Mission are working in close connection, and much blessing is accruing. More workers and more help are required in order to carry the Gospel to those dwelling in isolated villages.

Addresses followed by Mr. T. B. Miller (the chairman of the Council) and Mr. and Mrs. Maynard, all of whom have recently visited South Africa. They said they had found the work vaster than they anticipated, and were much impressed by its effectiveness both amongst the white and black population. It is being carried on on sound principles. Centres are started in the large towns, and it is then endeavoured to work out from these to the villages. There is a burning desire amongst the converted natives to carry the Gospel to their own people. They had the privilege whilst there of witnessing the baptism of thirty-one natives in the sea. It was a very impressive sight to see these men, surrounded by a crowd of laughing and indifferent Europeans, one by one profess their allegiance to Christ, and it was a sight never to be forgotten. It spoke of a brighter time for the tribes to which they belonged. In spite of all these efforts there are still hundreds in South Africa who have never heard of God, and we at home need to join more earnestly in prayer and endeavour, in helping the Mission in carrying on its grand work for Christ and for the uplifting of the people.

Mrs. Gosling, the representative of the Mission in England (who has been in South Africa for some five or six years, and has recently returned from an extended tour), spoke of the heroic self-sacrifice on the part of the missionaries. They often have to work under very trying conditions, and amongst tribes whose habits are most repulsive to them. The natives often seem indifferent to the Gospel message, their thoughts are easily distracted, and in the middle of a service the whole congregation will get up and walk out. They are not willing to become Christians if it involves giving up their evil practices. She had visited nearly every mission station, and seen the work at the different centres, and, in spite of these discouragements, could speak of blessing resulting from the work. She closed by an appeal for more members for the Home Helpers' Union, who by their prayers, their efforts and their gifts will aid the Mission in extending the Kingdom of God.

Greatness of the Bible—How great, how august and Godlike a book is the Bible as a whole! When men have come forth from time to time, and have pronounced, "Thus saith the Lord," their message and its very enunciation has borne upon it the very impress of the mind and majesty of the Divine Author. Nothing is more evident than that to speak after such sort is agreeable to God only, or to one immediately directed by God. And who would venture to suggest wherein He might have spoken otherwise? We are not in this to consider how it would have become Him to publish an edict or make an oration from the throne of his glory to the innumerable company of his angels. The Bible is a book not for angels, but men—for all sorts of men in the world, from the highest to the lowest—and it was written for the saving of men's souls. Viewing the question in this light, considering not merely what the book contains, but also for whose use it was designed, how wonderful a book it is, and how complete an evidence does its entire perfectness afford that it is the Book of God!—John Howe.

Other Lands.

The Gospel in Central France.

CENTRAL FRANCE is that part of the country which has been most uninterruptedly under the fetters of the Church of Rome up to the present time. When, at the beginning of the century, Napoleon organized the Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches on the basis of concurrent endowment, only one Protestant church was found to exist in the Centre. The clergy set to work to destroy it by means of mixed marriages; wealthy Catholics, young men and women, being ordered to marry poor Protestants. This astute policy has been so far successful that the church in question, which then numbered 900 members, now contains only 100. But the last quarter of a century has seen the development of several evangelistic movements, with the result that there are now a considerable number of Protestant communities in this region.

At St. Etienne, a great manufacturing town of 135,000 inhabitants, where I have lately spent a fortnight, the M'All Mission has for the past eighteen years been under the direction of Dr. Hastings Burroughs, an Irishman, who possesses the full French medical degree, and is thus able to practise medicine without hindrance. Attached to the mission is a free dispensary. Here is the NARRATIVE OF ONE OF THE CONVERTS.

She brought a boy to the dispensary one day, some ten years ago, and whilst she was waiting an earnest young man, now working as colporteur, told the story of his conversion. She was greatly astonished to hear any one acknowledge that he had been himself a sinner, was deeply impressed, and wished that she could be "a little ill" in order to go again to the "consultation." However, she afterwards learned from a neighbour that there were evening meetings in the hall, and at these she became an interested attender. The loss of her husband induced her to train as a nurse; this involved absence from St. Etienne during some five years, but whenever she came to the town, two or three times a year, and made needful purchases, she tried to arrange to stay over the night and attend a meeting. Now she is again settled, has found peace in believing, attends, whenever possible, the services of the Free Church, as well as the mission meetings, and is considering the pastor's proposal that she should join his church, she at present not feeling herself ready for so high an honour.

Since leaving St. Etienne, I have been staying for three days with M. Delattre, pastor of the Free Church at Clermont Ferrand, Puy de Dôme, the ancient province of Auvergne. Here a remarkable work is going on in one of the most fanatical and priest-ridden districts of France. M. Delattre, in a remarkable pamphlet, published by him a year or two ago (L'Eglise et l'Evangélisation), advocates which he considers to be more in harmony with the practice of the early Church, than that hitherto adopted. Instead of settling a permanent worker, called an "evangelist," in a new locality, he would visit in turn a number of fresh villages, holding in each a lengthened series of meetings for two, three, or four weeks, and then encourage those who have professed conversion to meet together for Bible study and prayer, taking care to provide for their being frequently visited afterwards. Just in this way, he urges, did Paul and Barnabas, on their first missionary journey, leave behind them groups of young disciples, amongst whom they established elders. When, some time after, Paul "returned to visit these brethren in every city wherein they had proclaimed the Word of the Lord, and to see how they fared," he had "the joy of finding that, during his absence, these churches of yesterday's birth, having neither New Testament, nor libraries, nor religious newspapers, nor ministers of the Gospel learnedly prepared, 'were strengthened in the faith, and increased in number daily.'"

A NEW METHOD,

M. Delattre is no mere theorist. He has for some years been engaged in putting these views into practice. In more than thirty different localities around Clermont he has held series of meetings, of which the longest extended to over a month, and there are now some fourteen of these places where regular services are held, besides others where there are isolated Christians. The fire of persecution has severely tried these little communities, and many who appeared to have been truly converted have given way; yet there remains an amount of solid result, which is already an abundant reward for the labour bestowed. M. Delattre himself has often been in peril of his life; one day last autumn an organised band had determined to waylay and murder him; but, in the good providence of God, he was prevented by a heavy cold from going on the intended mission, and though his substitutes were beaten and stoned, they were not deemed worthy of actual martyrdom.

Time did not permit, nor was the season favourable for any visit to these outlying villages; but I was much pleased with the little church at Clermont itself, which its pastor has taught to help him by its prayers and efforts, in his plans for the evangelization of the surrounding regions. At a crowded week evening prayer-meeting in the vestry, which I had the privilege of addressing, it was delightful, in this land where fanaticism reigns—alas! too often even in the Protestant churches—to hear men and women, in simple earnest language, joining their prayers for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom all over the world, and specially in their own locality. Will not your readers join them in prayer for France?

Joseph G. Alexander.

Clamecy, Nièvre, July 1.

The Northfield Conference.

THE seventeenth general Conference of Christian Workers will be held at Northfield, Mass., August 1 to 20, and all who are interested in the study of God's Word, in the development of their own Christian lives, in a revival of the spiritual life in the Church, in the conversion of sinners and the evangelization of the world, are cordially invited to be present.

I am glad to send out this invitation to my fellow workers, because I believe such a gathering was never more needed than it is this year. Many thoughtful men have come to feel strongly that the hope of the Church to-day is in a deep and wide-spread revival. We are confronted with difficulties which can be met in no other way. The enemy has come in like a flood—it is time for those who believe in a supernatural religion to look to God to lift up a standard against him. Oh for a revival of such power, that the tide of unbelief and worldliness that is sweeping in upon us shall be beaten back; that every Christian shall be lifted to a higher level of life and power, and multitudes of perishing souls be converted to God! Why not? God's arm is not shortened, nor his ear heavy.

The history of revivals proves that such a work must begin at the house of God. Who can doubt that if somehow the Church could be thoroughly aroused—not a mere scratching of the surface of our emotions, but a deep heart work that shall make us right with God and clothe us with power in prayer and service—the last months of this century would witness the mightiest movements of the Holy Spirit since Pentecost? The whole aim of this Conference is to help in bringing this about.

Why need any pastor or church fail to share in the blessing? How sad the experience of that worker who sees others greatly used in such a movement and himself passed by—other fields rejoicing with the joy of harvest while his still lies barren and unfruitful! It need not be so. Let us break up our fallow ground, seek a fresh anointing of the Spirit, and then move forward, expecting great things of God.

We are to have with us some of the most widely-known teachers of this country and England—men to whose labours God has already set his seal. There will be the great help that comes with close contact with hundreds of earnest men and women, almost all of them engaged in some form of Christian work. Those who wish for solitude may find it in the woods near by. The accommodation for boarding is ample and pleasant, and the expense moderate. I shall be glad to hear from all who are planning to come.

May I not ask Christian people to begin now to pray for a special outpouring of the Spirit upon every meeting of the Conference?

D. L. Moody.

East Northfield, Mass., July 1, 1899.

Notes from Tasmania.

FOR the sake of those who are interested in our movements, let me say that we are still detained in the colonies. Our berths were secured on the Australia, due in London on June 3, but our youngest child developed whooping-cough the week before we should have sailed. Though very much better, she is still unfit to take on board. Of our future we know nothing. We have no plans, but are waiting on God for daily guidance.

The church at Launceston has already given a unanimous call to Rev. W. G. Eddy, of Geelong, which it is more than likely he will accept. He is in all respects a most suitable man for the work.

The Anglican Synod, held last month in Hobart, was remarkable chiefly because of the discussion on RITUALISM.

Captain De Hoghton, R.N. introduced the question in a vigorous speech, and moved a resolution affirming "unswerving allegiance to the principles of the Reformation." The discussion indicated that most of the acting clergymen in the colony are favourable to the Ritualistic movement; yet the strength of the Protestant laity was such that, with a slight modification, the Protestant resolution was carried by forty-nine votes to thirty-eight. The Bishop, in his concluding remarks, spoke of both parties in the discussion as being practically agreed! They were all a fine lot of men, and he was proud of them! It is manifest that here, as at home, the strength of the Protestant movement is in the people.

We have no such thing as a State Church in this Colony, yet we are not wholly free from clerical intolerance. In Hobart there has recently been an exhibition of this, which has excited very general indignation. The Hon. A. T. Pillinger, Minister of Lands, who died a few weeks ago, was a Wesleyan. The Wesleyan minister attended him during his illness, and after his death was asked to make arrangements for the funeral. The Premier, without consulting Mr. Teazere, the Wesleyan minister, arranged for a State funeral, to be conducted in the cathedral by the clergymen of the English Church. This is described as a distinct violation of and the indignation it has aroused is likely to find public expression.

THE PRINCIPLE OF RELIGIOUS EQUALITY,

The clergymen who conducted the service have excited yet further indignation. After the service in the cathedral it was understood that the Wesleyan minister should have entire charge of the funeral at the grave, and this was desired by the chief mourners. But the clergymen insisted upon continuing the service, and although a message was sent to them while on their way to the cemetery, saying that their services would not be acceptable to the mourners, they still insisted, and but for the courtesy of the Wesleyan minister a disgraceful scene would have taken place at the grave. The indignation aroused by such ungentlemanly—not to say unChristian—conduct is not likely soon to subside. George Wainwright.

Mr. John Odling, secretary of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, is, we hear, dangerously ill with peritonitis.

Movement in Austria.

SOME of your readers will remember the name of Pastor Dardi, who last year began work among the Italians at Trieste.

The Lord blessed him abundantly, and he was able, with the help of the people themselves, to hire a little chapel, where services were held four times a week regularly. Forty people professed conversion, and many more are anxious. The devil, of course, got anxious, on seeing his kingdom shaken, and persecution began.

In Austria one is not allowed to form a church (recognised by the State) unless there are two hundred members. Pastor Dardi, therefore, had to give his services a private character; and the entrance to the meetings was by tickets only. The chapel seated about ninety-five persons, and was always full. The Gospel was preached in all its simplicity, and one felt that soon the place would be too small. Plans were made about future work, when one evening a police detective entered, and reported the meetings as not private. An order came to stop the services; the chapel was closed, and for days the pastor was followed about by a policeman.

Feeling that God has called him to his work, Mr. Dardi has opened his own house for services, but only thirty persons can be seated in his rooms, and people beg him to get a larger place. He writes to me: "I am wholly at my Master's service, and if it can do good to the cause, am willing to go to prison." There is only one way out of the difficulty, and that is that the chapel previously used be bought by the Methodist Church. Then it will be considered a private house, and the authorities cannot forbid the meetings. For this 4,000 florins are wanted; a lady has promised 300 florins, and Pastor Dardi thinks he will be able to raise 1,000 florins in Trieste. But where has the other 3,000 florins to come from? Pastor Dardi's address is 2, Via del Bosco, Trieste. Aug. R. Kool-Antonini.

Venice, Fondam. Cannaregio 923.

Our Cabmen.

DEAR SIR,—About two years ago I wrote to your paper suggesting the formation of a Prayer Union among those who care for the spiritual needs of cabmen. My letter caught the eye of a working woman in Bournemouth, who wrote me a touching letter begging for a personal interest to be taken in the drivers there, and saying she felt sure, while many of them would not read a tract, they would respond to words of help and encouragement—this she had been praying for, for long.

Just a year ago this prayer was answered, and a lady found who has regularly visited the ranks every month, and had every encouragement from the men. Hoping this will meet the eye of my Bournemouth correspondent (as she wrote anonymously).—Yours sincerely, Marion McBryde Broun.

20, Brookside, Cambridge.

The Late Mr. George Rettie.—We mentioned to Dr. Barnardo, at his farewell meeting of 250 boys and girls at Aldersgate Street, on Tuesday, that we were then going to pay the last token of respect to our beloved friend. Dr. Barnardo, who had not heard of his death, replied, after a minute's pause, "It comes to me like a personal shock." In this, we are sure, he spoke the feeling of many other workers by whom Mr. Rettie is held in loving remembrance.—[Ed.]

Paddington Hall.—The work carried on at Paddington Hall has many departments, but it is evident from the annual report that a sound evangelistic spirit pervades one and all. Mr. John Davidge, the superintendent, who has for so long ministered to the spiritual and social needs of the very poor, continues, by preaching and visitation and the organization of varied praiseworthy undertakings, to uphold the Gospel. Good has resulted, too, from the reception at the Clacton "Cottage by the Sea" of a number of hungry and forlorn children of the slums. Address, Mr. J. Davidge, 90, Church Street, Paddington Green, London, W.

Home Missions.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

FOUNDER'S Day at Dr. Barnardo's Homes was celebrated at Stepney Causeway on Saturday last with characteristic enthusiasm.

The great buildings, so clean and admirably kept, were gay in a holiday dress of crimson draping and flags of all nations, and from an early hour large numbers of visitors thronged the various departments, inspecting the work and catechizing the workers in this great hive of industry.

Passing from room to room, each capacious and well-lit, one saw, first of all, the blacksmiths' and wheelwrights' shops, where sturdy lads, were deftly hammering gleaming iron rods into shape, or with rapid strokes from an adze, preparing the spokes of a wheel. Close by is the bakery, spotlessly kept, and busy with the rapid movements of the white-capped and aproned youths who knead, weigh, and shape the loaves. The master baker allows a glimpse of one of the ovens, a long iron cavern, and of a store room full of good bread and wholesome cake. "Six hundred loaves are baked daily," he adds, with a smiling pride in the neatness of the establishment.

INTELLIGENT AND SELF-RELIANT,

Upstairs there are workshops of many kinds, all noticeable for the spirit of concentration and industry shown by the lads, and for kindly instruction and oversight. The tailoring rooms were lively with the rattle of machines and the shears of the cutters-out. In the printers' room much tasteful work was shown, and the harness department was resplendent with terraced heights of leather and gleaming brass. Everywhere an inspection revealed care and thoroughness, and one could not fail to conclude that the sound character of the instruction so obvious in each section has much to do with the success of the Doctor's lads in after life.

Among the clattering looms of the matmakers, among the shavings and gluey odours of the carpenters, in the magnificent kitchens where giant coppers are giving forth such grateful steam, the same spirit and methods force themselves on one's attention. The great organisation has attained that happy pitch when the maximum of personal care results in the minimum of friction and worry. The work is well done, because it is done in the best spirit and under skilful training.

Certainly, amid so much that was a delight to the thousands of visitors, the chief attraction was her Majesty's

HOSPITAL FOR SICK WAIFS.

Had Elizabeth Barrett Browning seen this excellent institution, she might have penned a sequel to her "Cry of the Children," for the pitiful little sufferers have here all the care and skill that Christian love and medical science can afford. Centred in each ward was a mass of lovely flowers; every little bed coverlet shone red in the summer sun, and the pervading influence of this palace of pain was one of stillness and rest. Here a tiny mortal heaved a sigh of satisfaction with a toy or a blossom; there a weird boy of ten, in the grip of consumption, sank back on to his pillow with a pathetic gesture of relief. The babies have a ward to themselves, and were especial favourites with their many boy and girl visitors, the convalescents exhibiting their prowess, under the care of motherly nurses, in riding acts on prodigious rocking horses.

The annual meeting, which was held in the playground, partook largely of the nature of practical illustrations of the work rather than speechmaking. The musical drills and gymnastic exercises by hundreds of little men and women, the "soldiers and sailors'" tug of war, and other notable features, were as welcome as ever. Interest naturally centred, however, in the "march past" of 250 stalwart emigrant lads and lasses who sail on Saturday next for Canada, and in the seemingly endless procession of former inmates who, having been placed in situations at home, have kept their positions with credit for periods varying from one to ten years.

The addresses were bright and pointed. Sir Henry Bemrose, after reminding the audience that for admission was absolute need, pointed out the value of the Institutions to the empire at large, and emphasized the fact that Christianity was the basis of the work. The aim of the management is to lead every child to the Saviour.

THE ONLY QUALIFICATION

In kindly terms, Earl Grey, referring to the emigration work, ascribed the smallness of the number of failures to careful oversight; and went on to voice the general appreciation felt at the young folks' combined cheerfulness, alertness, and restraint. Canon McCormick told of the wondering comment of the hungry child who, assured that he might stay in the Homes, cried, "And I shan't never 'ave no empty stummick no more;" and venerable Sir George Williams, led to the front by Dr. Barnardo, remarked that he would confine his speech to a promise of £100.

Rev. Dr. Hanson, in a forcible address, told how, after a critical inspection of the work, he had become an absolute convert to it. He prayed with all his heart, God speed this great Christian enterprise.

A practical demonstration of the methods adopted in case of fire came as a surprise, but was convincing as to the coolness and discipline of the lads and their leaders, and then prayer concluded one of the most satisfactory festivals in the long annals of Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

A Quiet Day at Jordans.

THE fifth annual conference at this historic spot, convened by Mr. Colin Taylor and Mr. J. E. Taylor, was held on Thursday last and was well attended. The fundamental truths of the Christian Faith were specially under discussion: (1) Original Sin. (2) Atonement. (3) Forgiveness. (4) Need of New Life. (5) Resurrection. (6) The Hope of Glory.

Mr. Colin Taylor introduced the subject by a comparison of Old and New Testament teaching, which alike prove that Atonement is God's plan throughout the dispensations. It was further developed by Rev. F. S. Webster in an able and extended address, and in a few words by Mr. R. C. Morgan.

The afternoon meeting was addressed by Mr. J. E. Taylor, Captain Carey Brenton, Mr. W. Lane, and Rev. J. Gossett-Tanner, who wound up the whole in a high-toned address of especial interest and fervour, referring to the "seven togethers," which will be recalled by those who remember Mr. Denham Smith—crucified together with Christ; buried together; quickened together; raised together; seated together; suffering together; and, to be glorified together. Already we have the six bonds of union, Mr. Tanner reminded us, and the seventh may be ours, how soon?

L. A. B.

Irish Methodist Conference.

THE annual Conference of the Methodist Church in Ireland has been held in Dublin. It was remarkable for deep spirituality of tone and for hearty unanimity. Rev. H. Price Hughes presided with great ability, tact and energy.

Eleven young men who had satisfactorily passed the usual examinations, and completed the long probationary course prescribed by Methodist law and usage, were set apart for the full work of the ministry, while six others were received as ministerial candidates. Out of 50,000 guineas aimed at as a Twentieth Century Fund, 48,000 were reported as already promised. A Church Extension Committee was appointed for Belfast with the view of securing sites and helping in the erection of new churches. The outlook on the whole seemed most encouraging and satisfactory. Revivals of religion were reported as having taken place in various centres, and open-air preaching is carried on without much opposition in bout thirty towns in the south and west.

Barry Dock Mission.

THE annual report of the Gospel Tent Mission, which, superintended by Mr. Gerald Coultas, carries on evangelical and unsectarian work in South Wales, is a modest recital of devoted effort in preaching the Gospel to the poor.

Both at Barry Dock, in the heart of the dock labourers' quarter, and at Brynmawr, remarkable instances of conversion have occurred. Drunkards, blasphemers, and other notorious sinners have turned with contrition from their evil ways, their lives bearing witness to the thoroughness of the change wrought by faith in Christ. Missions have also been held in many parts of South Wales.

Open-air services are a special feature of the mission; cottage meetings have likewise proved very successful, and the copies of Scriptures and Gospel tracts have been scattered broadcast in many important centres of population.

Other useful departments of Christian work, both on board ship and ashore, have been maintained with blessing, among the most serviceable departures being the initiation of rescue and preventive work. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Gerald Coultas, Mission House, Barry Dock, South Wales.

Temperance at the Crystal Palace.

THE chief popular feature of the week's demonstrations organized by the National Temperance Council was undoubtedly the gala day at the Crystal Palace on Wednesday last.

Thousands of temperance people gathered for the occasion from all parts of the country; but, in the midst of recreation and innocent pleasure, the duty of pleading the cause of abstinence was by no means lost sight of. The true temperance man is instant in season and out of season; and so, in many parts of the Palace and grounds, meetings of a vigorous and enthusiastic character were held. As may readily be imagined, the "moderate drinker" was the subject of scathing condemnation and forcible appeal, while the action of Lord Peel in connection with the Royal Commission evoked many a pæan of gratitude.

A very interesting occasion was the breakfast to the Temperance Mayors of England, given by Mr. Arnold F. Hills. The thirty-two worthy representatives of municipal government, wearing their chains of office, and supported by a large muster of temperance advocates, presented an imposing appearance, while their words of sober sense in condemnation of the drink traffic were received with acclamation. After a telling address from Mr. Hills, who referred to the extension of temperance principles among men of authority in municipal affairs as an important sign of social development, Mr. T. P. Whittaker, M.P., delivered a rousing speech, dwelling on the need for thorough work on the part of watch committees in controlling the liquor trade. The Right Hon. W. E. Clegg, Lord Mayor of Sheffield, mentioned that, so far from finding any difficulty in withholding strong drink when dispensing hospitality, he believed that even those who disagreed with him on the temperance question would feel something of contempt for him if he had gone back on his principles by supplying the alcoholic liquors usually given. Mr. J. Price Lewes, Mayor of Wolverhampton, speaking as a local preacher as well as a teetotaler, called for still more energetic effort to cope with the great evil which still threatens to throttle the commonwealth.

Vigorous words were added by Mr. C. W. Deacon, Mayor of High Wycombe, who said that ninety-five per cent. of the cases that came before him for trial had their origin in drink; and by Mr. Smith, a well-known speaker from Glasgow, who cheerily anticipated the happy moment when the last public house signboard shall be deposited in the British Museum, as a monument of our stupid endurance of a national evil.

Rallies were held, also, in connection with the Women's Temperance Association, the British Women's Temperance Association, and the Primitive Methodist Temperance Society; whilst a picturesque function was the many-bannered procession of temperance societies.

West London Tabernacle.

THE announcement that Mr. Henry Varley would preach in his old sphere of service on Sunday evening, drew together a crowded and joyous audience. The address was suggestive, stimulating, and refreshing. The service of praise was especially effective.

At the close of the service hundreds of old friendships were recalled and renewed. Testimonies of blessing received twenty to thirty years before poured in upon the preacher. Many told of conversion to God, and the manifest proof of the continuance of the work of grace must have rejoiced the heart of our esteemed brother; to find the hearts and lives of so many bearing witness to their establishment in the faith of Christ was cause for profound gratitude. The fruit of the Gospel, preached and trusted, as "the power of God unto salvation," was seen in harvest luxuriance.

From great distances many had come to tell the servant of Christ how the Lord that "had begun the good work in them" was carrying it on with power and progress. To use Mr. Varley's words, "Our cup of blessing ran over with joy and gratitude as we beheld the proofs of his gracious use of us in years long past." Mr. Tod, a devoted servant of Christ from the States, is now the minister of the Church worshipping in the Tabernacle. He took part in the service, and expressed his joy in seeing back in England, and amongst his old friends, their former and loved pastor.

One deeply interesting incident is worthy to be told. A young missionary, who for eight years has been in China, and who went out in connection with the Foreign Missionary Society at the West London Tabernacle, was home for a brief furlough. He was present amongst the great company who stayed to bid affectionate welcome to Mr. Varley. "Do you remember me, sir?" he inquired. "I shoul say that I had met you," was the reply. "Ah, dear sir, you were the means of my conversion to God about fifteen years since. You baptized me here, and I gave myself to the foreign field, and you will be rejoiced to hear that whilst in one of the cities of China I met another missionary who had come from Australia. We were talking together of our past history and experience, and what had led to our coming to China." Telling of his conversion, he said: "I was brought to the Lord under Mr. Varley's preaching in Melbourne, Australia. We both had the same glad story to tell, and when we knew it, we had a real praise and prayer meeting together."

It was a sample of harvest home, another joyous proof that fruit abounds, that "he that goeth forth and weepeth bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." It is a noteworthy fact that quite a number of the brethren who were associated with the church in official positions are still filling the places they occupied when Mr. Varley was at Notting Hill.

W. T. Paton Memorial.

A COMMITTEE has been formed to perpetuate the memory of the late Mr. W. T. Paton by a fitting memorial; and this will in the first instance take the form of an endowment for the Cloudesley Institute (Y.W.C.A.), Islington, a work which lay very near his heart. To that institute Mr. Paton devoted much time and labour, and specially commended its interests to the care of his wife and daughter. In the second place, the committee hope to erect a home at Munmar in memory of Mr. Paton, as a refuge for the distressed widows of India, in whom he was much interested. This will be carried into effect through the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, with which he was closely connected for many years. The treasurers of the Memorial Fund are Lord Kinnaird and Mr. Joynson Hicks, who may be addressed at the Y.W.C.A., 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.; or the Z.B.M.M., 2, Adelphi Terrace, W.C. Contributions for the Cloudesley Institute may be sent to Miss Paton, 22, Highbury Terrace, N.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

For the Young.

A LITTLE girl was returning from school one pleasant summer afternoon across a breezy common, on the other side of which her parents lived.

She usually ran along with light and merry step, anxious to join her brothers and sisters at their play. But this afternoon she was busily thinking about a book, of which her school-fellows had been talking.

"Have you ever read 'St. Winifred's, or the World of School,'" a young friend had asked her. "It is a lovely story, and you must try to get it, for you would enjoy it very much."

Now this dreamy maiden thought a book, "a lovely story," was about the most attractive thing the world had to offer, and her face became quite serious as she pondered the ways and means of procuring this special treat, and came at last to the conclusion that it could never be hers. Mother could not afford to buy it; she only had sixpence of her own; none of her school friends could lend her a copy. It was a hopeless case.

Now Mary loved fairy tales. She had often thought how delightful it would be if there were real fairy godmothers to wave real fairy wands, causing the real thing you wanted to appear. And after all (she mused) there are lots of really kind people, who would be only too pleased to give me the book I want. But then they do not know about it, and how can I tell them?

Mary paused. She sat down upon a stone and took a piece of exercise paper from her school-bag very slowly, and as if lost in thought. Then she began to write in her best round hand. Anyone peeping over her shoulder would have read as follows:

"A little girl wants to read 'St. Winifred's, or the World of School.' If the kind person who finds this paper will send the book to Ivy Cottage, Wood-dean, the little girl will be very grateful."

The breeze played with the paper, and it flapped up and down as she held it loosely between her finger and thumb. What was she going to do with it? We shall see. With sudden decision Mary swung her school-bag over her shoulder and set off in a mad rush, holding the missive high above her head as she ran.

In a very few moments the wind had borne it away, nor did the child look back to watch its fate, though sorely tempted to do so. . . . . .

Needless to say, Mary waited for her story book in vain. And what became of her little letter neither she nor I can tell.

But when, years afterwards, she told me the story of her message confided to the breeze, it made me think of the petitions we can send straight away to Heaven like white-winged messengers, to tell our inmost needs; and these can never flutter to the ground, or be lost on the way.

Faith is the breeze that will bear them ever safely to their destination.

Ask then, dear children, for blessings on those you love. Pray for yourselves, for the poor, the sick, the sad. And do not forget the children in other lands, who have not learnt the blessed promise.

Do you ask me what promise?

Ah! I fancy the Bible Searchers know it as well as I do.

It is: "Ask, and it shall be given you."

M. A. Hofland.

Two little eyes to look to God,
Two little ears to hear His Word,
Two little feet to walk in His ways,
Two hands to work for Him all my days,
One little tongue to speak His truth,
One little heart for Him now in my youth;
Take them, Lord Jesus, and let them be Always obedient and true to Thee.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 184).

Word-Pictures

1. All the country-side is desolate, the corn-fields brown and bare. We see some men preparing for a journey, and packing up various articles of home-produce, probably intended for a present. One of the group is talking to an old man, gesticulating earnestly, and pointing the while to a lad whom he wishes to join the travelling party. The old man clings to the youth with trembling eagerness, as though he would never be persuaded to part with him. (a) Name these three individuals. (b) Whither is the company journeying? (c) Of what does the present consist?

2. Yet another picture of travellers! How bright and happy they are! We see the same old man, but now there is a look of peaceful serenity upon his face as he gazes round on his children and his grandchildren journeying down to Egypt with him in waggons which the king has sent. They must be nearing the end of their journey, and all eyes are directed towards a chariot which is rapidly approaching. Its occupant alights and rushes to the old man, falling upon his neck in a loving embrace, and weeping tears of joy. (a) How many travellers were there in the party that left Canaan for Egypt? (b) Between whom and where did the meeting take place? (c) Give the age of the Patriarch at this time?

3. How stealthily yonder woman is creeping from her tent, and what a strange burden she carries! It looks like a rough sort of basket woven from rushes, and though she hides it as far as possible, if you peep more closely, you will perceive the sweet form of a baby boy nestling down in this strange resting-place. (a) Where is she carrying the baby, and why? (b) Who are its parents? (c) Name a verse in the New Testament which refers to their trust in God.

4. A beautiful Princess is walking by the riverside, and she has just discovered the basket of rushes where it lies hidden amongst the flags. One of her maidens stoops down to draw the little ark to land, and the baby ceases to sob, as if it finds itself once more tightly held within the shelter of loving arms. (a) Give the name of the child, and the meaning of the name. (b) Where is this kind act of Pharoah's daughter referred to in the New Testament?

(Children under ten do 3 or 4; under thirteen any two.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 183).

1. Psalm lxvi. 6.
2. Psalm xxxiii. 7.
3. Micah vii. 19.
4. "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest." Isaiah lvii. 20.
5. "Simon the tanner, whose house is by the sea-side. Acts x. 6.
6. The parable of the Sower and the Seed. Matt. xiii.
7. Matthew viii. 26, 27.
8. To Ptolemais, or to Jerusalem. Acts xxi. 5.
9. Matthew xiv. 24-33.
10. "The Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea." Psalm xciii. 4.

No. 183.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Jennie Almond, Wilfred Aldous.

B—Leslie Bell, Daisy Bligh*, Gordon Bligh, Gertrude Bush, Phyllis Boyd, Ella Burton, Edith Banks, Rachel and Esther Blumenthal, Violet Braun*, Rose Butter, William Berwick, Ella Berryman*, Dorothy Butcher.

C—Lydia Cleary, Elizabeth Clarence, Edith Chevalier, Grace Charik, Bessie Cheale, Kitty* and Carl* Cope, Anna Chanyen*, Ida and Mabel Cole, Eleanor Chance, Adelina Clark, David* and John* Colville.

D—Lucy Davidson, Ivy* and Violet Donaldson-Selby, A. E. Davis*, Pelognia Daws, Dorothy Daintree, Stanley Drew, J. P. Davies.

F—Temperance Foskett*, Vincent and Mabel Fleet, Beatrice Fallows*.

G—M. Gover, Rose and Esther Goodman, Eliz. Gerechter*, Kathleen* and Irene Gough, Constance Gabbett*, Tom Garfit, Clarice* and Bertie* Gale.

H—Beatrice Hastings, Claude Hutchence, F. Harding*, Eric Hill*, Lottie K. Hamilton (Bath), Jennie Holmes*, Beatrice Harland, Hettie Hill, Willie Hooper.

I—Nellie Irving, Alice Ingeburg.

J—Emily Jones*, Betty Jacobs.

K—Nellie Keeley*, Max, Eva, and Stanley Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky.

L—Margaret Lee*, Gertrude Lambert, Nellie and Edith Lockhart, Blanche Lindup*, Annie and Mary* Levine, Annie Lipschitz, Cecilia Lichtenein*, Dudley Lewis, B. Le Mesurier.

M—Mabel Morris, L. F. and O. L. Morice, Mabelle Mounstephen*, Hedley Meader*, Margie Marston, Marie Meek, Winifred Marshall, Dorothy McMullin.*

N—Mary and H. L. Neligan, Eleanor and Valerie Noel, Dora and Leah Niels, Maude Nottage.

P—Mary Plumb*, Katie, Leonard* and Walter Picknell, Hilda* and Ernest Pearce, Lizzie Pratt, Lilian Pearson*, Ruth Pledger, Margherita Perlmann, Ethel Palmer*, Daisy Pym.

R—Ethel Rowe*, Maude Rosenburg, Alice Reid*, Marion Richards, Kate Rosenbloom.

S—Douglas Stevens, Mary Seed*, Joseph Stephens, Kathleen* and Douglas Shepherd, Gertrude Scott, Fanny, Amy, Dryll and F. Stileman, Muriel and Rosetta Sherwin, Annie Shelley*, Laura Standen*, Eveline Steed, Flora Shadbolt*, Jessie Snowball, Esther* and Lizzie Simmons, Bertha Stocker, Ronald Studd, Mary Symon*, Mary Sowden, Solomon Stockfish, Mary Seton-Karr.

T—Olive Taylor*, F. and Eileen Tomlinson, Frank Tomkins.

V—Rosetta Viccars, May Vickers.

W—Thos. and Robert Weddell, Dorothy White, Connie Wood*, Frances Wroughton, Cecile, Noel and Phillis Wright, Agatha Ward, Joanne and Louisa Woinitzer, Annie* and Sarah Wood, Florence and Mabel Wild, Winifred Wine.

Z—Sophie Zascitsky.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 176—Cuckoo Lister (S. Africa). Nos. 177 and 178—Alice Henderson* (Jamaica). No. 179—Jean and Eliza Scott (Canada). No. 181—Kate* Will* and Nettie Thomson (Bulgaria).

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Highgate, July 13; Mr. Hankinson, Penge, July 13; Mr. S. Spiers, Penge, July 25; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Halberton, near Tiverton, till July 17; Rockwell Green, near Wellington, Som., July 18-31; Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Eridge, near Tunbridge Wells; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Coolham Green, Shipley, Horsham, Sussex, to July 15; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Stradbroke, Suffolk; Mr. F. P. Rowe and Mr. L. H. Ingram, with caravan, Greenstead Green, Essex.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birchington Bay (July). Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Bournemouth. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington. Mr. H. B. C. English, Broadstairs. Mr. J. R. Naylor, Colwyn Bay. Rev. J. F. Sheldon, M.A., and Mr. A. C. Furse, Cromer. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Deal. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, B.A., Eastbourne. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting and Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Felixstowe. Mr. H. Hankinson, Filey. Mr. G. O. Taylor, Gorleston. Mr H. W. Figgis, Howth, Ireland. Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A. Ilfracombe. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Littlehampton. Mr. P. R. Hurditch, Llandudno. Mr. Russell J. Hill, Llanfairfechan. Rev. E. E. Nickisson, Margate. Mr. A. C. Jewell, Penmaenmawr. Mr. H. Steward and Rev. J. R. Pawley-Smith, Port Erin, Isle of Man. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, Portrush, Ireland (July). Mr. C. H. Collier, Ramsey, Isle of Man. Mr. W. B. Wakefield, Mr. E. J. Spafford, J.P., and Mr. W. H. Jope, Rhyl. Mr. H. T. Hodgkin, B.A., St. Leonards. Rev. T. S. Stoney, B.A., and Mr. G. Foster-Carter, Sandown. Mr. J. Waters Coldicott, Southend. Rev. S. Mortimer Warner, Southsea. Mr. C. J. Small, Sutton-on-Sea. Dr. McAfee and Edinburgh Medical Students, West Kirby and Hoylake. Rev. G. C. Williamson, Westward Ho. Mr. Ernest Thompson, Weymouth. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Whitby. Rev. C. E Haynes, M.A., Worthing.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending July 22.

Sun., July 16	Acts xxv.	1-12	Thurs., July 20	Acts xxvii.	1-17
Mon., „ 17	„ xxv.	13-27	Fri., „ 21	„ xxvii.	18-29
Tues., „ 18	„ xxvi.	1-18	Sat., „ 22	„ xxvii.	30-44
Wed., „ 19	„ xxvi.	19-32

Why Do We Not Have a Revival?

The following, which is sent to us by a correspondent, was published in a magazine, now defunct, in 1852:—

CHRISTIANS look for a revival to come; but strangely overlook the idea that a revival has a connection with the means used.

1. Do Christians desire a revival? Does that desire pervade the Christian's life, control his conduct, show itself in devout longing, eager expectation, fervent, and increasing prayer?

2. Do Christians use the means for a revival? There are prayer-meetings. Do they attend them? Do they speak, or sing, or pray? Or do they sit in silence? Do they, as parents, co-operate with Sunday school teachers to make their instruction a saving blessing? Do Christians use the more private means of doing good? How many have not opened their lips on the subject of personal religion to an impenitent sinner for a month? Do Christians endeavour, from week to week, to bring the impenitent to the house of God?

3. Do Christians use the means of grace with prayerful expectation of a blessing? It is not the mere act of meeting that does good; it is the act of the attendant's own soul on which, through the merits of Christ and grace of the Holy Spirit, the good depends. Instead, then, of regarding our meeting, or any other means, as a sort of mill, which, being kept in motion, the pastor, turning the crank, will somehow turn out spiritual blessings, we must look on everyone as a precious means through which we are to get good and to do good. No means of grace can be expected to do good, except as we, by effort and by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, obtain that result.

Do Christians thus use the various means of grace? Does prayer precede and accompany every one? Do they in each one look and long for a blessing? Or do they go through it with no thought that in that particular means a blessing is to be expected?

We need go no further to see that there is no mystery at all in the absence of revival, when Christians neglect the means of grace to a great extent, or use them only in a formal manner, as if the mere machinery of means would work a revival. In the light of these considerations, how many are seen guilty of the loss of souls?

Derby.—At the summer conference of the North Midland District Union of Young Men's Christian Associations, held in the rooms of the Derby Y.M.C.A., a paper on the subject of "Our Aims and Methods: Are they the Best we can Adopt?" was read by Mr. E. M. Tingle. A Question Drawer was conducted by Mr. W. Hind Smith, of Exeter Hall; and a missionary address was delivered by Mr. Frank Anderson, the representative of the National Council for student work in the Bombay Presidency.

The Churches.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Cashel, Dr. Maurice Day, has expressed his intention to resign his See in the course of the coming autumn, owing to an infirmity in his eyesight, which has been pronounced incurable.

The last service at the Temple Church before the Long Vacation will take place on Sunday, August 6, after which the church will be closed until Sunday, October 1, when the services will be resumed.

The Bishop of Crediton, when on a recent visit to Plymouth, was to have preached at St. John's, Sutton-on-Plym, Dedication Festival, "but owing to the vicar announcing the service as a 'Mass,' he felt it better to withdraw."

The Marquis of Lorne last week laid the memorial-stone of the new church of St. Augustine, Fulham, which is being erected to serve a thickly populated district. Among the speakers were the Bishop of London and Mr. Hayes Fisher, M.P.

The scheme for the erection of a Church House for the diocese of Liverpool was actively entered upon on Saturday, when the demolition was begun of the premises now standing on the site which the Church House will eventually occupy, at the corner of South John Street and Lord Street.

Rev. Henry Askwith, Vicar of St. James's, Hereford, and Prebendary of the Cathedral, has accepted the incumbency of St. John's, Upper Holloway, vacant by the resignation of Rev. J. Seaver. There is ample scope in the parish for Christian effort of every kind, and a hearty welcome will be accorded to the newly-appointed vicar.

The Home Office has issued the return asked for, "showing the number of churches in England belonging to the Church of England in which confessional boxes have been put up." Thirty of the Bishops find that no box has been set up in any church in their diocese. On the other hand, five (London, Chichester, Exeter, Oxford, and Southwell) have found such boxes, or the equivalent, in a total of eleven churches and two private chapels.

The eight days' missions, which have been conducted by the special Missioners of the Church Army, in the prisons of England and Wales during the last two years have, it is stated, proved so successful that the council of the army resolved last month to offer to the 500 boards of guardians throughout the country the services of these Missioners for similar missions in the workhouses, the entire cost, as in the case of the prisons, being borne by the Church Army.

Congregational.

Special Young People's Services have just been held at Ilkley (Rev. F. H. Blanchford), when the youthful Christian Endeavourers brought fruit, flowers, and various delicacies, which were subsequently distributed among the charities and poor of the district.

At the 131st anniversary of the Countess of Huntingdon's College, at Cheshunt, celebrated last week, a large number of friends gathered, and Dr. G. S. Barrett, of Norwich, preached the sermon, which was from "Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men."

The directors of the Colonial Missionary Society at their July meeting bade God-speed to Rev. D. B. Hooke and Mrs. Hocke, in view of their leaving for Montreal, and thence for a visitation of the churches throughout Canada, which will occupy about three months. Revs. H. Elvet Lewis and F. Hastings and Mr. W. M. Hitchcock took part in the proceedings.

Following the useful custom initiated last year, a convention of country ministers was held last week at Dr. Horton's church at Hampstead. The ministers are made the guests for the week of members of the church and congregation. Among the topics discussed were "The Distribution of Our Time," "Theology in the Pulpit," and "The Vital Importance of the Church Meeting." Some of the speakers were Revs. J. Edward Flower, C. Silvester Horne, W. B. Selbie, and J. Brierley.

In an appeal on behalf of the Twentieth Century Fund, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan says: "If every member of every congregational Church will make this opportunity for giving tangible expression to the fact that we are of the same spirit as our ancestors, both with regard to the principles which they held and to the spirit in which they consecrated themselves to the propagation thereof, the raising of half a million will be an easy task. Let us all remember that sacrifice is the sacrament of sincerity."

Rev. Ernest Dowsett has succeeded Rev. J. B. Figgis at the Countess of Huntingdon's Church, Brighton. At the initiatory service, Principal Vaughan Pryce delivered a stimulating address, and Revs. W. H. C. Palmer, of Tunbridge Wells, and A. D. Spong, of Hove, took part. Mr. Dowsett said that the Christian minister was the steward of God, set apart to present the devotion of others to God, and the will of God to man. He was at once a messenger, a pastor, and a servant. The ministry demanded every movement of a man's life, and that in his private life he should frame all he did according to the doctrines of Christ. An interesting feature of the service was the presentation of a pocket Bible and a Geneva gown to Mr. Dowsett.

Baptist.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, who is vigorously pushing the Twentieth Century Fund, urges that a secretary of the Fund should be appointed in every Baptist church and every Baptist Sunday School, and that a specially designed collecting box should be used in every school.

The Congo Mission of the Baptist Missionary Society has lost two of its workers by fever—Mrs. Phillips, of San Salvador, and Miss Grenfell, of Bolobo. The latter was but nineteen years of age, being the eldest daughter of the well-known missionary Rev. George Grenfell. She had entered with such zest into pioneer work that great expectations were formed of what was hoped would be a long missionary career.

Services to celebrate the extinction of the debt and the completion of the building fund at the "Lighthouse" Church, Bow Common, have been held. Dr. Harry Guinness and Rev. F. B. Meyer preached, and, at a thanksgiving meeting, Mr. T. A. Denny presided. The scheme, including the site and the remodelling of the old chapel for school and mission purposes, has cost £5,612 10s. 10½d. The meetings were of an enthusiastic character and the congregations large. A contingent from the Spurgeon Orphan Choir contributed greatly to the interest of the closing meeting.

Methodist.

The Wesley Guild is advancing by leaps and bounds. There is now an enrolled membership of over 70,000, fully one-half being "active" members.

A new mission hall, erected by the Wesleyan Methodists in Keighley, was formally opened on Wednesday last by two services, conducted by Rev. W. L. Watkinson. The building has cost about £2,650, of which a little over £400 remains to be raised.

Foundation stones of Wesleyan chapels have been laid at Broomwood (Clapham) and Hindley, near Wigan, while at Neston (Cheshire) an undenominational church and work has been transferred to Methodism, Rev. Chas. Garrett preaching the opening sermon.

Rev. H. Price Hughes, in his valedictory address to the students of Westminster and Southlands Colleges, said that the teacher of the young was the master of the world. Methodist education to be effectual must be Christian. They held that the teaching of the Bible was essential. All teaching without the Bible was a delusion and a snare.

A large number of Wesleyan circuits are understood to have sent memorials urging that, in view of the havoc caused by the drink traffic, Conference should adopt a still more definite resolution on the subject by declaring that in future all who are in any way interested in the liquor traffic shall not be eligible for appointment to any office in the Church.

In place of a usual indoor service, Rev. J. Cartwright, of Lydd, recently held an open-air service. Starting in the road he soon gathered quite five times the ordinary congregation. Seeing a paddock at the back of the village inn, he requested the publican to allow him to hold the service there. The request was readily granted, and the publican brought out forms from his inn to provide sitting accommodation for the people.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson, preaching at Manchester, said that whenever a people came under the dominion of Romish doctrine and government, that people withered. What was the explanation? In his opinion the secret was that Roman Catholicism reduced the sense of personal responsibility. When the sense of responsibility was taken from a man or a nation it meant the paralysis of civilization. They must seek to bravely bear their own burdens, and not shackle them on a priest.

In connection with Rev. J. Telefree Parr's ministerial semi-jubilee, special services are arranged for Surrey Chapel. On Sunday, July 16, the minister preaches morning and evening, and at 8 p.m. speaks on the Drink Problem. A thanksgiving meeting is to be held on Monday, July 17, Mr. Arnold Hills, and Revs. F. B. Meyer and W. Goodman, being among the speakers. On Saturday, July 15, from 12 to 7, Mr. Parr will sit in his vestry to receive the Free-will Offerings of the people towards the work at Surrey.

A proposal has been put forward to establish a Wesleyan Theological College at Oxford. At present the Wesleyans have four ministerial colleges—Richmond, Didsbury, Headingley, and Handsworth—which are said to be needlessly costly, and to stand in the way of that specialization in teaching so necessary at the present day. The proposal is to dispose of two of these colleges, and to build a new theological college at Oxford, open under certain restrictions to all branches of the Methodist Church at home and abroad.

At the foundation-stone laying of the new Wesleyan church at Compton, Plymouth, Rev. G. B. Berry, vicar of Emmanuel Church, was present, and remarked that even in these sad days, when the revival of Romanist sympathy in Anglicanism has made so many of the clergy more narrow, more intolerant, and more anti-Catholic than ever, it is a great comfort to remember how many of the Anglican clergy and laity are in full sympathy with Free Churchmen, and do their utmost to promote good feeling and the spirit of unity among the various Churches of Christ.

Presbyterian.

The new church hall at Wembley will be opened on October 2 by Dr. Thain Davidson. A freehold site was given by a member of the Ealing congregation, who has erected thereon, at his own cost, a spacious hall and church offices. A large portion of the site has been reserved for a future permanent church.

Dr. Pentecost's congregation at Yonkers were first in the field a year ago with a sum of £200 to pay the salary of a missionary to Manila, and the Presbyterian Board sent out Mr. Rodger. The congregation have sent the same amount to the Board for this year's salary.

The Presbytery of Edinburgh has accepted the resignation of Rev. Dr. George Matheson, St. Bernard's, Edinburgh. Dr. Mitchell said that they all recognised that this step had been taken in order that Dr. Matheson might serve the Church more fully by his pen in other directions.

Camden Road Church (Rev. Dr. Thornton's) has subscribed £300 towards the Building Fund of the new Westminster College at Cambridge. This congregation also supplies a student for the first year Theological class, in the person of the minister's son, R. Hill Thornton, B.A., Cantab, who enters the college in October next.

Anniversary services have been held at Preston. There was much blessing. Rev. A. D. Gray, of Penrith, said it was easy when things were going satisfactorily to speak of the providence of God, but it was more difficult when trials came. This world was a battlefield, and as such we must expect sufferings. God could make good come out of what seemed to be evil, and He could bring us through temptation in order that we might be stronger for the future.

Society of Friends.

Charles W. and Annie M. Goddard have concluded a tent mission near Penybont. They held meetings every night and three on each First-day. For the first week the tent was at Gwystre, the second week nearer to the Friends' Meeting-house, Penybont. Several have professed conversion, and Christians have been greatly helped and renewed.

The new meeting-house at Swansea is the fourth place of worship built by Friends on the site since 1656. In recent years the number of Friends in Swansea had dwindled to a very small body, but in the last two or three years, with help rendered by the Home Mission Committee, and the earnest and energetic efforts of Benjamin J. Elsmere, a new condition has arisen, and the old meeting-house was found to be too small for the needs of the work.

News from Birmingham states that the annual social gathering of the Severn Street Christian Society has been held. George Cadbury, who presided, said it was well to review the position of the Christian world, and we found that there were still 850 millions of heathen, and among the remaining 650 million how small a proportion were real followers of Christ! Many who attended the Friends' meetings were now comfortably off, and they were inclined to settle down in ease and comfort, not troubling as to whether the meetings were attractive to the multitudes who went nowhere.

Fallen Asleep.

Sir EDWARD HULSE, Bart., a kindly country squire. He lived a consistent Christian life, and did much good in quiet, unobtrusive ways.—Rev. GEORGE RAINY KENNEDY, of the Free Church, Dornoch, in his eighty-seventh year. At the disruption he and his aged father resigned the living of Dornoch, and, along with the great bulk of the people of the parish, threw in their lot with the Free Church. Mr. Kennedy was known throughout the north as a cultured evangelical preacher.—Mr. EDWARD MOORE, for many years deacon and treasurer of Victoria Road Congregational Church, Chesterton. He gave great help in a quiet, unassuming way to the cause of Congregationalism in that place.—Mr. WILLIAM STEADMAN LENG, of Leeds, long a member of East Parade Congregational Church. He was an active worker in the Sunday School.—Mr. W. C. PELLATT, a member of Brockley Presbyterian Church, who did good work for many years in connection with the South London choirs.—Rev. ALEXANDER DALZIELL ROBERTSON, formerly pastor of Sydney Hall Congregational Church, Edinburgh. His health had given way about three years since, when he retired from active work.—At Lewanick Vicarage, Rev. C. H. ARCHER, fifty-five years vicar of the parish, aged seventy-nine.—At Coven Vicarage, near Wolverhampton, Rev. INGLIS G. MONCKTON, for forty-two years incumbent of the parish, aged sixty-seven.

Evangelists' Engagements.

MR. W. D. DUNN.—Till July 16, Bethany Hall, Glasgow; during August, Great Assembly Hall, London.

MRS. E. L. BAEYERTZ.—Jarrow-on-Tyne, July 16-31.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sun., July 16, at 7, Mr. P. Garrioch; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sun., July 16, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch; Bible lecture, Thurs., at 8, Mr. Thompson.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE.—Till July 17, Ipswich; 23-Aug. 2, Teignmouth.

MR. NEWTON JONES.—July 30, Lowestoft Baptist Chapel; During August, Margate Sands (Nayland Rock).

MR. LEONARD WEAVER, Gospel Tent, Tooting (near the Tramway Terminus), until further notice.

REV. THOS. COOK.—July 16, King Street, Plymouth; 23, Stanningley; 30, Skegness; Aug. 6, Bridlington Quay; 13, Llandudno; 20, Colwyn Bay; Sept. 3, Blackpool.

MR. HENRY THORNE.—July 16 and 23, Haling Road, South Croydon.

MR. J. J. SIMS.—During July, Pavilion Theatre, Edinburgh.

MR. J. J. SCHOGGIE.—July 16, The Tent, East Greenwich; 17-24, Basingstoke.

MR. GEORGE HUNTER.—Till July 14, Watford; 16-Aug. 13, Uxbridge.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a tent mission, conducted by Mr. James Walker, at Goldthorpe, Rotherham.

On behalf of a tent mission at Waterhouses, near Durham, conducted by Mr. Herbert R. Francis.

For blessing on meetings being held in Bournemouth by Mrs. Stephen J. Alexander, of London.

Notices.

APPLICATIONS FOR TRACTS.—H. C. Martin, Sick Berth Steward, H.M.S. Australia, Reserve Squadron; Thomas Anyon, Brooke Street, Neston Cheshire; Miss Butterfield, 27, Lavender Grove, Queen's Road, Dalston; Mr. W. G. Hedges (C.O.E. Police Court Missionary), 17, Exe View Terrace, St. Leonards, Exeter (Bp. Ryle's tracts for preference); Private A. Cole, F Company, 2nd Batallion Suffolk Regt., Quetta, India; Mr. Herbert R. Francis, Tent Mission, Waterhouses, co. Durham; Jane Vickers, 331, Essex Road, Islington, N.; Mr. David Byers, 15, Rose Vale Street, Langholm, N.B.; Miss A. Adams, 210, Glyn Road, Lower Clapton, N.E.; C. H. Pakeman, Stoneleigh, Frederick Road, Gravelly Hill, Birmingham.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS.—W.J.H. P.E.M. F.A.G. Miss B. G.M.S. H.H.C. H.N.N. S.H. J.T.P. F.D.J. MRS. L. H.H. H.F. G.H. O.S.T. A.R.K. L.F. F.J.B. G.R.C. W.R.S. G.K.H. R.C. E.A.B. W.S. E.D. K. H.H. F.T.H. C.U.B. J.E. E.B. W.A.A. G.C. W.T.J. R.A.M. C.W. W.R.N. W.R.L. G.H.T. W.J.T.C. S.S.M. A.F.

Princess Mary Village Homes.

THE twenty-eighth commemoration of the foundation of these useful institutions took place on Tuesday, last week.

After a service of praise in the chapel, the new wing of the infirmary, erected as a memorial of the Queen's Jubilee, was opened by Lady Ellis, who later on officiated at the distribution of prizes. The chair was taken by Sir J. Whittaker Ellis, and the treasurer, Lord Rookwood, was heartily welcomed, after his severe illness.

After the meeting, the cottages, workroom, training home, and laundry were inspected by the visitors, and the children went through their musical drills.

The day after Commemoration is always "Old Girls'" Day. So, on Wednesday their fête was held. Old girls, who are now doing well in the world, are invited to spend this day at the Homes, and a very large number availed themselves of this opportunity of visiting their old and much-loved "Home." This gathering of old girls is always a time of joy to Mrs. Meredith and the managers, when they see the good results of the work given them by their Master to carry out. May our Heavenly Father long spare them to continue their good work, and incline the hearts of those to whom He has given the means to supply the necessary funds for its maintenance.

Rev. Dr. Leach, of Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, who has recently returned from a second visit to the East, will be pleased to supply, free, pamphlets giving full details, showing how to take a grand educational tour to Egypt, and Palestine for 35 guineas, including all land journeys, hotels, guides, &c., and the journey out and home. For pamphlets address Rev. Dr. Leach, 27, York Place, Manchester.

Oxford Letter.

THE new master of Pembroke has just spoken some appropriate words on the "Idolatry of Athleticism." Speaking on Friday, he said:—While believing in the mens sana in corpore sano, yet he was old-fashioned enough to appeal to them to keep athletics in their place. He was shocked to find that at his old college a "place" in the university eight was prized more than a double first. This was wrong. Muscles never ruled the world; mind did, and mind always would do so. The besetting sin of Oxford just now was idleness, absolute idleness. Men cared more for being "bumped" than "ploughed."

By kind permission of the Principal (Dr. Fairbairn), the members of the British Women's Temperance Association held their annual summer gathering at Mansfield on Tuesday week. Miss Agnes Slack, hon. secretary of the World's Women's Temperance Christian Union, was the chief speaker. In the course of a stirring address she urged that they were members of a world-wide association, the most wonderful movement, perhaps, among women that the world had ever witnessed. She related how, twenty-five years ago, sixty women met in the little Presbyterian church at Hillsborough, Iowa, and listened to an address from Dr. Lewis. He told how his father was a drunkard, and of his conversion and of that of the saloon-keeper through his mother reading a psalm in the saloon and praying for her husband and her children. "O God," said the saloon-keeper, "I will never sell another drop. I can't carry on a business any longer that is spoiling the lives of children." Dr. Lewis told those sixty women that what his mother had done they could do. Thus the Association was launched. She pleaded that the temperance cause might be taken up as the cause of Christ. If Christian people cared to abolish the drink traffic they could do it. The Christian heart of England had beaten down the Sunday editions of two newspapers recently, and there was nothing too noble or magnificent for it to do.

"Fiddler Joss" in Southwark.

MANY who remember with deep thankfulness the blessing that rested on the labours of Joshua Poole and his gifted wife Mary twenty-five years ago, will learn with pleasure that the veteran evangelist made an effort to preach once more with me on the evening of Sunday week.

Although in his seventy-fourth year, and with shattered health, Joshua was marvellously helped, and spoke with much of his old-time raciness, pathos, and fire. His hearers agreed with me that "there seemed a good bit of work left in Joshua yet."

Some friends who have seen Joshua during his visit to London feel with me that if he had a complete change of scene in some bracing air the nervousness from which he suffers might be overcome, and that he might occasionally help a little in special work amongst the drinking, gambling outcast characters, to whom in bygone years he was so manifestly a chosen vessel of mercy. If somewhat restored in health through such a change, his help would be invaluable in gathering as of yore under the sound of the Gospel men and women who are not reached by any other ministry.

Those who can recall the crowds who flocked to hear Joshua when in Limehouse with Dr. Barnardo, in St. Giles' with Mr. George Hatton, or with me in Greenwich will agree with me as to the importance of this.

Some of the present generation may not know that it was through the labours of Joshua and Mary Poole that Dr. Barnardo was enabled to secure the Edinburgh Castle public-house and music hall as a centre for home missionary work, and it was through services held by Joshua that the great work of the St. Giles' Mission amongst our criminal classes was commenced.

I will be pleased to receive any help for this purpose, or any token of Christian sympathy that will cheer up dear old Joshua, help him to throw off the nervousness from which he suffers, and occasionally visit us who are labouring in the slums to gather in those whom no one to-day seems able to reach, as he was so wondrously helped of God to do for so many years.

J. W. C. Fegan.

The Boys' Home,
95, Southwark Street, London, S.E.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Clapham Young Men's Christian Association (396, Clapham Road) has this year (says a correspondent) started a summer holiday camp at Penmaenmawr, North Wales. It opens July 29 and continues till August 12. It will not be confined to members of the association.

The usual monthly meetings of the National Executive of the Y.M.C.A. were held at Exeter Hall on the 7th inst., under the presidency of Sir George Williams. There was a representative gathering of members from various parts of the country. Mr. M. H. Hodder was welcomed upon his return from a visit to the United States and Canada, and reported very favourably upon the progress of Association work in these countries. It was reported that Rev. F. B. Meyer had kindly prepared for the Associations an extended series of Bible Lessons, designed to safeguard young men against the prevalent errors of Ritualism and Romanism, and that Rev. J. Glyn Davies, of Newport, Mon., had in preparation a course of Scripture studies upon the observance of the Lord's Day. Special arrangements were made for the observance of the Universal Week of Prayer for Young Men from November 12 to 19.

Christ in the Old Testament.—Believers under the Old Testament saw Christ in the swaddling bands of legal ceremonies, and the lattice of prophetical writings; they could not else offer one sacrifice or read one prophecy with a faith of the right stamp. Abraham's justifying faith had Christ for its object—he rejoiced to see Christ's day. The Old Testament credits the New; whilst the New illustrates the Old. How many view it as a bare story, an almanac out of date, and regard it as a dry bone, without sucking from it the evangelical marrow! Hence the necessity of its being read by us, as it was writ, to a Gospel end, and with a Gospel spirit; that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto us the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him, the eyes of our understanding being enlightened. "For unto us was the Gospel preached as well as unto them." (Heb. iv. 2.)—Charnock.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, July 10th, 1899.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the rules of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd."; this will effectually prevent loss.

H.I.M.—Please send us address of Anti-Ritualistic League.

	£	s.	d.
Poor Jews, Jerusalem—K., 1s.; M.S., 2s. 6d. ...	0	3	6
Count Campello's Work—W.H.C.	2	0	0
Society Relief Persecuted Jews—W.H.C., £2; J.O., 10s.	2	10	0
Friends of Armenia—H.H., £1; E.R.H., 10s.; R.T.H., 10s.	2	0	0
Armenian Boys' Home (Professor Thoumaian)—M.S.	0	2	6
Women's Armenian Relief Fund—A.C., 5s.; (Van) C.J. and E.S., £1; (Orphanage) M., 2s. 6d. ...	1	7	6
Mr. and Mrs. Innes Wright's Work, Nepaul—M.M.C.	4	0	0
Famine in South Russia—E.M.R., £1; E.P., £1; A.E.C., £5; M., 2s. 6d.; C.J. and E B., £1. ...	8	2	6
Dr. J. G. Paton's Mission, New Hebrides—J.W. ...	0	15	0
Dr. McKinnon's Medical Mission, Damascus—J.W.	1	0	0
British and Foreign Bible Society—J.W.	1	0	0
Tiberias Mission (Dr. Torrance)—J.W.	0	10	0
Mission to Lepers of India and the East—L.G. ...	2	0	0
Paris Society of Evangelical Missions—Miss J.N....	0	5	0
Pakhoi Leper Fund—Alpha	0	2	6
Strangers' Rest, Zanzibar—Alpha	0	5	0
Bible Lands Mission—Lambda...	1	0	0
Missionary Bureau—Lambda	0	10	0
Prohibition Liquor Traffic to Native Races—Lambda	0	10	0
Moravian Missions—Lambda, £2; H., £10; (Lepers) H., £10	22	0	0
China Inland Mission—Lambda, £5; E.P., £1; H.C., £1	7	0	0
Figueras Mission, Spain—Lambda	1	0	0
Congo Balolo Mission—Lambda, £5; M.D., £1 ...	6	0	0
British and Foreign Sailors' Society—Lambda ...	1	0	0
Regions Beyond Missionary Union—(Passage Fund) E.P.	1	0	0
Mr. D. C. Joseph's Work, Haifa—A Friend	1	0	0
Persecuted Stundists—M.S.	0	2	6
McAll Mission, France—J.O., 10s.; G.N., 1s.. ...	0	11	0
Church Missionary Society—H., £10; (Famine E. Africa)—A.E.C., £5	15	0	0
Zambesi Mission (Pastor Coillard)—H.	5	0	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—K., 1s. 6d.; J.W., £1; J.O., £1	2	1	6
London City Mission—W.H.C., £2; J.W., 10s.; L.G., £2	4	10	0
Evangelical Alliance—W.H.C....	2	0	0
Scottish Reformation Society—W.H.C.	2	0	0
Ragged School Union—W.H.C., £2; (Cripples' Holiday)—E.H.G., 2s. 6d. L.G., £2; M.E.A.R., 5s.	4	7	6
Miss Sharman's Orphan Homes—W.H.C., £2; F.M.M.M., 5s.	2	5	0
Homes of Hope, Regent Square—F.M.M.M.	0	5	0
Day in Country Fund—F.A.V., 10s.; Bristol, 2s. 6d.; E.H.G., 2s. 6d.; J.W., 10s.; E.C., 5s.; J.O., 5s.; M.D., £1; G.N., 1s.; M., 2s. 6d. A.S., Torquay, 3s. 6d.; R.J.K., 10s.	3	12	0
Liberator Sufferers' Relief—Gratitude, 4s. 6d.; G.N., 1s. 6d.	0	6	0
Mrs. Meredith's Mission—(Prison) C.F.C.... ...	0	4	0
Rev. T. Given Wilson (Southend Homes)—E.M.R....	1	0	0
Country Holiday Homes—E.M.R.	1	0	0
Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry—J.W., 10s.; L.G., £2	2	10	0
Spitalfields Lodging House Band—J.W.	0	5	0
Mrs. Fisher's Work among Young Women—M.S., £5; M., £5	10	0	0
Strangers' Friend Society—L.G.	2	0	0
St. Giles' Christian Mission—L.G., £2; M.A., 6s.; Lambda, £5; J.O., 5s.; M.D., £1; E.J.M. (Torquay), 10s.; G.N., 1s. 6d.; (Children's Holiday Home) For Jesus' Sake, 10s.; M.E.A.R., 10s.; (Holiday Fund) Charlie, 10s.; (Sick and Poor) M.Y.G., £10; (Maldon) M., 2s. 6d.; For His Sake, £10	30	15	0
George Yard Mission—L.G., £2; Lambda, £5 ...	7	0	0
Christian Community—L.G.	2	0	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—L.G., £2; Z.Y.X., £1 5s.; J.O., £1; T.S.M., £4; G.N., 1s.; E.B., 2s.; A.S. (Torquay), 2s. 6d.; A.S.S.Y., 5s.; Charlie, 10s.; K.R., £1 15s.; (Emigration) For His Sake, £60	71	0	6
Dr. Stephenson's Homes—L.G.	2	0	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes—L.G., £2; E.P., £1; J.O., 10s.	3	10	0
Tower Hamlets Mission—L.G., £2; (Tent) For His Sake, £10	12	0	0
Stockwell Orphanage—L.G.	2	0	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—L.G.	2	0	0
Homes Aged Blind, Crouch Hill—L.G., £2; Lambda, £1	3	0	0
Medland Hall Mission—L.G.	2	0	0
Jewish Work, London City Mission—Z.Y.X., £1 5s.; (Children's Holiday) For Jesus' Sake, 10s. ...	1	15	0
Barbican Mission to Jews—Z.Y.X.	1	5	0
Destitute Children's Dinner Society—Z.Y.X.... ...	1	5	0
London Society Promoting Christianity among the Jews—Miss J.N.	0	5	0
Open Air Mission—Alpha, 5s.; M.D., 10s.; G.N., 2s.	0	17	0
Evangelistic Village Miss. (Mr. Shipley)—Alpha, 5s.	0	5	0
Assoc. Free Distribution of the Scriptures—Alpha ...	0	2	6
Indigent Blind Visiting Society—Lambda	1	0	0
National Blind Relief Society—Lambda	1	0	0
R.N. Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—Lambda ...	2	0	0
Surgical Appliance Society—Lambda	0	10	0
Lock Hospital—Lambda	1	0	0
Working Men's Mission, New Cut—Alpha, 2s. 6d.; E.P., £1	1	2	6
Flower Girls' Mission—Lambda, 10s.; (Blind and Crippled Children's Holiday), Myra, 2s.; For His Sake, £5; Grannie, £1...	6	12	0
Crippled Boys' Home, Kensington—Lambda ...	1	0	0
Railway Servants' Association (Accident Relief)—Lambda	0	10	0
National Society Prevention of Cruelty to Children—Lambda	1	0	0
Midnight Meeting Movement—Lambda	1	0	0
Anchorage Mission—Lambda	1	0	0
National Anti-Gambling League—Lambda	1	0	0
National Vigilance Association—Lambda	2	0	0
German Y.M.C.A.—Lambda	1	0	0
Mr. Quarrier's Orphan Homes—Lambda	15	0	0
Y.M.C.A., King's Lynn—M.S.	2	2	6
Scripture Gift Mission—M.S.	0	2	0
Evangelization Society—J.O.	0	5	0
French Protestant Church, Bayswater (Evangelistic Work)—M.D., £1; (School Treat)—M.D. 5s. ..	1	5	0
Miss Weston's Work, R.N.—M.D.	1	0	0
Miss Robinson's Work (Soldiers)—M.D.	1	0	0
Children's Country Holiday Fund—Lambda ..	1	0	0
Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland—G.N.	0	2	0
Religious Tract Society (Centenary)—Thankful ..	0	5	0
N.E. London Gospel Mission (Poor Mothers' Holiday)—For His Sake	10	0	0
Country Towns Mission—For His Sake	5	0	0
British and Foreign Evangelical Tract Society—M.S.	1	0	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—C.L.M.T.	1	0	0
Total	£329	19	0

(ADVERTISEMENTS.)

Dr Barnardo's Homes—Grateful, £1.

St. Giles' Christian Mission—W.H.H., 10s.

Tower Hamlets Mission—Proverbs xix. 17, £1.

Mission to Lepers in India and the East—Proverbs xix. 7, Dover, £1.

The Kensit Crusade and Wickliffe Preachers—Mrs. Hays, 5s.; Mrs. Gill, £1; Yeovil Protestant, 5s. Further subscriptions received and acknowledged by JOHN KENSIT, Secretary, 18, Paternoster Row, E.C.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, 98, High Street, Homerton, London, N.E., beg to gratefully acknowledge the following donations for Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent, and for the relief of the poor:—S.O., 10s.; W.C., £1 1s.; F.F.M., 5s.; S.R.Y., 2s. 6d.; J.P.B., £1 1s.

THE

"BRIDGE OF HOPE."

The Night Shelter.
The Refuge.
Eight Children's Cottage Homes.

All the Homes are full, but we are just now absolutely without Funds.

SPECIAL DONATIONS

are earnestly asked for to meet the present urgent need.

MARY H. STEER.

28, Betts Street, St. George's, London, E.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,

CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.

A HOME AND SCHOOL

FOR

500 FATHERLESS CHILDREN

And a Memorial of the Beloved Founder, C. H. SPURGEON

No votes required. The most needy and deserving cases are selected by the Committee of Management.

THE MANAGERS REQUIRE

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS

A YEAR IN VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary, F. G. LADDS, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

NOTICE TO INTENDING BENEFACTORS. Our last Annual Report, containing a Legal form of Bequest, will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME and ORPHANAGE.

FOUNDER AND PRINCIPAL:
REV. DR. STEPHENSON.

4,300 Children rescued. 1,100 now in residence. 46 waiting to come in.

Amongst the Children are the ORPHAN, DESTITUTE, CRIPPLED, BLIND, DEAF AND DUMB, or otherwise DISADVANTAGED.

IMMEDIATE HELP IS URGENTLY NEEDED.

ADDRESS:
REV. DR. STEPHENSON,
BONNER ROAD, LONDON, N.E.

Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission

Summer, and the consequent falling off in private subscriptions, compels us to again ask the kind help of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to enable

CURRENT LIABILITIES,

which amount to about £250,

to be met.

PLEASE HELP US

in this, our time of need.

Cheques and P.O.'s may be made payable to Mrs. Meredith and crossed "London and South-Western Bank," Stockwell Branch.

Office—143, CLAPHAM ROAD, S.W.

"I WAS AN HUNGRED; NAKED; IN PRISON."

Eight Days' Missions conducted regularly in the Prisons of England and Wales by a special staff of Church Army Prison Missioners. Many stories can be told by these missioners of lives changed, and a new world opened out to prisoners and ex-prisoners. Men, women, and lads received direct from Prison into the Society's Homes. Special Homes for First Offenders. Help is given in cases of necessity to the families and dependents of those in prison. 72 HOMES, &c., in London and in the Provinces, from Newcastle to Plymouth, for helping those who have "fallen by the way" to help themselves, without distinction of creed.

Chaplain, Pentonville Prison, writes:—"Your labour homes are simply invaluable."

Chaplain, Durham Prison, writes:—"Your work is sound and invaluable."

Chaplain, Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, writes:—"I believe the Church Army to be doing an immense amount of good, and to be the right thing in the right place."

FUNDS and OLD CLOTHES of every description urgently pleaded for.

Central Staff almost wholly unpaid.

BANKERS: BARCLAYS.

REV. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Sec.
Church Army Headquarters, 130, Edgware Road, London, W.

THE SICK POOR

Both ADULTS and CHILDREN are aided by the

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Will you help even ONE of the

HUNDREDS OF WEAKLY LITTLE CHILDREN

who urgently need, and are waiting for, the benefits of a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME,

Or of the numerous SICK and DESTITUTE MEN and WOMEN who equally need a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CONVALESCENT HOME?

FUNDS ABSOLUTELY INADEQUATE.

WM. WHEATLEY, Superintendent, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., a/c St. Giles' Christian Mission.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

OUR readers will observe, and we think with satisfaction, that we are commencing in this issue a new series of Bible Studies by Rev F. B. Meyer, who takes for his subject the prophet Zechariah. We prayerfully hope that the blessing which, we are assured by many readers, attended previous contributions of a similar character, may extend to these also.

Canon Scott-Holland, at a recent Diocesan Conference, advocated a reform much needed in the Church of England, which was to open the way for laymen to do more than read the lessons, as at present, and to enable them to take the whole service when required. He deprecated the slur which seemed to rest on "deacons who did not take priests' orders," and pleaded for a recognition on a wide scale of such permanent deacons as he wished to see.

There is no doubt that if it were possible to open the way to a larger use of lay help in public worship, it would be an immense service to many an undermanned and poverty-stricken parish, where the few clergymen, who are now thoroughly overworked, might be greatly eased in the performance of their duties. In this way the Church of England would do well to emulate the methods of some other religious bodies, who know how to make a wise and generous use of lay help.

At the same conference, Lord Northbourne called attention to a difficulty with the poor which should never be lost sight of in all attempts to improve their sanitary condition. They do not, in all cases, want to be improved. Some, too many, cling to their wretched surroundings. He had found that when he added a third room to their cottages on his estate it had been let to a lodger. Now, this might not always mean indifference to good sanitation, but a desire for financial easement. One thing is certain, when men and women get a clean heart they generally desire sweet surroundings.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has stated that the most imminent peril of the hour in the English Church is not Disendowment and Disestablishment, which he considers to be minor evils, but disruption. His solution of the present position is in mutual charity and tolerance among the contending elements of Low and High Churchism. This is a very plausible ideal, but where the very basis of Protestantism in the Anglican Communion is being undermined by so many clergymen, who are being maintained in their benefices at the expense of the nation, it is clear that the limits of toleration must be defined. There are points beyond which so-called charity is equivalent to a surrender of the whole case into the hands of those whose one idea is to bring back the national Church under the yoke of Rome. The one way to avoid ultimate disruption is to insist on loyal obedience to the fundamental principles of the Reformation; and this is largely in the hands of the bishops, who hitherto have shown a tendency to let things simply take their course, except when their hands are forced.

It is easy to be misled by the result of the return regarding the number of confessional boxes in the Established Church. The bishops state that they have not been able to find more than a dozen of them altogether. They have not, however, been able to deny that numberless clergymen hear confessions as a regular thing, that hundreds of them preach the duty of auricular confession, and that this is occasionally done in the aisles of churches, and oftener in private places. Most of those who confess are weak women and half-grown youths and girls, who are taught to consider it their duty to tell their sins of thought, word, and deed to their priest, and are often seriously hurt morally by the kind of questions put to them. The result of this inquiry is rather to emphasize the importance of increased watchfulness regarding this insidious and perilous evil, than to calm the public apprehension concerning it.

There is just now an undue tendency to belittle the results of the Peace Conference, because the ostensible purpose for which it was convened has for the present failed of accomplishment. Apart from its moral influence in bringing the representatives of the great world-powers into a relation of friendly discussion on the subject, and so of opening their minds to future results of a more substantial kind, one very solid gain has been actually achieved in the "Draft of a Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Conflicts." There is to be a permanent Court of Arbitration for this end, whose headquarters for the present are to be at the Hague. The regulations determining the constitution of this court are of a broad and elastic character, but they give the principles of arbitration and mediation for the first time in history an international and world-wide opportunity. This in itself is an abundant cause for rejoicing, and more than justifies the endeavours put forth.

One of the lessons of the Conference is the need of revising the so-called virtue of patriotism. There is no sentiment that needs a more thorough reconsideration than this. As at present constituted, the various nations of the earth are cramped up in a mediæval notion that its own selfish interests are the only ones which the citizens of any country have any call to consider. "Imperialism" is thus in most senses but another name for an enlarged selfishness. It is time that New Testament principles should be applied to this region of human thought and feeling. The general food of humanity is a truer motto than the isolated food of any single country. When once a nation learns the truth that its true wealth consists in the benefit it can confer on the world at large, the basis on which the mutually hostile armaments which are confounded with greatness and power, will be undermined. The nation that can trust this principle boldly will be the true pioneer of disarmament.

The House of Lords has at last affirmed the necessity of providing sitting accommodation for female shop assistants, and so helped to establish a long-needed reform. The serious effects of having to stand for so many hours have been well known for many years, and there is no need for any postponement of the question for the sake of inquiry into the facts, as was urged by the Prime Minister. The great benefit to health which the new bill must bring with it will soon justify its enactment, and so further the interests of employers as well as employed, besides proving a vast social advantage in the improved health of future generations. The gratitude of many overburdened women has been earned by the promoters of this measure.

A discussion has been going on at Bournemouth as to the best remedy for sleeping in church. Some of the methods suggested are not very seriously considered, but the question is an important one. Wakefulness in the pulpit is a good hindrance, but it is not a specific. One disputant humorously suggests a camera as a deterrent. It would be far better to remember that there is a perpetual spiritual Recorder registering all human actions, and that the all-seeing eye takes note of every thoughtless and wandering thought among those who are ostensibly worshipping Him. It is because man forgot God even while seeking his presence that they are able to sleep in church. Let them go to each service spiritually prepared and solemnized, and they will not find it easy to spend the hour of worship in a somnolent mood.

The reading of the week, the moral and spiritual atmosphere in which the six days have been spent, will have a marked effect on the preacher and Christian worker on Sunday. To live in an atmosphere of criticism and doubt will take the ring of certitude out of the voice and the spirit of aggression out of the work. A man does not much care for the success of what he half believes. It may be necessary for ministers and workers to read the deliverances of all sorts of men on the Bible and its doctrines, but they should also read diligently in the Bible for its own sake, and in other books that are true to it. It is said by keenly-observant persons in America that the subtle influence of Emerson, Holmes, and other popular writers of the Brook Farm and Unitarian trend, has morally and spiritually unnerved the preachers who have freely surrendered themselves to the charm of their style. Dr. Gregory affirms that > unconsciously the fire and fervour, the strenuous effort for salvation, and the blood-earnestness of the pulpit have gone down before their fascinating and hazy pronouncements on minor morals and of human opinions.

This is, at least, a warning.

It was refreshing to read in a secular paper, the Daily News, a smart rebuke of the title of a new novel, thus:—

> The title of Mr. Joseph Gordon Donnelly's book, "Jesus Delaney," is in extraordinary bad taste. It is unpardonable to give offence without some high justifying cause for so doing, and there is no justification here for the using of a name about which gathers the most sacred associations of Christendom. We are led to suspect that the author has chosen it simply to startle and draw attention to his work.

Novelists are sometimes great offenders in the titles given to their books, and so, too, are humourists. Religion is made the serving-maid, attired in some grotesque dress and named with some absured name, of a story which is of no sort of use to any soul of man. It would surprise any one who should take the trouble to notice them, to see how many novels have titles evidently suggested by the Bible. Even Mark Twain was guilty of a piece of bad taste when he called one of his amusing books "The New Pilgrim's Progress." He had done better not to make ridiculous a title which recalls only sacred memories.

There is no temptation to which people so lightly and readily expose themselves as unchaste and unclean thoughts and desires—else why is the prurient so popular in literature and the drama at the present day?

These words, from a sermon by Rev. Silvester Horne, point to one of the most subtle and pervading evils with which Christian teachers have to deal. The Bible all through is the purest of books, and lays perpetual and increasing stress on the importance of cleanliness of mind as well as life. As Mr. Horne points out, the most appalling retribution in a future state is that hinted at in the book of Revelation, a perseverance of character and disposition as fashioned and formed in this life. "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still." There is nothing in the lurid descriptions of hell of a hundred years ago half so horrible as that. The doom of the filthy is filth.

This fearful judgment should fill us all with earnest desire not only to expel the "unclean spirit" (Matt. xii. 42-5), but inhabit the mind with pure thoughts, healthy literature, and holy purpose, lest our worse State may become worse than the first.

Puritanism, so long and so deeply despised, is coming to honour in these latter days. Professor Gardiner's books have done much to bring about this change, and an article in the Contemporary, by Professor Dowden, will extend it and carry it into other circles. The article is satisfactory because it discerns the central truths for which Puritanism has always stood, and chiefly the right of redeemed men to come direct to God without the intervention of priests. Puritanism made little of tradition, because it held a revelation in its hand.

Religious ideas and religious emotions, under the influence of the Puritan habit of mind, seek to realise themselves not in art, but, without any intervening medium, in character, in conduct, in life. It is thus that the gulf between sense and spirit is bridged: not in marble or in colour is the invisible made visible, but in action, public and private: "Ye are the temples of the Holy Ghost." In an ordered life, an ordered household, an ordered commonwealth, according to the ideal of Puritanism, the spirit is to be incarnated.

No doubt Puritanism was narrow if it regarded God only as the God of righteousness, and "not also as the God of joy and beauty and intellectual light;" but this we question. Is not the modern danger that of an opposite kind—forgetting that He is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works?

An apparently well-informed writer in the Daily Chronicle, signing himself "Anglo-Parisian," unfolds the secret of the Dreyfus affair in a way that proves up to the hilt that it was the direct result of a Jesuit plot to maintain their power over the French Government. Since their defeats at the elections of 1875, 1877, and 1889, these clerical usurpers changed their tactics, and set about capturing the control of the army, with the result that at present out of 224 generals only four have not been trained in Jesuit-ridden academies. But Protestant and Jewish officers on the whole are better educated and more intelligent, and a few, by sheer merit, had forced their way into prominent positions on the general staff. The Jesuit saw the danger and determined to circumvent it by making a victim of Capt. Dreyfus by way of terrorising the others. After incredible plottings and counter-plottings, the truth is at last out, and it is to be hoped that its vindication will once for all break the power of the clerical party in France.

The Anti-Rome movement on the Continent continues to make rapid and widespread strides. A deep unrest, according to the Chretien Français, pervades the ranks of the lower clergy in France, and a learned priest, M. L'Abbé Harrent, in a letter of resignation he has just sent in to his Bishop, describes the situation thus:

You will not think it strange that, myself loyal, laborious and independent, I am quitting a world of hypocrisy and idleness, in whose lower ranks reigns servility, and in whose upper an odious arbitrariness.

According to the Cologne Gazette, in the Commune Lichtenwald, all Roman Catholics, except five, have gone over to the Evangelical Church. In Hungary the Protestant movement also makes rapid, progress in one commune alone eighty families having seceded from Rome; and at Gablonz the Reformed Church has received an accession of 700 persons during the past year. These facts should greatly encourage those who are working on the Continent in behalf of the Protestant faith.

The Protestants of England should not forget that, while in France many Roman Catholics are casting off their spiritual bonds, the Romish power is doing its uttermost to crush Protestantism. It knows its enemy and its real danger. But better a hard fight than a state of dead indifference. Truth, when active and potent, always rouses the resistance of falsehood; and the issue is never doubtful. The president of the Methodist Evangelical Church thus describes the situation:

It is impossible to hide from ourselves the gravity of the circumstances which still menace our country, and especially our Evangelical churches. What is clear is that all the forces of Jesuitical clericalism, with the assistance of numerous voluntary and involuntary allies, are preparing a new and furious war against Protestantism, in which they discern by a rare instinct the one great obstacle to their final triumph.

The more firmly the Protestants hold their distinctive truths, and the more effectively they preach them, the fiercer will the struggle become. Satan never leaves his prey without rending him.

One of the first words a youth learns in a London business house is "precedent," which is like a log chained to the leg of British industry. America and Germany study what prospective customers wish or want; Great Britain, nominally "foremost in the files of time," but really fettered by past precedent, ignores their wishes, and offers what it has been accustomed to produce from the days of old.

The Daily Mail of Monday contained a remarkable description of the Linotype company's new works at Broadheath, near Manchester. They have not been handicapped by inherited traditions nor by inherited machinery. The works are "ahead of the twentieth century." "England may have fallen behind in mechanical development and organization, but here at all events is one model factory, though the machinery is American." It seems as if England is getting old, while America is young, and Germany, in many ways, under her young Emperor, renews her youth.

Rev. Arnold Foster, of the L.M.S., writing home of his impressions of the changes wrought during his absence on furlough, speaks most hopefully of the opportunities just opening in China for Christian education:—

China has altered a good deal since we left in 1897. I think the Chinese are getting to trust us missionaries more, and to believe that we are their real friends. This will give the Church an enormous vantage-ground in the future, if Christians at home will only rise to the greatness of the opportunity. I see no reason why we should not get the education of China virtually into our own hands.

This is an earnest call to all ministers and missionary workers to redouble their efforts to increase interest in the work of evangelization. Mr. Foster goes on, however, to say:—

In other departments of work the missionary outlook is very promising, but to me it is very sad to see how, in all the talk there is about China nowadays, very little is being said of what may be done now to lift the Chinese nation into a new and loftier life; how much is being said about "spheres of influence" which are to be controlled by different nations of Europe in the "interests" of their own trading and military classes.

An esteemed correspondent suggests that, in view of the critical condition of affairs in the Transvaal, Christians should unite in prayer that war may be averted. At the moment, the prospects of peace seem somewhat brighter; but we cordially agree that so terrible a possibility as the outbreak of hostilities demands the earnest prayer of the Lord's servants on behalf of a happy issue to the present controversy.

It is hard to believe that money would be lacking for missionary work if some of the facts of that work were realized by persons of means. For example, what an appeal to the Christian heart to know of villages in India relapsing into heathenism, and of others craving for Christian teachers to lead them out of its darkness; and of heathen chieftains in the South Seas losing their faith in a noble missionary's word that a missionary would be sent to them, and he had not come because funds at home were insufficient; and of a school in China where the missionary had to send away forty applicants for places. Truly, "the harvest is great," but the labourers are few, because, for one thing, the income is not forthcoming.

The "Te Aute College Students' Association" is a name that conveys no meaning to Englishmen, but in New Zealand it is a name of sweet sound and good omen for the Maoris. There is a "Young Maori Party," and the "Te Aute" is its organized form, its sign to the world, its instrument of service. The object of the Association is the creation and development of a Maori public opinion, and the accomplishment of Maori reform upon the basis of Christian principle. The old men see that the old order is passing away; the young see that their very race is disappearing. With a true Christian patriotism, they are seeking to induce among their own people a wide-spread dissatisfaction with existing modes of life and conduct, hoping thus to clear the way for the introduction of a better state of things. They aim at supplementing the work of the missionary, the schoolmaster, and the Government. They desire to raise up a Maori ministry, and to advance the organization of the native Church. As the movement is a spontaneous growth it seems to have the promise of an enduring life. As such we wish it success.

Studies in Zechariah:

I.—The Permanence of God's Words.

Zechariah i. 6.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE Prophet Zechariah was born in the latter years of the captivity in Babylon. His name means one whom Jehovah remembers. It was evidently a common name among the chosen people, as it is borne by four others in the course of Old Testament story. How good it is to be always sure that God thinks of us—even when we forget or believe not. He remaineth faithful. "I am poor and needy, yet the Lord thinketh upon me. How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God! How great is the sum of them! If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand."

Zechariah came of a priestly family. His grandfather (Iddo) is expressly mentioned as accompanying Zerubbabel, the Prince of Judah, and Joshua, the High Priest, back to their desolated country (Ezra ii. 1, 2; and Neh. xii. 4). Berechiah probably died when his son was yet a child, and the boy was reared by the grandfather; he is therefore spoken of as the son of Iddo, and from the earliest his young mind must have been imbued with the traditions and habits of the priestly caste.

The first expedition of exiles, to which we have referred, reached Palestine about twenty years before our story opens. The immense majority of the Jews were too well circumstanced in the wealthy land of their conquerors to be in any hurry to return, and only some fifty thousand souls had risked the dangers of the desert and the privations of the new settlement—but these would comprise, without doubt, the flower of the race, for piety and national pride.

The majority of the returned exiles probably betook themselves to their ancestral portions in various parts of the country, only a comparatively small number settling among the charred and blackened ruins of Jerusalem. The Book of Lamentations describes, in elegiacs broken with sobs, the condition of the city, as their forefathers had left it seventy years before, and that period of desolation and waste must have still further added to the despair of the situation.

How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger!
He hath cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel,
And hath not remembered his footstool in the day of his anger.
The Lord hath wallowed up all the habitations of Jacob;
He hath thrown down the strongholds of the daughter of Judah;
He hath burned up Jacob like a flame of fire;
He hath violently taken away his tabernacle as if it were a garden;
He hath destroyed his Place of Assembly (Lam ii.).

Amid these piles of blackened ruins, the handful of impoverished captives settled; and for some time after their arrival occupied themselves in rearing dwellings for themselves, and in setting up some at least of those religious observances of which for so long they had been necessarily deprived (Ezra iii. 3-6.) The foundation of the new Temple was laid shortly afterwards amid shouts of joy overborne by the noise of weeping on the part of those who had seen the first house in its glory,—"the ancient men."

It was a fair dawn, but soon overcast, for the enemies of the returned people set themselves to poison the mind of Artaxerxes (Smerdis), who being a usurper and a magician, did not feel bound to respect the decree of Cyrus, and ordered the cessation of the work. And it ceased for fifteen years (Ezra iv). At the end of that time Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah, the son of Iddo, began to stir their fellow-countrymen to resume their neglected toils. The political horizon had undergone a great change in the interval, and there was every reason to hope that Darius, who had headed a successful conspiracy against the usurping Smerdis, and had lately ascended the Persian throne, would be favourable to the purpose of the Jewish exiles, since he was a monotheist and zealous for the restoration of pure and spiritual religion. So it afterwards proved (Ezra v., vi., especially 7 and ff).

But the great difficulty experienced by the Prophets was with the Jews themselves. "The time was not come," they said, "the time for the Lord's House to be built." In the meanwhile they were living in ceiled houses, whilst GOD'S HOUSE LAY WASTE.

First Haggai spoke. On the first day of the sixth month of the second year of Darius, he pointed to the disasters beneath which the country was groaning, that the dews of heaven were stayed and the earth was unproductive, that a drought lay upon the land and upon the mountains, upon the corn, and wine, and oil, upon men and cattle, and upon all the labour of their hands; that they sowed much and brought in little, ate and had not enough, drank and were not filled, clothed themselves but were not warm, earned wages which were dissipated as though holes were at the bottom of the bag—and urged that all these misfortunes were intended by God as a remonstrance against their laxity and an incentive to diligence. "Why?" saith the Lord of Hosts. "Because of my house that lieth waste, while ye run, every man to his own house" (Hag. i. 1-11).

"Then Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, with all the remnant of the people obeyed the voice of the Lord their God, and the words of Haggai, the prophet, as the Lord their God had sent him, and the people did fear before the Lord. Then spake Haggai, the Lord's messenger, in the Lord's message unto the people, saying, "I am with you, saith the Lord." And the Lord stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, Governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and the spirit of all the people, and they came and did work in the house of the Lord of Hosts, their God, in the four-and-twentieth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the King" (Hag. i. 12-15).

In the following month, the seventh, a very encouraging word came again through the mouth of Haggai, predicting that the latter glory of the new Temple should even excel that of the former one, a glory not of gold or silver or precious stones, but the spiritual radiance and splendour of Him who was to be the Desire of all nations, and whose advent was destined to invest that building with eternal significance and interest (Hag. ii. 1-9).

On the month after, the Word of the Lord came unto Zechariah. Probably the Word of the Lord is ever circling through the world, as the waves of wireless telegraphy through the air, but there needs an anointed, prepared, and receptive heart to receive and translate the sacred impressions. When the sacred writer speaks of the senses being exercised to discern good and evil, he suggests that to each sense of the body there is a corresponding one of the soul, and this, like that, may become more or less acute. Seek after the quickened, Spirit-touched soul-sense!

Be still and strong,
O Man, my Brother! hold thy sobbing breath,
And keep thy soul's large window pure from wrong!
That so, as life's appointment issueth,
Thy vision may be clear to watch along,
The sunset consummation-lights of death!

Zechariah prefaces his prophecies with a very tender message. True, he does not slur over the sins of the past. The Lord hath been sore displeased with your fathers. The memory of that displeasure was only too recent, the signs too obvious, but he hastens to accentuate the Divine pitifulness and tender mercy. Thus saith the Lord of Hosts; Return unto Me, and I will return unto you. There never yet was a backslider for whose return the infinite love of God did not yearn, and after whom it did not send messages like this. In this the Divine love exceeds human love. Even our Lord could not depict the father of the prodigal sending messages into the far country, where he sat among the swine, but this is precisely what God does. Can you not hear the peal of the silver bells, borne across the valley? Return, return. And when thou art yet a great way off the Father will see thee, and being moved with compassion will run and fall on thy neck, and kiss thee much, and reinstate thee where thou wast at first. He remembers sins no more.

The only fear was lest God should call in vain. Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets cried . . . but they did not hear, nor hearken unto Me, saith the Lord. Though the chosen people had suffered so terribly, there was a pitiful possibility of the obstinacy of the former generation reappearing in this. Each generation insists on trying its own bitter experiences, unwarned by the experiences of the preceding.

Your fathers, where are they? They were rebellious and sinned, and have passed away under the divine judgments. It might have been retorted, And the prophets, do they live for ever? But even though the lips that utter the Divine Word wax cold in death, the Word itself remains; and it shall have an ever-abiding force. But my words and my statutes which I commanded my servants the prophets, did they not overtake your fathers (as a foe overtakes the flying fugitive)? So much so as to extort from them a confession of the righteousness of their doom? And they turned and said, "Like as the Lord of Hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways and according to our doings, so hath He dealt with us."

The conclusion is forcible and clear. The prophet may die, but the Divine Word remains. Heaven and earth may pass away, but no word of God shall fail. All flesh is as grass, and all the glory thereof as the flower of grass, more transient still, but the Word of the Lord is incorruptible, it liveth and abideth for ever. The fulfilled predictions of the past, whether threatenings like those which befell the Jews, or promises like those realized in the advent of our Lord, all confirm the certainty that "no word from God is void of power." Let us give the more earnest heed then to his invitations, warnings, threatenings, and promises, fashioning the whole course of our life by them, and ever remembering that they are the asseverations of "the Lord of Hosts."

That title is specially applied to the Divine Being by the three post-exilic prophets. It occurs in this Introduction, five times in six verses. How significant! Though the Jews had seen the vast hosts of their enemies arrayed against them in battle, or marshalled in their own distant lands, they were assured that their Jehovah had vaster squadrons yet, and that all the powers of nature, all the restless wills of men, all the unseen kingdoms of the dead, and all the principalities and powers of the heaven, the archangels, angels, seraphim and cherubim, stood obedient to his Sovereign Sway, going, coming, doing this or that, as He chose. Look up, child of God, thy Father is also the great King, who doeth as He will "in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth." "Bless the Lord, all ye his hosts, ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure. Bless the Lord, O my soul."

The Coming Revival.

Psalm lxxxv. 6.

By Rev. T. E. MILLER, M.A. (Dunfermline).

AT the recent meeting of Synod some time was opportunely set apart for "Conference on the state of religion, the need of revival, and the means of its attainment." The practical outcome of this has been a recommendation to Presbyteries and Sessions to arrange for conference and prayer, with a view to revival of religion within their bounds.

This we regard as one of the many signs that we are on the eve of a spiritual awakening in Scotland—a spiritual awakening that will be in close and vital connection with the churches. What are some of the other indications? If we take a survey of the past two years, we shall find that no subject has been more in the thoughts and prayers of Christian people than the need of revival. And possibly nothing has contributed more to this end than a booklet, entitled "The Dearth of Conversions," which appeared some two years ago from the pen of the Rev. Andrew Murray. It has done good service in creating something like a Divine discontent with things as they are.

It was after the publication of that little book that such subjects as "Conversion," "Decision for Christ," and "Revival" were taken up in earnest and discussed in the pages of the religious press; that they found a prominent place on the programme of conferences of ministers in connection with our various Churches, and also in inter-presbyterial conferences; and now the general subject has been definitely dealt with in the Supreme Court of our Church. Nor can one fail to observe that "wherever two or three are gathered together" for prayer this need of revival is laid upon the hearts of God's people, that there is a widespread desire, a spirit of longing that God would make bare his arm in the conversion of sinners. And is not the great spiritual campaign, which is to cover the whole of Glasgow during the coming winter, being entered upon in the faith that the time of refreshing is at hand—that God is saying to his Church, "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught"?

The present time we believe to be specially favourable for such spiritual awakening and ingathering throughout the land. We have, at last, got into

CALMER WATERS THEOLOGICALLY.

The great questions that have stirred this generation—questions that have gone to the very root of our faith in the supernatural—have in large measure been laid to rest. What is of still greater moment, both criticism and science have left us in possession of the fundamental verities of the Christian Gospel, with a firmer and more intelligent grasp of, and faith in, the central truths of Divine revelation. Men who ten or fifteen years ago were drifting from the old paths, where is the good way, are to-day preaching a full, clear, and satisfying doctrine of the Atonement. Jesus and his Cross are in the midst. The old faiths may have come to us in a new light, but they are still the old faiths.

Then, if we except the political agitation connected with ritualism in the Church of England, there is at the present moment no political excitement, nor likely to be for some time to come; and this also is favourable to spiritual awakening. The Churches, too, are drawing nearer to each other—a spirit of harmony is in the air, a general desire to close the ranks and unite the forces that as one great army the Church may go forth to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

What then is the Church's need and the Church's duty that it may hasten such a time of revival, and guide it aright when it does come? The first great need is to have laid upon its heart the MASTER'S PASSION FOR SAVING MEN.

Have we not forgotten somewhat—ministers, elders, Sabbath-school teachers, and mission workers—that our work is not simply to instruct and build up, but to bring in and win definitely for the Saviour?—that we are not only feeders of the flock but also fishers of men? Is it not the case that what Thomas Boston calls the "art of man-fishing" has well-nigh become a lost art among us? The sheep are fed, well-fed, some would even say over-fed, and there is hardly a crumb for the sinner. What is needed, then, is to have this burden of souls laid upon the heart of the Church, not only in the case of ministers and office-bearers, but of all Christian workers in our congregations.

THE SECOND GREAT NEED of the Church is a fuller recognition of and dependence upon the Holy Spirit as the Lord and Giver of life. This was the secret of the Church's power in early apostolic times. The first Christians honoured the Holy Ghost; they were filled with the Spirit; and if a genuine revival is to take place in connection with our Churches, bearing fruit unto eternal life, it can only come through the same Divine agency. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." One may place the thermometer near the fire and send the mercury up to 100deg., but that does not mean that summer is nigh. Spiritual awakening is the work of the Holy Ghost, and the Church has no greater need than the constant realization in all its work that apart from his life-giving, fertilizing, fruit-producing presence and power, its labour must be in vain.

With this deepened sense of dependence upon the Divine Spirit, and this longing for the salvation of men, the need for greater definiteness in preaching will be felt; more will be made of the awful reality of sin and the danger of delay, while the necessity for a full, clear, and immediate decision for Christ will be urged upon the sinner. Thus the Church's need points the way of the Church's duty.

If we go back for a moment to the embryo Church immediately before Pentecost, we may find guidance as to if not necessary, to spiritual awakening in any period of the Church's history. That interval of ten days between our Lord's Ascension and the outpouring of the Spirit was a time of felt need, the sense of dependence upon the unseen deepening day by day; it was a time of expectancy, the eye of faith being ever towards the hills whence their help should come, and they knew it might come at any moment; it was a time of united prayer—they were all with one accord in one place pleading the "promise of the Father;" and if true revival is to come, the Church must get back its faith in the privilege and power of prayer. When we have a praying people the times of refreshing cannot be far off. It was also a time of conference and Christian fellowship; they communed together of all the things that had happened, and while they communed Jesus Himself drew near through the gift of the Holy Ghost. And with the gift came power, not the power of eloquent speech, but power (if we take Peter's sermon at Pentecost) that revealed itself in a clear apprehension of spiritual truth—of the redemptive purpose of God in Jesus Christ; the power of witness-bearing, making manifest the presence of a supernatural force, a supernatural life; and thus it was that their word was with power and in demonstration of the Spirit. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me."

THE CONDITIONS SUITABLE,

This is ever the true sequence. A revival is not an irrational movement: it is no doubt above reason, but not contrary to it. We may even say it is as much subject to law as the seasons; and those excesses of which we read in connection with some spiritual awakenings in Scotland—excesses that have made this beautiful word revival obnoxious to many—these were largely due to their rarity and to the fact they were mainly outside the Churches.

"Do not let us think," one writes, "that revival means great disorder, confusion, lawlessness: even if it did mean any such glorious confusion as they had on the day of Pentecost, let us not be frightened at that. Better that surely, a thousand times better, than the grim propriety of Death." To which we say Amen. "A revived Church is the hope of a perishing world, and no work seems more urgent upon which to concentrate the prayerful interest of the whole Church than the work of seeking such a revival as can alone strengthen and equip the Church for the tasks and problems which press themselves upon its attention." With this weighty sentence the Convener of the Committee on Church Life and Work closes his interesting report.

Let us seek such a revival; let us pray for it in the faith that it is coming; let us prepare ourselves for it. Let our motto be not only "Back to Christ" in the Gospels, but "Up to Christ" in the living present, near to Him as a Living Redeemer. Thus shall we get inspiration and guidance "for the tasks and problems that press themselves upon the Church's attention"—an inspiration that shall create such a faith in us, and through us in others, as shall lead us to "attempt great things for Christ, and to expect great things from Christ."—U.P. Missionary Record.

A Salvation Army Exhibition.

THE forthcoming Salvation Army Exhibition at the Agricultural Hall, which is to be opened on the 24th inst., is to afford, so far as exigencies of space will allow, a general idea of the Army's work in all lands. "To the public in general," says an official statement, "it will not only be a novel exhibition managed by a religious body, but an object-lesson in the manner of providing innocent and pleasurable recreation on strictly teetotal lines."

A number of extensive models which are to occupy the centre of the building will include a miniature reproduction of the White House at Washington and a fac-simile of Commander Booth-Tucker's first headquarters in India—a small mud hut, surrounded by palms. Another tableau will show King Oscar being approached by a little Salvationist maiden interceding for the liberty of Commissioner Booth-Hellberg, who at the time was imprisoned.

Among other interesting exhibits are to be a Zulu kraal, Indian idols, and samples of Hadleigh Farm Colony productions, with representations of life in the slums and in the army crèche. Commissioners Oliphant of Sweden, McKie of Germany, and other officers from abroad are to be present, and in St. Mary's Hall (adjoining the Agricultural Hall) General Booth is to conduct meetings at 11 a.m., 3 and 6.30 p.m., on Sundays, July 30 and August 6.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, July 23. 2 Sam. vi.

This chapter is full of solemn and useful lessons.

(1) The Name and Designation of God. The ark was called by his Name, and on asking what that name was, we are told that it was the name of Jehovah Sabaoth, that sitteth upon, or between, the cherubim. It is well to think of the hosts over which God rules, whether of angels, of living beings, or of stars. Speaking of the latter, the prophet says, "He bringeth out their host by number." One of our greatest astronomers, speaking of some of the more distant stars which are invisible to the eye, but have been photographed, has made the following calculation:—Whereas light leaps from the sun to the earth in eight minutes, it would take 1,800 years, at the same rate, to come from one of these stars to our world. How inconceivably vast our universe must be! But it is infinitely small to God, who fills it. The Heaven of Heavens cannot contain Him. It is the tent of his dwelling; but He is as much greater than it, as the dweller in a house is greater than his habitation.

(2) The Goodness and Severity of God. His laws in nature are absolute. Transgress them, and penalty is inevitably inflicted, as when one steps over the precipice and is instantly dashed to pieces. So in the moral sphere. None of us can wilfully violate God's law and avoid the penalty. If David substitutes a cart for living men, and if Uzzah handles with unbelieving familiarity the sacred ark, penalty must accrue. And the warning given by the death of one Uzzah may arrest the neglect and indifference of an entire nation. Whereas, if Obed-Edom and his house obey the elementary principles of reverence and faith, they are blessed and prospered.

(3) The Exuberant Gladness of the Holy Soul. All David's nature burst forth with expression. It seemed as though he could not do enough to show his love and devotion. The sluice-gates were opened, and the torrent-beds of emotion were flooded. Oh, for more of this, though the Michals of this world cannot understand, and will deride.

MONDAY, July 24. 2 Sam. vii.

Always do better for the cause of God than you do for yourself. It is an anomaly, indeed, to dwell in cedar, unless you are doing your best to house the Ark in marble. Be careful in giving your advice to people. You may be as good as the prophet Nathan; but if you speak apart from thought or prayer, you may have on the following morning to give from God an altogether different message from that which your own heart had dictated.

Remember, it is God that makes men great. Do not be anxious about maintaining your position. He who brought you from the sheepcotes to occupy your present position is well able to maintain your lot, and to keep for you your goodly heritage. How much God gives to those who leave themselves in his hands! But they must make up their minds to his discipline as well as his tender mercy. It is because He had chosen David and his children that He spoke so emphatically of chastening them were there need.

Take time to sit before God. It is good to kneel or stand; but sometimes, in moments of reverie, and when we expose the sensitive plate of our heart to his voice, we become aware of his thoughts towards us, and of the uprising of ours to Him, which pass all words. It is very beautiful, like David, to turn God's words back on Himself, saying, "The word that Thou hast spoken concerning thy servant, and concerning his house, confirm Thou it for ever, and do as Thou hast said." Learn to put your finger on this and that promise, turning each into the cash of daily use, by presenting the cheque for payment at the Divine Treasury.

TUESDAY, July 25. 2 Sam. viii.

Twice in this chapter we are told that the Lord gave victory to David, whithersoever he went (vv. 6, 14). It seems, indeed, that David was more than a conqueror, for he not only obtained victory, but the spoils of his foes, of which afterwards he was to make large donations for the building of the Temple. We are reminded of those great words of the Apostle, "Now, thanks be unto God, which always leadeth us in triumph in Christ;" and of those of the beloved Apostle, "They also shall overcome that are with Him (i.e. the Lamb), called, and chosen, and faithful." And the whole position is summed up in the words: "Thanks be unto God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Never in this world shall we be able to lay down our weapons, or to retire from the battlefield. To the end of life we shall be exposed to the insidious assaults of our great adversary. Often temptations which we thought had passed out of our lives will revive with their olden vigour, and be presented with even greater subtlety and force. Resolutions and fresh beginnings, made in our own strength, will completely and constantly fail, and we shall be driven to confess, at the end of Christian life as at the beginning, that God does not make us strong to get the victory for ourselves, but keeps us in the place of utter weakness and dependence, that we may receive it as his dear gift. The victory which overcometh is our faith, which stands still and trusts God, accepting from Him what we have no power to achieve. It is a very humbling doctrine, but for this very reason is the one which most befits us, lest we be filled with the overweening pride, which God hates.

WEDNESDAY, July 26. 2 Sam. ix.

God has many Mephibosheths in his family circle; lame on both their feet, unable to help themselves, unable to walk without stumbling in his way, or to run to the assistance of others. They are weaklings, indeed, at the mercy of their servants, but loyal at heart (2 Sam. xix. 24-30). By nature they belong to an attainted race. As Saul's lineage might have been deemed a fatal barrier to any hope of advancement under David, so to belong to Adam's race might seem to present insuperable barriers to adoption into the family of God. But let us see what the covenant will do.

Years before Jonathan and David had entered into a covenant of the heart (1 Sam. xx. 14-16). Even though Jonathan had allowed his career to be more ruled by his natural relationship to his father than by his spiritual affinity to David, still that covenant held; and the king acknowledged, after so long a time, its cogency. So, because of the covenant Mephibosheth was welcomed to his table.

Let us lay stress on this. Not because his countenance was handsome, or his figure shapely; not because he had rendered conspicuous service, or would render it; not because he could adduce a single reason in his favour; but simply because of his belonging to Jonathan did this favour accrue to him. So with ourselves. Our forfeited patrimony is restored to us; we are welcomed to God's table as one of his sons; we are permitted to have entrance to the palace whenever we will, because God has entered into covenant with his Son for all who believe, for all who are related to Him by faith.

THURSDAY, July 27. 2 Sam. x.

How often men misunderstand us! Like David, we venture on some act of kindness which has no other explanation than appears on the surface, and our fellows, judging us by themselves, and unable to believe that the motives by which we are actuated are absolutely pure and sincere, rebuff us. It is very trying, and we resent their treatment with hot indignation.

But why are we so quick-tempered? Why should we so easily yield to provocation? Why should we be surprised? The world is full of that baseness which is imputed to us. Is it altogether a matter of surprise that we should be viewed in the light in which men ordinarily view each other? What have we done which so obviously and entirely removes us from suspicion? Are not our hearts base enough, if left to themselves, to generate almost any evil? Have we not often enough misjudged others? Let us not forget what Jesus said to guide us under such circumstances: "If the son of peace be not there, your peace shall come to you again."

Let us also be directed by his great example, for when his disciples, annoyed at the refusal of certain Samaritan villages, appealed for fire from heaven, He reminded them that they belonged to another dispensation than Elijah's, that they had come under the rule of the new age, and that the only fire which they might deal with was that of love. More than this, it will be remembered that the baptism of the Holy Ghost, as of fire, was given to Samaria, and perhaps to those very villages (Acts viii.). It used to be said that the best way to secure Archbishop Leighton's tenderest kindness was to show him a discourtesy.

FRIDAY, July 28. 2 Sam. xi.

Ah, King of Israel, man after God's own heart, what a mistake it was to linger at Jerusalem, when Joab and thy brave soldiers were in camp, and the clarion was calling to war! Hadst thou been in thy place, at the head of thy troops, thou hadst never been betrayed into this double sin, which has left a lasting stain on thy fair name, and given great cause for reproach to the enemies of God. How surely dost thou teach us the lesson of continual watchfulness, lest we enter into temptation; of incessant devotion to the dear Master, Christ, since no evil can allure the heart which is occupied with Him and his concerns!

And when thou hadst sinned, how much better had it been to have confessed before God and man, than to have added sin to sin, in the vain endeavour to hide thy guilt! We too have delayed confession, endeavouring to hide or palliate our guilt, but in vain; sin cries to God with a voice that refuses to be silenced by anything less than his divine forgiveness.

We know how thou didst feel through all these sad subterfuges. Thy heart condemned thee; thy conscience murdered sleep; beneath thine assumed composure there was the anguish of a heart, swept by tempest. Thy bones began to wax old. The Divine hand lay heavily upon thee. Thy moisture was turned to fever heat. God did not cast thee off, but He was sore displeased, and thou hadst bitter suffering to undergo, as part of sin's necessary consequence. Alas for thee! But thou hast long since been forgiven, according to the riches of his grace.

SATURDAY, July 29. 2 Sam. xii.

Nathan awoke the drugged and stupefied conscience of the king. This is always the office of the truth, when ministered by the faithful servant of God. By manifestation of the truth we commend ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God, and the heart of man acquiesces in the sternest impeachments. This is the true function of the Christian minister. Others may deal with the various faculties and aptitudes of human nature, but his point of attack is the conscience. Here is the province in which he is monarch, and where there can be no dispute or challenge of his prerogative.

Directly the sinner cries, "I have sinned against the Lord," there is a response more instant and immediate than the following of thunder after lightning. "The Lord has put away thy sin." If we confess . . . He is faithful and just to forgive. Oh, believe that God waits to be gracious, and will run to meet the returning prodigal, though he is a great way off.

Our dear ones are taken from us, in spite of our prayers and tears, because God would take them away from evil to come. If we only knew how much evil, we would thank God day and night that He did not answer our prayers for their recovery. And our treasures are safe with God. He will keep them for us, and give them back to us again, transfigured and radiant. Love is eternal; it abides for ever; it will leap to its beloved. Notice how clearly David affirms it: "I shall go to Him. Ye are come . . to the spirits of the just made perfect."

The Priesthood of Christ.*

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

CHRIST is entered "into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us" (Heb. ix. 24); and this, as the whole Epistle shows, is the character of our Great High Priest. God's dispensation for Israel had four prominent sacrifices, connected respectively with the Passover at the coming out of Egypt, with the old covenant made at Mount Sinai, with the annual offering on the Day of Atonement, and with the offering of the red heifer. These sacrifices were essential for all Israel. All four of them point us to the work of the Lord Jesus Christ; but the first two were independent of any priestly office.

Whatever the word we may use—regeneration, salvation, forgiveness of sins, reconciliation, justification, adoption, covenant relationship, absolute acceptance with God—all these things are ours in Christ, apart from his priestly character; and that is probably the reason why comparatively few Christians seem to have a personal interest in the story of Christ as

OUR GREAT HIGH PRIEST.

They are like those Hebrews of whom it was said, "When for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God. . . . Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto full growth, not laying again the foundation" (which has nought to do with the High Priest) in constant uncertainty as to whether we have repented enough or believed aright, whether we have been properly baptized or have had hands laid upon us, and whether we are certain about the resurrection of the dead and about eternal judgment. It would be a poor building in which only the foundation stones were discernible, after years of labour. At the same time, those who are not pardoned through Jesus, the true Passover Lamb, those who are not reconciled to God and are not brought into covenant with Him, these have nothing to do with the priesthood of Christ.

Streams of blessing are ready to flow down upon our souls; and these blessings are infinitely more precious, because more full of the revelation of Christ, than the things which we first found in Him. Anointing with fresh oil every morning, and power for service every moment, these are ours in the Great High Priest. We can only qualify for them as we are under the blood of the covenant, as we have passed from death unto life, as we are brought into the family of God, and are sealed as his for ever.

For worship, communion, and service—the "believer's life" in things pertaining to God (chap. ii. 17)—we need the perpetual intervention of the Great High Priest. The first blessing, including many subordinate ones, which this office of Christ secures to his people, is to God (chap. iv. 15, 16; x. 22). Why do Christians so often feel uncertain as to their acceptance with and nearness to God? Because they do not claim and use the second blessing which Christ ministers to his people—continual fitness. It is well to know that I may enter a royal presence; but there may be doubt as to whether my garments are in accordance with court rules, and are spotlessly clean. Well, the Great High Priest bids you come up to the very throne of the Father, and from Christ you also have full assurance of faith, a heart sprinkled from an evil conscience, and a body washed with pure water.

CONSTANT AND CONSCIOUS NEARNESS

First, we have nearness, the way open; then fitness, so that we need not fear to look boldly and affectionately into God's face, and, as the Spirit of adoption bids us, say, "Abba," the tender cry of the little child to his Father. The third blessing is, to "hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering" (chap. x. 23), a lasting permanence. If Christ is in the presence of God, to bring us near and to make us fit, why should we ever be far off? What is the profession of our faith but this: that Christ has brought us near, and keeps us near to God, by his priestly service for the souls of his own people?

We have representatives in parliamentary and municipal affairs, through whom we may make our voices heard; and through Christ, our Representative, we are present in the high court of heaven. We are there in Him, and He is there for us; so that we are as near to God as is Christ Himself. Why, then, should we stand beyond the outer court, fear to enter the holy place, and still more fear to press into the holy of holies? Through our High Priest, the barriers are gone; and, in Him, we may stand at the very throne of God, to find grace to help in every time of need.

An instructive history is that of Neh. xi., where we have a catalogue of the names of those who came back from the Captivity and were assigned places in and around Jerusalem. Pethahiah, one of the people, was left three months' journey away. Enemies sent messages secretly accusing the Jews to the king, but in his presence stood a man ready to meet all such charges. Again, when Nehemiah and his brethren needed supplies or further liberties, they were sure to gain the king's ear through him who doubtless stood well with the monarch "in all matters touching the people."

"AT THE KING'S HAND,"

What was the happiness of these men compared with our own? What need have we to fear the malice of our enemies when our case is in the hands of a Divine Pethahiah, whose very name tells us that "Jehovah opens" the way to the Father's throne and heart for his own children? How blessed is our condition, how full of riches is our lot, when we have at the Father's hand, our own Brother Man ever living to represent us, to make us welcome, and to intercede on our behalf!

The Epistle to the Hebrews is mainly occupied in showing us that the Lord Jesus Christ is better than any one else. He is contrasted, in chap. i. and part of ii., with the angels, in iii. with Moses, in iv. with Joshua, and in v. and onward with Aaron. Israel received all their blessing through these beings; but the Lord Jesus Christ stands high above them all. The many points of superiority in the priesthood of Christ, as compared with that of Aaron, may be studied in chap. vii., culminating with the statement that the law made men "priests which have infirmity," but our High Priest is the Son "who is consecrated for evermore." That is why we glorify Him, and can find no place in the world, in our hearts, or in heaven, for any other than the Lord Jesus Christ to intervene between us and God.

Oh, the dishonour that is done to the very title of the Lord, as our Great High Priest, when it is asserted that we need any one to come between our souls and Himself! It is a cruel misuse of the precious Word of God to apply that beautiful phrase, "the ministry of reconciliation," to a using the phrase to overcome natural repugnance to auricular confession. They who do so are, perhaps unconsciously, exercising the ministry of separation, in keeping us away from the Lord who bids us draw nigh. 2 Cor. v. 18 clearly shows that the ministry of reconciliation is given to every soul who is already reconciled. It is a ministry of bringing men to God through the sacrifice of Christ, typified in the Passover instituted before there was any priesthood. If we view things in God's order, we shall find ourselves so close to Him that none save Christ may intervene between us.

MAN-MADE ABSOLUTION,

The Epistle to the Hebrews is full of names and titles given to the Lord Jesus Christ. As He calls us his brethren (ii. 11), we may, with wonder and reverence, call Him our Elder Brother. He is the only-begotten Son, and yet we are the new-begotten children of God. In recognising his priestly office, let us never forget that He is our fellow man (x. 12). Wesley's old hymn teaches that "He won't be in glory and leave me behind;" for the Forerunner (vi. 20) is for us entered within the veil. His existence at the Father's right hand is our security, sealed by the promise and oath of God, that we shall be with Him where He is.

Christ is the one and only Mediator of the new and better covenant (viii. 6, x. 15, xii. 34).

By a solemn and awful judgment, showing the truth of God's own Word and the loss suffered by those who fail to take it as a whole, we find that they who favour other so-called mediators between God and man never dream of consciously possessing the blessings which the one Mediator has to bestow. They do not like to be asked whether they are forgiven and reconciled unto God; and it appears to them presumptuous for us to claim eternal salvation and cloudless communion with God. Can we dare to doubt, when Christ holds us and the Father holds Him, thus eternally safe-guarding us for the coming glory which Christ shall bring?

Christ is the Author and Finisher of our faith (xii. 2). All the uncertainty which takes zest out of service and joy out of communion is gone when we know that "He which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ" (Philippians i. 6). The great Shepherd of the sheep (Heb. xii. 20, 21) will never suffer them to want (Psa. xxiii. 1), and will seek them to the end (Psa. cxix. 176).

Perfect reconciliation (Heb. ii. 17), perpetual intercession (vii. 27), and permanent representation (ix. 24), are the three great features of Christ's priesthood on behalf of his people. It is a sad perversion of his wondrous work, when men attempt a priestly representation of Christ before God, instead of recognising that it is his office to appear in the presence of God for us. The outcome on our part should be, first, of the blessings which our High Priest bestows. The great stream of Divine love in our nearness, fitness, and permanence of standing before God, cannot be hidden within the human heart; but its outflow through us to others makes it the more sure to ourselves. Heb. x. 22, 23, is the inflow of those blessings; and the outflow immediately follows in verse 24. The exhortations of chap. xiii. discover to us something of our priestly service under our Great High Priest; for, throughout all the ages of the Jewish dispensation, the sons of Aaron were subject to him, as we are to Christ.

CONSCIOUS POSSESSION

Brothers and sisters in the Lord, called to be a royal priesthood (1 Pet. ii. 5, 9), will you enter upon your office to-day, if you have never yet done so? Will you, in consecration, fill your hands with your powers, your love, and your possessions, wave them before God, and hand them over to be used only as He commands? Thus, all your life through, may you prove your royal priesthood in the perpetual offering of praise and gifts to God, and in perpetual testimony concerning his grace to men!

* Bible Reading at Mildmay Conference.

Our Trust at Last.

On what shall we stand in the River of Death,
With the moaning wave and the chilling breath?
When the solid earth is a shifting sand,
And nothing is left where the feet may stand;
When friends would help, but their efforts fail;
When the hand of God can alone avail—
The only stay in the mortal shock:
Let us trust Thee, then, O Christ, our Rock.

If the sins of a wasted life would shroud
Our sunset skies, like a thunder-cloud,
And a judgment peal at the eve of death
Should silence the song of the noon of faith,
When the nerves are afire and the heart is numb,
And the answer to prayer is slow to come:
Let our refuge then be the Word of God,
Our title to heaven-atoning blood.

But should life's last hours be like night in June,
A twilight glow with a summer moon,
An evening blent in the rising ray
Of the glorious morn of eternal day,
Oh! whence this rejoicing without a fear?
'Tis the voice of God that has reached the ear.
Even so, O Christ, let us see thy face!
Our trust at last—thy redeeming grace.

Donegal. J. K.

Prof. Newell's Bible Course.

LESSON VI.—(Concluded.)

II. MOSES.

(1) His parentage: study their character, as far as possible. For a foundation, take Heb. xi. 23.

(2) His birth: its time—just when the oppression was most terrible, and the attending danger greatest: how was God glorified thus? Compare the remarkable statement regarding the child Moses in Acts vii. 20 (Greek, fair unto God) with that of John the Baptist in Luke i. 15. The peculiar goodliness of this babe is twice said to have been the great incentive to his parents to preserve his life (Ex. ii. 2; Heb. xi. 23.

(3) His preservation—how providential and remarkable!

(4) His early life with his parents. How long probably? How did his mother probably train him, in view of his soon going to live at court? The Romish Church says, "Give me a child till he is ten; you may do what you like with him thereafter."

(5) His life as a prince of Egypt. As to his early ability and exploits, compare Acts vii. 21-23 with Josephus.

(6) His loyalty to the people of God; the unlikelihood of it, naturally; it involved what, as to his own pride? his apparent future prospects? the comforts and pleasures of life? all his selfish ambitions? What were the causes of it: in his early training? in his own inner religious life? Study Heb. xi. 25-27, noting first his faith in God, v. 24, as the root of all; then his spiritual discernment, v. 26; then his renunciation of the world, v. 24, and his choice of the cross, v. 25; his victory over the fear of man, v. 27, and, finally, his life of fellowship with God, v. 27. How was his life at court probably spent? Two words in Heb. xi. 25, 26, answer—

"PLEASURES," "TREASURES;"

yet that he was a diligent student is shown in Acts vii. 22, which tells us that he was versed in all the wisdom of that wisest of earthly peoples; while the same text declares his royal ability as a leader of men. Josephus describes him as the triumphant leader of Egyptian armies. God knew his man; there was perhaps every element of a man of God in this faithful soul in those early days—but one, that one an absolute essential, however. (See 2 Cor. xii. 9.)

(7) His first great effort for his people (Ex. ii. 11, 22). What inspired it? What emotion had probably possessed his generous soul for years? Was his deed selfish? Was it wrong? (See Acts vii. 25). Was it well-timed? Was it understood? Why? Was it ignorance of mind, of pride of heart, that was the real cause of Moses' rejection by his people? (See Acts vii. 27, 23.) Who else "came to his own, and his own received Him not"? (John i.). What was the cause in their case? Let us remember that Moses is a great type of Christ as the deliverer of Israel, first in his proffer of himself and rejection, then in retirement (cf. Hosea v. 15, Matt. xxiii. 37-39, Luke xix. 12), and finally in full manifestation to them, with all the powers of God for their deliverance when they accepted him and were delivered (cf. Rom. xi. 25-27, Hosea iii. 5, Isa, xxxv. 3, 4, and xi.). But in whose strength does Moses seem here to be acting, in his own or God's? One can be trying to do a real work of God in self-energy. It was a very different man that God found at Horeb, forty years after this. Here is a high, rushing into conflict for God; there is the very meekest man in all the earth, on his face, begging to be let off from the very mission he once coveted. This leads us to the next step.

IMPETUOUS, DARING SPIRIT,

(8) The training of the forty silent years. Note the means which God took to humble him: his social degradation—what? his new occupation—how abasing to him? (Gen. xlvi. 34); his rustic, probably coarse, wife—congenial, do you think? (see Ex. iv. 25); his knowledge of the condition of the people he loved, with no power to help them; his seclusion, with the probable thought that he was set aside, perhaps not needed, by God.

(9) His call (Exodus iii.-iv.). Note its occasion; its place (cf. Elijah, 1 Kings xix.); its circumstances; its peculiar method—why the vision of the unconsumed bush? (cf. Gen. xv. 13, 17, Zech. xiii. 9, and Mal. iii. 2-6); its revelation of God; of his nature, character, name; of his heart toward Israel; of his gracious purposes for his people. Note also his promised presence with his chosen servants (see Jer. i. 8, 19; Jud. vi. 11-16, Acts xviii. 10, Matt. xxviii. 20); his infinite patience with their weakness, fear and unbelief; his full answer to every doubtful question, and his persistent placing them in his service, despite all their objections. On the other hand, mark the five pleas of Moses against God's request (iii. 11, 13; iv. 1, 10, 13). Study them; they are characteristic. The root of them all is in each of us. Meditate deeply on God's answer to each of these querulous arguments of his servant. There will be no more profitable exercise in this lesson than this, especially for those of us who are called to STAND FOR GOD BEFORE MEN.

It is of the utmost importance that when God calls, we shall, with Samuel and Isaiah, say: "Here am I" (1 Sam. iii., Isa. vi.), else we shall be in danger of losing part of our commission, as many believe Moses did at this time (Ex. iv. 14-16), or of being cast for a season into the sea of chastening (Jonah ii.).

(10) The searching at the inn (Ex. iv. 24-26). Why had Moses not circumcised his child ere this according to Gen. xvii. 10-12? Are there many Christians to-day who are avoiding the cross to preserve peace in the home? Is this the will of Christ? (Matt. x. 34-36). Can a servant of God disobey the Word to please men, and yet go on exercising God's power? Moses was not thus allowed, nor shall we be. Probably the severest test of the consecration of some of us is at this moment in our own family. Let us be true to God, or the experience of verse 24 may be ours. Much sickness and sad chastening—yea, and premature dying—might easily be avoided by God's people to-day (see 1 Cor. xi. 30-32).

We shall now leave the student to follow up thoroughly and systematically Moses' life, which it is hoped every one will do, as it will prove a study of limitless value. We shall note from time to time the various crises in his career, but refer the reader to the simple biographical plan in Lesson II., and beg that by this or some better method a real acquaintance be formed with him like whom "there hath not arisen another prophet since in Israel," save that Greater One of whom Moses himself prophesied (Deut. xxxiv. 10, Deut. xviii. 15-19, cf. Acts iii. 22, 23). God is now about to put into Moses' hands the greatest power, so far as we know, that has ever been held by merely mortal hands. Investment with authority is the supreme test of character. Judged by this stern rule, as summed up in Numbers xii. 3, is more like that of Him whose is all power in heaven and on earth, and yet whose heart is meek and lowly, than is any other character revealed to us: "Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth." Perhaps he was no more humbly faithful, indeed, than was he of whom the Holy Ghost witnesses, that he served the Lord "with all lowliness of mind," and who accounted himself "less than the least of all saints." Literally, the first half of Rev. xv. 3 reads, "And they sing the song of Moses, the bondslave of God, and the song of the Little Lamb." After these words a David might well write, Selah. Let us all stop and ponder, till we hear in our hearts One saying, "He that is least among you, the same shall be great." And let us really study Moses' life.

THE CHARACTER OF MOSES,

III. The Testimony to Israel (Ex. iv. 27-vi. 27). Its need from the people's present condition and present circumstances; its character, how suited to the people's need? Study especially vi. 1-8. Its first effect (Ex. iv. 27-31); its later effect (ch. v. 20, 21, vi. 9). Were the people worthy, because of their steadfast faith, to be delivered, or was it God's grace that brought them out? Trace the similarity between the experience and conduct of the people in their bondage—which is only increased at first by Moses' coming to save them—and the action of the soul under conviction of sin. Until the Passover plan is revealed the people of God are in bitterness; nor does the testimony of the fact of the mercy of God, as in chap. vi., bring peace or confidence toward Him till the soul is shown the blood and its meaning, as in chap. xii.

IV. The Testimony to Pharaoh. What was its purpose towards Pharaoh and Egypt? toward Israel? toward all the earth? God could have brought his people out without all or any of this parleying with the Egyptians: why did he not do so? Go thoroughly into this subject. Compare God's dealing with Egypt with his method of testimony to and judgment of the antediluvian world; with his ways with the cities of the plain; with his revealed which is to be similar to that with Egypt at this time in several important respects. Some even believe that one of the witnesses of that time spoken of in Rev. xi. 3-6 will be Moses himself. As to the hardening of Pharaoh's heart, note carefully the attitude he took toward God at the very start (Ex. v. 2), and how he stubbornly maintained it (ii. 13, R. V.), and remember that the prophecy of iv. 19 did not compel, but simply foresaw, this evil man's perverseness. Proverbs xxix. 1 also epitomizes this particular rebel's history; for again and again he was warned of the result of his obstinacy. "God gave them up" is the fact thrice recorded with awful simplicity, in the first of Romans of those wilful sinners who "held down the truth in unrighteousness," and "refused to have God in their knowledge" (Rom. i. 18, 28, R. V.). From this judicial abandonment unto the divinely sent "strong delusion" of 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12, there is but a step. The verse preceding repeats the reason for their damnation, and shows that they might have been saved. In Ex. v. 2, when Pharaoh cried, "I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go," he might have omitted the last three words. It was not so much the Divine command as the Divine Person that his heart defied. "And sin," saith the Holy Ghost, "is lawlessness" (1 John iii. 4, R. V.). If God's wrath and power needed to be made known in all the earth (and do they not, even these in our own days), where can it be so publicly proclaimed as from

FUTURE COURSE WITH THIS WORLD,

THE LOFIEST THRONE OF THE WORLD?

And if choice must be made of one in whom to show them forth, could there be vessel more meet than this proud boaster who vaunts himself as the very man of sin will do, and utterly despises dominion? (2 Peter ii. 10-12). Meditate prayerfully on Pharaoh, and then turn to Moses. Demoniacal pride and heavenly meekness! The ninth of Romans gives no serious trouble to those who have seen the King, Jehovah of Hosts. Read all Isaiah vi. And to those that ask the two hard questions of Romans ix. 19, the eternal God vouchsafes no other reply than those four other questions of vv. 20-24.

V. The Plagues. Study the nature of them; the character of them as adapted to humble Egypt, and reveal God's universal power. Note the peculiar effect of each plague on Pharaoh and his people; the typical character of them, for they evidently have such character (cf. Grant's "Numerical Bible"); the prophetic character of them: compare with the plagues of Revelation.

VI. The Magicians of Egypt. Study these as the peculiar tools of Satan in blinding men to God's presence and power—the office of magic in every age. Find their names in 2 Tim. iii. 8; compare them with other magicians and soothsayers in the Bible, e.g., Balaam, Simon Magus, Elymas; collect passages against the black art, for such fortification is needed in these days, when, in some places, even professing Christians are necromancers, fortune-tellers, &c. (See e.g., in Deut. xviii. 9-14, Isa. viii. 19, 20, what God thinks of sorcery). Note the character of their opposition—imitation, one of Satan's constant methods of resisting God's people; note the final impotency of their efforts. How did their partial success best prove their imposture? Note also that their efforts always increased the evil they mocked at, instead of mitigating it. So infidels, Satan's servants, resist God's servants in their efforts to get salvation to men, but give no relief to the world's misery, only ever increasing it.

RUNNING AFTER SPIRITUALISTS,

VII. The growth of Moses during this crucial time in Egypt. How was it a testing time for him? Study carefully. In what respects did Moses remarkably develop during this time? (compare, for example, Ex. v. 22, 23 and xiv. 13, 14). What is already seen to be the key of Moses' life?

[Lesson vii. will appear in next issue.]

The Late Dr. Norman Kerr.—At the latest meeting of the Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriety, under the presidency of Dr. G. Sims Woodhead, a resolution of sympathy with the widow and family of the late Dr. Norman Kerr, was passed by a standing vote. Rev. Canon Barker, in moving the resolution, referred to the strong conviction which Dr. Kerr held, in relation to alcoholism being a disease rather than a crime, which should be cured by medical treatment rather than by punitive methods. He took an active part in the efforts which led up to the passing of the Habitual Drunkards Act of 1879, and the more recent Inebriates Act of 1899. In 1884 he founded the Inebriety Society, of which he has been president and the most active promoter ever since. He has contributed more than twenty volumes to the literature on the subject.

Mr. J. Theodore Isaac

AND THE RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

IF men are wanted for work, so also is it of great importance that the right sort of man should be secured for any special class of work. We have all heard of square men in round holes, and have witnessed the muddle and failure that result from the placing of men and women in positions for which they lack fitness of mind and temperament. Especially is it desirable that work for Christ should be under the control of such as are spiritually qualified for the same; and as sure as the work and worker are suitably matched, there will be a record of progress and success. Our portrait this week brings to mind one who has, for the goodly period of twenty-one years, carried on a grand ministry in East London. In thorough sympathy with the work of the Strangers' Rest for sailors of all nations in the Ratcliff Highway, Mr. J. Theo. Isaac has shown enthusiasm and devotion in a high degree, and he has accordingly seen much fruit of his labours.

Mr. Isaac is a native of Bristol, and came to London in 1875. A man of active business habit, he was not long seeking an appointment, but in the meantime he looked around for Christian society in the great city. One of his first calls was at the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. There he heard of Miss Macpherson's work, with the Home of Industry as its busy centre; and he put in three years of service there. That brings us to 1878, just a year after Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and others had established the Strangers' Rest as a place of refuge for storm-tossed mariners in St. George's-in-the-East. Mr. Isaac went in the direction of the wharves and docks to see the notorious Highway: the need touched his heart.

What memories the very mention of the Highway awakens in the minds of Christian workers of twenty or thirty years ago! A squalid, horrible locality, where sin and vice openly ran riot almost unchecked, and where even the strong arm of the law seemed powerless at times to restrain within some kind of limit the vilest and most degrading passions of men and women. Many a mother, with a breaking heart, has had to mourn over some loved one who in the bright days of happy childhood was her hope and joy, but in later years, happening to be drawn into this seething whirlpool of iniquity, sank down from its dark haunts of crime and evil into the deeper darkness of a hopeless eternity.

Right here Mr. and Mrs. Isaac determined to "spend and be spent" for the Lord. The various institutions that came into being through the prayerful energy of Reginald Radcliffe had a way of expanding their agencies and reproducing themselves. It was so with the Rest. Mr. Isaac threw himself into the work of organization, and ladies and gentlemen attended night after night to instruct and evangelize men of various nationalities, mostly strangers to London, and many of them beset by terrible temptations in life. From then till now the work has been carried on without cessation, voluntary helpers sustaining the various meetings every day in the week, seeking by many measures the temporal comfort and eternal salvation of Jack and his friends.

Twenty-one years ago was "the day of small things," the work being carried on in a single room. After removing from 173 to 163, everything went forward, and at length the premises had to be enlarged to meet the growing needs. Those who have attended meetings in aid of the Rest, or in furtherance of its objects, will know that Mr. Isaac generally bases his appeal on a threefold ministry—(1) Among the sailors, (2) among the inhabitants surrounding the Rest, and (3) among the heathen abroad, into the midst of whom Christian sailors go with Gospel speech and practice. The Rest has provided a welcome for sailors, and a sphere of labour for Christian men and women in training for the mission field. This second ground of usefulness is as interesting as it is important. As a result, there are to-day, in all parts of the great harvest field, labourers who look upon the Strangers' Rest as the training-ground where they learned how to deal with sinners and testify for Christ. These brethren and sisters, probably fifty in number, include some whose only "college course" was that passed in the hall and rooms of the Rest. And experience shows that such training is of special excellence and great practical value.

While many similar institutions have during the two decades been founded in various parts of the world, in some cases distinctly on the model of the Ratcliff Rest, a peculiar interest attaches to the affiliated Rest at Zanzibar, East Africa, established eight years ago, and of which work Mr. Isaac is also hon. sec. The responsibilities of office have of late weighed rather heavily upon our friend, and it is not surprising that he should have desired to shift some of the burden to other shoulders. The expiry, a few months ago, of the period of twenty-one years since he assumed the secretariate of the Ratcliff Rest seemed to indicate a fitting opportunity; but no one was forthcoming to take up the duties. Meanwhile Mr. and Mrs. Isaac are standing by the ship in the hope of relief in the near future. The numerous agencies are being well sustained, and quite recently something has been started for the welfare of the children and mothers of the neighbourhood, who labour under many disadvantages.

From a Photograph by Messrs. Debenham and Gould, Bournemouth.

In some quarters the impression prevails that, because Ratcliff Highway is not so notoriously bad now as it used to be, the necessity for the work is less; and some friends have an idea that sailors are few in the district, and that the character of the place as a seafaring centre is gone. Let any who think so pay a visit to the Rest on any Sunday or week day evening. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few." A pleasing fact, however, is that some of the Rest labourers have continued at their posts of service for long periods of years.

To a large extent the Rest work has been an individual one—Christian ladies and gentlemen dealing with men and boys one by one, in the hope of saving them from evil and winning them to Christ. Especially has individuality attached to the part filled by Mr. Isaac, who has displayed remarkable administrative ability, and a never-failing determination to hold on to duty. He would be the first to say that he could not have held on so long but for his devoted helpmeet, and both would disclaim credit for having expended time and talent in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ.

(922)

Protestants in Belgium.

RECENT political troubles have drawn public attention to this remarkably go-ahead little State, and have furnished a fresh proof of the unvarying intolerance of the Roman Church. Public opinion in Belgium is in a grave state of unrest.

A French Protestant missionary labouring in South Africa has said that Protestant missions in Roman Catholic countries are more arduous than those in purely heathen lands.

It is, then, with devout gratitude to God that we see the Protestant Church in Belgium (the land par excellence of martyrs) making such progress. In fifty years, and in the face of every obstacle, more than thirty churches have been established, and, for the most part, have ever been filled with a noble missionary and self-sacrificing spirit.

The latest innovation has been a remarkable strengthening of the thirty-four Y.M.C.A.'s, and notably the formation at Antwerp and Brussels of central, well-equipped branches, having general secretaries at their head. For forty years small branches of the Y.M.C.A. have existed in connection with the churches of Brussels. To-day they are federated into one united association in a well arranged, spacious, and centrally situated building, and are thus brought sufficiently into prominence to secure the attention of the local papers.

The building, inaugurated in last November in the presence of the Bourgmestre and the chief Echevin (alderman), is, in a sense, a gift to the work; a wealthy Belgian member of the association's council, purchased and magnificently adapted it with the expressed intention, if the work prospers, of handing the edifice over in perpetuity to the work.

IT WAS A STRIKING SCENE to see at the inauguration of this institution the different Protestant churches united for the first time in their history to accomplish a common aim—i.e., save young men.

The winter campaign has proved that the association responded to a want; the membership has almost trebled itself, four Bible classes are held weekly, a boys' and a soldiers' branch have been established, a restaurant renders good service, a monthly organ is issued gratis; in a word, a good fourfold work in which "first things are first" is being done.

At Whitsuntide, a most successful and high-toned National Conference of the thirty-four Belgian Associations, attended by 300 delegates, was held in the new building.

Lastly, we may mention that an Anglo-Saxon branch has been started on behalf of the many English-speaking young men who find their way to the Paris of Belgium.

In establishing this work in a Roman Catholic capital, the founders counted upon the support of God's people in Protestant England to give it a fair trial. It may be mentioned that at a very important Catholic Congress held at Besançon and in the Jesuit organ of Rome, the Y.M.C.A.'s have been held up as a "danger" to be combated.

Mr. J. Hughes, the general secretary, formerly of Lyons, has been in England canvassing to raise the sum of £240, urgently needed to ensure the prosperity of this effort, and Mr. Francis Allen, 21, Crouch Hall Road, Crouch End, N., has kindly consented to receive and forward contributions.

Keswick Horses.—May I repeat an appeal made more than once in past years to the multitudes of your readers who will be going soon to Keswick? Hard and heavy work falls on the horses at this season. I plead for consideration for them and for contributions to the local branch of the R.S.P.C.A., whose officers (only two for the two large counties) are doing much good work to prevent cruelty and to better the condition of animals. P. H. Johnston.

The Beeches, Carlisle.

Other Lands.

Chicago Bible Institute: Its First Ten Years.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

THE present year is the first in the second decade of the history of the Bible Institute for Home and Foreign Missions in Chicago, a good place to stop and thank God for what has been done, look over the results thus far, and gather fresh strength and encouragement for the first years of the 20th century, in which, if I am not mistaken, its work will be more than ever needed.

In the first place, there is much reason to be thankful for the way in which the work has been supported by the Christian people both of America and England. The very plan of the Institution makes it necessary to appeal to the liberality of God's people to carry it on, and such appeals have never been made in vain, the work having not only been well supported, but greatly enlarged.

Not only has the Institute been well cared for financially, but many of the leading Bible teachers on both sides the Atlantic have spent weeks there, thus giving the students the best possible opportunity to acquire a thorough knowledge of the Scriptures. Many of the most prominent and successful pastors, missionaries, evangelists, and workers along other lines have lectured there for a longer or shorter time, giving an opportunity to learn the best methods of practical work.

The ten years have proved that there is no lack of young men and women who wish to avail themselves of the privileges of the Institute. Over 2,500 have been enrolled—more than 500 in 1898 alone. They have come from every part of the United States and eighteen foreign countries (a considerable proportion of them were from Great Britain and Ireland), and REPRESENTED THIRTY-THREE DENOMINATIONS.

Another thing that seems clear is that the theory of the Institute is correct; experience has shown that its course of training is exactly what is needed to equip workers for many departments of Christian service. There has never been any attempt to send out scholars. The majority of the students have been those who either were too old for extended courses of study, or who felt themselves called to a work in which such training was not essential. It would be a poor army that was made up entirely of generals. The aim of the Bible Institute is to provide a course of training for those who expect to become city and reserve mission workers, evangelists, pastors' assistants, church visitors, Sunday school missionaries, and the like—places in which an extensive scholastic training is not necessary.

That there is a large place for such workers is seen from the fact that of those who have passed through the Institute, sixty-seven are superintendents of city missions and other such responsible institutions in this country and Canada, 130 are preaching the Gospel among the heathen, twenty-nine are colporteurs, thirty are Christian Association secretaries, forty-seven are Sunday school missionaries, 300 are pastors, pastors' assistants, and church visitors, 193 are in evangelistic work, and 207 are in city and reserve missions. Of the rest, some are wives of pastors; some are teaching the English Bible in different educational institutions; some are not devoting their entire time to Christian work, but in their home churches are doing much more effective service on account of their training at Chicago.

I do not believe that the Bible Institute was ever more needed than it is to-day. There is a growing class of people in city and country who cannot be reached by the ordinary service of the church; a special class of trained workers must be raised up to go into the highways and hedges after them. Hundreds of millions of earth's people are still in heathen darkness, and thousands of missionaries must be sent out if they are ever to be reached. So heavily does the work press that we are receiving calls from all parts of the world faster than workers are being fitted to go out; the consequence is that they are hurrying to the fields without stopping to complete their courses at the Institute. The call for labourers was never louder than it is to-day, and if there are young men and women who read these words, who would like to take a course of training at the Institute in preparation for such a blessed life-work, I shall be glad to hear from them. Its doors are wide open to all of such that can be accommodated.

I want to say to those who wish to help on the work, that we need your prayers and gifts. I do not know of any better way to give away money than to put it into consecrated flesh and blood—into young men and women who prepare to spend their lives in the Lord's service. Such investments pay a hundred-fold.

[Since the above was set in type a letter reaches us from a former student (now pastor of one of the U.P. Churches in Chicago), speaking in warmest terms of the benefit the Institute was to him. He is an Englishman, and was first led to enter it through a notice in The Christian.—Ed.]

Notes from New York.

COMMANDER Wadhams, United States Navy, said in a meeting the other day, that a lady who wished her name to be withheld, had given 50,000dols. towards the erection of a permanent building for the Naval Young Men's Christian Association.

A newspaper despatch says that Mrs. Maggie Pendergast has been baptized at Oxanna, Alabama, at the age of 103 years. Until recently she had belonged to the Methodist Church, but a short time ago, she became a Baptist. She sat in a chair while the ordinance was administered. With a minister on each side she was carried into the baptistry, and gently immersed. She stood the experience well.

Dr. John Cuthbert Hall, president of Union Theological Seminary in this city, has been appointed to the Haskell Lectureship in Comparative Religion in the University of Chicago. This appointment requires that all lectures shall be delivered in India. Dr. Hall will therefore deliver a course of lectures on Christianity throughout the chief cities of India. Dr. J. H. Barrows was the first American to go to India on this mission, and his successor, Dr. Fairbairn, of Scotland, has just finished an Eastern tour. Dr. Hall is making arrangements to perform his duties in Asia within the next two years.

Information has been received from Ku-tsing, about eighty miles from Canton, China, that it is proposed to erect a church there in memory of Dr. John Hall, the well-known pastor of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, who died a short time ago while on a trip to Ireland. A Chinaman named Chu En Chow, one among twenty-seven of his nation who were received into membership by the church mentioned, afterwards returned as a missionary to his native land, and the project is due to his initiative. A piece of ground had been already purchased, and a few days ago a member of the Fifth Avenue Church sent a draft for 1,000dols. to help the building fund along.

The condition of the Protestant Episcopal Church here promises to become, before long, as interesting as that of the Church of England is now—but in the opposite direction. As we understand it here, the efforts of those who claim to be the genuine orthodox members of the Established Church in England are directed to excluding doctrines and observances tending towards Roman Catholicism; while here the corresponding class of clergymen and laymen are opposing rationalism in various forms as the great foe of the Church. That they are likely to have plenty of work on their hands may be gathered from the utterances of Bishop Potter, of New York, possibly the most conspicuous prelate of his Church in the country. In his published sermon, delivered at the recent ordination of Dr. Briggs, he says:

> But the time has come when the Church and its teachings must vindicate themselves by something more than speech hardened into dogmatic terms. In our age, and in a world that reads, and compares, and inquires because it thinks, authority must vindicate itself by its appeal to those judges of all truth which are the image of the Divine in man—the spiritual intuitions, the conscience, and the reason.

The bishop says with regard to the Bible:—

> The Book is a literature, priceless, incomparable, and most precious, but still a literature, and it must accept, and those who love and reverence it must accept for it, the conditions of its existence.

Next fall we may expect to see the whole Church in an extremely animated condition—to put the matter mildly; and although the Episcopal Church here does not fill the eye of the public nearly as much as the Church of England does over the water, yet the conflict will not fail to arouse great interest far beyond its immediate sphere of influence. Roger Martin.

Northfield Conference.

THE college delegation at this year's World's Students' Conference is unusually large. There are eighty-four delegates from Yale alone, the largest number ever sent from one college. The meetings, which began on Friday, 30th ult., have all been well attended thus far. The camp, with its free tenting sites, presents a scene of busy activity; and large numbers of young men's societies have sent representatives from all parts of the United States, who thoroughly appreciate the pleasant surroundings of life amid the pine and birch groves, with the splendid opportunities, within the means and reach of all, for abundant physical and spiritual benefits during the two months of the various conferences and meetings for which Northfield has long been famous. The campus is swarming with students from all the colleges. Tennis and baseball are the order of the afternoons, and much interest is taken in matches between the many colleges.

The opening address on the Friday evening was delivered by Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman. It centred in the two words, "Lost and found" (Luke xv. 6, 9, and 24). In these three texts, said the speaker, you have both the lights and the shadows which are necessary if we are to paint a perfect picture. At the same time, as you read the three texts, and especially have the two words in your mind, lost and found, you have, first of all, the grief and then the despair which may be in the same heart in a single day. Then if you go on with the study, you will find in the ring of them all the hope and the joy which may fill the soul of everyone here in this building this evening, if he finds himself before the service is at an end out of fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ and returns to Him. One word, "lost," makes the heart ache; the other word, "found," fills it with the very peace of God and the joy of heaven.

After an interesting exposition on the lines referred to, the speaker, in closing, expressed his longing to put before the young men some adequate picture of the great Father in his yearning love over prodigals. "Would that I could win you away from your life of worldliness and selfishness. You can't measure his love. You can measure a father's love; it is just so broad and so long, so high and so deep. You could even measure a mother's love: but not till you can count the sands by the seashore and the number of drops of water in the waves that break at your feet, can you count the love of God. The circumference of the earth, the altitude of the sun, the distance of the planets men can count them all; but the love of God passeth knowledge."

The first Sunday of the Conference was marked by a

SPIRIT OF GREAT EARNESTNESS

in the day's services. There were many speakers, and it was felt that the words uttered by them were full of deep meaning.

At the morning service Mr. Robert E. Speer, one of the secretaries of the Presbyterian Board of Missions, gave the first address. His short sermon was based on the text, "In the last day, the great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, 'If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink.'" After Christ has satisfied us in every personal longing of our lives, He still makes us discontented until we have taken Him also—not as an ideal friend alone, but as the Captain of a life of incessant and perpetual personal struggle—a life in which we war against the lusts of the flesh, a life in which we keep the body under. I believe there is a life of victory, I believe there is a life of peace; but I believe there is no true life that does not taste the heat of battle every day. Christ desires not only to satisfy the needs of men's lives in the lines of personal struggle. He would have every man who follows Him come out into the life of large struggle in the world. God will not allow any man to be tempted above that he is able to bear, but will assign to each man just that measure of temptation which he sees the man has strength enough to completely conquer and drive out of his world. There are no finer compliments that can come to men than temptations. They are God's way of telling men how much He thinks of them, how much He is willing to trust to them.

In the afternoon Rev. Dr. Schauffler spoke on "The Personal Call for Work." At the twilight meeting on Round Top, Mr. Robert E. Speer spoke on the needs of missions; and at the evening service John R. Mott spoke upon "The Reality of Jesus Christ."

At the morning service on Monday, 3rd inst., Mr. Speer was again the speaker. His subject was "Faithfulness," and he made a strong, able plea for more optimism in belief and less of doubting. Faith underlies the physical life. The sceptic trusts on the continuity of nature. Far more in our higher life do we live by faith. We do not live by reasoning out God's relation to us, but by faith in God.

Mr. Moody emphasized this address with a few remarks. He showed how a man's life was affected by what he believed, and said that he thought many preachers did not believe deep in their hearts what they preached. "Do not preach," he said, "if you cannot believe; rather go out and break stones. We have too much of men going into the pulpits to air their doubts. What we want to-day is belief."

The Growth of Christian Endeavour.

The following items will be read with interest. They are taken from the annual report of Mr. John Willis Baer, of Boston, Mass., General Secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavour, at the Eighteenth International Christian Endeavour Convention at Detroit, July 5-10.

DEDUCTING the societies that have ceased to exist for any and all reasons, the nett gain in number of societies during the last year is nearly two thousand, with over one hundred thousand new members.

Russia a year ago, the only country in the world without its Christian Endeavour society, has now welcomed its principles and methods, and to-day its international fellowship is complete and world-wide. Great Britain has over 6,000 societies; Australia, 2,000 societies; India, 454; China, 148; Africa, 136; Mexico, 108; West Indies, 103; Germany, 101; Madagascar, 93; Japan, 73; and Spain, rent with war and turmoil, has 36.

Over 100 societies are to be found upon ships, merchantmen and men-of-war; many others in the soldiers' camps, prisons, schools of reform, workhouses, almshouses, asylums, institutions for the blind and for the deaf, schools and colleges; among car-drivers and motormen, policemen, travelling men, life-savers on the coast, lighthouse employés, in large factories, &c., to the number of over 200.

In England the Baptists lead; in Australia, the Wesleyan Methodists; in Canada, the Methodists; and in the United States, the Presbyterians. The latter have 8,000 societies; Congregationalists, 6,000; Disciples of Christ, 4,000; Baptists, 3,000; then the Methodist Protestant, Cumberland Presbyterians, Lutherans, Reformed Dutch, and Methodist Episcopal, in order named, have each over 1,000 societies.

The Christian Endeavour "Tenth Legion" now numbers 14,700 members, who are giving not less than one-tenth of their incomes to God. When the proper proportion of our rank and file is marching under the banner "Render unto God the things that are God's," such a dilemma as a missionary board in debt, or a young student volunteer equipped for service, but prevented from reaching the front because of a lack of funds, will never be known. God is going to do great things for missions with Christian Endeavour. Here are some of the sentences in the reports that indicate the progress of this mighty

MISSIONARY AND EVANGELISTIC FORCE.

"Classes formed for systematic study of missions." "Missionary libraries have been purchased." "We support a missionary, his wife and three children." "We are educating three orphans in India." "We have our own native preacher." "We support an orphan in Turkey." "We are pledged for six years to educate a child in India." "We pay entire expense of a missionary in Peru." "We are educating three girls in India." "We are responsible for an orphan girl in Armenia." "Our society supports a native preacher in Africa." "We have our own missionary in Japan." "With two other societies we guarantee the salary of a home and a foreign missionary." "We are supporting two of our own members in the field." "We are soon to send one of our members to the foreign field." "We now have a live missionary committee, and our monthly missionary meetings are the very best." "We have subscribed for our missionary magazines, and keep them going from house to house."

Palestine Exploration.

DEEPLY interesting particulars of the work of the Palestine Exploration Fund were given at the annual general meeting of the organization, held last week at the Royal Institution, Albemarle Street, W. The year's operations had been mainly in the region known as the Shephelah, or low hilly country, that lies between the Maritime Plain and the high Central Range, along the borders of ancient Philistia. The chief sites were Tell Zakarîya, a hill in the Vale of Elah, and Tell es-Sâfi, which has been identified with the famous city of Gath. Both places have a record going back to pre-Israelite times; and the investigations have been in the charge of Dr. Bliss and Mr. Macalister.

On high grounds of reason Tell Zakarîya has been regarded as the Azekah of Scripture, one of the girdle of fenced cities surrounding Jerusalem (2 Chron. xi., xii.). Among other objects found was a buried jar, which contained Egyptian amulets, including scarabs of Thothmes III. and his great-grandson Amenhotep III., kings of the eighteenth dynasty, and both of them conquerors of Palestine. This takes us back to a period of about 300 years before the Exodus. The general débris exhumed consist of two strata—one pre-Israelite, in which the foundations of the fortress were sunk, and the other a Jewish stratum slightly disturbed in Roman times. The fortress may possibly be the work of Rehoboam.

Thousands of potsherds and associated objects afford information as to the various towns that have occupied the present Tell es-Sâfi. The site had a continuous history from the eighteenth to the fourth centuries B.C.; that is, it was founded long before the conquest of the land under Joshua, and inhabited uninterruptedly until a late Jewish period, when it was deserted till the time of the Crusaders, by whom the strategic qualities of the position were fully recognised. Dr. Bliss writes: "Our excavations have proved the existence of a city quite as ancient as Gath, on a site where Gath may reasonably be looked for, fortified at about the period when Gath was made a city of defence. That the Tell contains inscriptions that will positively prove it to be Gath is quite within the range of possibilities."

In a large clearance which Dr. Bliss has made on the north-east plateau at Tell es-Sâfi, at a depth of 17ft. beneath the soil, he has uncovered what appears to be

AN OLD CANAANITE TEMPLE

("high place" of Scripture), with three standing stones, or menhirs, surrounded by a rude enclosure made of mud and rubble. The stones are set in a line directly east and west. They are very rude, and vary in height from 6ft. to 8ft. They stand embedded in the layer of pre-Israelite pottery.

The report explains: "On such sacred standing-stones (in A.V. translated 'pillars') libations of blood, milk, honey, or water were poured. Dolmens ('stone-tables,' or altars), and cromlechs ('stone circles,' or Gilgals) still exist in great number east of the Jordan; but west of that river, with the exception of a few examples in Galilee, none have hitherto been found. They seem to have been destroyed by the Judean kings, Hezekiah and Josiah, in obedience to the injunctions of the Book of Deuteronomy to demolish the religious emblems of the Canaanites. Hence, if this is really a high place of the Canaanites, it had probably become buried in this débris before the time of Hezekiah, or otherwise it would not have escaped destruction."

The bearing of these discoveries upon "the abominations" of the Canaanites will be obvious. It is to be hoped that the Fund will not lack the financial support needed to enable its agents to bring ever-increasing light from "the Land" to bear upon the interpretation of "the Book."

Religious Literature for Canada. — Rev. J. W. Jones, who is at present in England on furlough from mission work in Canada, where he has charge of three congregations of poor people, asks for gifts of books and tracts suitable for Sunday school libraries. Address, 1, Arnold Street, Upper Hill Street, Liverpool.

The Evangelical Alliance.

IT is difficult for Christians in England to believe that within a few hours' journey of London their fellow Christians are subject to fine and imprisonment for such work as ordinary Sunday-school teaching. Yet this is indeed true. We have before us an Order of the Court, which runs as follows:—

"384a Schwarzenburg, 1899.

The Royal District Court has been informed that you, A.B., and you, C.D., have had a treat in the Baptist Chapel at ——, to which children were admitted whose parents still belong to the Lutheran Church. The Court expects that the Baptist sect in —— will put itself under the law, and will see that such a thing is not done again. As the law has been already transgressed, we are compelled to take steps to prevent such a thing happening again, and forbid you to hold meetings of any kind where members, and especially children, of the Lutheran Church are present. If in the future we hear of your holding Sunday school, children's meetings, a treat, or anything else, by whatever name you may call it, of that kind, you will be fined 150 marks, or fourteen days' imprisonment for each transgression.

"V. Mildar.

"Royal District Court."

This is by no means a solitary instance. It is merely an example of the manner in which our Christian brethren are dealt with in Saxony. Under these cruel edicts many have suffered. From other parts also, such as Madeira and Peru, with the better known instances of the Stundists in Southern Russia and the Armenians in Turkey, appeals are constantly being dealt with by the Council of the Evangelical Alliance. For all such cases the Alliance is at once the intelligence department and the foreign office of the Christian Church, and by membership with it and by prayer every one who loves religious liberty may strengthen the hands of the Alliance in its difficult work.

HOME WORK.

Meetings have been held recently in connection with the deputational service of the Evangelical Alliance in places as distant from one another as Paris, Baden (near Zurich), Scotland, Wales, Devonshire, Yorkshire and Kent. In England there is great encouragement amongst true-hearted people in the work of promoting the closer union of Evangelical Christians. The bands of mutual love naturally draw them together, and the need for united action in defence of Gospel truth is strongly felt. But, on the other hand, the undecided and the worldly ever manifest their disinclination to recognize any but those who are one with them in Church organization. They show clearly that they love the things of man more than those of God.

This state of division is greatly to be deplored. It immensely weakens the work of the Evangelical Alliance in upholding Reformation principles, and leads to many mutual misunderstandings and harsh judgments.

In the midst of these difficulties, the Evangelical Alliance goes on quietly and perseveringly with its home work. It seeks on all sides to re-affirm and bear witness to the soul-saving doctrines of the New Testament, and to lead men to realize their importance. At its meetings the Gospel is brought closely home to the individual, and believers are urged to dedicate themselves to the Lord with a whole-hearted consecration.

The Revs. F. B. Meyer, R. Wardlaw Thompson, W. H. Griffith Thomas, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Col. Seton Churchill, and a number of others have consented to speak at the large annual Conference of the Alliance to be held at Clifton on Oct. 31 and Nov. 1 and 2.

"Perilous Times."—A timely tract under this title comes from the practised pen of Bishop Ryle. Founded on the solemn words of 2 Tim. iii. 1-5, this luminous little work reviews in forcible words the sins of the nation, and sounds a clarion call to Christians to pray and labour to stem the tide of evil, "continually looking for the great event which will wind up the affairs of all nations, the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. 1s. per dozen).

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

The Drum's Own Story.

AMONG the numerous curios in a museum in a Mission House which I love very much is a drum. Once it belonged to a cannibal chief in a far-away land which we now know as New Guinea. For some twenty years, or thereabouts, Christian missionaries have been preaching the Gospel of the love of God in that island, and great blessing has rested upon the work.

The drum in heathen countries is a very prominent musical instrument, and is ever in evidence at religious ceremonies and festivals and on great State occasions. Even in England, and in her Majesty's Guards' Band, the drum plays no inconsiderable part. A regimental band would by no means be complete without one. The Salvation Army cannot dispense with it. It is required to wake the echoes of the streets, and thus beat up recruits whenever the soldiers of the Army parade and sing their salvation hymns.

You will not be surprised then to know that amongst the other valuable things brought from afar and prized very highly by the directors of the Missionary Society I am thinking of is this New Guinea drum. Where it was made I could not exactly say. Who first played upon it I don't know. The precise date of its arrival in England history does not record. The value of it is not told. But there it is. A distinguished place has been given to it in the museum. You cannot help seeing it.

But oh! it has

SUCH A TALE TO TELL

that I think we cannot do better than allow it to speak for itself while we listen. Yes! If we give all our attention, the drum will relate a portion of its history:—

Well! I cannot remember, somehow, the beginning of my career, for I am old, very old. For some years before coming to England I lived with my master in a little hut perched in a tree-top, and when the wind blew how we did rock! There was a ladder to it which was pulled up at night, for my master always seemed to live in fear of his enemies. In the inside of the hut there was nothing but a mat to sleep on, a few cooking pots, and the skulls and bones of the people my master for he was a cannibal, and a very fierce one too.

HAD KILLED AND EATEN,

He was a fine-looking gentleman, with his face smeared with red ochre, his grand crop of hair, his nose ornament, his necklace and armlets of human bones. But he liked wearing the clothes he began life in the best, and I think the kind of dress the white man wears far prettier. He seemed very fond of me, but I was never uselessly played upon. If there was a death in the village I was brought out to comfort the bereaved friends. If there was sickness among the people I sent forth my music to frighten away the bad spirit who caused it. When my master came home from a fight with another tribe, if he had been on the winning side I was taken out in grand style to assist at the feast, for they would eat all their prisoners, and then have a dance. Even I, a poor old drum, used to try and muffle my voice, I felt so ashamed at the sight.

I shall never forget the day when my master and I saw a white man for the first time. It was a missionary—and he was dressed in white with black leather feet. Nobody could think who and what he was, but he was soon surrounded by the villagers.

Well, the white man settled down, and though at first the plan was to cook and eat him, and began to like him and to listen to what he said. He taught my people to make useful things, and little by little such wonderful changes were wrought that you have not time to hear of them all now.

WE CHANGED OUR MINDS

My master became the white man's great friend, and gradually it came to pass that he was never more happy than when assisting him in his work. I used to hear him sometimes tell his wife, as they sat in their neat little hut—no longer in the tree—about the Great Spirit who loves them like a father, and whose Son had died for even the poor cannibals.

Then one day I was given to the white man to take home with him. I think it was the very day that my master and went to another village. I neither saw nor heard of him again, but I think he never had another drum like myself. And as I am old, I have no doubt that he has left New Guinea for the new home above the tree tops he used to talk about so much, while I, his poor drum, am left alone in London. I never give forth any music now. I have no friends to whom I care to unburden myself further. I can only think of the changes the white-faced teachers have wrought in the land where I first saw the light.

BECAME A TEACHER

And it is always the case. Wherever the Gospel is published the wilderness and solitary place are glad, the desert blossoms as the rose, swords are beaten into plough-shares and spears into pruning-hooks, and heathenism fades away before the light of Christianity.

J. W.

To my Nephews and Nieces.

I HAVE been very much gratified by the Prize Competition papers this quarter. They have nearly all been done carefully and well, and I earnestly hope that what you learn by it, and the weekly Searchers will help you more and more to understand that best of all books, the Bible.

Especially I am encouraged to see that some who have been doing the questions from the beginning are still faithful to our Young People's page, and have gradually passed up through one division and another as their ages have increased, until now some of them are nineteen years old, and say it will be fairer to the younger ones if they do not go in for prizes any more. But I hope they will still do the weekly questions, and that they will also get interested in the other contents of the paper.

One of the parents wrote the other day to ask if I never by ceasing the Bible Searchers for a time. Well, some of you take one sometimes, whether I give it you or not! I think it is best to set the questions every week, anyway, because you all have three weeks' grace in every quarter, and if you are right the other nine weeks you are eligible for the competition just the same. I notice, too, that some of you drop a whole quarter sometimes, and take up the questions again the one following.

GIVE YOU A HOLIDAY

But what I want to impress upon you most of all is that a prize is feature of these weekly Searchers. It is the habit of studying the Bible and what you learn from it that will be of use to you long after your prizes are worn out or your certificates are lost. But I would not for anything have you feel it to become a burden to you. Therefore I would urge you still to do the ordinary Searchers as often as you can, if it is only six or seven times in the quarter, because, even if you could not go in for a prize that quarter, you could the next, and in any case you gain more than you lose by doing even a few.

NOT THE MOST IMPORTANT

By next Christmas we shall have had sixteen competitions since we began, and I propose to give some extra prizes to those who have won ten prizes or certificates out of the sixteen. This will be a nice way of celebrating the competition of our fourth year. Don't you think so?

Fourteenth Prize Competition.

FIRST PRIZES.

Division I.—Jessie Christine Palmer.

Division II.—Louis W. Berthé, Evelyn Everard Hewer, Pringle Wilson, Queenie Upton, Dorothy Gertrude Hewer.

Division III.—Nellie Dowsett, Ada Elizabeth Palmer.

Division IV.—Kathleen Eva Violet Ashworth, Gwendoline Kathleen Shaw, Howard Lowndes Moir.

SECOND PRIZES.

Division I.—Minnie Middleton Shepherd, C. Alice Reid, Edith Julia Wheeler, Stanley Drew.

Division II. — Florence Hoyte, Willie Palmer, Ida C. Cole, Kathleen Agnes Pasley.

Division III.—Marjorie Row Hogge, Walter Cecil Perryman, Isabel Winifred Phipps, Blanche Lindup.

Division IV.—Elsie McMullin, Harriet Jane Lynham, Ashley Hugh Bowker, Helen M. Hunter.

FIRST CERTIFICATES.

Division I.—Leonard Norman Wall, Charles Williams, Gladys M. Young, Ralph Aldwinckle, Lizzie Johnstone, Edward George Gidleigh Wheeler, Edith Harvey, Sarah Wood, Willie Hooper, Beryl Calvert, Cicely Musgrave Craven.

Division II.—Frank Thompson, Agnes Emily Fry, Duncan D. Campbell, Dorothy Garfit, Vera Constance Dickinson, David Gardiner, Polognia Daws, Ruth Hinder, Nora Read, Mabelle Mountstephen, Dorothy Cooper, Margaret Agnes Morris, Walter Picknell, Rosa Theodora Hill.

Division III.—Alexander Kay, Amy Frances Cheere Stileman, Daisy Olivia Phillips, Maude Naylor Oakes, Theodora Muir, Millicent Musgrave Craven, Margaret Elizabeth Kinvig, Maggie Landles Carter, Lucy Soltau.

Division IV.—Norman Q. Johns, Ruth Pledger, Ethel Hutchings, Ethel Louisa Greenacre, Winnie H. Palmer, Winifred M. Page, Muriel Coldicott Sherwin.

SECOND CERTIFICATES.

Division I.—Ami Inglis, Colin Graham Brown, Willie Kay, Violet Salvesen, Muriel Evelyn Fry, Herbert Martyn Stuart, Charles Noel Wright, Helen Stuart Angus Forbes, Douglas H. Shepherd, Kathleen Muriel Fausset, Ella Berryman.

Division II.—Dorothy Ellen Harris, Frederick Henry Webb, Mabel Beatrice Candlin, Dorothy Trevor Daintree, Leonard S. Browne, Flora Simmons, Mary Beck, Kathleen Alice Shepherd, William Bain Dilly, Henry James Cheney, Isabel Inglis, Christabel Philippa Kerr, Connie Wood, Susette Beck, Gladys Calvert, Mary Eliza Greenacre, Sidney Elizabeth Law, Ivy Mabel Sherwin, Mary Ada Stopford Law.

Division III.—Mervyn P. A. Shaw, Emily Bridgewater, Kathleen Mona Gough, Muriel Edwards, Mabel Birney, Lewis Richard McGregor, Bella Mack, Frances Anna Figgis, Peter Gibb Nicholson, Hyacinth Blanche FitzSimons, Conyers Baker, Edith Frances Corrie, Mary Ellen Plumb, Maud Nottage, Elsie Muriel Slark.

Division IV.—Olive Taylor, Christina Marshall, Alfred Henry Greenacre, Lilian Grace Boxer, Kenneth Julian Vining, Kate Gertrude Johns, Walter Carter.

HONOURABLE MENTION.

Division I.—Susie Sutton, Donald Stanier, Daisy Rosalind Clarke Avory Blackie, Ella Hake, Robert Alexander Weddell, Cecile Helen Wright, Nellie Crawford, Edith Lockhart, Alice Edith Crang, Dorothy McMullin, George F. Graham Brown, Helen Muriel Webb Kathleen Elise Pincott, Gwendoline L. Moir.

Division II.—Betty Stocks, Lilian Blackie, Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Mary Lita Symon, Winifred B. Harvey, Edith M. Gray, John Ernest Pearce, Louise Filhol, Frank Tomkins, Phyllis Boyd, James Barker, Marian Gibson Freegard, David Colville, Dorothy Margaret Dyke, Elsie G. Hatcher, Abraham Mack, Eric Dennis Penrhyn Shaw, Gladys Emilie Shaw, T. M. Stanier, Theodore Oscar Cross, Jessie Dun Carter, Greta Watson, Dorothy Watson.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 185).

1. What is the special promise made by Jesus to the peacemakers? (Matthew.)

2. Who was a peacemaker between Paul and the Apostles? (Acts viii.-x.)

3. Whose servants acted as peacemakers in 2 Kings? (iv.-vi.)

4. Find the title "Prince of Peace" as applied to Jesus Christ (Isaiah vii.-x.)

5. Who is the giver of peace? (John x.-xv.)

6. Find a verse in Ephesians which tells us that Jesus is our peace.

7. To whom is the promise of "perfect peace" made? (Isaiah xxiv.-xxvi.)

8. Give a verse which tells us to seek peace (Psalm xxx.-xxxv.)

9. What were the first words spoken by Jesus after the Resurrection to his disciples? (John xviii.-xxi.)

10. Who have no peace? (Isaiah xlvii.-xlix.)

(Children under ten do any three; under thirteen any six.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 184).

1. (a) Judah—Jacob—Benjamin. (b) To Egypt. (c) "A little balm and a little honey, spices and myrrh, nuts and almonds.

2. (a) Sixty-six. (b) Between Jacob and Joseph at Goshen. (c) 130 years.

3. (a) To the Nile. To save him from death. (b) Amram and Jochabed. (c) Hebrews xi. 23.

4. (a)) Moses. Drawn out of the water. (b) Acts vii. 21.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

B—W. E. Berwick, May Bligh*, Violet Braun*, Ella Berryman.

C—G. Clark, Sophia Cohen, Anna Chanyen, Dorothy Cooper, Kitty Cope, K. Carey-Brenton*, Grace Charik*, John Colville*.

D—Stanley Drew*, Hilda and Elizabeth Drayson, Ivy, Kitty and Violet Donaldson-Selby, Violet and Mal Davidson, Violet Dodsworth.

F—Temperance Fosket*, Vincent and Mabel Fleet, Richard and Lawrence Farmer, Beatrice Fallows.*

G—Constance Gabbett,* Tom Garfit, David Gardiner, Clarice* and Bertie Gale, Alice Goad.

H—Muriel Hare, Eric Hill,* Evelyn* and Dorothy* Hewer, Elizabeth Hooper, Hetty Hill.*

J—Betty Jacobs.

K—Stanley, Eva, and Max Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Lily Kinvig*.

L—Mary Levine*, Henry, Sidney, May, and Edward Law.

M—Winifred Marshall, Marie Meek, Frances Munce, Dorothy Morgan*, Mabel Morris, Mildred Morgan, Dorothy* and Elsie* McMullin, Hedley Meader*.

N—Mary Neligan.

P—Ethel* and Kathleen* Pasley, Hilda Pearce, Kathleen Pincott, Daisy Phillips, Hattie*, Mildred*, and Evelyn Peters, Gladys* and Ethel* Palmer, Mary Plumb*, Leonard and Kate Picknell.

R—Alice Reid, Kate Rosenbloom, Nora Read, Winnifred Roberts.

S—Betty Stocks, Douglas Shepherd, Solomon Stockfish, Jessie Snowball*, Fanny Stileman, Herbert Stuart*, F. and Amy* Stileman, Mary Sowden, Joseph Stephens, Ronald Studd, Douglas Stevens.

T—Frank Tomkins.

W—Edward and Edith Wheeler, Lucy Willis, Sydney Wisdom, Madge Wilson, Cecile and Noel Wright, Annie* and Sarah* Wood, Douglas Wilkinson*, Florence Wild, Thomas* and Robert Weddell.

No. 183.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Irene Ashdown*, Ambrose Adams, George and Percy Allen, Willie Aston, Violet Ashworth.*

B—Ashley Bowker*, Susette Beck, Florence Blackman, Mabel Bailey, Mary Bryant, Frank Bentall,* Allen, Massy and Conyers Baker, James and Edith Barker, Eva Browne, Catherine Barber,* Teresa and Frank Blackie, Maggie Banks, Hannah Bridgman, Louis Berthe, Maude, Dorothy, Sylvia and Evelyn Barrett, Charlie Banks, Lindsay, Corbet, and Leonard Browne, Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Buhl, Dorothy Berry, Lilian Butler.

C—Edith* and Dora* Corrie, Gladys Calvert, Ethel Craigie, Walter*, Jessie*, and Maggie* Carter, George Crawford, Dorothy, Daisy, M. Joan and Daisy R. Clarke, Rodia Constantinides, Cecily Craven, Duncan Campbell*, Mary* and Willie* Charles, Alice Crang, Arthur* and Winnie* Cox, Mary Coward, S. Cumbers, Janie and Nellie Crawford, Charles* and Isabel* Candlin, Phyllis and Olive Cotterill, Dorothy Cooper.

D—Grace* and Esther Dickson, Ernest Davies, Marjory and Dorothy Dyke, Catherine, Elsie and Agnes* Darke, Vera Dickinson, Marie Denizot, Gordon Duncan, Harold Davis, Hilda Drayson, Constance Devenish-Meares, William Dilly, Blossom Davis*.

E—Miriam Ecroyd, Minnie Edwards*, L. N. Ewin.

F—Sarah Finkelstein, F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Francis Field, May and Blanch Freeman, Hyacinthe FitzSimons, Louise Filhol, Maggie, Kate and Mabel Fletcher, Helen Forbes*, Jeanne Faucon, Agnes*, Maggie and Lewis Fullarton.

G—Jack, Edith*, Margaret*, Dorothy and Stuart Gray, Alice Goad, Edith Grieves, George and Colin Graham Brown, Dorothy Grove, Thomas Groombridge, Alfred and Frank Gibbs, Mary*, Alfred*, and Daisy Greenacre, Gracie Grout, George*, Charles, Mary* and Effie Graham, David Gardiner*, Mary Glass.

H—Ella Hake, Lila Hughes, Frank Hunton*, E. Henderson, Mary Hainer, Nellie Hatcher*, Nellie Hatchett, H. Hunton, Betsy, Holik, Elsie Hanson, Ethel Hutchings*, Bessie Hope, Edith Holmes, Stanley and Florence Hoyte, Georgette Hoffmann, Marjorie Hogge.

I—Ami and Isabel Inglis, Daisy Iredell.

J—Sinclair Jackson, Lizzie Johnstone, Kate Johns*, Emily Jeynes.

K—Lily Kinvig, Jeanie Kyle, Dorothy* and Philippa* Kerr, Flossie Key, Agnes*, Isa* and Alex.* Kay.

L—Mildred and Stanley Long, Edwin, Henry, May and Sidney Law, Guinefred Leigh, Hannah Lovell, Millie Laidlaw.

M—Charlotte Millar*, K. Macartney, Dora Muir, Emilie Mathias, John MacMurray, Lewis McGregor, George*, Francis, and Eileen McClure, Gordon Main, W. C. Mallinson*, Mildred Morgan, Margaret Macphee, Emily Maddox, Charlie and Frank Medcalf, Maggie Munro, Hylda Medill, Evelyn and Gwendoline Moir, Abraham and Bella Mack, Daniel. Margaret, and Dorothy Morris, Bruce and Harry Malaher, Annie Moule. Daisy*, Annie* and Nellie* Mackenzie, Jack Maconchy, Christina Marshall.

N—Peter, John, and Cissie Nicholson.

O—Eva Oakes, Katy Oliver.

P—Kathleen* and Ethel* Pasley, Laura Percy, Louie Penny, Edith Purkiss, Evelyn Pechey,* Ada, Eddie. Winnie and Jessie Palmer, Winnie Page,* Ruth Patient, Rhoda Partridge, Willie Petter, Gordon Pibel, Mildred, Hattie and Evelyn Peters, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, M. Perry.*

R—Mary Rosenbloom, Winifred Roberts, Herbert Rainey, Mabel Reed, Gwennie Ravenhill, Nora Read, Isabel, Jessie and Elmina Roe.

S—Helen Stalker, Eric, Gladys, Undine, Evelyn* Shaw, D. D. and T. M. Stanier, Dora and Flora Simmons, Binford Selwood, Nannie Sturrock,* Bessie Scantlebury, John Smith, Bessie, Edith*, and Minnie* Shepherd, Kathleen Slark*, Bessie Symes*, Kenneth and Lucy Soltau, Dollie Salt*, Emma and Frank Sutton, Florence Smith.

T—Rebecca Tuskinsky, Louie Tibbits*, Alice Truelove, Lucy and Albert Trotter, Marjorie Tracey.

V—Kenneth Vining.

W—Georgina, Sarah, Rachel, Pringle, and Madge F. Wilson, Winnie and Horace* Williamson, Queenie and Ernest Wakeford Ruby and Zoe Wilkins, Edward, Edith, and Mabel Wheeler, Ronald Watson, Leonard Wall, Lissa, Violet, and Louisa Walker, Charles Wingrave, Mary Ware, X—Gladys* and Maurice Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

Nos. 176, 177—W. B. Henderson (Jamaica). No. 177—Queenie* and Llewellyn Dale (India), Minnie and Cuckoo Lister (S. Africa). No. 178—Dora Wallace, Lottie, Rotha and Ivan St. George (Canada), Charlotte Cane (S. Africa), Queenie Dale. No. 180—Eliza and Jean Scott (Canada). No. 170—Christine and Mary Pearson (Tasmania).

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers received this week.

THE HEBREW GIRLS.—I am very glad to welcome you all among the "Searchers," and hope the study will be of great use to you.

EMMA SUTTON.—Thank you for your letter. I was very sorry to hear about Susie, and trust that with complete rest she may soon regain her sight.

FRANK MEDCALF.—I am glad to hear you have got your friend, George Allen, to become a "Searcher." I send him a hearty welcome.

FRANCIS FIELD.—You were very fortunate in having such a splendid holiday. I hope you will not forget all you have seen and learned.

GLADYS PHIPPS.—I am so sorry to hear you have not been very well, and hope you will soon be quite well again. I will look out for you again in September.

LOTTIE K. HAMILTON.—I am glad to welcome you among the "Searchers."

Uncle Tom's Cot—G.H.W.	0	5	0
Ragged School Union Holiday Fund (see donation list), F.S.	0	2	0

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hankinson, Hayes Common, July 24; Mr. S. Spiers, Penge, July 25; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Rockwell Green, near Wellington, Som., to July 31; Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Eridge, near Tunbridge Wells; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Storrington, Sussex, to July 31; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Stradbroke, Suffolk; Mr. F. P. Rowe, with caravan, Greenstead Green, Essex; Mr. H. Lewis Ingram, with caravan, Cranfield, Bedford.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birchington Bay (July). Rev. A. E. Mansell, Boscombe. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Bournemouth. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington. Mr. H. B. C. English, Broadstairs. Mr. J. R. Naylor, Colwyn Bay. Rev. J. F. Sheldon, M.A., and Mr. A. C. Furse, Cromer. Mr. S. J. Hewlett and Mr. W. Stunt, Deal. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, B.A., Eastbourne. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting and Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Felixstowe. Mr. H. Hankinson, Filey. Mr. G. O. Taylor, Gorleston. Mr. H. W. Figgis, Howth, Ireland. Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Ilfracombe. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Littlehampton. Mr. P. R. Hurditch, Llandudno. Mr. Russell J. Hill, Llanfairfechan. Rev. E. E. Nickisson, Margate. Mr. A. C. Jewell, Penmaenmawr. Mr. H. Steward and Rev. J. R. Pawley-Smith, Port Erin, Isle of Man. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, Portrush, Ireland (July). Mr. C. H. Collier, Ramsey, Isle of Man. Mr. W. B. Wakefield, Mr. E. J. Spafford, J.P., and Mr. W. H. Jope, Rhyl. Mr. H. T. Hodgkin, B.A., St. Leonards. Rev. T. S. Stoney, B.A., and Mr. G. Foster-Carter, Sandown. Mr. J. Waters Coldicott, Southend. Rev. S. Mortimer Warner, Southsea. Mr. C. J. Small, Sutton-on-Sea. Dr. McAfee and Edinburgh Medical Students, West Kirby and Hoylake. Rev. G. C. Williamson, Westward Ho. Mr. Ernest Thompson, Weymouth. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Whitby. Mr. E. Collier, Whitley. Rev. C. E. Haynes, M.A., Worthing.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending July 29.

Sun., July 23	Acts xxviii. 1-16	Thurs., July 27	Ec. v.	1-12
Mon., „ 24	„ xxviii. 17-31	Fri., „ 28	„ viii.	1-13
Tues., „ 25	Ec. i. 1-18	Sat., „ 29	„ ix.	10-18
Wed., „ 26	„ ii. 1-13

Inebriates.—The Methodist Connexional Temperance Committee propose the establishment of an Inebriate Home for men; the idea is to work under the old law so as to take in non-criminal cases.

Bible Flower Mission.—The demand for cut flowers in connection with the distribution of small bouquets, accompanied by texts, is great, but the supplies are intermittent. Mrs. Turton, hon. sec., of 110, Cannon Street, E.C., will gratefully receive any quantities which friends can kindly forward. "The chief object of the Mission is the circulation of God's word, which endureth for ever, while the flower fadeth."

Thoughts on Abiding in Christ.—Were the church of Christ what it should be,—were older believers to younger converts what they should be, witnesses to God's faithfulness, like Caleb and Joshua, encouraging their brethren to go up and possess the land with their, "We are well able to overcome; if the Lord delight in us, then HE WILL BRING US into this land,"—where the atmosphere which the young believer breathes as he enters the fellowship of the saints that of a healthy, trustful, joyful consecration—abiding in Christ would come as the natural outgrowth of being in Him. But in the sickly state in which such a great part of the body is, souls that are pressing after this blessing are sorely hindered by the depressing influence of the thought and the life around them.

Dr. Andrew Murray.

(320)

International S.S. Lessons.

July 30, 1899.

DANIEL, vi. 10-23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Ps. cxxi. 5.

INTRODUCTORY.

DARIUS the Mede, having received the kingdom of Babylon, appointed 120 satraps over it, these being responsible to three chief Ministers of State. Daniel was chief of all, and occupied the position of Prime Minister. The other officers were jealous of him, and determined to get rid of him. Daniel was a foreigner, an exile, and his integrity would frustrate many of the misdeeds and dishonest practices of the others. (Relate the story of their plans.)

DANIEL,

now between eighty and ninety years of age. Trace his past character, trials, and faithfulness. Compare his conduct as a youth and as an old man. Even his enemies could find no fault in him. He was prayerful, faithful, courageous, and had a clear conscience; he set a high and holy example to all his fellow exiles. God revealed much to him by visions as to the restoration of his people and the future (ch. ix.). Also clearly concerning the Messiah.

DARIUS.

The Persians looked upon their king as the representative of God; they considered him as indwelt by God and gave him divine honours. The proposal that he alone should be worshipped for a given time was highly flattering to his vanity. He is spoken of in Ezra iv. 5, Neh. xii. 22.

EXPLANATORY.

Verse 10. The object of the plot was to outwit the king and to get rid of Daniel. Daniel knew all about it, and went on calmly and trustingly as usual. He did not begin to pray at his window then—that would have been foolhardiness; but to have left off doing so and to have prayed in secret would have been a public confession that he was afraid to trust God. (Neh. vi. 11.) It would have brought dishonour on his religion. Note, Where, when and how Daniel prayed. Compare with our prayers. Why did he look toward Jerusalem? (1 Kings viii. 35, 38, 44.) Kneeling, the best attitude for prayer. How often did David pray? (Ps. lv. 17.) True prayer includes petition and thanksgiving.

Verses 11-15. As the king was considered God, his law was infallible. To break the law was to die; there was no atonement. The law of our God is infallible, to break his law is sin, "the wages of sin is death;" but, thanks be unto God, He has provided an atonement, whereby his law is honoured and the sinner saved.

Verses 16-17. Eastern princes kept lions in large pits, encircled by a wall, so that people could look down at them. Such can now be seen in Morocco, also the bear-pits at Berne. The king had learned about Daniel's God from Daniel's daily life. A bas-relief has been discovered near the reputed tomb of Daniel, representing two lions standing over a prostrate man (Lam. iii. 53).

Verse 18. Fasting implies grief so great that we cannot take food; thus it is spoken of in regard of sorrow for sin.

Verse 20. Daniel's character. Emphasize "continually."

Verses 21, 22. "MY GOD"; here lies the secret. "Angels" (Heb. i. 14, Ps. xci. 4).

Verse 23. God's reason: "Because He believed" (Heb. ii. 33, 34). True faith does what is right at all costs, leaving the result with God (Matt. xvii. 20). Connect the king's question, "Is thy God able?" with Daniel's answer, "He is able and has done it;" and then the reason, "God is able because I believe."

QUESTIONS TO PRESS HOME.

1. How will my religion compare with Daniel's?
2. Do I serve God continually, or only now and then?
3. God's laws are unalterable; I have broken them. How can I escape the punishment due?
4. How much do I believe God can do for me?
5. What are some of the lions ready to destroy me? (1 Pet. v. 8.)
6. How can their power be destroyed?
7. Whose tomb was sealed to prevent his escape? (Matt. xxii. 66.)

EXAMPLES

of others who did right, not fearing consequences. Abraham, Moses, Gideon, Elijah, Joseph, Peter, John the Baptist.

PROMISES OF DELIVARANCE

(2 Chron. xx. 15, 17; Ps. xci. 14-16; Isa. xl. 29-31, xli. 13, 14; Rom. viii. 32; Rev. iii. 10).

Protestant Outlook.

THE arrangements for the great meeting of the Church Association at Cardiff on the 26th inst. are now complete. The demonstration is likely to have a far-reaching effect in Wales. Ritualistic practices in Cardiff churches are being canvassed in the local journals. It is asserted that only four out of twenty-three churches are free from Ritualism. The South Wales Daily News states that there are numerous cases where members of Church congregations have discontinued attendance, in consequence of the services going beyond the line which they deem right, and that many of these people will be found attending Nonconformist places of worship.

Negotiations are in progress for the establishment of a working union between the Church Association, the Imperial Protestant Federation, and the Protestant Alliance, for the purpose of carrying on a vigorous electioneering campaign throughout the United Kingdom. The promoters of the movement, including not a few Members of Parliament and prominent Free Church ministers, are anxious to secure the sending to the House of Commons at the next election of at least 150 members pledged to do everything in their power to advance the Protestant interest, and to check the onward march of Romanism and Ritualism. Such a combination would be very formidable, and would have to be reckoned with at the next General Election.

The "Reservation of the Sacrament" is one of the distinctively Romish practices of the Ritualists. While Evangelical Churchmen have been opposing reservation, and pointing out its idolatrous significance, Romanisers have been working to secure episcopal sanction for the practice. Hence it is reported that the Bishop of Durham has given permission to Rev. W. H. G. Holmes, vicar of St. Peter's, Jarrow, to reserve a portion of the Blessed Sacrament during the celebration of Holy Communion in church, and for one of the clergy, after those present have communicated, to convey the Reserved Sacrament to those sick in the parish who desire to receive but are not able to be present. In future the sick will be as far as possible communicated from the church at the eight a.m. celebration on Sundays.

The Romanising clergy leave us in no doubt that it is their purpose to maintain as ordinary and general the practice which Dr. Westcott has, in the case above reported, approved as special and exceptional.

This very subject of "Reservation" is now under "hearing" by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York at Lambeth. The first sitting of their Graces was held on Monday last; and in opening the case for the appealing clergy counsel adduced the old arguments for the practice. So far the archbishops have not given decision on the matters into which they previously inquired—the use of lights and incense.

Personalia.

Mr. J. J. SCROGGIE has changed his address. Communications respecting proposed missions, &c., should now be sent to the Laurels, Longbridge Road, Barking.

Rev. J. HUNT COOKE has retired from the editorship of the Freeman (now Baptist Times), after nineteen years' service.

Mr. WILLIAM HILL, Scottish evangelist, will be conducting services in Madras, India, during August September, and October, and during that period his address will be M. E. Parsonage, Vepery, Madras. In November he probably proceeds to Burma.

Homes for the Fatherless.—The work carried on by Mr. Henry Toye at the Homes in Lewisham Road is described in the annual report, from which it appears that during the year twenty-three children have been received, and seven have been sent into service, each with a box of clothes. One of the special objects of the work is to train the children for domestic service, and careful instruction is accordingly given in all household duties. At the same time the highest importance is attached to spiritual needs, and the work is conducted on a religious basis. Mr. Toye's address is 64, Lewisham Road, S.E.

Home Missions.

Bible Training Institute, Glasgow.

THE public closing meeting of the eighth session of the Institute was held in the Christian Institute on Thursday evening, June 29. There was a large and sympathetic audience. Mr. John Galloway, president of the Chamber of Commerce, presided. Excellent and appropriate addresses were delivered by the Chairman, Rev. Professor Kennedy, D.D., Edinburgh University, and Rev. D. M. Macintyre, Finnieston Free Church.

Interesting features of the evening's proceedings were the short addresses by several of the students, the singing of the students' choirs, and the presentation of diplomas to the students who had completed their course.

The following is a synopsis of the report presented by Mr. Anderson, the superintendent.

I. The New Buildings.—After completing the first full session in the new buildings, we are glad to be able to report that in every respect they are most suitable, and afford every convenience and facility for the various departments of the work.

II. The Course of Study.—The syllabus of study has followed closely the lines of previous sessions. Provision is made that each student who completes the full curriculum—viz., two sessions of ten months each—shall have received a careful and systematic course of instruction on the structure of the Bible, its inspiration and Divine authority, and the general contents of the sixty-six books of which it is composed; a solid grounding in the great doctrines of Scripture; and a serviceable equipment in Christian evidences and other collateral studies. A comprehensive course of tuition is also given in homiletics, the preparation and delivery of addresses, methods of conducting meetings, and on dealing with inquirers. The progress of the students is tested by monthly examinations. In the musical department, forty students gained elementary certificates from the Tonic Sol-fa College, ten gained intermediate certificates, and four obtained certificates for staff notation, first grade.

III. The Practical Department.—This consists of meetings and special missions conducted by the students in churches and halls in the city and neighbourhood, in lodging-houses and night-asylum. Bible classes are also conducted every Sunday afternoon in Duke Street and Barlinnie prisons, several of the police courts are regularly visited, and house-to-house visitation is carried on amongst the Jews and other classes in the city. Much blessing has attended this work, and through it the students acquire a valuable experience and training for future service. During the past session, 1,576 meetings have been held, with an aggregate attendance of 166,427, and an equal number of open-air meetings have been held. During this period, 4,226 individuals have been dealt with about personal salvation.

In the Ladies' Department arrangements are being made to relieve the students from some of the more technical subjects of study, and more time and attention will be given to the practical training in medical mission and dispensary work, tuition in household work, including cooking, laundry work, &c., and a useful course in simple dressmaking.

Household rules may also be included under this department, for the residential arrangements are not merely to provide a convenient and comfortable boarding-house, but mainly to supply a necessary and important training. Students have to make their beds, clean their own rooms, brush their boots, assist at table, &c. These varied duties, together with the regularity of all the arrangements, tend to promote habits of tidiness, punctuality and promptitude, and a consideration for others, that are invaluable on the mission field.

IV. Spirituality.—We desire to place this in the forefront of our work. We recognise that knowledge, acquirements, and experience will be comparatively worthless if they are not accompanied by spiritual power and fervour. It is therefore our constant aim and prayer that our students should not go forth to do official or professional service as missionaries, but that they may go forth with the touch of God upon their spirits to preach Christ because the constraints of his love are throbbing in their own hearts, and to declare a salvation that has been, and is, the power of God in their own lives.

V. Personnel.—During the session we enrolled 86 resident students (68 males, 18 females), 16 outside students, and 275 members of evening classes. Several of these retired during the session for various causes, and one of our male students, John Jones, died suddenly at Stevenston during the Easter recess. After the students who leave us this session have proceeded to their destination, we shall have representatives in many widely-scattered spheres of service. They are located as follows:—China 29, India 9, Africa 16, New Hebrides 1, Colonies 6, at home as evangelists and missionaries 59, while 30 have returned to business. A goodly number who attended the classes as outside students have also gone out to the Foreign Mission field.

Y.M.C.A. Work in Bristol.

SIGNS of progress have marked the past week, in connection with the work of the Y.M.C.A. at Totterdown. Thursday was the occasion, long looked forward to, when the initial step was taken in enlarged accommodation for an organization which has been much blessed of God in caring for the spiritual, mutual, and physical welfare of the youth of a populous city. The memorial stones of a new building were laid in the presence of a large company of friends, including the Lord Mayor of the city and the Lady Mayoress, besides many other distinguished persons.

The new building will comprise, on the ground floor, a spacious lounge with handsome entrance at the corner of Wells Road and Bushy Park. Opening out of this will be the secretary's office, library, and a refreshment room. Broad and easy staircases will lead downwards to a large room in the basement for youths, and upwards to the other parts of the institute. From the lounge there will be also communication with the assembly hall. This hall, which is to have a long frontage to Bushy Park, will accommodate 600 persons. The ground floor is also to comprise a block of premises, which will be opened as a branch bank. Along the whole front of the first floor, which is to be lighted by nine large windows, there will be a fine suite of rooms, connected with each other, and measuring together 70ft. by 17ft. These will be available for reading, lectures, small meetings, classes, &c. On this floor are the lavatory and bathrooms. On the second floor is to be a well-appointed residence. The whole building will be warmed with hot water, and attention has been specially paid to ventilation.

Speakers, officers of the Association, and a few friends, were entertained to luncheon by Mr. Howell Davies (president of the Institution) in Oxford Street Schoolroom. After several addresses, the company went direct to the new site, where the stones were duly laid by Mr. J. Storrs Fry, Dr. McQuade, Col. Hill, Lady Smyth, the Lord Mayor, and the president of the Institute. The cost of the whole scheme will be £6,200, of which £2,650 remains to be raised. Sir George Williams has contributed £105.

Lord Kinnaird presided over the closing meeting in the evening. He said that Y.M.C.A.'s exist as spiritual organizations, and he believed sensible people will support them so long as they help young men. The institutions were undenominational in character and broad as the Gospel. He favoured athletics, healthy recreations, and foreign travel; but it was best to have these things conducted by Christian people, who discourage Sunday desecration, drinking, and other forms of evil. The Y.M.C.A.'s were helping the churches, and were under the guidance of those who are united on the broad lines of Christian policy in all that touches our social and national life.

Helping Young Women.

By the Hon. Mrs. FRASER.

I HAVE been asked, as chairwoman of the Standing Committee of the World's Y.W.C.A. for the European Continent, to bring before you the object and needs of this department. Though quiet and unobtrusive in character, it is doing a very real and much-needed work among foreign girls in England and English girls on the Continent, and in starting and fostering branches of the Y.W.C.A. in those countries in Europe which have not a National Committee of their own.

The need for such a work for foreigners coming to England lonely, often utterly ignorant of the terrible dangers which beset a friendless girl, is very apparent. Numbers of instances have come under our notice of such accepting situations of which they knew nothing, who, but for the timely help and intervention of our secretaries, must have been led to ruin. They have in many cases, through the loving practical sympathy shown them at our office, been led to know the Friend of the friendless, and then in their turn have become winners of souls.

One instance I should like to mention. A lonely French girl came in one morning, sad and poor. On being told of the unchanging Friend and Saviour, she burst into tears and said it was just what she needed. She accepted Christ as her Saviour, and after proving satisfactorily her changed life was trained in a missionary home, and is now preaching the Gospel of free salvation in a Roman Catholic part of France. Her work has been greatly owned of God.

Our Employment Agency has been of the utmost value in attracting girls to the place, and so not only enabling us to find them respectable and suitable situations, but giving us the opportunity of pointing them to Christ. We should be very glad if your readers would kindly make use of this Registry when looking for governesses and servants. About 5,985 visits were paid to the office during 1898 by mistresses and servants, and about 220 situations found for the girls.

As regards the second branch of this work, we have most cheering accounts from Spain and Gibraltar, where, amid the dense darkness and superstition of Romanism, our Y.W.C.A. members are being trained for Christ. Special appeals have come to us lately from Rome and Marseilles, where the need is very great. From the fact that comparatively few rich or well-to-do people on the Continent are interested in this work, we have to look almost entirely to England for support. The members themselves are so poor that they can contribute very little.

We should be most grateful if those who are full of interest for foreign missionary work would see the responsibility of caring for the stranger at our gates, and of helping the great cause of missionary effort by encouraging the struggling little Y.W.C.A. branches in the different countries in Europe. Firstly, by prayer and sympathy for the work both at home and abroad; secondly, by visiting the workers when travelling on the continent; and, thirdly, by contribution.

I regret to say we are £64 in debt, which we are most anxious to clear off at once, as well as to increase our annual income, which is under £300, and be able to press on through the open doors. May God incline the hearts of us all to act with regard to this part of his work, for those whose privileges have been so small compared to ours, in such a way that we may be glad, and "not be ashamed before Him at his coming."

Lavender Bag Mission.—Will friends kindly help us again this year with lavender? We use it to fill little muslin bags to send to sick soldiers and others in hospitals. A text card is tied on to each bag, and God has often used these little messengers in his service. Army Scripture readers and missionaries tell us they were the means of cheer and blessing to many suffering ones. Boxes of lavender, text cards, &c., addressed to Miss Alice Puckle, The Hollands, Langton, Tunbridge Wells, will be gratefully received and acknowledged.

The Evangelistic Mission.

THE Midsummer of 1899 finds us still joyously busy in the blessed work of evangelization, in the way of tent meetings and open-air preaching in many places.

Thirty-two years ago we pitched a tent at Kilburn; this we believe was the first endeavour in the metropolis to gather the people under canvas roofs. Since then we have purchased and sent forth a considerable number of marquees into populous cities, seaside resorts, and rural districts, in which hundreds of thousands have heard the Gospel simply, clearly, and earnestly preached by the evangelists in charge, aided by numerous local ministers and voluntary Christian workers of all denominations. There are not a few now serving Him in the Gospel of his Son, both at home and abroad, who date the commencement of their spiritual life from the time when they attended these services.

This, happily, has again proved to be the case already this summer, though we regret we have only been able, thus far, to send out five tents. In four of these, Gospel meetings are held nightly (Saturday excepted) and two or three times on Sundays. The largest of them, capable of seating 800 to 1,000 persons, is, for several reasons, as large as we deem it well to use for ordinary services in a given place; whilst for villages those accommodating about 200 or 300 are the most suitable.

Here is a pleasing extract from one of the last letters to hand—only a sample of many recently received:—

We have reason to thank God that there is the appearance of real interest in the Tent Services and the Gospel preached therein . . . Conspicuous among the people we found a dozen or more soldiers in various uniforms . . . An after-meeting found us earnestly pleading with a large number for their decision for Christ. In some instances I feel sure the Word was accepted.

From several places appeals have come for tents and labourers.

THE GOSPEL FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE.

The evangelists in charge occupy the days in house-to-house visitation after the apostolic example (Acts xx. 20), preaching in the tent at night; and very touching are the testimonies borne at the close of these respective missions by the gratitude of the people who have been spiritually benefited. It is an earnest cause for prayer and praise, too, that the brethren engaged in conducting these tent meetings are thus being trained for permanent ministry of the Word as home and foreign missionaries. Some of those, at present engaged therein, will, God willing, next year be occupying stations in distant parts of the mission field of the world.

In this connection, we may add that the writer's fourth daughter, Ruth, for some time our right hand in this Mission (and for whom we bespeak the prayerful interest of the readers of this paper), is shortly to leave, in connection with the C.M.S., for Uganda, Central Africa. What a joy, a privilege, a responsibility, thus to give to our all-worthy Lord ourselves—our all—to hasten his coming, by gathering in some of the remaining members of his own elect from out of this dark world of sin, to shine in his everlasting Kingdom and Glory.

Although the indoor services during the hot summer months in our several halls are necessarily not so well attended as in the winter, yet there is still great cause for encouragement and praise to God, for recent both amongst adults and children everywhere.

INGATHERING OF SOULS,

Thus, then, are many thousands of our working classes brought under the sound of the glorious Gospel—"without money and without price," from week to week and from night to night, "with signs following;" not to speak of the very many open-air services held in all sorts of places, perhaps the most important of these being the seaside meetings, which in some cases are attended by thousands of hearers, with gratifying results.

Now, too, we are close upon the dates fixed for the annual summer treats for the several hundreds of women connected with our mothers' meetings, and thousands of children of our Sunday schools in their several branches, to which each and all look forward with intense pleasure for months before.

But for the Lord's gracious interpositions and providential supplies, we should sometimes be overwhelmed as to the question of funds. £1,000 will be required to clear arrears on current expenses and to carry us over till the winter months. Our congregations are nearly all poor, and therefore unable to help much, though three of the branches of the Mission are now self-supporting.

We commend these matters to all who have helped us in the past, and those who have not done so are earnestly invited to have a part in this God-honouring and soul-saving work.

C. Russell Hurditch.

164, Alexandra Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Billingsgate Christian Mission.

IN the early hours of the morning, in summer and winter alike, while the greater part of the citizens of the vast metropolis are still wrapped in slumber, Billingsgate Fish Market is the centre of feverish activity.

As the swift steam-trawlers speed in from the sea, and the work of unloading commences, troops of stalwart porters, assisted by scores of poor fellows who have come in search of temporary work, trot in regular rank, with boxes of fresh fish, along the pier gangways up to the vehicles with which the narrow lanes round the Monument are filled. The resounding cries, the rattle of cranes, the clatter of waggons and horses' hoofs, and the dull hooting of the newly-arriving steamers are characteristics which have long been the familiar subjects for painter and essayist; but amid this vivid panorama of human life few have cared to notice now carried on at the tall red brick building facing the market gates, which is inscribed "Billingsgate Christian Mission."

THE EARNEST WORK

That work has a record of twenty-one years' devotion to the best interests of the men locally engaged in the fish industry, as well as those of the neighbouring fruit market, and it was cheering to hear, at the annual gathering on Thursday afternoon last, so satisfactory an account of spiritual progress. The hall was filled with an appreciative audience. Mr. Frank Bevan, who presided, sounded a note of thankfulness for the Mission. Amongst thronging crowds of poor people, occupied in strenuous labour and exposed to many temptations, the workers had preached the Gospel by consistent lives and with earnest exhortation, and excellent results had followed. He congratulated the Society on the decision of Mr. Walters, the secretary, to give up his business and devote his entire time to the work.

After a financial statement from Mr. W. H. Williamson, who told of lessened debt and an improving position generally, Mr. Walters gave a brief recital of the year's labours, and made especial reference to the development of

THE MEDICAL MISSION.

The ambulance is in constant requisition for cases which are cared for by Nurse Foster, and in case of necessity are passed on to the hospital. Fish porters' work is laborious, and, in some respects, difficult; sprains, cuts, crushed fingers, and the like species of accident, are frequently needing attention, and it is satisfactory to know that in every case the help afforded has been accompanied by a kindly word on spiritual topics. The result has been earnest thought on the part of some, leading to humble professions of faith and to changed lives. Gospel services have been largely attended, and the special missions have proved times of blessing. Bible readings are conducted on Sundays and week days, and the hall is, during the autumn, to be opened during the daytime as a reading-room. Mr. Walters concluded his interesting address with a reference to the hearty and earnest work of Mr. Wright, the missionary, who has toiled in season and out of season amongst the market people, and endeavoured to lead them to Christ.

A vigorous word of encouragement was given by Pastor Fuller Gooch, who rejoiced at

THE ONWARD MARCH

of the Mission. Everybody must admit the sore need of Christian work in such a place. They aimed at the conversion of those who were, in many instances, absolutely opposed to religion in any shape or form. The Mission was obviously doing the right thing in going out after those who refused to listen to the Gospel. The prevailing spirit of indifference among all classes of society was lamentable, but the glorious Gospel had not lost its power. Let them continue to deliver the truth wholeheartedly, as heretofore, and God's blessing would attend them.

Mr. George Nokes, an old friend of the Mission, added characteristic words of cheer, observing that, after many years' labour among the "aristocracy of Whitechapel," he was more convinced than ever of the reachableness of the people if only they were dealt with on the sound Gospel lines of the Billingsgate Mission.

Later, tea and coffee were handed round and the gathering took the form of a conversazione, at which further and varied incidents of missionary work among the fish porters were related. Help is needed to maintain the varied institutions, and communications may be addressed to Mr. A. Walters, Christian Mission, Billingsgate, E.C.

King's Lynn Forward Association.

THIS is a forward movement for the improvement of the physical, social, mental, moral, and religious welfare of the working-classes of King's Lynn, and is conducted on strictly unsectarian and non-political lines, its committee comprising men and women connected with the Established and various Free Churches and with both the great political parties.

Established in October, 1891, the work has, in increasing measure, gained the ear of the poorest and non-church-going population, adding one branch after another of service, until its scope is altogether beyond the powers of the band of working men and women at the head of its affairs, compelling an appeal to lovers of the Gospel beyond the borough where this work had its rise.

The meetings have grown from one to six weekly, attended by 4,000 men and women. The sole source of income has been the cheerfully given pence of poor members. The Forward Association endeavours to show a Gospel not only of faith, but of practice; to teach habits of thrift and self-respect; to help men to be kind, gentle, honest, truthful: and to create, stimulate, and direct intelligent interest in every form of good.

The purchase (and formal opening last November) of the Central Athenæum buildings, covering over two thousand square yards, is the largest move in the work, and the full scheme involves the raising of £7,000. It is the earnest desire of the promoters, who are devoted working men and women, to make the buildings a great centre of social, philanthropic, and religious effort. The purchase was secured by various advances on mortgage; but £1,750 is needed to meet the capital expenditure over and above the original purchase, and £5,250 to free the nett income of the property in employing the services of an efficient warden and sister of the people, to lead in a work that has grown far beyond the powers even of the most enthusiastic voluntary helpers. The treasurer is Mr. C. W. Perry, Orwell House, Gaywood Road, King's Lynn.

Work among Sandwichmen.—There is wide scope for work amongst those unskilled labourers who, earning a scanty living by means of board-carrying, bill-distributing, and the like, are found in such large numbers in the Metropolis. We may, therefore, welcome the opening of another institution, at which it is hoped to provide some of them with work and a home. That Mrs. Keates, widow of the late Mr. James Keates, is superintending the new undertaking is a guarantee of energy and industry. Mr. John Jones recently presided at the opening service, and laid stress on the fact that evangelistic meetings would be held regularly, and the Home conducted on spiritual lines. The company inspected the building, which was plainly but sufficiently furnished, and spotlessly clean. The address is 321, City Road, N.

A Foreigners' Outing.

ON Wednesday of last week, the agents of the London City Mission brought together representatives of about fourteen different nationalities to visit "High Leigh," Hoddesdon, by the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. R. Barclay, at what is termed the "Foreigners' Fête."

Sturdy sailors from the far north, men and women from the sunny south, Indian women and Chinese from the far east, and swarthy sailors from the western nations of the South American Continent, made up a most picturesque company of about 240, all told.

Hearty welcome was given by the kind host and hostess, followed by different national games and amusements. Dinner was provided in two tents, grace being said in the language of the different nations at the various tables by the respective missionaries.

Among those present we find a man and his wife, banished from Spain—the former having endured imprisonment and indescribable tortures in Montjuich Prison, as an anarchist; but his only crime was, that a Bible was found in his house. He is now happy in the Lord, and is still under the instruction of the missionary.

Here are some ladies talking with an ayah, whom they have discovered as once having charge of some children coming over from India, and who are now staying with them.

"Deacon Abraham" is plied with numerous questions as to the present condition of the Armenians, and also as to the progress of his Nestorian Orphanage. A loving and sympathetic address by the host, Mr. Barclay, interpreted to the different groups by the missionaries, and a march past the front of the house, that each person might take away a bouquet of flowers, then hearty cheers, and a verse of national hymn, closed a happy day.

The London City Mission employs fifteen agents among these strangers in our midst, proclaiming the Gospel in nearly twenty languages. Funds are much needed for this work.

Mr. James Dunn, Mission House, Bridewell Place, London, E.C., is the Secretary of the Foreigners' Branch.

The British Chautauqua.

IT has been decided to hold two summer schools this year—one at Saltburn, from August 12 to 26; and the other at Folkestone from September 16 to 30. For both these assemblies careful arrangements have been made to secure the comfortable accommodation of the Chautauquans, and full programmes have been arranged. Among the speakers will be many of the most honoured leaders of religious thought in the present day.

It has long been felt that the growth of the Chautauqua movement necessitated the appointment of an official who should be able to devote a considerable amount of time to the oversight and development of the almost boundless possibilities which lie before us, but it was not easy to find anyone possessing the necessary qualifications for the post. The committee now believe they have found a gentleman eminently suited to their needs in Mr. L. M. Gibson, M.A. (son of the president, Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson), whom they have appointed secretary. Mr. Gibson is a licensed minister of the Presbyterian Church of England and a graduate of Glasgow University.

Mainly through the efforts of Mrs. Burham, secretary to the Ladies' Committee of the Sunday School Union, the number of candidates who have presented themselves for the Chautauqua examination this year shows a notable advance on any previous year.

Tram and 'Bus Men.—A party of 200 tram and 'bus men and their wives, organized by their missionary, Mr. E. G. Haynes, of the London City Mission, spent a happy day at Trent Park, New Barnet, on Thursday last, by the kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Bevan. After tea, Rev. W. Warren presided over a meeting held in a large tent, and Rev. R. Dawson and Mr. Chas. Cox gave addresses. Thanks are due to the London General Omnibus Co. and the North Metropolitan Tram Co. for their co-operation.

Obituary.

REV. WILLIAM LANDELS, D.D.

THE death of Dr. Landels removes one of the most notable preachers and vigorous personalities of the Baptist body.

Converted under a Primitive Methodist evangelist, he afterwards came under the influence of the Evangelical Union, but subsequently was pastor of a small Baptist Church at Cupar, Fife. After four years of work there and five more at Birmingham, Dr. Landels came to London to take charge of the new cause at Regent's Park, which the late Sir Morton Peto had established, by purchasing the old Diorama premises and converting them into a chapel.

A large congregation was soon gathered, and, indeed, Regent's Park became one of the most notable centres of religious work in the metropolis. "He was much helped," says Dr. Richard Glover, "by the devoted service of Sir Robert and Lady Lush. He freed the costly building of debt, and animated the Church with an intensely missionary spirit. Mr. Hudson Taylor was a member of his church. The Zenana Mission was cradled there. The Palestine Mission was started by him. The Italian Mission owed the vigour with which it was begun and sustained largely to him. As a public man, his passionate sympathy with freedom made him one of the foremost advocates of the north, in the political embarrassments here which were produced by the American Civil War."

In 1876 he was elected President of the Baptist Union, and in that capacity he served his denomination well, having "the chief part of the credit of collecting the £50,000 which founded the Annuity Fund. His sympathy with his brethren—especially with those poor and ill-paid—was the constraining motive of that piece of service."

It was, however, the characteristic warmth and devotion with which he devoted himself to any good work which seemed to demand his aid that endeared him to the hearts of the people. He was especially vigorous in voicing the needs and claims of the Baptist Missionary Society, and felt keenly, also, the importance of the Y.M.C.A. He will long be remembered for his luminous addresses to the young men who flocked in such large numbers to listen to his stimulating words.

In 1883, Dr. Landels accepted the pastorate of Dublin Street Chapel, Edinburgh, where he laboured for nearly eleven years, until failing health forbade further ministerial toil. "He was a Scotchman," remarks Rev. J. Jenkyn-Brown, "and had many of the gifts and characteristics of his countrymen. He had the courage of his convictions, and was ever ready to do battle for the truth. Though the greater part of his ministry was exercised in England, for ten years he was pastor in Edinburgh. It was a fitting sphere in which to close a life of service so honourable and so useful."

MRS. G. H. HILL.

AFTER nearly four months' suffering, necessitating at last a critical surgical operation, Mrs. Hill passed peacefully away on Wednesday, July 12. For the past thirty-three years she had devoted her life to doing good work among sailors. A memorial service is to be held at the headquarters of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, St. George Street, opposite London Dock Wall, E., on Sunday, July 23, at 6.30 p.m.

W. J. C., an old "A.B.," writes:—

As an old sailor, I feel that my poor words can but very feebly express what I know will be the feelings of many who go down to the sea in ships when they come to know the loss they have sustained.

Amid the bustle and turmoil of London, a great sorrow has fallen upon us. Mrs. Hill, the sailors' friend, has finished life's rough voyage and entered the harbour of Eternal Rest.

The loss is ours who are left behind, and the Seaman's Christian Friend Society is all the poorer, for surely never did a more unselfish or devoted woman labour long and lovingly for the salvation of "poor Jack."

Yes, in every clime and on every sea, there are many to-day who will weep as they remember her whom they had learned to love as a mother, and who will ever cherish the memory of her faithful ministrations and soul-comforting consolations in the past. In the name of everyone of them I would pay this parting tribute of respect to her memory.

REV. JOHN H. NORTON.

Rev. John H. Norton, of Wolverhampton, passed away on Friday last, at the advanced age of eighty-six years. This Wesleyan preacher was a native of Grantham, and spent his early life in Lincoln. His first appointment was Sleaford, then Carver Street, Sheffield. Removing to Wolverhampton and Wednesbury, he became exceedingly popular throughout the Black Country. His later ministry was in Newark, Rotherham, and Chesterfield. His last circuit was Tipton, and since 1883 he has resided in Wolverhampton. He spent sixty-four years in the Methodist ministry.

THE LATE

Mr. B. Wills Newton.

THE passing away from us of that faithful and highly gifted man of God, B. W. Newton, was to me, in common with many others who knew and loved him, a great sorrow, nevertheless of joy and confidence concerning his entrance, at the ripe age of ninety-two, into the sphere of incorruptibility and eternal glory. I know of no living servant of Christ, nor of any amongst the great company who have passed into the presence of the King during the last forty years, for whom I have a deeper reverence or a more profound regard.

"Unknown and yet well known" may indeed be said of this man of God. It is not surprising that he was misunderstood; and spoken of by some as dogmatic and severe. He was an uncompromising opponent to all error. His faithfulness to the Word of God, coupled with his profound intelligence, both spiritual and intellectual, made him mighty alike in the setting forth and defence of revealed truth. His varied writings, so clear and luminous, have enriched the whole Church of God. Far and away beyond any power or influence recognised by men, his sphere of influence has continually increased.

He was pre-eminent in seclusion, wielding for years, both in writing and public ministry amongst select circles, marvellous power. He shrank from the public gaze that he might drift into the deep and great currents of God's mind. Faithfulness to God marked his daily walk with Him; his mind was constantly girded with truth. Truth was to B. W. Newton sovereign and supreme. That which the beloved John wrote was indeed true concerning him whose loss we mourn: "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth." His "narrowness," so-called, always meant loyalty to God and his eternal Word.

How well I remember, more than a quarter of a century ago, listening, amongst many others, to his wonderful teachings in Bayswater, week after week. Instructed and comforted, I sought interviews with him. They were always readily granted. I told him of some of my difficulties. How helpful his assistance! how clear and conclusive his testimony and answers! What light and information streamed from his utterances! If ever a man was faithful to the whole platform of evangelical truth, it was our honoured brother. His views upon and knowledge of the prophetic Scriptures was simply wonderful. He was, in a divine sense, "a man of light and leading," eminently fitted for these difficult times.

His presence was constantly sought by many of the most devoted and intelligent of the Lord's servants, and never more so than during his latest years. Let me commend to my readers his remarkable volume, "Aids to Prophetic Study," and his "Plain Papers" on Gospel themes. Amongst so much that is admirably written, I may mention his striking pamphlets on "Justification" and "Regeneration." I am greatly mistaken if any more powerfully written papers on these great subjects exist.

A great man has passed from among us. In no other spirit save that of chastened grief do I adopt the language of Elisha, when the chariot of fire carried away Elijah: "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof." Oh that the mantle of this prince in Israel may rest upon some of our younger brethren! Farewell, beloved and venerated man of God. For more than ninety years thy pilgrim walk has been extended, and now thou art home for ever, meet through grace for the inheritance of the saints in light. For all thou wast and art we give God praise.

HENRY VARLEY.

God's Haven.

(John vi. 21.)

TOILING in rowing, alone—alone!
Jesus, Master: Oh, where art Thou?
Late where the silvery moonbeams shone
Darken the storm-clouds now;
And out of the depths I cry to Thee,
Far from the Haven where I would be.

King-like, tread Thou the waters dark,
Come to me, for I need Thine aid;
Take Thou the helm of my sinking bark,
Come! I am sore afraid!
Over the wild and the terrible sea,
Christ of Gennesaret, come to me!

King-like, hush with thy lifted voice—
Still with thy lifted Hand—the strife;
Making my fainting heart rejoice
Even when storms are rife.
Master, I perish! I cry to Thee!
Hear me, O Jesus of Galilee!

Thou who makest the storm a calm,
Speak to the waves thy "Peace be still!"
Tune Thou my heart to a trustful psalm,
Teach me to do thy will.
Ever, O Lord, in thy choice for me,
Finding the Haven where I would be.

Lo, on the waves a gleam of fire!
Is it the print of thy piercéd Feet?
Yonder the Haven of my desire
Gleameth with radiance sweet!
Master, Thou comest, thy form I see,
And thither, oh, thither Thou guidest me.

Lo on the clouds a gleam of gold!
Is it a ray from thy thorn-wreath'd brow?
Is it thy face that mine eyes behold?
Lord, at thy Feet I bow;
Sinful, undone, yet my cry shall be
Never "Depart!" but "Abide with me!"

Frail my vessel, but on the helm
Resteth thy nail-scarred Hand divine.
Winds cannot wreck it, nor waves o'erwhelm,
Never a fear is mine,
For the frailest bark that receiveth Thee
Reacheth the Haven where it would be.

Soon shalt Thou make all storms a calm;
Bidding all tossing waves be still;
Tuning to Heaven's eternal psalm
Hearts that have learnt thy Will.
THERE, where thy servants thy Face shall see,
THERE is the Haven where I would be.

Plymouth. EDITH GILLING CHERRY.

"So He bringeth them unto the Haven where they would be."—Psalm cvii. 30 (R.V.).

"The Master's Touch," with several hitherto unpublished poems by the same writer, are now in print. Address: Mrs. M. S. Cherry, care of the Bible Society's Tract Depot, Bedford Street, Plymouth. (3d. per doz.)

Christian Evidences.—The books selected by the Christian Evidence Society for its examination next April are as follows:—Gibson's "Rock v. Sand;" Stewart's "Handbook of Christian Evidences," with Ingram's "Old Testament Difficulties;" Butler's "Analogy" with Eager's "Butler's 'Analogy' and Modern Thought;" Flint's "Theism;" Wright's "Scientific Aspects of Christian Evidences;" Dods' "Introduction to the New Testament," with Perowne on "Galatians." There is no restriction as to sex, age or denomination; any persons, whether studying alone or in classes, may offer themselves as candidates for examination. Copies of the Regulations may now be obtained of the Secretaries, Christian Evidence Society, 26, Charing Cross, S.W.

(930)

The Victoria Homes.

IT is matter for deep regret that the London County Council should have laid hostile hands upon such an estimable institution as the Victoria Home, Whitechapel. The hostility took the form of proceedings in Worship Street Police Court, in which the Council alleged that the premises are carried on as a common lodging-house for business profit, and demanded that they should be registered as such, and inspected accordingly. The summonses were issued against the trustees of the Homes, Lord Radstock, Hon. Granville Waldegrave, and Messrs. T. A. Denny, Ed. Trotter, W. H. Seagram, Francis Deacon, and H. W. Maynard.

In support of the case, it was alleged that the gentlemen named were acting as an association for carrying on as an institution certain establishments as "Working Men's Homes Association," the objects being the promotion of a better state of life among a certain class, the providing of food, entertainments, lectures, religious services, &c., and that the institution, or any part of it, might be carried out with or without the object of making a profit in the discretion of the trustees.

Evidence was then given by a chief inspector and other sub-inspectors of lodging-houses under the L.C.C., of the arrangement of the premises in question. It was shown that about eighty-five per cent. of the lodgers were of the ordinary "dosser" class.

Lord Radstock gave evidence that he had been a trustee of these Homes since their foundation. He had had a general knowledge of the state of things in common lodging-houses since 1860. He had frequently been in the Homes, and while he asserted that the object sought was to raise the morals of the people, he found the men appreciated the quiet and the absence of bad language and rowdyism, which was immediately checked. A large number of men had been there for long periods. There were frequent lectures and entertainments, and the main object was to raise the tone; and he had no hesitation in saying, from a recollection of the behaviour of the men at first, that the change was remarkable, and that the lodgers behaved as well as any West-End audience There was a profit on the business of the new part of the buildings, which was devoted to paying off interest on a mortgage which had been raised to erect the building and to pay off part of the principal. In cross-examination, Lord Radstock pointed out that there was a material difference between the old and new parts of the premises, and the result of the working of the new had proved that the men appreciated the improvement.

Mr. Wilké, secretary of the Homes, in the course of evidence as to the conduct of the place and general particulars, said that £10,000 was given by friends of the committee as a donation for the launching of the Homes. That sum was not to be paid back.

Upon this, the magistrate, Mr. Cluer, held that the institution was carried on for charitable purposes, and not for business profit. He therefore dismissed the summonses, but was willing to state a case. He ordered the Council to pay ten guineas costs.

Remarking on the proceedings, the Daily News very sensibly says: "The Act, which carries the doss-house forward into elementary cleanliness and decency would carry the Rowton or the Radstock dwellings back from realised ideals of happiness for the poor never dreamed of in the philosophy of the Legislature by which it was framed. The success of the Council in these summonses would be the heaviest blow that could possibly be struck at one of the most hopeful social ministrations of our time."

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—On Monday last 252 young emigrants, boys and girls, sailed from Liverpool for Canada. They are being sent out by Dr. Barnardo as the second emigration party for the year. Including these, the emigrants from the homes now number 10,331, and 98 per cent. of this large number have given a good account of themselves throughout their Canadian and Colonial careers. All the children have been carefully trained; the boys in useful trades and the girls for domestic service.

Irish Notes.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

A SUNDAY School Teachers' Union has been established in Coleraine, with Rev. J. Stuart, rector of Aghadowey, as secretary. Thirteen parishes are included in the Union.

A helpful Conference on the work of the Holy Spirit has been held in Cork under the auspices of the Daily Prayer Union, the conveners being Revs. Philip Norton and J. Worthington Atkin.

Rev. Ben Zion and Mrs. Freedman, of the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, have been holding a series of meetings in the diocese of Ferns, and have been giving much valuable information about their work in Galilee.

Much regret is felt in Ireland at the death of Rev. James Thompson, M.A., who has just passed away at Kimberley, South Africa. Deceased was a native of Carrickfergus, and a distinguished graduate of Dublin University. He entered the Irish Methodist ministry in 1865, and in 1882, on account of his health, he emigrated to South Africa. Since then, on two different occasions, he was elected President of the South African Methodist Conference.

About one-third of all the Methodist ministers in Ireland changed circuits last week, and entered upon the new fields of labour to which they were appointed by the recent Conference. It speaks much for the smoothness with which the Methodist system works that hardly anyone heard a word about the worry and trouble necessarily involved in so many changes except the ministers themselves and their families, and the officials of the circuits or congregations concerned. The extension of the Methodist ministerial term is one of the changes which awaits the twentieth century.

The July anniversaries have passed off, on the whole, quietly. The various meetings were very largely attended, and the speaking was of the usual order. Although many of the Orange lodges are now conducted on strictly temperance principles, yet much drunkenness was apparent, especially amongst young men and boys. This is one of the saddest features of the case, and one in which the future welfare of the country is involved. Most of the mills and factories were closed from Tuesday evening to Monday morning, and thus many had a much needed and very welcome holiday. The weather was favourable.

Feeble-minded Boys.

A BILL has just passed through the House of Lords providing for the better elementary education of feeble-minded children, who are neither idiots nor imbeciles. The Bill will affect, however, only children within the limit of school age. There are many feeble-minded boys and girls of fourteen and upwards who, had they been taken in hand earlier, would probably have been by this time partially self-supporting. In order to give them such help and hope as may still remain possible to them, small Homes are necessary, where they may be trained and protected over the most dangerous period of their lives. There are fifteen or sixteen such Homes in England for girls; there is only one for boys, and this although statistics show that the number of feeble-minded boys exceeds that of girls. In this solitary Home, of its kind, I venture to elicit the interest of your readers.

It has lately been found necessary to remove it to more suitable premises, and a charming house near Waltham Abbey has, by the liberality of the owner, been secured at a very moderate rental. Here the boys, twelve in number, will be trained for country life, and work under a married couple as master and matron, whose efforts have already been attended with considerable success. In addition to work on the land, the boys are taught to use tools for woodwork and to do simple carpentry. They have lessons in reading, writing, &c., and physical exercises and concerted singing are regularly taught by their master.

To carry on the Home a sum of about £150 per annum is required, in addition to the payments made by the friends of the boys or the boards of guardians sending them. The committee of the Home have found it difficult to raise even this small sum in voluntary contributions. They feel justified in bringing forward their claim to support, on the grounds that they are not only ensuring to their boys a happier and more independent life than would otherwise be their lot, but that they are also, so far as their efforts go, safeguarding the community against one of the evils of our civilization—namely, the existence of an adult feeble-minded population.

The Home is certified under the Local Government Board, and is open to inspection at any time. All information may be obtained of the Secretary of the National Association for Promoting the Welfare of the Feeble-minded, 53, Victoria Street, S.W., by whom, or by myself as hon. treasurer, communications will be thankfully received. RICHARD B. MARTIN.

69, Lombard Street, E.C.

Letters to the Editor.

Infant Baptism.

DEAR SIR,—Your protest in last week's number of The Christian against the remarks of the Bishop of Norwich on the above subject was much called for and most seasonable.

As it is the duty of every Christian to uphold the truth of Holy Writ, I would observe there is no warrant whatever in Scripture for the assertion that infant baptism is necessary for salvation, nor for its observance as a ritual. The practice solely depends on the authority of a Church which had no right to assert a proposition so adverse to God's love for childhood, and so directly in the teeth of Holy Writ.—Yours, &c., T. W. C.

Sabbath Desecration.

SIR,—My committee think that the attention of Christian ministers, Sunday school superintendents, and others who arrange for Sunday school treats, temperance demonstrations, and similar gatherings, should be drawn to the Sunday arrangements now made at the Crystal Palace and the Alexandra Palace, in order that those places may forfeit the support of religious organizations.

The managing bodies of both places have been reminded that their proceedings are an open violation of the law of the land, as well as of the Divine law; and that they promote an enormous amount of Sunday labour and Sunday trading on the railways and elsewhere.

They appear to be indifferent to such considerations; but they might be found more amenable to such a public expression of dissatisfaction as recently checked the aggression of newspaper proprietors on the sanctity and rest of the Lord's Day.

May we ask your aid in directing the attention of Christian workers to this matter?—Yours faithfully,

Frederic Peake, Secretary,
Lord's Day Observance Society.
20, Bedford Street, W.C.

Conference at Charlottenburg.

THROUGH the good hand of our God upon us we have experienced a fortnight of unusual blessing through the special services conducted here by Mr. James Sprunt, from London.

During the first week in July we had Bible studies every afternoon, the subject being "The Tabernacle in the Wilderness," as pointing to the excellencies of our Lord Jesus Christ. Beautiful diagrams helped the understanding. From day to day the attendance increased, and believers from different parts came, showing their appreciation of the truth. Every evening our brother preached the Gospel, inviting the unsaved to come to the Lord, and not a few accepted the invitation.

During the second week we had our Conference on the Second Coming of our Lord, and whilst the various subjects connected with this truth were ably and clearly treated, the main subject was the preparation of heart and soul for Him, the coming One. The character of the present dispensation of the Church of God, of God's purposes concerning Israel, the truth as to the millennium and the two resurrections, the judgment of the nations, of believers at the judgment seat of Christ, and of the unsaved at the final judgment:—these Divinely revealed truths were powerfully set forth before attentive and appreciative audiences. We thank believers in Germany, England, and Sweden for their prayerful intercessions on behalf of this Conference. The masses around live in utter indifference to these glorious and terrible facts; but in the name of the Lord we go among them day by day, with the message of the Lord as to his accomplished salvation, his living in power at the right hand of God, and his speedy return. Pray for us.

Julius Rohrbach.
28, Krumme Strasse, Charlottenburg.

Evangelistic.

Tent Work at Hammersmith.

MR. NED WRIGHT has pitched a Gospel tent in the midst of a densely-populated artisan district at Hammersmith. The initial service, which was of a dedicatory character, was held on Saturday last, when there was a largely-attended rally of Christian workers for praise and prayer.

On Sunday evening the quickly-attained popularity of the services was evidenced by the fact that the capacious canvas tabernacle was crowded, while groups of eager listeners of "just the right class" thronged the entrances. There was much blessing, and some yielded to the Saviour. Meetings are to be held nightly, a singing service at 7 p.m. being followed half an hour later by an evangelistic meeting. Mr. Wright has arranged for a number of well-known evangelists to take part from time to time, so that the gatherings will be of a varied character. The tent is well lighted and conveniently furnished, but the expenses, especially in connection with the ground rent, are, of necessity, somewhat heavy. Communications respecting the tent may be addressed to Mr. Ned Wright, 10, Greenhill Park, Harlesden, N.W.

Tent Evangelization Campaign.

THE work in connection with the tent at Tooting has been graciously blessed. On Saturday afternoon last the sea of juvenile faces at the mass meeting for children presented a remarkable spectacle. At the meetings for adults, one of the chief features has been the conversion of a number of young men. On Sunday Mr. Leonard Weaver conducted a men's meeting in the morning, and in the afternoon a special gathering for Christians, at which Dedication, Separation, and Transformation were shown to be requisite for efficient service. The evening meeting was indeed a season of refreshing, as the "old, old story" was re-told with freshness and force from John iii. 16. How the crowds listened to the well-known words! The glad assurance that comes to our hearts is this: "Fear not; thou shalt see greater things than these," and we rejoice that the fire is spreading.

Another tent is being opened this week, at Troy Town, Peckham Rye, opposite the Pond, on Thursday, by Mr. Leonard Weaver, assisted by Mr. William Grove and others, with a strong choir and orchestra. Work is to be commenced, also, in a third tent on Sunday next, July 23. Services at 11 a.m. (men only), 3.30 p.m., and 8 p.m., and every week evening at 8 p.m., in the grounds of Felix College, opposite the Public Library, Lavender Hill, S.W., one minute from Clapham Junction. Mr. Charles Inglis and other evangelists will lead, with Madame Annie Ryall, Mr. James Gracie, and Mr. and Mrs. Baker (Blind Singers of Philadelphia) as singers. We earnestly ask prayer for the outpouring of power from on high. "There shall be showers of blessing."

On Sunday evening last, Rev. Henry Varley preached in the open-air on Tunbridge Wells Common to a very large and interested audience.

The lady performers engaged at the Crystal Palace accepted Mr. William Forbes's invitation to tea on Monday last in one of the saloons in the Palace. After tea a short meeting was held and a hymn-book presented to each of the ladies.

An evangelistic mission is to be conducted on the sands at Blackpool, during August, under the auspices of the Manchester Baptist College. Rev. C. H. Wagnell, Bryan Road, Blackpool, will be glad to hear from friends who desire to assist in any way.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey has conducted evangelistic services at Hempstead, Long Island. An interesting feature was a united gathering of the Presbyterian, Episcopal, Baptist, and Methodist Episcopal Churches, in the building of the last-mentioned, at which Mr. Sankey told the story of some popular hymns, interspersing the narrative with song.

At Crick, near Rugby, we have just closed a tent mission conducted by Mr. C. Noakes, of the Evangelization Society. The meetings have been well attended, especially by those who have seldom or never been seen in a place of worship. The mission has made a deep impression. Many have yielded to Christ, while believers have been helped and encouraged.

T. Pike.

In connection with village tent work in Somerset and Devon, Mr. F. A. Glover reports a movement from the extreme ritualism, by which so many villages are held in bondage, to hear and welcome the Gospel in its simplicity. A second tent is being worked, and a number of young men have spent their holidays in witnessing for Christ. A number of persons have professed conversion.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has held evangelistic meetings in a tent at New Albany, Ind. Speaking on the subject, "Can children intelligently come to Christ?" he said: "I know some of you doubt it, and I do not blame you, for I was sceptical about it once myself, but I know better now, for I have seen hundreds come to Christ, and have known them to grow up consistent Christian men and women." In an afternoon meeting a large number of children were pointed to the Saviour.

Mr. William Day has visited Pontefract races with his Gospel banner. Taking his stand amid the throng on the course, he was assailed with threats and vigorous expostulations, but maintained a position at the one gate where everyone who entered or left must needs see the banner with its Scriptural words of warning. When invited, at the police station, to prosecute one of the gambling fraternity for abuse, Mr. Day declined, and the man at once turned and pleaded for forgiveness. Mr. Day is this week pitching a large tent in Kerkstall Road, Leeds. On the side of the canvas enclosure is painted in large characters "Jesus only." The distribution of some thousands of Gospel invitations has aroused curiosity, and much blessing is expected.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—During August, Great Assembly Hall, London.
Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Till July 31, Jarrow-on-Tyne.
Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sun., July 23, at 7 p.m., Mr. P. Garrioch; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sun., July 23, at 7 p.m., Mr. R. C. Morgan; Bible lecture, Thurs., at 8, Mr. Thompson.
Mr. George Clarke.—July 23-Aug. 2, Teignmouth.
Mr. Newton Jones.—July 30, Lowestoft Baptist Chapel; during August, Margate Sands (Nayland Rock).
Mr. Leonard Weaver, Gospel Tent, Tooting (near the Tramway Terminus), until further notice.
Rev. Thos. Cook.—July 23, Stanningley; 30, Skegness; Aug. 6, Bridlington Quay; 13, Llandudno; 20, Colwyn Bay; Sept. 3, Blackpool.
Mr. Henry Thorne.—July 23, Haling Road, South Croydon.
Mr. J. J. Sims.—During July, Pavilion Theatre, Edinburgh.
Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—Till July 24, Basingstoke.
Mr. George Hunter.—Till Aug. 13, Uxbridge.
Mr. John Elliott.—July 23, Gerston Hall, Paignton.

The Evangelization Society.—The following missions, among others, will be in progress on Sunday next:—Upper Sheringham, A. Heath; Shalford, H. Collins; Birmingham, C. Lazenby; Chailey, Jas. Lovell; Charsfield, A. E. Knight; Haslemere, A. Clark; Broadchalke, H. S. Smith; Westleton, J. Clark; Nayland, J. Harris; Barnston, J. Whiting; Waterhouses, R. R. Francis; Sidley, N. Taylor; Great Tey, J. Simmonds; Great Barford, K. Lambert; Long Buckby, C. Noakes; Headcorn, J. H. Cooke; Horncastle, C. F. Goode; Knowle, F. W. Pascoe; Blackburn, J. Shields; Poole, J. Brown; Sheldon, W. F. Davies; Chetton, S. Bryant; Verwood, H. Bray; Harlow, T. Goudie; Whitwell, G. Attwood; Attleborough, C. Chenery; Sunderland, R. D. Edwards; Glasgow, D. M. Bayne; Glasgow, J. Clinnie; Stenhousemuir, C. Galletly; Lumphinans, J. W. Galletly; Girvan, H. Young; Bonar Bridge, D. Fittendrigh; Kirkcolm, H. Laughland; Largs, J. W. Moodie; Stonehaven, C. G. Roger; Saughtree, R. Hill.

Requests for Prayer.

On behalf of Church Army evangelistic missions at Morecambe Bay, Blackpool, and Walton-on-the-Naze, in tents and on the sands, to be held daily until the close of the season.

For blessing on the open-air services of the Kennington Gospel Mission.

For blessing upon work among navvies at home and abroad, and that those who conduct the work may be filled with the Holy Spirit.

For blessing on services to be conducted in Madras by William Hill, evangelist, August 6 to October 30.

Miss Baroodie's Work in Syria.—Will you permit me, through the medium of The Christian, to inform your readers interested in Syria, that Miss Baroodie's medical work is quite distinct from the British Syrian Mission. Miss Baroodie was at one time a pupil in the Training Institution at Beyrout; this fact, perhaps, and the locality of the work, has caused confusion in the minds of some of our friends, and we think it well to explain. At the same time we wish all prosperity and blessing to this and every other good work in a land that so sorely needs Christ-like words and deeds. F. Willmot, Secretary.

Women Inebriates.—At West Holme, Hounslow, good work has long been carried on for the benefit of women who desire to overcome habits of intemperance. The annual report which has just been issued is a charming little account of patient and loving effort in the best interests of the inmates. "Very precious are the confidences often given on visiting days in the little library. Crises in life take place there, scenes of glad reconciliation, old love and trust restored, and tragedies, when the poor returning penitent meets no mercy, no response, and the days that follow are one long pitched battle with despair." Communications may be addressed to the Secretary, as above.

(8.51)

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Rev. Prebendary Covington, Vicar of Brompton, has been appointed Vicar of St. Giles's-in-the-Fields.

More than half of the £20,000 required for the new Church House Buildings, Westminster, is guaranteed.

The offer of a wealthy American (Mr. Pierpont Morgan), to light the interior of St. Paul's Cathedral with electricity, has been accepted.

The Bishop of London is appointing Jewish clergy to East-end benefices, and has also sanctioned the use of Hebrew instead of English in the Church services.

Several Roman Catholics have lately been received into the Anglican Church. Rev. Taaffe Finn, formerly a Romanist priest, is now working at a church in Marylebone.

Already nearly 3,000 tickets have been sold for the Church Congress in London. A sounding-board, newly invented by an American, will be set up in the Albert Hall.

Princess Henry of Battenberg, on behalf of the Queen, on Friday laid the foundation-stone of the church to be built at Kensal Rise, in memory of the late Dean of Llandaff.

The sum of £10,000, bequeathed under the will of the late Mr. John Hall to the diocese of Newcastle, is to be applied to the Bishop of Newcastle's fund for building new churches in the diocese.

The Duchess of Albany unveiled, in Canterbury Cathedral, the memorial to Archbishop Benson, the late Primate, who was the first archbishop entombed within the building since the Reformation.

There was a largely attended meeting of Kentish cyclists at Canterbury Cathedral on Sunday. Dean Farrar preached, urging his hearers not to abuse the cycle or let it lead them to neglect Christian duties.

Mr. Walter Walsh, the author, is arranging with his publisher to issue a cheap edition of the "Secret History of the Oxford Movement." The book will probably be issued at the net price of one shilling.

More than £21,000 has been raised in two years from voluntary sources for the restoration of the Church of St. James-the-Less, Bethnal Green, and for providing the parish with suitable buildings. Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield is the vicar.

The Bishop of Manchester has laid the foundation-stone of a church and schools at Bolton. The cost, £12,000, has been borne by the late Rev. Thomas Loxham, and the site was provided by Lord Bradford. The Bishop said that the Church had successfully passed through many crises and would do so in future, so long as it had such supporters.

Congregational.

Congregationalists of Victoria propose to raise within three years a Twentieth Century Fund of £5,000.

A director of the London Missionary Society has contributed £500 towards work in the Mount Douglas district of New Guinea.

Rev. J. S. Butcher, of Chishill, Essex, has accepted the pastorate at Baldock, Herts. A site has been secured and paid for, on which it is proposed to erect a new church.

Paddington Chapel (Rev. Ossian Davies) is likely to remain in the builders' hands till the end of the year. The foundation-stones of the new structure were laid on Tuesday.

A "Woman's Guild of Christian Service" has been formed in connection with the Lancashire Union. The objects embrace family religious life, home and foreign missions, and social reform.

Emmanuel Church, Cambridge, has passed a resolution to support the Twentieth Century Fund, and has asked its pastor, Dr. Forsyth, to urgently press that not less than £50,000 be allocated for aiding the rural ministers.

Revs. Owen Thomas and J. Machreth Rees left England last week for a lengthened stay in the United States. Both ministers are well-known in Welsh circles, and while in the States they will visit a number of Welsh churches.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, sails for New York on the 26th inst. During August and the first two Sundays of September, the preacher at New Court will be Dr. Cadman, pastor of the Metropolitan Temple, New York.

In a comparatively brief period new churches have been erected at Wanstead, Leytonstone, Walthamstow, Woodford, Buckhurst Hill, Stratford, Forest Gate, George Lane, Romford, and in Leyton. The latest addition in the latter place has been erected for the most part with the proceeds of the sale of Fetter Lane Chapel.

In addition to the sum of £5,000 promised by Dr. Horton's church to the Congregational Twentieth Century Fund, it is probable that a similarly generous amount will be forthcoming from Dr. Guinness Rogers's church at Clapham, Rev. C. Silvester Horne's congregation at Kensington, and four other influential churches in the metropolis.

Rev. W. Pierce, recently returned from a deputation visit to British Guiana, says that the churches are severely left alone by the planters and the official class, and race prejudices are still extremely strong. The people are simple-hearted, by no means perfect, and very poor; but they pay for their own religion and received no doles. They are making themselves felt socially and politically in the colony.

Early morning services have been held at Reigate, presided over by Rev. G. Currie Martin, M.A., B.D. The evangelists in charge of the mission stations in the surrounding districts, together with four London City missionaries, were entertained by various hosts during the week. Besides conferences on several mornings, meetings were held in the church and in the open air at South Park and Kingswood.

Baptist.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon has removed to 14, Macaulay Road, Clapham Common, S.W.

A special evangelistic mission in Perth, conducted by Rev. J. Rhys Davies, of Swansea, has proved remarkably successful.

Subscriptions towards the Twentieth Century Fund raised by the Derby Road congregation, Nottingham (Rev. George Hill), already amount to £1,000.

From a cash statement issued in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle Rebuilding Fund, it appears that the total cost, including lighting, heating, furniture, and fittings, is £44,756, and of this amount £6,580 is still required.

The Baptists in Ireland have fallen into line with their English brethren in an earnest endeavour to raise a Twentieth Century Fund. The first draft of promises handed in shows a total of £4,541.

The Sunday School anniversary services at Westcliff-on-Sea were times of blessing. Pastor Sidey preached twice, and an address to children was given by Mr. C. H. Mills. The secretary wishes to state that a cordial welcome to the church awaits all visitors to Westcliff who can attend.

Foundation-stones of a new church at Earlsfield will be laid this (Thursday) afternoon. The chapel is being erected under the superintendence of the ex-president of the London Baptist Association (Rev. E. Henderson), and will commemorate his year of office. The outlay is estimated at £5,000, towards which £3,000 has been collected. Rev. A. J. Payne, of the Pastors' College, is the minister.

Both Rev. E. G. Gange and Rev. Archibald G. Brown were fifty-five years old on Monday last, and the two ministers have had many experiences in common. They were students at Mr. Spurgeon's College together, entered the ministry almost simultaneously, were both looked upon as possible successors to Mr. Spurgeon, and have both been eminently used of God in the conversion and spiritual upbuilding of souls.

The annual garden party of the Young People's Missionary Association was held in the grounds of Mildmay Conference Hall, on Saturday. There was a good attendance of young men and women connected with metropolitan Sunday Schools and Bible Classes. Rev. F. Myers, recently returned from India, presided over a meeting in the Hall. All the speakers dwelt upon the need of sending more missionaries to look after the spiritual welfare of coloured races in diferent parts of the world.

Mr. A. H. Baynes, secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, says, in the course of an interview: "the story of the past year, so far as the Baptist Missionary Society is concerned, records, I am assured, a larger number of additions to the native Christian churches than ever before; increased agency, both European and native; marked progress in elementary day schools, and a very much more efficient staff of teachers; a remarkable development of Sunday schools and societies of Christian Endeavour—sure progress in all lands."

Methodist.

There are 11,593 active members in the Free Methodist Societies of Christian Endeavour.

The contributions from the U.M. home circuits towards the Mission Funds are about £700 in advance of last year's.

Out of the 2,000,000 of Methodists in this country, 600,000 have promised or given to the Wesleyan Methodist Twentieth Century Fund.

In America there are seventy Primitive Methodist stations, with about the same number of ministers, and upwards of 7,000 Church members.

Methodism now has 4,730 bands of hope, with a membership of 440,180; and the temperance societies number 1,564, with 90,676 members. Only fifty-four of the societies now have a dual basis.

At the United Methodist Free Church Assembly at Sheffield, Rev. Jabez King, of Burton-on-Trent, was elected Connexional secretary, and Rev. Dr. Brook, of Bristol, corresponding secretary.

There are sixty Bible Christian chapels in the Falmouth district, with a membership of 2,708. The total receipts during the past year have amounted to £1,342, as against £1,282 in 1898.

It will be remembered that Rev. Joseph Hocking offered to conduct a U.M. Free Church Mission in North London without salary for at least two years. His offer has been heartily accepted, and the Chapel Extension Committee are taking steps to secure a site.

The official statement concerning the Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund, to be submitted to Conference in its representative session, shows that out of a total of 814 circuits, 803 have promised 662,638 guineas. The amount received to Mid-summer Day was £71,144.

Lord Reay presided at a students' conversazione at the Bermondsey Settlement, and Viscountess Morpeth presented prizes and certificates won by the students in science, history, ambulance work, and other pursuits. There are 870 students. Lord Reay said he regarded social settlements as amongst the most important institutions in London, and there could not be too many of them.

Presbyterian.

A Jewish family, consisting of six persons, has been received into the communion of St. Michael's Church, Edinburgh (Rev. George Wilson).

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., has been appointed on of the English representatives to the Pan-Presbyterian Council, which is to meet in September in Washington.

The site for a proposed new church at Lee, Kent, is a gift from the Earl of Northbrook, who has also promised a contribution of £250 towards the building fund.

Rev. Dr. Muir, who has been minister of Egremont Church, Birkenhead, for thirty-three years, tendered his resignation, on account of advancing age, at a meeting of the Liverpool Presbytery.

A strong appeal for help to the struggling Protestant churches on the Continent has been issued by Rev. B. Bell, of Manchester, and Rev. James Mellis, of Southport (joint conveners of the Continental Committees).

At a meeting of the Church of Scotland Committee on Temperance, held in Edinburgh of Tuesday, Mr. D. E. M'Innes, town missionary, Falkirk, was appointed an additional temperance evangelist in connection with the Church of Scotland.

English, Scotch, and Irish delegates to the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, to the number of 150, leave Liverpool about the end of next month. The meetings commence in Washington on September 27. Dr. Marshall Lang, President, will deliver the opening address.

The foundation-stone was laid of a new Free Church at Turriff, N.B. The ceremony was performed by Dr. Ferguson, of Kinmundy, in presence of a large and interested congregation. The estimated cost of the building is over £2,500, of which £2,100 was subscribed by the congregation prior to the commencement of erection.

Rev. Professor Bryce, LL.D., who has seen the city of Winnipeg grow from 300 to 60,000, has agreed to speak on Christian work in the Canadian North West, on Sunday evening next, July 23, at Camden Road Church (Rev. Dr. Thornton's). Dr. Bryce has written important works on Canada, and is now engaged on a history of the Hudson Bay Company.

Dr. J. Stewart, Moderator of the Free Church Assembly, preached two sermons at Tain, and took part in the Communion Services in the English and Gaelic in Tain Free Church. The Hall, where the Gaelic congregation met, was quite full, and the congregations in the church were very large, and the discourses seemed to make a solemn impression.

Society of Friends.

Evesham adult scholars and other Friends are making earnest efforts to reach the pea-pickers who gather in that district at this season.

At Almeley the meeting is of great interest, especially the work amongst the young. A series of tent meetings has just been held. The meetings are crowded, many coming long distances.

Lucy E. Harris, M.B., and Henrietta Simmonds expect to sail from Marseilles in the steamer Oceana for China on Sept. 14. They intend staying in Ceylon for a month, and hope to reach Shanghai about Nov. 17.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. JOHN HENRY HOWSHALL, at the age of fifty-five. He held Congregational pastorates at Haydock and Dresden before settling at Longton. He resigned the pastorate there about ten years ago.—Mr. PETER MCLANIE, of the firm of Campbell and Redmayne, oilcloth manufacturers, of Manchester, a liberal supporter of Congregationalism.—Mrs. LLOYD PRATT, president of the Wellingborough branch of the British Women's Temperance Association, secretary of the Women's Liberal Association, and one of the Poor-law guardians.—Mr. THOMAS FILLINGHAM, aged seventy-one, connected with the Free Methodists at Crowland, Lincs., for over half a century.—At Newport-on-Tay, Mr. WILLIAM ROBERTSON, a member of Newport Free Church, which benefited alike by his counsel and liberality. He had been Town Councillor, Bailie, and Provost of Dundee, and at one time or other was connected with most of the charitable and educational institutions of the city.—Mrs. GARRETT, wife of Rev. Charles Garrett, of Liverpool. Her devotion to the Liverpool Mission was proverbial, and deep sympathy will be felt with the venerable minister.—Rev. J. BATEMAN (Baptist), of Niton, Isle of Wight, from peritonitis, after ten days' severe illness. The deceased was highly respected for his many labours on behalf of the people.—Dr. D. RANKINE, medical missionary of the Church of Scotland, at Ichang, China, who went out to China in 1895.—At Saratoga, Bishop JOHN P. NEWMAN, of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—Mr. JOSIAH TILDESLEY, who was regarded as the father of Methodism in the Black Country, died at his residence, The Limes, Willenhall, at the ripe age of ninety.—At Ayr, Rev. NEIL LIVINGSTON, D.D., senior minister of Stair Free Church, aged eighty-eight.—Mr. WILLIAM MCLEAN, of Kilmarnock, warm suppporter of the Ayrshire Mission to the Deaf and Dumb, and an elder in St. Andrew's Free Church.—At Dublin, on July 17, Dr. CHARLES GRAVES, Bishop of Limerick since 1866, aged 87, widely known as an influential ecclesiastic and as a mathematician and antiquarian.

Notices.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS.—M.K.K.W. A.B.P. A.N.J. C.H. E.L.E. H.R.F.B. E.A.P. A.M.A. L.E.T. C.F. J.H.S. G.W.G. R.B.M. M.P. A.S.C. F.S.A. G.J.J. T.M.M. B.H.K. J.F.B.T. E. and F. W.J.C. F.P. T.W.C. G.G.W. C.P. G.W.B. A.M. B.F.B. W.T. C.T. T.B.F. H.J.E. W.W.M. R.R. N.B. D.S.M. L.B. H.G. Canon M.C. A.I.B. F.F.B. J.J.S. W.C.M. T.L.C. J.T.I. F.B.M. J.W.A. E.G.H. P.H.J. W.H. J.R. D.L.D W.H.M. R. S.H.J. A.E.D. P.G. A.R. C.W. Mrs. J.C. T.E.S.S. E.P.F.

APPLICATIONS FOR TRACTS.—Miss M. O. Peller, the Borough, Yeovil; Mr. W. Neill (for English and Scandinavian sailors), 7, Manor Road, Bowes Park, London, N.; W. E. C. Axtell, 2, Oakfield Cottages, Oakfield Road, Higham Hill, Walthamstow; Mr. C. H. Wakeman, 62, Pembroke Road, Ilford, Essex.

"Pass It On" Society.—God makes us stewards of whatsoever He gives us; and He does not intend his gifts, whether physical, intellectual, or spiritual, to be used exclusively for our own advantage. The "P.I.O." Society is founded to carry out the above principle systematically. It is understood that every member will pass on the glad tidings of salvation to others, and will earnestly endeavour to win for Christ at least one other person every year. For card of membership apply (enclosing stamp) to Mr. J. H. Greene, 45, Lansdowne Road, Croydon.

Distressed Gentlefolks' Aid Association.—At a recent meeting in support of this Society, Lord Amherst presiding, Miss Finn, hon. sec., stated that no money was expended in offices or staff, and that help was granted without reference to religion or politics. The most satisfactory part of the work, after the actual relief of want, was the personal sympathy shown. Pains were taken to treat the recipients with due respect. Upwards of thirty weekly grants were sent out. Among those who had given clothing were T.R.H. Princess Christian, the Duchess of York, and Princess Victoria of Wales. Miss Finn appealed for further help. Her address is, 75, Brook Green, Hammersmith, W.

Spurgeon Memorial Sermon Society.—The Lords of the Admiralty have given permission to the Spurgeon Memorial Sermon Society to place a selected set of the late Mr. Spurgeon's sermons on board each of Her Majesty's ships, for use in the ships' library. The secretary reports the receipt of a number of letters from the troops in India who were recently supplied with a large quantity of these sermons, while another consignment is being sent for the use of the troops in Ireland, a generous friend having defrayed the cost of these special grants. The Society is this week celebrating its seventh anniversary, having been formed on July 17, 1892. Since its formation, it has placed over two million sermons in circulation. Applications for grants should be addressed to the Secretary, Spurgeon Memorial Sermon Society, Greenhithe, Kent.

About Books.

We note with satisfaction Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.'s excellent edition of Bunyan's vivid and stimulating parable, The Holy War. (6d.)

A volume peculiarly good in its way is In the Hour of Silence: A Book of Daily Meditations for the year. By Alexander Smellie, M.A. (5s. Andrew Melrose). There is thought and stimulus in the pages, and the book is admirably suited for presentation purposes.

Prayer and Praise for Eventide, compiled by Rev. William Odom, vicar of Heeley (1s. "Home Words" Office, 7, Paternoster Square) is a neatly prepared little book. In addition to the arrangement of praise and prayer for four weeks, there will be found hymns and collects for varied events of home life and for special occasions.

Mr. Robert Thomson's new poem, The Heavenly Bridegroom (2s. Elliot Stock), may be described in the author's words, as "an attempt, after the manner of the Song of Solomon, to describe the relationships subsisting between Christ and his Church." The task that Mr. Thomson set himself was both difficult and delicate, and the result is somewhat unequal, although much constructive talent and smoothness of expression are displayed.

As a vivid and pathetic picture of the labours and sorrows of village life in India, Panjabi Sketches is valuable; but it also illustrates, to adopt the words of Sir William Muir's introduction, "the influence of missionary work and the harvest springing up from the good seed scattered at the hands of our Zenana ladies." The well-chosen illustrations lend additional interest to an excellent book. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

Books that Bless, by Bramwell Booth (1s. The Salvation Army, 98, Clerkenwell Road), consists of a series of reviews reprinted from the War Cry. As Mr. Booth quotes liberally from the works that he notices, his book is of additional value as a kind of compressed edition of such useful works as, amongst others, the Lives of C. G. Finney, Isaac Marsden of Doncaster, and Francis of Assisi, Pollok's "Course of Time," and the late Mrs. Booth's "Popular Christianity."

Rev. W. B. Russell Caley's new work, Justification (1s. 6d. Elliot Stock), is a modest but timely contribution to theological literature. It is a simple, concise explanation of the doctrine of Justification, according to the Bible and the Formularies and Divines of the Church of England. It shows the necessity, method, and results of Justification, and gives a brief comparison of the doctrines of the Romish and English Churches on the subject.

Mr. J. McDonald Lane's Creator and Created (3s. 6d. Nisbet) has, it is observed in the preface, no pretension to "literary skill." It is an unconventional work, terse and plain spoken, dealing with a variety of spiritual and social topics, and setting up a rule of conduct in many matters. The author has a rooted objection to forms' and combats priestcraft and sacerdotalism in strenuous terms. A tendency to dogmatize leads occasionally to over emphasis, but the book is obviously sincere and contains much common-sense comment that is helpful.

Prismatic Harmonies in Colours and Doctrines, with a practical application to Bible marking. By L. Matthewson Milner. (Price, including colours and book-marks, 1s. 6d. W. Reeves, 185, Fleet Street, E.C.) This unique publication comprises a booklet and a box of ten coloured crayons and ribbons. To mark the Bible in emblematic colour will strike some as an advance upon plain pencil or pen-and-ink. The system here commended is termed the circular mode. A passage for discussion has some phrase underlined in the colour proper to the thought it contains; a reference is marked on its margin, and is similarly underlined; the place found is kept by a ribbon of like hue. We can imagine some Christian workers being greatly helped by the adoption of this system of Bible marking.

Mr. Thomas Law has issued a useful pamphlet, THE RELATION OF MUNICIPAL ACTION TO MORALS, by A. T. Davies. (1d.) It is issued by the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches.

Intercessory prayer and individual effort united for soul-winning are ably set forth and warmly advocated in FAR BEN, issued at 6s. 6d. per 100, by Mr. Thomas Hogben, "Welcome Mission," Portsmouth.

IN HIS STEPS now appears in a musical dress, Mr. Livesey Carrott having arranged the story as a service of song. Of the sixteen musical illustrations seven are from Mr. Carrott's own pen. (4d. Weekes & Co.)

ROSE'S DIARY is a little volume of poems, by Mr. H. S. Sutton, remarkable for spirituality, delicacy of thought, and aptness of expression. (8½d. post free, from A. Broadbent, 19, Oxford Street, Manchester.)

WHAT DO YOU MEAN BY THE CHURCH? by N.S.T. (3d. Partridge & Co.) is a booklet emphasising some of the distinctions between the characteristics and rules of primitive Christianity and the pretensions of sacerdotalism.

The annual volume (June, 1898—May, 1899) of the ANTI-INFIDEL (1s. 6d. John Snow & Co.) is characterized by the usual strenuousness with which Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh combats the views and propaganda of the atheist party.

An excellent penny booklet is issued from the office of the Church Association, 14, Buckingham Street, Strand, entitled FIRM FOOTSTEPS FOR YOUTHFUL FEET, by J. H. Greene. It points out the right path, and warns against devious and dangerous by-paths.

An instructive booklet, by Rev. J. W. Ewing, M.A., B.D., is RITUALISM. It contains two sermons, the first, inquiring into the nature and meaning of Ritualism, and the second, examining its secret methods and how to meet them. (3d. T. H. Hopkins, 16, Gray's Inn Road, W.C.)

A FEW NEGLECTED PAGES OF ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY, by a Lay Member of the Church of England (2d. "Home Words" Office), is a pamphlet worth reading in these days when so many would associate the rise of Christianity in our land with Roman missions and influences.

Amid the many tractates dealing with its subject, THE CRISIS IN THE CHURCH, by Rev. F. C. Burrough, written for local purposes, is a production which seems, from its simple and popular style, to be worthy of wider circulation and capable of adaptation for that purpose. It may be had of the author, from Woolsery Vicarage, Bideford, Devon.

Brightly written and attractively got up, the annual report of the Women's Total Abstinence Union is a record of many earnest efforts on behalf of the temperance cause. It is illustrated with tone portraits of Miss M. E. Docwra and the late Miss Holland. (2d. 4, Ludgate Hill, E.C.)

In the Evendale Card series of Gospel tracts (No. 29), "Ruin, Redemption, Reception, Regeneration, and Responsibility" are the subjects set forth in rhyme. The author disclaims any poetic merit for his work, but plain people may receive the simple words where they would pass by more finished productions. (3d. per dozen. Pearce & Co. Printers, Putney).

Y.M.C.A. Forward!

Programme for the Twentieth Century.

THE Young Men's Christian Associations have, through their National Council, agreed to inaugurate the work of the approaching century on the lines of the following programme recently adopted:

I. DISTRICT ORGANIZATION.—Attention to be directed to the more efficient organization of the work of the several district unions, and to the placing of the work of each union under the supervision of a district travelling officer, to be appointed by and responsible to the committee of the union. Workers, it was stated, were immediately required for the North-Midland District and Yorkshire (two), Eastern Counties (one), South and South-East of England (one), Western District (one). The circumstance that five out of every six associations were managed by honorary officers rendered the need an urgent one; while experience had shown that only by the appointment of officers for whom the districts were themselves responsible would it be possible to secure the co-operation of the country in the supplying of its wants.

II. SPECIALIZED WORK.—To give greater attention to forms of effort specially adapted to meet the needs of different classes of young men at present unreached. To this end, to extend the work of the different Prayer Unions and kindred agencies to the larger centres throughout the country, and to attach these different works, when formed, as auxiliaries of the Y.M.C.A.

III. BOYS' WORK.—It is believed that the development of work for boys may prove to be an invaluable preventive agency.

IV. CITY ORGANIZATION. — Work in the larger centres to be developed so as to provide branch organizations for meeting the wants of young men in different parts of these cities and their suburbs; particularly the wants of young men of the artizan and working classes.

V. To provide for the more effective organization and supervision of departments of the work; (a) Bible teaching; (b) the Educational Department, including technical education: (c) the physical and recreative department.

VI. COLONIAL.—The appointment of a deputation secretary to visit and help forward the work of the Associations in the different British Colonies and Dependencies.

VII. FOREIGN.—The extension of the work of this department, and provision of workers for Egypt, Palestine, Hong Kong, the ports of China and Japan and elsewhere.

VIII. NATIONAL STAFF.—(a) Appointments for the metropolis and suburbs, and for the South, East, and West of England; (b) also of an officer to carry forward and develop specialized forms of effort under item II.; and (c) the appointment of at least one more worker in the central office, in order that provision may be made for a considerable development of the publications' department of the Council's work.

IX. Provision for training secretaries, and for bringing qualified workers into the field.

X. To endeavour to secure a fuller measure of financial support and co-operation from the Churches; and, with this object, to present carefully-prepared memorials, through deputations, to the official bodies representing the different Churches—the Archbishops and Bishops, the Wesleyan Conference, the Presbyterian General Assembly, the Congregational Union, the Baptist Union, &c.

Temperance Notes.

FOR the Paris 1900 Exhibition a huge wine barrel has been built, and 150 Nancy workmen have been entertained in it to dinner. The cost of the cask is £6,000.

* * * * *

The Leicester Young Men's Gospel Temperance Mission, which is composed of ten members, reports as a year's work the visitation of 2,008 houses, and the taking of 693 pledges.

* * * * *

The Hon. Holland Hibbert, who is the owner of a good deal of property near Watford, is, we understand, from the Temperance Record, turning some of the inns into temperance refreshment houses. One of them bears the significant sign of the "Old Fox with his teeth drawn."

* * * * *

The attention of the Portuguese Government has recently been called by Senor Limer Duque to the increasing prevalence of alcoholism in Portugal. He showed that crime had increased in a corresponding ratio. The Minister of Finance, while admitting the magnitude of the evil, said the question of legislative interference with the drink traffic presented great difficulties in Portugal, for its wine exports made a constant supply of good and cheap alcohol necessary for the trade.

* * * * *

The Baroness Langenau, of Vienna, in a letter to Miss Agnes E. Slack, writes: "Public opinion in Vienna regarding the temperance question has been undergoing a most remarkable change during the last six months. While people formerly laughed at the bare idea of giving up beer and wine drinking, they now hold large meetings in which total abstinence is preached to enthusiastic audiences. This is partly due to a series of lectures, which three doctors, all of them total abstainers, have been giving. Though these lectures have been repeated twenty-nine or thirty times, the demand to hear them is so great that the lecturers cannot satisfy all the applications.

Work Among Fishermen.—The British and Foreign Sailors' Society has received a promise of £1,000 from one of its most valued lady helpers towards the proposed building to be erected at Great Yarmouth for the benefit of fishermen, fishergirls, and seamen generally. Some 2,000 fishermen and kipper girls come every year from Scotland and the North alone to catch and cure the fish. Only £1,500 more is necessary to complete the scheme. Contributions may be addressed to Messrs. Prescott, Dimsdale and Co., Cornhill, London.

Japanese Sailors.—Miss McLean, whose work on behalf of Japanese sailors continues its useful course, has received intelligence from the Japanese naval department to the effect that hundreds of sailors will be in England during the ensuing months. Miss McLean will therefore be very thankful if the friends who have hitherto helped in making book-bags for her will send a fresh supply, and she also wishes to express her gratitude for previous gifts. For patterns of bags, address Miss McLean, Japanese Christian Institute, Dock Road, Tilbury Dock, Essex.

Aborigines Protection Society.—The work of this society consists chiefly in collecting information as to the condition and treatment of the natives of more or less uncivilized countries under British control or influence. The zeal of pioneers and promoters of civilization sometimes causes indifference to the rights of natives; and cruelty and hardship have frequently been exposed and restrained through the Society's action in prompting the Government or Parliament to take the necessary steps. Most of the work is unpaid, but increased support is needed. Secretary, Mr. H. Fox Bourne, Broadway Chambers, Westminster, S.W.

Paris Exposition, 1900.—It is interesting to observe that the Evangelical Christians of France are organizing a definite deliverance of Gospel testimony and a bold statement of Protestant principles for the Exposition to be held next year. The Central Committee of the Mission Intérieure Evangélique have proposed measures on a scale that shall compel public attention. To begin with, a large hall, to hold 1,500 or 2,000 people, will be provided to serve as a centre of preaching and teaching effort. Lecturers, evangelists, and singers, representative of all the churches, will combine to place the Gospel in evidence before the millions who will visit Paris from many lands; and by means of a series of conferences and meetings, designed for popular instruction and evangelization, it is hoped that, with the blessing of God, a great opportunity will be embraced in a manner that will be to the good of souls, and prove a fitting discharge of obligation on the part of the Evangelical Christians of France.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, July 17th, 1899.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd."; this will effectually prevent loss.

H.I.M.—Please send us address of Anti-Ritualistic League.

	£	s.	d.
Famine, South Russia—A Wesleyan, £1; Miss R., 10s.; S.D., £1; M.E.B., £1	3	10	0
Women's Armenian Relief Fund—Anonymous, £5; (Van) A Wesleyan, £1	6	0	0
Work Among Priests in France (Home)—A Wesleyan	0	10	0
Church Missionary Society (Famine in E. Africa)—S.R., 2s. 6d.; S.D., £1; Anonymous, £5; (Medical Missions) M.W., £1	7	2	6
Blind Chinese Women (Mr. Murray)—Cs.	1	0	0
Mrs. Aitchison's Girls' School, Natal—Cs.	1	0	0
Pundita Ramabai's Widows—Cs., £2; I.M., £10 ...	12	0	0
China Inland Mission—M.S.S., 3s.; S.N., £10; Kappa, 10s.; M.W., £1; In Memoriam, £15 ...	26	13	0
Tibetan Pioneer Mission (Miss Taylor)—Mrs. N., 2s. 6d.; Miss J.S., 5s.; Hamish, £4	4	7	6
Moravian Missions—H.M.A.S., £1; M.W., £1; Thankoffering, M.J.S., 10s.	2	10	0
	3	0	0
Y.M.C.A., Brussels—M.S.	1	0	0
British and Foreign Bible Society—M.W.	1	0	0
McAll Mission, France—M.W.	1	0	0
Work Among Priests in France—M.W.	1	0	0
British Syrian Schools—M.W.	1	0	0
Miss De Broen's Work, Paris—M.W.	0	10	0
Bost Institute, France—M.W.	0	10	0
North Africa Mission—M.W., 10s.; Faith, Woodford, 10s.	1	0	0
Work at Evian le Bains—M.W., ...	0	10	0
London Missionary Society—M.E.B....	3	0	0
Ragged School Union (Holiday Fund)—F.S. ...	0	2	0
Flower Girls' Mission—F.R.J., 6s. 8d.; (Blind and Cripple Children's Holiday) P.E.C.K., 10s.; L.J., 10s.; M.A.S., 2s.; M.A.S.L., 10s.; W.C., £1	2	18	8
Day in Country Fund—P.E.C.K., 10s.; Cs., £1; A.F., 2s. 6d.; T.P., £1; A.I.C., £2; H.L., 10s.; Sympathy, £2 2s.; M.W., 10s.; R.P., 5s.; F.C., 5s.; F.R.J., 6s. 8d.	8	11	2
St. Giles' Christian Mission—J.J.G., 2s. 6d.; O.M., £1; F.R.J., 6s. 8d.; In Memoriam, £15; (Prison) M.W., £1; (Children's Holiday Home) S.S.G., 3s.; D. St. A., £1; M.A.S.L., 10s.; Artemis, £3; Thankoffering, M.J.S., 10s.; (Convalescent Home) D. St. A., £1; (Day in Country) J.R.W. and Friend, 10s.	24	2	2
Friedenheim House for Dying—Cs.	1	0	0
London Bible and Domestic Mission (Southend Home)—Cs.	1	0	0
Mildmay Institutions (The Haven)—Cs. £1; (Mrs. Pennefather's Memorial Home) Cs. £1; (Hospital) Cs. £1	3	0	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—Cs. £1; C.S., 13s. 8d; M.W., £1	2	13	8
London Tent Campaign—Cs.	1	0	0
Tower Hamlets Mission (Tent)—Cs.	1	0	0
Home Blind Children, Clapton—Cs.	0	10	0
Dr. Stephenson's Girls' Parlour—Cs. 10s; (Homes) H.M.A.S., £1	1	10	0
Children's Special Service Mission (Mr. Spiers' Work)—Cs.	0	10	0
Mrs. Bramwell Booth's Rescue Work—Cs.	5	0	0
George Yard Mission (Day in Country)—C.M.E., 10s.; M.A.S., 2s.; Artemis, £2; J.R.W. and Friend, 10s.	3	2	0
Christian Community (Widows)—S.S.G.	0	4	0
London City Mission—In Memoriam, £15; (Disabled Missionaries, &c.) In Memoriam, £10; (Bermondsey) T.O., 10s.	25	10	0
Kensit Crusade—T.P.	0	10	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—T.D.H., 10s.; M.W., £1; F.H., 10s.; (Emigration) H.M.A.S., £1	3	0	0
King Edward Ragged School—H.M.A.S.	0	15	0
Evangelization Society—H.M.A.S.	2	2	0
Costers' Mission (Mr. Orsman)—H.M.A.S.	0	10	0
London Aged Christian Society—H.M.A.S.	1	1	0
Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland—H.M.A.S. ...	1	0	0
Miss Sharman's Orphan Homes—H.M.A.S.	1	0	0
N.E. London Gospel Mission—R.P., 10s.; (Lancing Home) Hamish, £10; C.F.R., 5s.; Firstfruits, £1	11	15	0
Invalid Help—Artemis	1	0	0
London Society Promoting Christianity among the Jews—L.S.W.	0	10	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—Kappa, 10s.; M.W., £1	1	10	0
Old Ford Mission—M.S.	1	0	0
R.N. Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—M.W.	1	0	0
Miss Weston's Work R.N.—M.W.	1	0	0
Livingstone College (Dr. Battersby)—M.W.... ...	1	0	0
Friendless and Fallen—M.W.	1	0	0
Uncle Tom's Cot (see page 20)—...	0	5	0
Sailors' Welcome Home (Miss Child)—M.W. ...	1	0	0
Mrs. Meredith's Mission—M.W....	1	0	0
Gratuitous Circulation of The Christian—M.W....	0	5	0
The Christian Tract Fund—M.W.	0	5	0
Children's Country Holiday Fund—E.P.W.... ...	1	0	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—Faith, Woodford	0	10	0
Scripture Gift Mission—Heb. iv. 12.	1	15	0
Rev. J. W. Atkinson's Day in Country Fund—G. ...	0	2	6
Mr. Fegan's Homes—R.P., 10s.; F.C., 5s.; Thankoffering, M.J.S., 10s.	1	5	0
Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry—R.P.	0	5	0
Homes Aged Blind, Crouch Hill—F.C.	0	5	0
Joshua Poole—T.O.	0	5	0
Dock Labourers' Mission—Miss H.	0	2	6
Rev. D. Baron's Work among Jews—S.A.	0	10	0
Religious Tract Society—M.E.B.	1	0	0
Rev. T. G. Wilson (Sick and Poor)—Thankoffering, M.J.S.	0	10	0
Total	£198	14	8

(ADVERTISEMENT.)

Ragged School Union Holiday Fund—E. and M., £1.

Bethnal Green Free Library—Mr. and Mrs. H.J.W., £1.

Flower Girls' Mission (Blind Children's Holiday)—A.D., £2.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, 98, High Street, Homerton, London, N.E., beg to gratefully acknowledge the following donations for Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent, and for the relief of the poor:—J.O.T., 5s.; H., 10s.; E.S., 2s.; M.D., 10s.; A.B., 2s. 7d.; L., £1 1s.

(934)

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Estd.] [1835.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

The Profits are divided solely amongst the Assured; already divided, £5,400,000.

Claims Paid Nearly - £10,500,000.
Invested Funds Exceed £5,250,000.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at minimum cost, with provision for old age. The practical effect of these Policies in the National Provident Institution is that the Member's life is assured until he reaches the age agreed upon, and on his reaching that age the whole of the Premiums paid are returned to him, and a considerable sum in addition, representing a by no means insignificant rate of interest on his payments.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C. ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary & Secretary.

THE

"BRIDGE OF HOPE."

The Night Shelter.
The Refuge.
Eight Children's Cottage Homes.

All the Homes are full, but we are just now absolutely without Funds.

SPECIAL DONATIONS

are earnestly asked for to meet the present urgent need.

MARY H. STEER.

28, Betts Street, St. George's, London, E.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME and ORPHANAGE.

FOUNDER AND PRINCIPAL:
REV. DR. STEPHENSON.

4,300 Children rescued. 1,100 now in residence. 46 waiting to come in.

Amongst the Children are the ORPHAN, DESTITUTE, CRIPPLED, BLIND, DEAF AND DUMB, or otherwise DISADVANTAGED.

IMMEDIATE HELP IS URGENTLY NEEDED.

ADDRESS:
REV. DR. STEPHENSON,
BONNER ROAD, LONDON, N.E.

Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission

Summer, and the consequent falling off in private subscriptions, compels us to again ask the kind help of the readers of The Christian to enable

CURRENT LIABILITIES,

which amount to about £250,

to be met.

PLEASE HELP US

in this, our time of need.

Cheques and P.O.'s may be made payable to Mrs. Meredith and crossed "London and South-Western Bank," Stockwell Branch.

Office—143, Clapham Road, S.W.

BRITISH CHAUTAUQUA.

Summer School at Saltburn (Yorks), August 12th to 26th.

One Week, £2 15s. Two Weeks, £5 10s.

Including Boarding Accommodation, Excursions by Coach and Rail, and Free Admission to all Meetings, Lectures, and Classes, but EXCLUDING Railway Fare.

Summer School at Folkestone, September 17th to 30th.

One Week, £3 7s. 6d. Two Weeks, £5 17s. 6d.

Including Accommodation, Excursions, and Admissions, and INCLUDING the Railway Fare from London.

For full particulars apply to the Secretary, Mr. Laurence M. Gibson, M.A., 111, Abbey Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

THE LONDON FEMALE GUARDIAN SOCIETY

Was founded A.D. 1807 for the RESCUE and FREE Admission of BETRAYED and FALLEN WOMEN from all parts of the United Kingdom. 100 Inmates.

MANY THOUSANDS of Penitent Women have been welcomed to these HOMES. Persons interested in Rescue Work are invited to send cases, and to assist the Industrial Department by patronising its Laundry.

Funds are urgently required to meet pressing needs and to discharge a Mortgage Debt of £4,000, and will be thankfully received by Mr. W. Page, Secretary, 191, High Street, Stoke Newington, London, N.

ROYAL NATIONAL

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Patron: HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN. This Society carries on Medical Mission Work amongst the Fishermen on the North Sea and other Fishing Grounds, and in Labrador.

HELP EARNESTLY ASKED

Requires £20,000 per annum.

Treasurer: Thomas B. Miller, Esq. (Offices, 181, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.), to whom contributions may be sent; or to the Office of The Christian.

THE SICK POOR

Both ADULTS and CHILDREN are aided by the

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

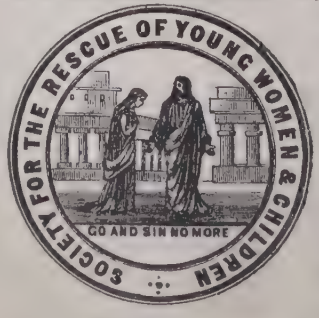
Will you help even ONE of the

HUNDREDS OF WEAKLY LITTLE CHILDREN

who urgently need, and are waiting for, the benefits of a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME,

Or of the numerous SICK and DESTITUTE MEN and WOMEN who equally need a



FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CONVALESCENT HOME?

FUNDS ABSOLUTELY INADEQUATE.

WM. WHEATLEY, Superintendent, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.

Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., a/c St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE RESCUE SOCIETY,

79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, E.C.

THE New Report just issued is encouraging, and shows that good work has been done with very blessed results, and the year closed well financially.

Unhappily this condition of funds has not continued, and there is very urgent need of help to the extent of £1,000. Special efforts are also being made to clear the freehold houses of the Society from all charges, and there is a debt of £2,300 on these.

WHO WILL HELP IN THIS TIME OF NEED?

CONTRIBUTIONS may be sent to the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay & Co., 54, Lombard Street; or will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Secretary,

C. STUART THORPE, 79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription Rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE continuance of the hot weather, and the many delights by land and sea of the holiday season, may serve to remind us of those unfortunate inhabitants of our city slums, who seldom or never know what it is to escape for a season from the stuffiness of court and alley. We desire to offer to our readers the privilege of helping to provide some slight recreation for such by means of our "Day in the Country Fund," which affords a great deal of refreshment to poor children at a comparatively small cost.

Well done, the Dean of Hereford, who refused to open a bazaar at Muswell Hill at which claret and champagne cups were to be on sale at the stalls. In his place, the Hon. George and Lady Mildred Allsopp performed the ceremony, as the vicar would not abandon these reprehensible attractions.

The death from apoplexy of Col. Ingersoll, the American agnostic, has removed a man of remarkable parts. The son of a Congregational minister, he occupied a similar position to that of Charles Bradlaugh in this country, being a vigorous debater, lecturer, and writer. His bête noir was the Church; but it is not unlikely that his bitter diatribes did much to purify and stimulate Christian work, and when that was done the raison d'etre of his propaganda failed. Active, practical Christianity is the best answer to agnosticism. By its fruit it is known.

One of the most astounding features of the Peace Conference is that the opponents of proposals for more humanitarian usage in war should have been England and America! Dum-Dum bullets and other terrible appliances were rejected by all the other delegates, but owing to the refusal of the countries named to endorse this view, no condemnatory resolution could be passed. We should have expected our delegate to take the lead in endeavouring to minimize the horrors of modern warfare.

In the New Century Review Mr. Escott brings a charge against preachers of secularizing the Sunday, which has, we fear, too much truth in it. He puts it in an exaggerated form, but it is none the less substantially true in certain quarters, that > the Sunday sermons that classes and masses alike, quite as much in churches as in chapels, are constrained to hear, really do more to destroy the distinction between Sunday and week-day teaching and reading than would the issue of half-a-dozen morning papers.

In mitigation of the severity of this charge, may we observe that it is not so long since secular writers were always girding at preachers for not applying religion to every-day life, for not dealing with things in which all are interested. Now it is being found out that, after all, the pulpit has themes which are all its own. It may presently gain the true balance between not neglecting either daily or eternal things.

In this connection we feel it is time a protest was made against the multiplication of "cyclists' church parades." An honest endeavour to reach Sunday cyclists is one thing; to organize "parades," and thus to foster a growing evil, is quite another.

A student of criminology, after careful investigation, has placed on record his belief that 75 per cent. of the crimes committed can be traced directly to lack of employment. He does not think that it is possible to devise any system by which every one can be employed. Therefore the thing to do, in order to decrease crime from this source as much as possible, is to provide means for interesting those who are perforce inactive.

The gaols (he says) are filled with men who, if they had been enabled to continue in honest employment, would have to-day been tax-payers instead of tax-consumers. Humanity is slothful by nature. Once cultivate the habit of slothfulness, and the unscrupulous mind seeks a means of gratifying the desire for ease without labour.

The inevitable consequence of this is law-breaking. The self-respect the individual might feel when earning an honest livelihood is totally lost the moment he sinks in the mire of slothfulness.

The primary law, then, of a true political economy, is not to buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest, but to keep the people usefully and wholesomely employed, and healthily interested when not employed. A country is surely the worse and not the better for becoming rich if the wealth be concentrated in few hands instead of being distributed among the many. The multiplication of millionaires is a peril and a curse. We cannot serve God and mammon.

The Church Times rightly warns its readers against being beguiled by what it calls "the lull after the Anti-Ritualist storm which now prevails" into thinking that the battle of sacerdotalism has been won, and suggests a plan of compaign for educating the people in its own tenets. This plan includes the provision of authoritative works on Ritualism in every parish vestry or reading-room — a cautious inculcation of sacerdotal teaching, carefully avoiding emphasis on points felt to be difficulties on the part of "inquirers," and an "enlightened" study of the Bible—and a clearing away of the notion that Ritualism logically leads to Rome. There is much of the wisdom of the serpent in this attitude, and especially in the further suggestion that "the strength of Churchmen is not in bluster, but in quiet work." It is the very quietness and secrecy of the sacerdotal movement, and its faculty of being all things unto all men (in other than the Apostolic sense) that constitute its gravest danger.

This significant article in our High Church contemporary conveys a lesson to those who are combating with sacerdotalism as well as those who defend it. The British public is prone to sudden fits of alarm and panic in the face of a recognized danger. The Kensit agitation effectually drew attention to the rapid and widespread advance of sacerdotalism in the high places of the land. Just now there seems to be a pause in the campaign, and the Ritualists are lying low in the hope that the storm will soon pass away. Those who recognize the deadly evils of sacerdotalism would do well not to be misled by any idea that the movement is dead or dying. Under many specious disguises it is still at work, and the words of the Church Times are enough to show that it is as militant and aggressive as ever. Only by persistent watchfulness, and untiring advocacy of Protestant and Evangelical principles, can its inrush be stemmed, and its poison be neutralized.

Not long ago, a speaker at the Ethical Society deplored the hold which "supernaturalism" retained on the minds of religious people, and looked forward to the time when that would follow other superstitions into the limbo of outworn beliefs. Some representatives of forward thinking in the Church of England seem determined to join hands with this in their own attitude towards the miraculous in the Bible. Canon Cheyne, in a sermon delivered recently in Rochester Cathedral, went so far as to say:

> We who live in an historical age must try all reports of miracles by historical tests, and so tried many reports vanish into thin air; others become wonderful works, not miracles. The modern historical mind is incapable of accepting what is commonly called a miracle; but is the modern historical mind therefore irreligious? Certainly not.

This extract suggests two reflections. First, how far men may retain the religious temper in spite of surrendering belief in the miraculous, is a difficult and irrelevant point, and must be dealt with on its merits. Secondly, the inability of the so-called "modern historical mind" to accept miracles as real occurrences, cannot rule them out of history without postulating an infallible power of testing the reality of things on the part of this "modern historical mind." No one who fairly considers the New Testament claims can fail to realize that it is saturated through and through with the miraculous. The ruling out, or explanation on natural ground, of individual miracles in no way depletes the Gospel history of the miraculous element. Everywhere we find ourselves face to face with the supernatural in the Book; to deny it is to undo its very texture and to relegate its message to the region of outworn superstitions. For grace is as miraculous as the raising of the dead, and the New Birth as supernatural as the physical resurrection of Jesus.

The discussion of the Bill for providing seating accommodation for female shop assistants during the intervals of business, has brought certain important points into prominence which should not be allowed to fall into the background. One of these is the thoughtless way in which many intending purchasers increase the labours of shop assistants, in their eagerness to make good bargains. Another is the habit of purchasers, especially those belonging to the working classes, of leaving their shopping till late hours, thus greatly increasing the difficulty of early closing. This inconsiderate selfishness, which is largely the fruit of lack of foresight, is most reprehensible, and involves much overstrain on thousands of weak women who have to earn their living behind the counter. A little quickening of the social instinct would make reform much easier, and lighten the labour of thousands of most deserving people.

A part of the fund subscribed to provide a memorial to the late Dr. Dale, of Birmingham, is to award a gold medal for general proficiency to pupils in King Edward's School in the town. The first medal has been struck, and will be presented at the close of the current school term. The statue to this distinguished Nonconformist minister, being part of the memorial scheme, is now in the Art Gallery. It is to be hoped that the winners of this medal year by year will all be loyal to the Protestant faith which was so dear to the heart of Dr. Dale, and that some of them will follow in his steps as preachers of the "Gospel of the glory of the blessed God." The translation of the Latin inscription of the reverse side of the medal is as follows:—

In memory of Robert William Dale, a man courageous, steadfast, strenuous. Towards men blameless, faithful, magnanimous; worshipping God in sincere piety.

The South African atmosphere is clearing, and the prospects of peaceably settling the Uitlander controversy in the Transvaal is growing daily brighter. A wise and determined public opinion, acting in South Africa as well as at home, has produced its inevitable result, and sufficiently solid concessions have been promised to make war more unlikely. The present position emphasizes the value of time and free and open discussion of international disputes. Racial conflicts are almost always the result of sudden and ill-considered action. A frank and leisurely consideration of disputed questions is one of the greatest guarantees of peace and progress.

The unrest through which we have passed reminds us that "rumours of wars" entail no small amount of ill; provoking pride, stirring up hate, calling forth reviling words, and exciting an evil state of feeling from which nations do not recover for a long time. It is, we admit, too true that "the only political sentiment which strongly moves the imagination of the nation as a whole at this period is the passion of empire." Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Rudyard Kipling are perhaps more influential than any politicians who could be named. One reflection, however, ought to give us pause in the work of increasing our empire—"How do we propose to meet our new responsibilities?"

A German journalist has given some interesting statistics regarding the income and expenditure of the Pope. Leo XIII. requires 7,000,000fr. (£280,000) annually for the payment of his private chaplains and the support of his household in the Vatican and elsewhere. Cardinals and diplomatic representatives abroad cost £20,000; the up-keep of the Vatican £100,000 (an enormous sum); alms and gifts to schools and charities £60,000; "presents" and other gifts £60,000, and "miscellaneous expenses" another £40,000. It is clear that whatever may be the simplicity and abstemiousness of life of the Pope himself, the above expenditure involves an enormous and extravagant outlay of money largely drawn from the pockets of the poor in the form of indulgences and "Peter's pence."

Is it not a significant fact that the Pope's capital is deposited chiefly with Messrs. Rothschild in London, where also, it is said, King Humbert has deposited his private fortune? Why does the Pope not bank with some "faithful and beloved Catholic country," such as Austria, or France, or Spain? We are not complaining; we only think he is a good judge of a safe place—in the capital of the most "heretical" country in the world!

If the writings of Dr. John Watson (Ian Maclaren) are sometimes open to question because of their inadequate statement of Christian truth, we are glad to see that in an article in The Expositor on "The Vicarious Sacrifice of Jesus Christ," he takes the view of an objective, real atonement. He does not make the Cross a mere moral influence without anything for the influence to come from; he says in the old familiar way which has brought peace to millions:

Because He died their sin would be forgiven, and therefore before dying, He must have taken upon Him the load of their guilt, and in dying He must have expiated the same, according to the demands of everlasting law and according to the will of God. . . . If, indeed, the sin of the human race gathered in one huge penalty and cloud of guilt upon the head of Jesus Christ, then it is no wonder that He suffered in Gethsemane and besought the Father that the cup should pass from Him.

Of course, this avowal of the evangelical belief has caused surprise in some quarters, but it may be that Dr. Watson always was evangelical, though not giving such prominence to its central doctrine as he has done here; or, as with many others, he may have come to feel the need of that truth which certainly was taught by Peter and John and Paul.

Suggestive Readings.

THE CHURCH.

IT is being urged by some teachers who are esteemed very highly in love for dear works' sake that the Church was originated at Pentecost, will be completed at the second coming of our Lord, and is and will be a distinct body through the ages to come from all who have gone before or who may follow after.

May I be allowed to give one reason for not accepting these statements, except so far as that it is freely admitted that dispensationally the Church began at Pentecost?

In writing to the Churches of Galatia, the Apostle argues that as the heir, so long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he is lord of all, but is under tutors and governors until the time appointed by the father; so we (the Church, for he is writing to the Churches) were in bondage to the Law, which was our schoolmaster, our child-conductor unto Christ.

But as, when the time appointed has come, the child is no more as a servant, but enjoys and exercises the privileges and rights of sonship; so, when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman (made under the Law to redeem them that are under the Law), that we might receive the adoption (the sonship) of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, "Abba, Father!" Wherefore thou art no more a servant but a son, and, if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.

The heir was not created when he received the spirit of sonship. He had had a long preparatory experience, as a child under tutors, as a servant under governors.

In like manner, the Church was not created at Pentecost. It passed its minority under tutors and governors, the Law having been its schoolmaster unto Christ; and when the fulness of the time had come, the time appointed by the Father, we (the Church) received the spirit of sonship, whereby we cry, "Abba, Father," so that thou art no more a servant but a son, and, if a son, then an heir of God through Christ. M.

The Transvaal Crisis.

By Mrs. JOSEPHINE BUTLER.

A WEIGHTY petition is being signed in Holland, addressed by the Dutch to the English people, praying all good Christians and wise patriots to use their utmost influence against the threatened war with the Dutch Republic in the Transvaal. Your readers are numerous, and through you I hope I may be allowed to send to them an appeal from the depths of my own heart, also to further as much as possible the aim of this petition.

I would make another appeal—though it may not be needful—to all who sincerely desire to obey the teaching of Christ, that they will unite in strong and faithful prayer to the God of Peace that such a war may be averted. It is difficult to speak too strongly of the rashness of those who promote it, and of the dire results that would follow. The Boers are not a force to be despised. They cannot be crushed as easily as Mr. Cecil Rhodes imagines. Such a war as this, of which he is one of the instigators, will cost much in blood and money, and what is worse, in long-lasting race animosity. Millions will have to be expended on it, which means heavy taxation of our people; and thousands of human lives will have to be sacrificed to it.

Apart from these considerations, where is there a case for resorting to this last and terrible alternative? No doubt the Outlanders have just cause of complaint and protest; but a settlement by mutual concession and a prolonged and patient diplomacy seems not by any means impossible.

To arrive at such a settlement, it seems to me that the first thing needed is that the minds and hearts of the persons who represent most prominently the opposing interests should be moved by a Power above and beyond themselves.

I hear good people say, while desiring peace, "But we have no power to arrest the influence of the war press, to repress the personal ambitions of colonial secretaries, or to remove any blindness or obstinacy from the minds of the Government of the Transvaal."

I reply, we have open to us to-day as direct approach to the Ruler of the Universe as had the ancient Jewish people when hosts were arming for battle, and war with all its attendant miseries was imminent; and when the people, or even a single faithful prophet or leader representing them, made a direct appeal to Jehovah, He, the Hearer of Prayer, interposed and the threatening clouds dispersed.

Many events, many voices seem to be calling us at this day to put to the proof, in a way which we have never yet done, the power and the faithfulness of God in regard to national as well as personal questions.

An example is being now given to us of the direct interposition of the Divine hand in the wonderful history of Alfred Dreyfus. He has for four and a half years endured tortures, mental and physical, which it seemed impossible for human strength to endure and surmount. During the last two or three years prayer has ascended for him, and for the cause of justice which he represents, from thousands of hearts in many lands—from the heart of families, where in daily worship his name was never forgotten, and (here in Switzerland) from churches. And what a resurrection have we seen! He, restored to health of body and mind, released from a hideous imprisonment and from sufferings such as the Spanish Inquisition might have imposed, returned to his native land; his enemies—the enemies of justice—in a great measure laid beneath his feet, and France saved from a great crime and brought at last into the dawn of a better light.

These things should give believers a holy courage. Let us unite, all who desire peace and the averting of heavy calamities and judgments, in a firm, and faithful, and persevering appeal to the God with whom "all things are possible."

Our Fortieth Birthday.

WITH the present issue we complete our fortieth year of publication, the first number, under the title of The Revival, having been issued on July 30, 1859.

Since then, as many of our readers will reflect, what events have transpired, what battles have been fought with formalism and with indifference! How many devoted workers, whom we have known and revered, have passed into the presence of their Lord. Evangelical Christians have had, and now have, many causes for rejoicing. While it is patent that sacerdotal forces have in some respects made regrettable advances, let us not fail to continually thank the Giver of all good for the new and vigorous Gospel movements that have arisen, and for the prayerful zeal that characterizes the many aggressive workers and organizations that are striving to stem the tide of evil. Surely our watchword is "Forward!"

As regards ourselves, we may be allowed to say that we reach the present epoch in our history with many emotions, chief among which is that of humble gratitude that God has enabled us to steer our journalistic course with a consistent aim. The Christian may be described as having been "born in a revival," when the great spiritual awakening of '59 was shaking the country; and we may express an earnest trust and belief that in these days, too, we are about to witness a gracious outpouring of the Spirit. May we, in conclusion, ask our readers—to whom we express our hearty thanks for all their help and good wishes—to unite in prayer that this may be so? "Wilt Thou not revive us again; that thy people may rejoice in Thee?"

"These Forty Years"—1859-1899.

A BIRTHDAY LETTER:

To the Editor of The Christian.

MY DEAR SIR,—Birthdays are sometimes secrets; but if the approaching fortieth birthday of The Christian is at all generally known, I can well understand that a veritable shower-bath of congratulatory letters may be rained upon you by Her Majesty's Royal Mail, for numerous indeed are the readers who will desire and wish "Many happy returns of the day" to a paper which has rooted itself in the hearts and homes of so many of us. My own wishes are hearty and genuine, whilst some of the tenderest chords are touched by memories which span the forty years between 1859 and 1899.

Forty years ago, less printed matter was obtainable for a penny, and Christian weeklies were fewer by far than now. It would not be true to say that I remember the first number of The Revival; but the very earliest paper which I do remember (excepting the Band of Hope Review, perhaps) is the ancestor of your present more bulky journal.

It is connected in my mind with the first and only deep religious awakening which has swept over our village during my lifetime. Some of the "Woolwich Boys" conducted services at that time, which, here as elsewhere, like a huge wave of the Divine Spirit, carried into the harbour of grace many a careless or halting soul. There was excitement, of course; but it was something more than excitement which, night after night, filled to overflowing the various places of meeting; and that, too, at a time when the stolid country-folk were at their busiest time—the middle of the harvest.

It was in connection with this movement that I first remember The Revival, which brought to us stimulating accounts of like visitations from God elsewhere. Thereafter your paper became as a family and a personal friend; and I gratefully testify that many a time its Scriptural, sober, and well-balanced teaching has been of incalculable help and comfort to my own heart throughout the years. Many are the instances in which I have found it equally helpful to others, and some of these would be singularly pathetic if I were at liberty to tell them. As a far and near, at home and abroad, the paper has a value which is surely almost unique; and I think it will one day ("one fair, sweet day") be found that, of all the human instrumentalities which God has used for the breaking down of sectarian barriers between his own people, few have been more potent to this end than the dissemination of The Christian.

BOND OF UNION BETWEEN CHRISTIANS,

In the train, on board ship, and in countless other ways, friendships have been formed or cemented by a common sympathy in your paper. Only a week or two ago I saw two Christians sitting together at a huge gathering. They were strangers, obviously; but the deep crêpe worn by each had awakened a mutual tenderness of manner. Presently a copy of The Christian was produced, and then instantly the hands met in a close grasp, which asked for no further introduction. That one little incident is typical of what is always happening by means of your paper, quite apart from its primary ends and objects.

No comment needs to be made on its usefulness as a medium between the Church of Christ and the many Christ-like missions to which, through it, the Church ministers of its substance. And it is possible that even you, dear sir, do not yet know how largely the paper is itself used as amongst believers. Within the last month I found one dear Christian who, from straitened means, was still sending away five copies weekly to others; nor can I believe that the money thus used could be put out at better interest, or bring larger returns of blessing.

AS A MEANS OF PERSONAL MINISTRY

In connection with your present anniversary, the dominant note must undoubtedly be a glad and praiseful one. For the great grace which has kept your journal from many a spiritual quicksand; for its unwavering testimony to Jesus, as the Lord's Anointed One; for its catholicity and wide-heartedness; and for the sustaining strength from on high which has enabled the same frail human hands to hold the reins of editorship so long—for one and all of these you and your readers will surely unite in a new song of praise "unto Him who was, and who is, and who is to come . . . to Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood."

Believe me, dear sir,
Yours very heartily,
A Constant Reader.

Emigration for Women. —In connection with the United British Women's Emigration Association, Mrs. Adelaide Ross writes: "The work which I have been enabled to do during the past twelve months has been unusually efficient on account of the very generous response made to a letter in The Christian, requesting stuff dresses, warm jackets and cloaks. They have been a great boon to our travellers to the far west. We find increasingly that we are able to help women of a superior social position both to South Africa and Canada. A young lady who went out as a companion-help to Vancouver writes, 'Why don't some of the white slaves of England come out here and enjoy this simple, natural, but not lazy, life. Best thanks for the opportunities you have given me in sending me out here.' Many of the donors of clothing are anonymous, so I hope the thanks rendered by the recipients will reach them through your columns. Parcels may be addressed, Mrs. Ross, 18, Upper Westbourne Place, London, W."

Encouragement to Preachers.

YOUNG preachers require to be frequently reminded that although little or no fruit appears, after earnest wrestling prayer and faithful testimony, yet results may be near and real work done.

Witnessing, some years ago, in the township of Fielding, New Zealand, I possibly saw some evidences—certainly not all. A very able, hard-headed and probably hard-hearted blacksmith was present, and went home showing no signs of penitence. Two years after that, a letter came to me saying that he was dying, and although I did not know him, yet he besought me to travel about eighty or 100 miles to see him. I answered his wife's earnest call with the following reply:—"I cannot really go at present, but I will write a very clear Gospel letter." His wife said he disliked ministers, and would attend no preaching, but he had heard me, and appeared to be truly and sincerely anxious.

When he received my letter, he closed with the Lord Jesus at once, and in a week, or even sooner, he came to the hospital in my town of Wanganui. He was very weakly, but I could see that his hard, manly face had calm and rest written upon it. As I hung over his bed speaking to him, he flung his arms, still strong, round my neck and pulled me down to him and kissed me more than once, saying,

"I AM SOON GOING—YES, SOON."

I was asked once to dine with a proprietor about seven miles out of Wanganui—one who rarely went to church, and who, although a moral and respected member of society, was not one who ever heard religious conversation at his table. The young Christian friend who brought the invitation besought me to avoid even asking a blessing or making any references to Christ in the house, as the gentleman had a quick temper and might resent it. As I was much older than he was, and as my habit of preaching was well known to my host, I was certain he would expect some spiritual conversation. He did allow me to speak in the evening upon Bible subjects, and did not appear to be offended; but as I was in his own house and he was a gentlemanly man, I could not be sure that he actually approved of it. After that time he was in my own house in Wanganui, occasionally for short calls, and I hoped his HEART WAS MOVING TOWARDS THE TRUTH.

About three or four months after that I was resting from general work in a country house far from his home, when I received a letter from one of his family urging me to call at once, as he was seriously ill. He declined to see any minister, but said he would gladly allow me to speak to him. I took the first train to Wanganui. He received me warmly, and said, "You must understand I am as ignorant as a child about religion; the only religion I have ever imagined was, 'Do to others as you would have others do to you.'"

Naturally an energetic, able man, his words astonished me. God makes us childlike before we can be his children. I touched upon God's holiness, justice, wondrous love in giving Jesus as a Saviour: I gave an anecdote or two to make it clear. His face gradually changed, and upon my second visit he said, "Yes, I think I see it." He agreed with my request to kneel down and thank God that he was saved by Jesus, who gave up his life on the cross. At the next visit it was evident he was more interested in thinking about Christ and his love than in me personally. His funeral was attended by a host of old volunteers and relations, and although a Presbyterian minister, an old friend also of my own, conducted the funeral, I took a good position from which I could address the large audience.

As an aged preacher, let me bear witness that no preaching platform can compare with a "grave-yard." Old worldly friends, men who never enter churches, are there, and yet at the grave of a friend their consciences and hearts are greatly exercised.

Gordon Forlong.

Wanganui, New Zealand.

Studies in Zechariah:

II.—The Myrtle Valley.

Zechariah i. 8-17.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THREE months had passed since the preceding vision, and the month Sebat had come, when the trees begin to shoot, and Zechariah says, "I saw by night." What did he see?

If we may be allowed to follow the suggestion of one of the commentaries, we may imagine that not far from the Prophet's home there was a green valley, or bottom, filled with graceful myrtle trees, amid which a watercourse had its way. Thither he may have been accustomed to resort for prayer, as our Lord retired among the olive trees outside Jerusalem. It is conceivable that ever since the return of the exiles from Babylon he had paced this green glade, pouring out his heart in words like those which were afterwards appropriated by the Angel-Intercessor: "O Lord of Hosts, how long wilt Thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which Thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years?" It is pleasant to pray in the open field of nature; the expanse above is suggestive of eternity and unchangeableness, and all the sounds of Nature's varied orchestra, from the rustle of the wind among the leaves to the long-drawn wave-beat on the sand, are marvellously adapted to be an accompaniment to the voice of supplication.

There was a special significance in the presence of the myrtles which grew in humble and fragrant beauty around. The myrtle was a native of Persia and Assyria. Esther's name, Hadassah, meant myrtle. It was, therefore, significant of the return of the exiles from the lands of the north; and its humble beauty was an appropriate symbol of the depressed condition of the chosen people, who could no longer be compared to the spreading cedar, or the deeply-rooted oak, but were like the myrtle, which, though graceful and evergreen, is nevertheless an inconspicuous and unassuming plant. Many believers are as the myrtle. Their heart is not haughty, nor their eyes lofty; neither do they exercise themselves in great matters, nor in things too wonderful for them. They still themselves, as a child weaned from its mother; and their hope is in the Lord for evermore.

On the night in question, which may have followed on a day of

UNUSUAL EXERCISE OF SPIRIT,

Zechariah thought that he was in his favourite valley, surrounded by the myrtles; and behold, in the midst of them a man riding upon a red horse, and behind him there was a group of companions, mounted on horses, red, sorrel and white. The whole valley seemed alive with these mysterious figures. They had doubtless been there whenever the prophet had paced to and fro, or knelt in intercession, but never before had his eyes been opened to see them. Ah! how perpetually are our eyes holden, so that we do not perceive the bands of God's marshalled angels, gathered to our succour. The fountain rises from the desert sands, on which our Ishmaels are dying for thirst, but we perceive it not. The mountains are full of horses and chariots of fire, but we tremble as though there were nothing to prevent the enemy making an end of us. The glorious Lord engirds us, as a broad river with its flashing surface might encircle a city, but only to the anointed eye is his defensive presence made manifest.

Naturally the prophet's curiosity was excited, and he sought the significance of the heavenly vision. Then said I, O my lord, what are these? This inquiry was addressed to a celestial Friend and Adviser, with whom Zechariah was in constant fellowship. He often alludes to him, as the Angel that talked with me (9, 14, 19; iv. 1, 4, 5; v. 5, 10; vi. 4.) This blessed visitant must be distinguished from "the Angel of the Lord," referred to in v. 12, and who could be none other than the Angel of the Covenant, our blessed Lord Himself, to whom, also, the riders gave in their reports (10, 11).

It has often been the comforting reflection of individual saints, that their lives were under the direct tutelage and

CARE OF GUARDIAN ANGELS.

Still God gives his angels charge over us to keep us. Still He sends his angel before us, to bring us into the place that He has prepared. Still the interpreting-angel talks with us (or, as Jerome says, within us), and says, I will show thee what these be.

The holy soul, which has its myrtle valley for prayer, and has been accustomed through long years to pour out its intercessions and supplications before God, though it may have been with small response, is the one for whom presently the veil shall drop from the invisible world; and in that rapturous moment the anointed eye will be opened to behold the ministries of God's high angels, as they go to and fro throughout the world on his embassies; and the purged ear will become the auditor of their elevated converse as they discuss the affairs of men, and especially of those intercessions, with which He pleads for his own. The man that stood among the myrtle trees answered and said, "These are they whom the Lord hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth." Then, as the prophet waited and listened, he heard the report which the angel-scouts handed in to headquarters, one in which they agreed with perfect unanimity: We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest.

It was a time of almost universal peace. The new empire of Cyrus had become securely settled, and beneath the strong rule of his successors there was a grateful cessation of the throes and convulsions which had ushered in the fall of the empire of the Chaldeans.

But to the peace and prosperity of all surrounding countries, the condition of the returned remnant presented a notable and strange contrast. If any spot should be verdant and radiant, surely it should be the hill which the Lord had chosen for Himself; and yet it was desolate. This astounding contrast elicited from the Angel of the Covenant an earnest entreaty that God would show Himself strong on behalf of those whom He had brought back from the land of the enemy. He answered, as though he were speaking to the prophet's thoughts, and said, O Lord of Hosts, how long wilt Thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah!

This is a beautiful glimpse of the intercessions which emanate from our Lord's unchangeable Melchizedek priesthood. The believer having viewed Him in his Aaronic ministry, by which He put away sin through the sacrifice of Himself, derives great comfort from considering Him as a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek, having no beginning of days nor end of life, but abiding a Priest continually, and ever living to make intercession in the heavenly temple for his people. "Simon, Simon, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee." What untold benefit accrues to us from his ceaseless and prevalent prayers!

And the Lord (i.e., the Angel of the Covenant) answered the angel that talked with me with good words and comfortable words. It was as though the Father had heard and answered the pleadings of the Son, and returned Him an answer, which He passed on to Zechariah's Angel-Guide; and then the Prophet in turn was bidden proclaim them with the urgency and insistence of a cry: Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, I am jealous for Jerusalem, and for Zion, with a great jealousy.

More disclosures of God's will followed; that He was displeased with the nations, who had gone beyond his commission; that He had returned to Jerusalem with great mercies; that the Holy House should be built again; that the line of the builder should be stretched again over Jerusalem; that the cities of Judah were his cities, which should yet be spread forth in prosperity; that the Lord should yet comfort Zion and choose Jerusalem.

Zechariah awoke, and, behold, it was a dream. But was it not more? Did he not visit that valley at daybreak with new and awful wonder? And did not the people, when they heard what he had seen, and the message which had been communicated to them, to prosecute their toils? If God was with them, who could stand against them? If angels were encamping round Jerusalem, how inevitable would be her resurrection from encumbering ruin! The return of God to his city meant her return to the beauty that had attracted the wonder and jealousy of the world (Psa. xlviii.).

PLUCK UP NEW COURAGE

These words may come under the eye of some who have sighed and cried over the desolations of the house of God, whether of the universal church, or of some beloved sphere of labour, on which they seem to have expended prayers and tears in vain. Have such waited for twenty years as Zechariah did? Have they had their myrtle grove of supplication? Have they remained steadfast and unmoved amid universal surrounding declension? If they could hear the good and comfortable words that are being spoken, how glad and thankful they would be! for when men and women pray like this, they do but echo the prayer of the great Intercessor yonder, and their prayer is the sure precursor of the return of God to his heritage with great mercy. Whenever God lays the state of his church on the hearts of his people, so that they travail in birth for it, a powerful revival of his work is at hand.

Are you, my reader, desolate through the pressure of long-continued sorrow? God's chastenings have been greatly exaggerated by those who have helped forward the affliction. What was once a busy scene of active service is waste, your home is desolate, your heart sad. Yet, be of good cheer. There is One that ever liveth to intercede. Jesus has graven you upon the palms of his hands. Your sad lot is ever before Him. He will yet talk with you with good words and comfortable ones. "Return," they are his own words, "O backsliding children, for I am married unto you," saith the Lord. "I will heal their backslidings: I will love them freely, for mine anger is turned away." "He is able to save unto the uttermost all who come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them."

French Ex-priests. — Rev. G. Whelpton, Wesleyan minister in Paris, writes: "I shall be glad to receive invitations from friends within 100 miles of London willing to organize drawing-room or other meetings in aid of the work between now and August 1. The seventeen ex-priests, who will be with us in England, and who have taken part in meetings at the City Temple, Dr. Horton's Church, &c., are all of them pastors or evangelists. We are anxious to avoid parade, but believe that the simple testimony of our French brethren will be a means of real blessing. London address, 39, Belsize Park, N.W."

Other Lands.

Christian Literature for China.

SPECIAL interest and importance attached to a meeting held at the Bible House, Queen Victoria Street, on the afternoon of the 18th inst., to further the work of an organization, the Christian Literature Society for China, which has hitherto been practically unknown and unaided in England, its support having been mainly derived from friends in Edinburgh and Glasgow. The chair was taken by Mr. P. F. Wood.

Rev. W. T. A. Barber, of the Leys School, Cambridge, who was for many years a missionary in China, showed that, in view of national reverses, a wholesome sense of lack has penetrated the self-satisfied intellectual aristocracy of that land, so that it is eagerly reaching out after a knowledge of western civilization. For the time, Chinese conservatism is too strong unreservedly to accept the religious element which makes our national life truly great; but conviction has gone so far that restrictions are largely removed, confidence is gained, and Christian missionary enterprise has an opportunity among the educated classes undreamed of some six years ago. National reform must ultimately prevail, and the question is, who shall direct and influence that movement? From personal knowledge of the Chinese people, he could enthusiastically commend this Society as a unique means of turning forces inherited through centuries into powerful factors for civilizing and

CHRISTIANIZING THE DISTANT EAST.

Like testimony was borne by Rev. George Owen, of Peking, one of the Revisers of the Chinese Wenli Version, who pointed out how providentially God had sent men to prepare books in some measure to meet a felt need. The influence of this Society's publications upon the thinking men of China was profound; and the Society could claim a large share in bringing about a marked change in their attitude towards Christianity. But there is urgent necessity to satisfy the thirst for knowledge concerning the Christian religion in its social and doctrinal aspects; and each of the missionary societies might well set apart one or two men to assist in forming a sound Christian literature. Chinese scholars are not found frequenting mission halls, and literature is the only means of reaching such men. One might well be excused the desire to be rich, in view of the needs of such a Society as this, whose agents are loved and trusted by the people for their transparent honesty of purpose, and for their wise and godly counsel. Seeing that the Chinese will read our books and listen to our men, let us promptly utilize our opportunity.

Rev. J. Cumming Brown, hon. sec. of the Society, said that it has been determined to form a committee in London for the purpose of advancing the interests of the Society in England. The names mentioned included peers, bishops, and others prominent in connection with the support of Christian work, and Rev. W. Fisher is to be hon. sec. for the metropolitan district. Proceeding with his address, the speaker said their aim was not the partition, but the salvation, of China. Much fruit had already been gathered from the expenditure of a limited income; but Mr. Timothy Richard, their able and energetic secretary in Shanghai, needs a minimum annual income of £4,000 so as to thoroughly work with specimens of our literature the 200 examination centres at which hundreds of thousands of students gather every year, affording valuable opportunity for reaching the young life of China.

Dr. Murdoch commended the wise, far-seeing, and unselfish policy of the Baptist Missionary Society in entirely supporting Mr. Richard for the past eight years, during which he has given his entire time to the general work of Christian literature in China.

Encouraging extracts were read by Rev. J. Sadler from a letter written by Mr. Richards; and Rev. J. Thomas spoke, from personal knowledge, concerning the confidence which the work and workers of the Society inspires among prominent Europeans and native literati in China. Rev. W. Fisher, the London hon. secretary, may be addressed at 146, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

New York Letter.

(By Our Own Correspondent.)

THE MORMON DANGER.

VIGOROUS efforts are being made in many directions to combat the activity of the Mormon propaganda, and to avert a danger of great magnitude that threatens the very nation itself. The pastor of the First Baptist Church, Salt Lake City, has a stirring article in a recent Examiner (Baptist) on the subject, parts of which should not be without interest to British Christians, because Great Britain is one of the favourite mission fields of the Latter Day Saints, and the grand total of additions to the Church for the last year was reported at no fewer than 63,000 in number. Some idea of the influence of the Church outside Utah can be formed from the simple fact that while last Congress was being flooded with letters and petitions against the seating of B. H. Roberts, Congressman-elect for Utah, because he was an avowed polygamist, the Legislation of Idaho actually passed a resolution in his favour. And it is well to remember that the abolition of polygamy was really one of the conditions agreed to by Utah in order to obtain Statehood. This very man, B. H. Roberts, is, by the way, editor of the Improvement Era, the official organ of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association, an institution for Mormons somewhat resembling the Y.M.C.A., and which provides a kind of Chautauqua course of literature, history, science, and theology for its members.

It is said this organization has upwards of 30,000 members. Mr. Steelman gives interesting facts, showing the energy with which every section of this country is being covered by Mormon missionaries, and it is by no means too early to warn British Christians of the dangers that threaten them from the same source. These emissaries adapt themselves to circumstances with great skill, and, among Christian people, usually teach repentance, faith, and baptism by those having authority. If the point of polygamy is raised, the assertion is made that it has been abandoned. Forewarned is forearmed.

A Broadway hotel, which for many years has been the resort of politicians of fame, has recently opened a "ladies' restaurant" on its street floor, not far from the bar-room, where statesmen have bought drinks for their friends for many year. Until the women's restaurant was opened near it, few women ever entered this room; but the bar-keeper says it is not now unusual for women, accompanied by escorts, to sit in the bar-room and have cocktails, or whatever they choose to drink. It is to be feared that Great Britain is not the only country in which the evil of intemperance is increasing among women. To appreciate the full force of this item, it must be remembered that the presence of women in public drinking places is comparatively a new thing in this country, and that the barmaid is entirely unknown, in spite of a few isolated and futile attempts to introduce her.

The coming "battle for the faith," the first noise of which has already begun to be heard in the Protestant Episcopal Church here, has attracted the attention of the newspaper editors, who handle the subject with outspoken directness. Bishop Potter's recent assertions, that (1) "the time has come when the Church and its teachings must vindicate themselves by something more than speech hardened into dogmatic terms;" and (2) with regard to the Bible, that it is "a literature, priceless, incomparable and most precious, but still a literature, and it must accept, and those who love and reverence it must accept for it, the conditions of its existence," have elicited from some of the most influential papers pungent editorials which are not likely to be to the Bishop's taste, The Atlanta Constitution, perhaps the most powerful paper in the South, says with regard to the Bible, in referring to the Bishop's words:—

> If the Bible is literature, it is from the hand of man. It has its literary aspect, of course, for it is transcribed by the hand and translated by the learning of man; but to say that it is literature, as Potter says, is to deny its supernatural aspect, and to deny, and destroy, and obliterate by one word all the promises and prophecies which were fulfilled by the coming of the Son of Man.
>
> More than that, if it is to be deprived of its supernatural authority, and stripped of the Divine significance which Christians have always and everywhere attributed to it—if it is simply from the hand and brain of man—it ceases at once to have any coherence, and becomes incredible. The greater part of it, indeed, ceases to be literature, but is without form and void; it falls to pieces and becomes meaningless.

And the Sun of New York, which has the reputation of being the best edited paper in the land, says, editorially:—

> The movement which the Southern Churchman speaks of as "massing," is therefore simply a movement for the preservation of the Christian faith against those who are using even the Church itself as an engine for its destruction. The assaults of infidelity in past times have come from without, but this attack proceeds from within the Church, and it is not, as were the old assaults, against real or assumed abuses and corruptions of ecclesiasticism, but is against the very supernaturalism upon which alone the Church rests its claim to authority. The doctrine of Bishop Potter is that the Bible is "a literature, which must accept the conditions of its existence." But what are those conditions? They are that its assumed declarations of facts are in square conflict with natural possibility, and are altogether incredible by such a test. It is a doctrine which makes the basis of Christian theology legendary and mythical, and therefore classifies it with the mythologies preceding it. Except for the dogma of inspiration and the supernatural authority of the Bible, the Christian faith has no justification.

Roger Martin.

Protestantism in India.

WITH deepest interest, in this land, we watch the progress of the struggle for the defence of Protestantism in England. But while an over-charitable Christian people have been sleeping for nearly half a century, a vigilant, relentless and desperate enemy has been sowing the tares of Romanism under the guise of Protestantism.

About twenty years ago, Chaplain A. C. Taylor, of the Madras Establishment, began in Madras City the distribution of "The Priest in Absolution"—the very work Mr. Walsh names in his book. He also began to urge good Church people to come to confession. Later on came the Cowley Fathers of Bombay, and to-day there are sprinkled over India quite a number of these Jesuitical Church of England priests, working in the interest of Romanism, though by so doing every man of them convicts himself of infidelity to his vows as a Church of England minister. Several sisterhoods have a footing in India, and there are quite a number of schools that are under the influence of these Romish agencies.

Among Protestants there have been few who could believe that men called Christian could be guilty of the deliberate and dishonest intrigue involved in this Ritualistic movement. Thus, unsuspected as to their real designs, they have wrought with far too serious effect.

The bulwark of Protestantism in India is the loyal legion of the C.M.S. and Nonconformity. As we watch the battle in the home land, it looks as if the end would be either disestablishment or another great dissent movement out of the Anglican body. Something will surely come.

While the battle goes on in the home land, let prayer be offered for the same cause in India.

C. B. Ward.

Yellandu, Nizam's Dominions, India.

Sailors' Rest, Constantinople.

MR. W. F. HAIRE, who is now in charge of this work, says:—"Our busy season is just over, and our many friends have left us for the summer; but we have had all through the winter and spring many blessed times with them. We have a few bright Christians among the sailors, and their testimonies in our little meetings have done our hearts good. At our Sunday evening meetings we try to keep up the 'Hallelujah' spirit, and make them bright with the love of Christ to sinners. Through the winter we had an 'at home' day for 'sailors only' every week at our house. We have been much tried about our financial condition, and the outlook is not too bright; but we are leaving it all in our Father's hands." Help for the work will be gladly received by Major-Gen. James S. Martyr, 8, Mowbray Road, Upper Norwood.

Students at Northfield.

THE meetings of the World's Students' Conference grew in interest from day to day. An address by Mr. John R. Mott, delivered on Sunday, 2nd inst., was very suggestive. He said: In reading the life of Jesus Christ recently, I have been impressed as never before with the reality of Jesus Christ, how his life corresponded with his words, how He practised as He preached, how He did what He said. In looking over the Acts of the Apostles, we must have all been impressed with the prominence of testimony or witness-bearing as the agency for the propagation of the Gospel. So we might take the Epistles, and we should find there that special stress is laid upon the propagation of the Gospel by conduct. The Apostles did not minimise the importance of testimony and witness-bearing, but they placed the chief stress upon the life which makes the witness-bearing irresistible; and we are living in times when, and we have colleges and universities where, the need is very great for the propagation of the Gospel by means of conduct which will give the testimony of the Gospel its irresistible power. If Christ is formed in a man and is expanded as the result of right habits of prayer and Bible study, that man will have the mind of Christ, he will be speaking the messages of Christ, he will be showing forth the excellencies of Christ. He will be engaged in the work of Christ, who sent us to do his works, and even greater works. Let us be

CHRISTIANS OF REALITY.

On the evening of Monday, 3rd inst., Dr. Schauffler gave an address at the Round Top meeting on City Missions, especially those of New York. He spoke of the qualifications needed for a successful worker, and dwelt strongly on the need of common sense. Dwelling also on the necessity for "individualization," he enforced his points by the relation of some pathetic experiences.

Mr. Robert E. Speer spoke forcibly at the Auditorium meeting, taking for his subject, "The Second Coming of Christ." Christ's coming means several things: That long-sundered ties shall be united again; our total emancipation from all outward evil; that we shall be delivered from inner temptation; the redemption of all our human life. We have desired above all else to see Christ: well, we shall see Him. Let us not be misled as to the manner and time of Christ's coming. All we need to know is that the Christ who went away is coming back, visibly, unexpectedly, and suddenly, and that He bids us, Watch.

The truth of Christ's coming is set before us as the most powerful motive for winning men. Very happy and content we feel if we can bring a friend to meet Him. This truth is a motive to daily duty. We shall do our work better if we think He may come any minute and see us at our task.

At the meeting in the Auditorium on Tuesday morning, Mr. D. L. Moody, in dealing with the subject of "Temptation," spoke upon many questions of the day. He denounced the theatre, Sunday bicycling, riding for pleasure, new doctrines, and was especially severe on Sunday newspapers. Is there anyone, said he, who doubts that the flesh is weak? You probably could not have found better men on the face of the earth than the disciples; but Christ warned them that the flesh is weak. Let no one think he shall not be tempted. The testing time comes for everyone. Many a man goes to college with high hopes, but tumbles and falls because he is not rooted in the great principles of the Bible. The storm will sweep over your life and test you.

"Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." As some one has said, Satan aims high. Adam fell in Paradise, the angels in heaven. A man is more apt to fall in the second and third watch than in the first. In the first he knows he must be on his guard, and in the fourth watch he has learned from experience that he must always be on his guard.

The Round Top meeting was abandoned on Tuesday evening so as to give more time for the Commemoration Day gathering in the Auditorium. The building was decorated with evergreen, bunting, and streamers of the college colours. The galleries, walls, and even the beams of the building were covered with bright banners, and the vigorous singing of the students exploded the pale, weak theory in regard to religious scholars.

The exercises consisted of an oration by Commander Alvin V. Wadhams, of the United States Navy, and short addresses and songs from the REPRESENTATIVES OF SEVERAL NATIONS.

Applause and cheers greeted all these addresses, and the good fellowship of the meeting was seen when the Americans sang one stanza of "America," and the English sang a stanza of "God Save the Queen." The delegates from the different colleges came marching into the auditorium. With hands on each other's shoulders, the students tramped, singing, to their places. The Yale delegation was the largest, 110 students being present. Mt. Hermon created a sensation by marching with a brass band at its head, preceded by Mr. Moody himself.

Mr. John R. Mott presided at the exercises which followed, and called on several speakers to make addresses in behalf of their nations. F. W. Anderson, of the University of Toronto, brought greetings from Canada. A student from the Carlisle Indian School sang an Indian song. L. E. Brandt, graduate of the Utrecht University, brought the greetings of Holland. Agide Pirazzini Emiliani spoke for Italy. Scandinavia was represented in an address by L. P. Larson; H. P. Beach sang in Chinese, and the Japanese delegation also gave a native ode.

Dr. A. F. Schauffler was the speaker in the Auditorium on Wednesday morning, following Commander Wadhams, who spoke a few words on "Sunday in the Navy." Dr. Schauffler took "Money" for the subject of his address, speaking of the energy stored in it and the best way of loosening this energy in the service of God and man.

On account of a sharp shower, the usual Round Top meeting was transferred to the Auditorium on Wednesday evening. Mr. Robert P. Wilder, a missionary from India, spoke of the demand for foreign missionary work, and how little was being done in this line. He gave a great many figures to prove his statements, and made a plea for more of the students

ENTERING THE FOREIGN FIELD.

The world is ready as never before for evangelization. We have the rights of residence in almost all the countries of the world. The Bible has been translated into nine-tenths of all the languages of the world. What is needed to evangelize the world is more prayer and more missionaries.

On Thursday morning, Mr. John R. Mott spoke upon the "Striking Development in the College Field of the Young Men's Christian Association." The number of conversions among students, as a result of the Spirit of God working through the members of the associations, has been greater during the past four years than during any similar period in the history of the colleges and universities of North America. Taking the world as a whole, the Christian movement has never advanced in any period of the history of the world as in the last four years. The movement has extended from North America and Great Britain to all other Protestant lands of the world, and also has been introduced among the students of the Orient.

Commander Wadhams spoke on missionaries as seen from the point of view of a naval officer. He paid a tribute to the sterling character of the foreign missionary. His visit to the conference had been an inspiration, and he would see that the naval academy was represented by fifty cadets next year.

Rev. R. A. Torrey delivered an address to the boys at Camp Northfield early the same (Thursday) morning, his subject being "Secret Prayer," which, he said, brings us closer to God than any other exercise in which we can engage. In it we open our hearts more fully and frankly to Him, and get to the bottom of things, the very heart and reality of things; in it God makes clear to us his will; in it God reveals Himself so that we come to know Him; in it we find the true preparation for real power in public prayer; in it we get daily strength for daily needs, daily temptations, daily duties and daily service for Christ; in it we get victory over temptations and besetting sins, so that our life becomes one of constant triumph instead of

ONE OF CONSTANT DEFEAT.

Camp Northfield has never been so popular as this year. There are 150 on the camping grounds, an attendance which is three times larger than that of any preceding year. It is a mistaken idea that the camp is for Y.M.C.A. members alone. It is for any young man who appreciates nature and what camping life is. It makes no difference what his religious training is, or whether he has had any at all, provided he is a self-respecting and upright young man.

The amusements of the camp are many. Swimming is the most popular, and there is a swimming float built especially for the campers. Boats on the river are also reserved for the camp. The roads around Northfield are excellent, and cycling parties are made up daily. The campers also have the privilege of attending the conference meetings, although there is nothing compulsory about the attendance. While the camp may be visited at any time, invitations are sent out for a ladies' day during the women's conference, and then the camp is specially decorated.

British Syrian Mission.

THIS noble agency has now for nearly forty years been holding forth the "Word of Life" to the people of Syria, with blessed results. Besides the Training Institution in Beyrout (in which between seventy and eighty girls of all creeds are being trained as native Christian teachers) and a boarding-school at Baalbec, there are fifty-two day schools in Beyrout, Damascus, Baalbec, Tyre, and the Lebanon and Hermon; schools for the blind men and girls; evangelistic work among the Bedouin and soldiers of the Lebanon army; medical work in Tyre, Baalbec, &c. Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. sec. of the C.M.S., says in reference to the B.S.M.:—"I value the work of other Societies too highly to suggest disparagement by comparison, but no impartial judge will hesitate to say that for order, wise management, successful teaching, and, above all, spiritual results, there is certainly no work in Palestine or Syria which excels this."

Just now the Committee feel that the Lord is calling upon them to "enlarge their borders."

The Society for Female Education in the East have offered to pass over their beautiful school at Shemlan (in the Lebanon) to the B.S.M., they no longer being in a position to continue it. The cost of maintenance is estimated at £160 per annum.

The Committee ask for the prayers and sympathy of God's people interested in the Holy Land. Every field occupied entails fresh responsibility—to stand still is not possible.

The Committee feel strongly they must "go forward" in the name of the Lord till the Land of Promise shall become the Land of Possession. The office of the Society is 29a, High Street, Wimbledon, S.W.

Zambesi Industrial Mission.—Mr. Alexander Hamilton, Superintendent of the Z.I.M. in Angoniland, British Central Africa, writes:—"We had our South Angoniland conference at Chioli on May 18, starting with a prayer meeting in the morning and then the natives meeting in the forenoon. When we went into the school we found it crowded, and as many outside as in. We turned out into the open air again and had all the seats carried out, holding our meeting in front of the school instead of inside it. At the close of this meeting forty-two natives who had been selected from among the candidates for baptism stood up, giving public testimony of their faith in Christ. We adjourned to the water and they were baptized. Afterwards we returned to the schoolroom and 140 natives and nine Europeans sat down to the Communion Service. What a harvest to praise God for, and 'still there's more to follow.' We enjoyed the meetings very much."

Prof. Newell's Bible Course.

LESSON VII.—EXODUS XII.-XVIII.

REDEEMED, DELIVERED, SUSTAINED.

I. Read the chapters at least seven times.

II. The chapter names: xii., Passover; xiii., Firstborn for God; xiv., Red Sea; xv., Triumph Song; xvi., Manna; xvii., Striving (with Moses, with Amalek); xviii., Jethro.

III. Prepare a careful topical outline, and drill on it, as usual. Deal with the hearts of things. Thus, for instance, we might have: Redemption by Blood (the Passover), Deliverance by Power (the Red Sea), Guidance (the Cloud), Provision (the Manna), Defence (the Rock).

IV. A most careful study of the geography of the Exodus should be made. Though not complete, as some of the localities are not yet certainly known, it is yet very instructive indeed. I would advise every Bible student to take time and pains to master the map of the Bible lands. Of course, that of Palestine must be thoroughly familiar before one can be at all at home in the Old Testament.

V. Let us now rapidly sketch through the lesson, noting the great lines of truth.

There was just one thing between the first-born of chap. xi., who were given to death, and the first-born of chap. xiii., who were given to God, and that was the paschal blood of chap. xii. This latter chapter is one of the most important in the Bible to us, setting forth, as it does, in beautiful and unmistakable types, the redemptive work of our Lord Jesus Christ. In 1 Cor. v. 7 Christ is expressly declared to be our Passover. Every detail of this great feast should thus be precious to us, and should be most prayerfully studied. We shall assign it and as the principal topics of this lesson, for together they show in type that complete, present deliverance of the child of God in Christ Jesus which is described in Rom. v.-viii. as the normal Christian experience.

THE RED SEA DELIVERANCE

That same Passover night, after feasting, with girt loins, on the paschal lamb, they came out with a high hand. God would not have his children left under the power of sin one moment when once they have been delivered from its guilt through the blood of Christ. Entire and immediate separation from sin, seen in the unleavened bread, and utter repentant judgment of the past and the self-life, in the bitter herbs, are the pre-requisites; and the soul, thus prepared, is to feed on Him who passed through the wrath-fires of God for us, and in the strength of that meat to go up out of the land of bondage for ever. But just as God would have all the glory in that blood-plan of redemption of his people from the death that overtook Egypt, so will He now have all the glory in the Red Sea plan for their deliverance from the enslaving power that would again overtake them. They were hastening on between the arms of the sea to the wilderness—their safety must depend on their fleetness. "No," saith God, "turn back to the Egypt side of the sea, into that death-trap between the sea and the mountains, where the enemy will find and follow you, and whence you cannot escape. Then I will get Me glory." And He did. Our Father always gets glory when we let Him put us where only He can deliver us. Then we can sing his glorious praise as Israel did (Ex. xv.; Ps. cxvi. 12, 13; xl. 1-3).

Marah's sweetening tree shows what the cross of Christ can do for the desert bitterness of life (Gal. vi. 14: 2 Cor. xii. 9, 10). And it is never very far from Marah's bitter water to Elim's wells and palms.

The manna is a beautiful type of Christ, the heavenly bread of his people (Jno. vi. 49-51), "ministered by the Spirit, as the dew exhaled and left it." But the rock, smitten (xvii. 5) with the rod of judgment (see vii. 17), yielding the living stream, exquisitely reverses the figure. This is Christ after Calvary, giving the water of life to his people, and ministering the Spirit unto them (Jno. vii. 38, 39; Acts ii. 31-33). In the conflict with Amalek as Egypt is of the world, we are shown the double character of Christ's victory over sin in us—by intercession above (Moses) and his presence within us (Joshua). In the passage that follows (ch. xviii.), we have a picture of the coming kingdom, with "the Jew, the Gentile, and the Church of God" (1 Cor. x. 32) all present, the latter two in type, in Jethro and Zipporah; while the centre of all is the Deliverer of Israel (ch. xviii. 12, 13).

THE GREAT TYPE OF THE FLESH,

VI. Topics for study:

1. The character of Israel at the Exodus. Note.—Their condition for 400 years past—productive of what spirit? Their conduct in Egypt toward Moses and Aaron—indicating what? Their conduct at the Red Sea in Ex. xiv. 11, 12? The real depth of their praise in ch. xv? (See Ps. cvi. 12, 13.) Their subsequent actions in xvi., xvii.? Yet whose people were they? Why—because of their own goodness? With whom had God made the covenant that made Israel his people? (Gen. xv.) Was God now taking Israel out of Egypt for Himself, because they were worthy, or because of his own faithfulness? Are Christians saved because of their own merit, or by simple grace?

2. The Passover: (a) Its details—master these thoroughly first of all. (b) Its immediate purpose toward Israel, as to shelter—exactly from what, and how, did the blood protect Israel? As to separation from Egypt; how did the sprinkling of the blood make Israel separate from Egypt in God's sight? Why did God choose this particular sign to mark his people? Does He do so yet? (See 1 Cor. i. 18-25; Gal. vi. 14.) When said, "It is finished" (John xix. 30), did He refer to what man had done for himself, or what He had done for man? Could man do anything to save himself? (See Rom. v. 6; iii. 20.) Now if man's redemption was thus wrought out by Christ on the Cross, and man himself did not help in it all, who ought to get all the glory in man's salvation, man or God? Who is constantly trying to take the credit? Since the blood of Christ was to be the great and only price of Israel's redemption (for Israel, as well as we, were saved only through the Cross of Christ, not by the law, Gal. ii. 15, 16), what more meet than that they should take on themselves the sign of the paschal lamb's blood—the picture and pledge of that precious blood of the Lamb which in God's counsel was the real ground on which He was then dealing with them in grace? (1 Pet. i. 19-21; Rev. xiii. 8). As typical of this foreordaining of Christ to sacrifice, is the selecting of the lamb on the tenth day of the month, and its being kept for sacrifice until the fourteenth. Think of Christ marked and kept by God, for sacrifice for our sins! What should this beget in us? (2 Cor. v. 14-15.)

CHRIST ON THE CROSS

The purpose of the Passover as toward Egypt should also be studied most thoughtfully. As Noah's ark condemned the world of his time (Heb. xi. 7), and as the Cross of Christ has condemned both Satan and his host (Jno. xii. 31; Heb. ii. 14, 15; Col. ii. 15), and this whole world (Jno. iii. 16-20; Gal. vi. 14; Acts ii. 36; Heb. x. 13; Rev. v. 12, vi. 16, 17), which is in Satan (1 Jno. v. 19); so that sprinkled blood, on witnessed against all who were not under it, as rebels against their King, Jehovah, his people and his plan of salvation. Those Egyptians who were not thus rebels did not need to perish. Remember that a "mixed multitude" went up with Israel out of Egypt (Ex. xii. 38).

THAT DARK NIGHT OF JUDGMENT,

3. The passage of the Red Sea. Study the needlessness of it, humanly speaking (see map); the manner of it—how a great test of faith. God's presence in it (cf. Isa. xliii. 2, Ps. xxiii. 4); the blind presumption of the Egyptians, with its explanation in Prov. xxix. 1; 2 Thess. ii. 10-12, and its double antitype in Rev. xix. 19-21, and xx. 7-10; and the spiritual meaning to us of the Red Sea crossing (1 Cor. x. 2, R.V., marg.; Rom. vi. 3, 4; Col. ii. 12).

4. The Song of Triumph. Study its form, and its manner of utterance by Israel; its spirit; its high spiritual and prophetic discernment; its motives; its general correspondence to the first joy of realized salvation in the individual soul.

5. The Manna: Trace, with a concordance, its meaning throughout the Bible. We shall have more concerning it.

6. The Rock: Do likewise with this, on the authority of 1 Cor. x. 4. A wonderful Bible reading will be thus obtained.

Oxford Letter.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PERHAPS there is no class of England's toilers who need more sympathy than the teachers in our elementary schools, and we are glad to hear that Sir George and Lady Dashwood invited the members of the Oxford and District Teachers to their home at Kirtlington Park on Saturday. From a]I have heard, a very helpful and pleasant afternoon was spent, and one cannot but feel the possibilities for good in such gatherings. Besides the recreation for mind after a busy week, it would be easy to arrange for an address to be given which would add profit to pleasure. Such gatherings would give stimulus to many a tired worker, and could not be without their effect upon the tone of the school.

The immense importance of India as a sphere of missionary work was emphasized by the Bishop of Madras on Thursday at a meeting held in Trinity College Gardens. Besides our responsibility as a nation towards India, there are facilities for preaching the Gospel which we have scarcely in any other country. The peace established by our rule; the possibility of living there without any great risk to health; the translation of the Scriptures into nearly all the important languages of India—afford facilities for missionary effort which are not found in Africa or China.

The Bishop emphasized, too, what is often forgotten when considering missionary work in India—viz., the fact that India is the natural basis of operations for the Church in trying to evangelize Asia. If the missionaries of Buddha had spread their tenets all over the East into Burmah, China, and Thibet, surely the missionaries of the Gospel might do the same. This opened the way for the statement that the Indian Church might be expected to become a centre of evangelization for the countries adjacent. "Our most important work at present," said the Bishop, "is to build up and strengthen the native Church."

An important gathering of the Girls' Friendly Society was held here last week, in which the usefulness of its work was emphasized. One side of the work is to defend the servants from bogus registry offices. Young women from the country are often deceived by sham but cunningly-worded advertisements. The G.F.S. provides a trustworthy list of agencies and offices, and has district registries of its own, which should be better known than they are. Much-needed protection, too, is afforded to girls taking situations abroad. We were much gratified, too, to hear that the reproach so often, and we fear so justly, levelled against domestic servants that they will not keep their places, but will sacrifice everything for a change of situation, does not generally apply to G.F.S. girls. The Society is doing much to raise the tone of our domestic servants, and deserves to be more widely known.

A propos the remark in your last issue, that "it is easy to be misled by the return regarding the number of confessional boxes in the Established Church," the writer has seen in Oxford the practice you mention of hearing confessions in the aisles of the church. One week-day afternoon he visited Cowley St. John, and saw several women—there were no men among them—go up to the priest in turn, who received them in the north transept. There is no "box," but an arrangement which suits the convenience both of the "confessor" and the "penitent." There have been several revelations lately to the extent in which confession is practised by the "Fathers" of Cowley, which makes your statement emphasizing the misleading character of the return timely. Would it not serve the purpose of truth if practices like the above were made public? For all intents and purposes, the above is a confessional box. To deny it is childish compromise.

The Wesleyan Conference.

By A MINISTER.

AFTER the lapse of thirteen years the annual sessions of the Wesleyan Conference are being held in London. Wesley Chapel, looking more beautiful than ever, as the result of the incessant labours of Rev. T. E. Westerdale, is the scene of the Conference gatherings proper, though St. James's Hall will be utilized for many of the larger public meetings.

There has been a large number of—probably not far short of 800—ministers in attendance at the Pastoral Session, which opened on Tuesday, July 18. It is not to be wondered at that special interest is aroused amongst ministers and people when the Conference meets on the historic ground, surrounded by so many hallowed associations, from which flowed forth the influences that have touched the world.

No great excitement has characterized the proceedings of the Pastoral Session of the Conference, but the brethren have given themselves in earnest fashion to the discharge of important business affecting the discipline of the Church and the character of her ministry. As last year, the increase of the devotional element in the opening of each session has not been without its effect upon the steady consideration of pastoral affairs. The impressive addresses which have been given by the brethren called upon by the president have led the Conference day by day to the sources of spiritual life and power. Rev. W. L. Watkinson, at the opening session, spoke of the Holy Spirit as "the Spirit of counsel and of might," whose power they needed to turn words into things, to energize their preaching, to vitalize their literature, and to hallow their million guineas to the last shining particle.

Very impressively did Dr. Davison, the theological tutor at the Handsworth College, emphasize the thought of the Nearness of God and the sacredness of the present moment. Gregory Nazianzen was not the only saint who forswore ecclesiastical assemblies because he found they did not help his spiritual life. They must guard against the danger of allowing the necessary routine of work, the sociability of intercourse, and differences of opinion to prevent them from realizing the constant presence of God. Amidst many distractions they could realize great truths. The strongest barrier against the waves of the sea was not the wall of granite, but the barrier-reef built up by the living energy of the coral animals amidst the rolling of the surges of the sea. So amidst many distractions they could realize the power of the Kingdom, and do something to promote the "new heaven and the new earth." During the week addresses have also been given by Rev. R. Waddy Moss, who reminded his brethren that impossible things became practicable in the presence of the Saviour, and in dependence upon his resources; and by Rev. W. H. Tindall, so well known in connection with the Southport Convention, who dwelt solemnly upon the minister's personal need of private prayer. These quiet hours have been indeed times of spiritual refreshing.

The election of the Rev. Frederic W. Macdonald as the new president, by a large vote fulfilled the general expectation. Mr. Macdonald has, during a varied career as circuit minister, theological tutor, and foreign missionary secretary, rendered conspicuous service to his Church. His gifts of eloquent advocacy, lucid exposition, chaste diction, cultured tastes, and literary power admirably fit him for the high office upon which he has entered with the goodwill of his brethren. He is one of the most gifted men in Methodism, and is widely known and honoured beyond her borders as a preacher and missionary advocate. On the platform of the British and Foreign Bible Society Mr. Macdonald has achieved some of his most memorable oratorical triumphs. He was warmly welcomed to the chair in a very happy speech by the retiring president, Rev. H. Price Hughes, whose year of office will be memorable for its spiritual influence and success, its rest from controversy, and for the inception of the great movement by which Methodism is bracing herself for the work of a new century.

The president's opening address was in part a historical résumé of the movements which had their origin in 1784, the year in which James Macdonald, his grandfather, was called out by Wesley to the work of a Methodist preacher. The social improvement of England to-day was vividly brought out by the reminder that in those days—our grandfathers' times—the slave trade flourished, corruption reigned in political life, the roads were infested with highwaymen. Wesley preached to forty-seven criminals bound with chains in Newgate. Mr. Macdonald added that it was largely the Gospel our grandfathers preached that had changed England. The President then dealt with several practical topics of present-day duty. He pleaded that Methodists should cherish the earnestness which was theirs by reputation. He was for raising the existing agencies to the highest possible level of efficiency. Pastoral duty, the catechizing of children, the improvement of public services in beauty and reverence, the raising of ministerial equipment were in turn touched upon by Mr. Macdonald. He declared that the Methodist ministry had always been a practically efficient ministry, but it was his deliberate judgment that in the twentieth century an efficient ministry must be a highly-trained ministry. During his address, the President did not forget to emphasize the happy relations of Methodism with other churches. They were never so cordial or so fruitful as now. In regard to the Church of England, while profoundly regretting the developments of recent years, they admired the zeal and industry of her clergy, and the piety of many of her children. He went so far as to say that when she was tired of looking for recognition on the part of Rome, and was ready for union with non-episcopal churches, they would respond frankly. The most that has come before the present Conference is the proposed change in the order of Conference Sessions. Twenty-five years ago there began the movement for lay representation in the Conference. This great constitutional change came into force at the Bradford Conference of 1878, when Dr. Rigg was President. Before long the inconvenience of the arrangement by which the Representative Session of ministers and laymen only met when the Pastoral Session had closed led to a demand for a reversal of the Order of Sessions.

From a photograph by Messrs. Russell and Sons, Baker Street, W.

IMPORTANT CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION

After some controversy, the compromise was agreed to, by which the Pastoral Session should be divided, and the representatives should meet in the middle of the Conference. For some years past the laymen have felt that this arrangement also was unsatisfactory, and what Mr. Price Hughes now describes as a final settlement of this long controversy is arrived at by which the Representative Session shall precede the Pastoral. The same division of subjects, by which matters relating to the doctrine, character, and discipline of the pastorate belong to the province of the Pastoral Session, will obtain as before; and a new arrangement will be made by which the Pastoral Session of one Conference will nominate the President and Secretary for the next Conference. Those who are acquainted with the past history of ecclesiastical controversy will join with the members of the Conference in rejoicing over the significance of a practically unanimous decision in such a grave question of Church government.

Mr. Price Hughes and the venerable Dr. Rigg joined in commending these proposals to the Pastoral Session. The admirable speeches they gave on Thursday morning will be long remembered, it is hoped, as the prelude of a lasting peace from controversy as to lay rights and pastoral privileges.

Dr. Jenkins could not refrain from uttering a doubtful judgment concerning the decision. He looked forward with anxiety to the future, but with an earnest prayer that God would defeat that which would not bring glory to Him. With a practically unanimous vote, the pastors agreed to the proposals, which, while conserving pastoral privilege, will increase lay responsibility.

One of the most remarkable gatherings in connection with the Conference took place on Sunday afternoon in St. James's Hall, where Rev. H. Price Hughes conducted a service in which eighteen ex-priests of the Roman Catholic Church in France, who have been converted to Protestantism, took part. Conference preachers occupied the pulpits of London Methodism on Sunday. The president preached in Wesley's Chapel to an immense audience in the morning, delivering what was characterized in the conference as a chaste, profound, and powerful sermon on the Holy Spirit's conviction of the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment. Amongst other services were those of Rev. Wm. Gorman at Wesley's Chapel in the evening, and of Dr. Ebenezer Jenkins in the morning; Rev. Thos. Champness in the afternoon, and Dr. Crawford Johnson in the evening at St. John's Square.

The Representative Session was preceded on Monday morning by an impressive Communion Service. The President then proceeded to give his address to the assembled representatives, who filled the body of the chapel, the gallery being crowded with privileged visitors.

Mr. Macdonald rejoiced in the prosperity of the past year, and spoke hopefully of the future. He pleaded for a broadening of the influence of Methodism. In years past their life had been lived within high walls. They had their own standards and language. He desired them to preserve their inheritance, and at the same time to share in the general Christian sentiment and thought of our times. They ought to be in the fore front of co-operation and fellowship with all who were serving Christ. He warned his brethren of the danger of expecting too much from ecclesiastical legislation, and of departing in public affairs from their old position of independence and neutrality. Concerted action in the political sphere was the last use they ought to make of their great resources. It was theirs to accomplish a greater work; namely, to bring to bear the power of the religion of Christ upon the character of the people.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 24 TO 29.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.)

ONCE again Christian people have assembled in their thousands at Keswick. They have responded to an invitation in the spirit of the Master's gracious words to his disciples—"Come ye yourselves apart, and rest awhile." This is the twenty-fifth year in which members of the various Churches—"All one in Christ Jesus"—have thus met in holy convocation at the pretty little town of English Lakeland; and as the years have sped, and men have come and gone, one principal aim has ever engaged the attention of those who have organized the Convention. That aim, or purpose, is indicated in the opening paragraph of Mr. Robert Wilson's convening letter:—"That, humbled under a deep sense of our nothingness, we may reverently worship our God and Father, and seek in the power of his Holy Spirit more conformity to his will, and more oneness with our Divine Master, and with one another in Him."

Canon Harford Battersey was privileged to see the manifest blessing of God upon the Convention which he was instrumental in founding. At length "the little one has become a thousand;" and year by year the attendance grows at this typical gathering at Keswick. The "platform" has remained substantially unchanged, but during recent years the missionary interest has deepened and widened in a manner that has rejoiced the hearts of those who pray, in the fullest sense, in the Lord's own words taught to his disciples, "Thy Kingdom come."

The traffic by rail from various parts has been very large, and many visitors have availed themselves of Mr. J. T. Budd's excursion services. Ministers and Christian workers are present in large numbers, and one meets with many missionaries who have come for stimulus and refreshment. The extent to which meetings of this character assist missionaries and such-like lonely workers, is attested by the fact that in India, South Africa, and elsewhere, like conventions have been organized. When on furlough, therefore, and gathered from many lands, our missionary friends find peculiar comfort and rest, help and encouragement, by attending a series of meetings at which good fellowship is assured, and men and women of varied temporal interests and ecclesiastical associations, by common consent, call no man master, but speak only of Christ, whose Name is above every name.

PRELIMINARY PRAYER MEETINGS.

The prayer meeting in the tent on Saturday evening was very largely attended, the spacious enclosure being well filled. The weather was rainy, but the meeting was hopeful throughout. There were many familiar faces on the platform, and General Hatt-Noble conducted. Among those who led in prayer were Rev. J. Elder Cumming, D.D., Revs. H. E. Fox and R. Macpherson, and Mr. Eugene Stock. Ministers of the Gospel at home and abroad were specially remembered, and God was asked to own his word and vouchsafe revival of his work. A brief address was given by Rev. EVAN HOPKINS, based on Psa. xlvi. 10—"Be still, and know that I am God." He applied this counsel to those who were cast down or discouraged; and showed that a revelation of God is needed by all who would get the victory over hostile circumstances, or over evil within or enemies without. We must cease from self-confidence, and take the lowly place of waiting before God. Mr. Hopkins said that he never felt so much the solemnity of such a gathering as that about to open. There had been much prayer for God's blessing, and now he asked for a spirit of readiness to see the Lord and hear his word. There was also a goodly muster at the early morning prayer meeting on Sunday. Rev. J. J. LUCE presided, and gave a helpful address.

TIMELY WORDS OF COUNSEL.

The congregation at morning service in the parish church was very large; every seat was filled, and many persons had to stand throughout. Dr. ELDER CUMMING read the lessons, and the sermon was preached by the BISHOP OF SIERRA LEONE (Dr. Taylor Smith), who based his discourse upon the opening clauses of Isa. ii. 22, and lv. 6: "Cease ye from man. . . . Seek ye the Lord." I claim, said the Bishop, the simple position of a messenger. It is mine, like John the Baptist, to point to Christ. I would lift up my voice with a two-fold object—first, to guard; then to guide—to guard from evil, to guide to God. What a privilege it is at any time to lead to Jesus—to look upon Jesus as the Lamb of God—to look upon Jesus as the King of Righteousness, the Prince of Peace, the Source of Power—for all power in heaven and earth is found in Him. But before Jesus can be King of Righteousness, yours and mine; before He can be Prince of Peace—the peace which passeth all understanding to us; before He can be the Source of Power for us, He must be the Lamb of God. Never forget, in your teaching, or your life, that Jesus died for you, died once for all on Calvary more than 1,800 years ago. Then He "finished the work" whereby He clothes us with the seamless robe of righteousness—not ours, but his only. He comes not to supplement, but to supersede.

THE BISHOP OF SIERRA LEONE.

From a photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, Baker Street, W.

Some are here at Keswick for the first time. They have heard and seen what good has come to others before them. They have been led to fear God and put their trust in the Lord as they have seen the twofold testimony of lip and life of those who came to Keswick last year, it may be, or at some previous time. They have that has taken place: friends are no longer in the horrible pit, or slaves of besetting sins, but are living a quiet, waiting, blessed life—a life which is established. I trust all who hear me belong to the Established Church—not the Church of England, but the Church of Christ—that you are firmly established on the Rock, and singing the new song which can only be learned from heaven.

MARKED THE CHANGE

Many are come expecting, they know not what. If you ask them why they are here, they will sum it up in one word—the blessing. The blessing of Keswick Convention is Jesus Himself. Apart from Jesus there is nothing—absolutely nothing. There is no life, for we must know Him to have life, life eternal; no growth, for there can be no growth where there is no life; no beauty, for the Divine outcome is because of the Divine income. Many seek, many knock, many ask; "ye have not, because ye ask amiss."

Some of you are here not for the first time. You have been before, and the Lord met with you in those days gone by. He gave you a vision of Divine possibilities; but it has passed away, because not seen and received by faith. Now you have come back again, and your desire is for the vision to be repeated. How many come to Keswick in this frame of mind! They say "Oh, that I may see Him as I did once in those former days!"

Would you receive a blessing? Then your expectation must be from God. No stream can quench your soul's thirst; you must "cease from man," and "seek the Lord." The preacher, speaker, teacher will not satisfy; you must to their source. Put not your trust in princes — neither speakers nor preachers; hear them, love them, follow them as they lead to Jesus—no further.

TRACE THE WATERS BACK

Some are here because they desire to be braced up ere going forth to work either in the home or distant field. Keswick is by such regarded as a sort of spiritual Klondyke, where they will stay for a short time, in the hope of being enriched for ever. I do not say you will not find gold—gold which will never perish; but I may remind you that in the Father's house food is provided for the day only: "Give us this day our daily bread." In the days of old, the early morning saw the windows of heaven open; and not week by week, but day by day, was the manna given. Not in the evening, but in the morning, did the faithful Israelite gather, and that on bended knee. To fail to gather, means to trifle with and trample upon the gift of God, and it means also to go through the day hindered and unsatisfied. Given daily, we must gather daily. And let daily gratitude follow daily grace.

Some, perhaps, ask, Where am I to seek? They say—You say, "cease" and "seek;" be my guide as well as my guard. How am I to seek—when, where, and how?

When? No special tide of blessing will flow in for you—towards the middle or end (say) of the Convention. Many have thought in their hearts—By Wednesday I expect to be warm; by Friday warmer still; and by Sunday next quite hot. God forbid. Be not deluded by works of the flesh or deceits of the devil. You must lay hold by faith of all you desire

NOW, TO-DAY, HERE.

Christ is made unto us now, this very moment, "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." Why will not people appropriate that which has been provided? Why is it for to-morrow and never to-day, seeing that we have to do with the great I AM? All that Christ could be to you on Wednesday, He is for you now. Then why not trust Him now?

Where shall I seek the Lord? First, be prepared to meet Him anywhere. He is not confined to any place—tent, or hall, or church. There is one place that the Lord has sanctified—the only sanctuary until He returns from heaven; and that is the human heart. Seek the Lord with all your heart. You will not find Him within, perhaps; but He will come in if you invite Him. You may meet Him in silence as well as in song. We read that "when they were alone" the Lord expounded all things to his disciples. Some of us have little expounded to us, because we are never alone with Christ. The sweetest music is often in the minor key; but as we never have quiet and solitude, we miss the voice which speaks so often in a whisper.

Let us be clear on one thing: our seeking must be for the Lord—not for power for service, nor for gifts for men. Neither the large nor the small blessings may be ours till we desire Jesus Himself. With Him we shall have all things. Without Him we have nothing. Beware of of seeking the Bible reading, or the Gospel address, or the sermon, or the study—the gold-dust, or the best thoughts. The temptation of the speaker is to be original, to say some smart things; and the temptation of the hearer is to fill a notebook with subjects and matter for future discourse. Let our attitude day by day be this—we have come with one intention, and that is to seek the Lord: "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him."

PLACING THINGS BEFORE CHRIST—

How shall I seek Him? Again let it be said, By ceasing from man. If not, the Convention will be a hindrance, and not a help in the spiritual life. If you would have a blessing, consecrate yourself unto the Lord; God's blessing is the result of consecration.

Passing on, the Bishop asked, What is the purpose of all this seeking and finding? He replied, that God may be ours and we may be God's. I give myself to God; God gives Himself to me. As we become recipients from the Divine fulness, so also we shall give forth of ourselves and our substance. Self, the old man, must not be allowed to hinder this; we must CEASE FROM SELF.

For the encouragement of the down-cast in the spiritual struggle, a word was introduced—"Cease your striving; begin abiding." Those present who had little of definite purpose or desire were, in turn, warned that though they might meet everyone at Keswick, they would return home poor indeed if they failed to meet the Lord. If, however, they met "Jesus only," they would be eternally enriched. In conclusion, the Bishop urged his hearers to prepare, not only for the vision of Jesus, but for his voice, so that if a call should come to them to do or surrender something to God or for his cause, they might yield a ready obedience.

The evening preacher at church was the Bishop of Mombasa. The other places of worship in the town were also served by visiting friends, Dr. T. H. White and Pastor George Soltau preaching for the Wesleyans, and Dr. Harry Guinness in the Congregational Chapel. There were the usual overflow meetings in the tent morning and evening, also evangelistic meetings.

THE EVENING "OVERFLOW" was conducted by Dr. White, who brought under notice the obligation of believers to render hearty and thorough obedience to Christ. In the course of an exposition of 1 Pet. i. 14, 15, he showed that God demands from his redeemed people that they fashion their lives in harmony with his holy will. The assembly had been singing a hymn with the chorus:

Speak, Saviour, speak!
Obey Thee I will ever;
Now at thy Cross I seek,
From all that's wrong to sever.

Dr. White impressed the solemnity of this appeal and declaration. Who was prepared to make a covenant of obedience with God, and to keep it by the help of heaven-bestowed power? It is by the small things of life that we show our attitude in this respect; and here especially we must be on our guard. Obedience is an essential condition of victorious living; disobedience explains the emptiness and poverty-stricken character of so many lives. The Master said plainly that our obedience was the proof of the measure of our love: "He that hath my commandments and doeth them, he it is that loveth Me." He went further, and promised peculiar blessings to such: "He shall be loved of my Father, and We will come and take up our abode with Him." Again, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life" (Rev. xxii. 14).

THE GOSPEL IN IRELAND.

The early morning prayer meeting on Monday was, according to custom, associated with the cause of the Gospel in Ireland. Captain Tottenham presided, and gave assurances that God has abundantly answered prayer offered on behalf of Ireland. The wide-open doors, and the story of many lives emancipated from Romanism, is a familiar tale. The audience included many who gave hearty assent to the thanksgiving uttered by several friends, including Professor Mackintosh, Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, Rev. M. Bradshaw, and Dr. White. Not only has God heard prayer, but the reports of workers in various parts of the land show that He is still answering it; and his revealed purpose, no less than his fidelity to promise, lights up the future of "the Isle of Saints."

THE OPENING MEETING.

Long before the hour for beginning the opening meeting in the tent on Monday evening, the approaches were crowded with friends who arrived only to find every seat occupied. It was therefore announced that overflow meetings, to be addressed by the Bishop of Mombasa and others, would be held both in the Pavilion and in the Drill Hall. Mr. Robert Wilson called for silent thanksgiving to God for his promised presence and blessing. This was followed by joyful song, and Dr. Elder Cumming led the assembly in prayer.

General Hatt Noble then read 1 Kings xviii., beginning at verse 30, and counselled full submission to the searching power of the Holy Ghost. Fervent supplication in the same sense came from the lips of Rev. Evan Hopkins, who asked of God, on behalf of all present, speedy preparation for personal blessing at the Convention. A telegram was read from Rev. Charles Inwood, in California, calling attention to Colossians ii. 5. The names of that absent brother and of Rev. George Wilson, who had just left the tent, were joined in affectionate remembrance before the Lord by Rev. Charles Fox, who then began his address. This had reference to the fact that the present occasion is Keswick's golden wedding, seeing she has now been indissolubly bound to her Lord these five-and-twenty years, in the promotion of that simplicity of faith which takes God at his word, in providence as well as in holiness, in spiritual power as in divine truth. Mr. Fox traced a remarkable parallel between the circumstances of the Convention and those recorded in Nehemiah ix., when, "in the twenty-fourth day of this month," the children of Israel were assembled to read in the book of the Law, to fast and to worship. It was no new thing to have gatherings for a whole week, and Scripture applies the phrase to four occasions. In 2 Chronicles xxx. 21, it is connected with praise—the sublimest occupation of man. Surely no body of Christians have more cause for praise than have Keswick attendants, seeing that the fame of our Lord has through these gatherings gone out into all lands. There would be more praise if we were quicker to discern daily mercies. It is the gratitude of the heart that God wants. Let us, therefore, give Him the praise, not only of the lip, but of the life. In Nehemiah viii. 18 the phrase is found again: that and other verses in the chapter remind us that God's Word is the appointed medium of communication between Himself and the soul. Every command of God in that Word is a covenanted possibility of power for man; for it is only the Word of the living God, made quick and powerful by the Holy Ghost, that can stay the disease of evil thought and desire. Moreover, is contained only in God's Holy Book—a gospel which brings a peaceful calm that conquers all shame and nervousness in speaking for God; and the thought that Jesus triumphs in me is sweeter than aught besides. Again, the Lord's Prayer teaches us to ask for our bread "day by day." Keswick is a mighty federation of prayer, joining our land to all others. Let there be fresh spiritual bread for the people through the continual searching of the Holy Book by Christ's ministering servants!

"DAY BY DAY"

THE GOSPEL OF REST AND VICTORY

The Church of God needs a revived passion for the conversion of souls, together with more of the faith that dares to do as well as to say, and dares to be as well as to do. The symbolism of Gideon's history is very instructive. Contact with the stainless fleece of the sinless Lamb shall drench us with the dew of the Holy Ghost; then shall that dew fall upon the ground, all around us, answering the Church's cry as to the evangelization of the world.

Let the two hands of faith wring out the covenant answer of God, and there shall be a bowl full of blessing for every believing soul. There is yet one more application of the phrase which concerns every child of God. (2 Cor. iv. 16.) The world may say that we are a dull, heavy, uninteresting, psalm-singing company of devotees; but God sees peace in our hearts, light in our eyes, and song on our lips. We may feel the wear of physical life; but our inward man is here being renewed day by day.

JOY IN OUR SOULS,

The early meeting for prayer on Tuesday morning proved an attraction to many. It was a cheering and inspiring sight to see the seats fill very rapidly, and at length the tent was comfortably full. Praise opened the hallowed time. Rev. C. Lea Wilson offered a petition of large expectation, and General Hatt-Noble joined with the audience in alternative reading of Psalm ciii., offering a few encouraging remarks to various classes of seeking souls, saved and unsaved. Praise, thanksgiving, and intercession were feelingly voiced by Revs. F. W. Ainley and H. B. Macartney, the latter exclaiming, "Lord, we are tired of our fruitless work; revive us again, and give us real and deep hunger for souls."

Rev. J. J. Luce spoke of the early morning as a good time for feeding upon Christ, the Living Bread, bringing the whole burnt-offering unto God, and hearing his searching, comforting, and instructing voice. God has much to say to us concerning prayer, and it is cheering to know that Christians are forming groups in their lodgings at Keswick for united supplication.

The programme of meetings seems as long as ever, and includes gatherings in the various buildings used in previous years—the Pavilion, the Drill Hall, the Lecture Hall, and the Victoria Hall. Some of these are sectional, and others for special purposes. There are meetings for ladies and young people, also for ministers.

The method followed in previous years of reading out requests for prayer has been in a general way superseded. It was felt that much time was absorbed in the rehearsal of objects which were in a large measure alike in essence; so this year, at the various meetings, an opportunity is afforded for all who have special desires to present them before the Lord during a season of silent prayer, with the consciousness that the assembled multitude is, "with one accord," making the many prayers one common concern, and presenting them as one united plea.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

"For His Sake."

TWO little children, Jessie and Willie, one bright June day were looking at the gardens they called their own.

They were tiny, for their home was very near London, but they tended them so carefully and watched eagerly for the flowers to bloom; but now little Jessie called her brother and showed him a geranium that looked as if, with all her care, it would not grow.

"Oh, Willie, I do wish you were a flower doctor, and could tell me what to do."

The little fellow looked puzzled, and said, "Well, I suppose we cannot give flowers medicine, but let us take it up and put it in a pot in the nursery window; we can watch it better, and give it plenty of 'love water,' that must be the best for flowers, and there the sun will seem to kiss it and make it grow."

Eager little fingers took up the flower and carried it to the nursery, the one room in the house in which the sun seemed almost always to shine.

Day after day they watched and tended it, and grew so fond of it, that it really began to thrive, for the drooping flower began to grow and tiny new shoots appear, then little buds, which in time burst into lovely flowers, and instead of the old sickly-looking geranium, it was one of beauty and full of blossoms; and the children's pleasure was to watch its unfolding.

One Sunday the minister spoke of a flower service to be held, and said, "Now, children, I don't want you to go home and ask your parents for money to buy a flower to bring; for, though they will be sent to poor sick people, they are really your gift to Jesus, so I want you to give something yourselves." These little children walked home thoughtfully, and then Willie said, "What shall we do, Jessie? I think it must be the 'love flower'"—for such they had grown to call it. "It is for Jesus, and we must give Him the best." "Yes," replied Jessie; "and I could not give that to anyone else. But He will know it is for Him, won't He?"

So when the day came for the service to be held, amongst the lovely offerings brought was Willie and Jessie's geranium; but first they had tied a tiny card on, with the words "Jesus loves."

On the next day all the flowers, with their little messages, were taken by some ladies to the hospital and placed by the bedside of the poor sick people, and many a one as they admired the flowers said, "Please read me the text on it." Oh! how their eyes brightened, and they seemed almost to forget their pain. One poor man, so very, very ill, as he held the flower in his hand and a lady spoke to him of Jesus Christ, said, "Oh! Jesus, and I love and trust Him, and am soon going to be with Him."

But some flowers went into a large children's ward; in one bed was a little boy just getting better, in another a little girl, who the nurse said was always so patient, and who had lain there for months, but could sing such pretty hymns.

There were other children just able to be up and walk about, and the nurse said, "Somehow they break their toys, but these flowers are an endless source of pleasure. While I water them the children come and watch and count the buds and notice the fresh leaves, and are always saying, 'Oh, look, nurse, here is another!' They seem just to like to watch them grow."

So Jessie's flower is now blooming in a hospital ward, and being tended, watered, and cared for just as lovingly as in their nursery, only it is speaking to some poor sick ones of Jesus and his love.

A. C. MINTER.

His Mother's Portrait.

AMONG many Manila stories in circulation is a very pretty one of that character which "makes the whole world kin." When the order to clear for action was given in Dewey's fleet on that memorable May morning in Manila Bay, one of the powder boys hastily took off his coat, which slipped from his hand into the water. In the inside pocket was a photograph of his mother. The boy had just been looking at it, had kissed it and restored it to what seemed to be a safe place. He asked permission to jump overboard and recover the coat, and, when he was forbidden to do this he went to the other side of the ship, leaped into the water, swam to the coat and saved it. For disobedience he was put in irons and held for punishment. Commodore Dewey wondered why he had risked his life and disobeyed orders for the sake of a coat, for the boy had said nothing about the photograph. In answer to the Commodore's kind questions, he disclosed his motive. The Commodore's eyes filled with tears and he clasped the boy in his arms. Orders were given that the little fellow should be released. "A boy who loves his mother enough to risk his life for her picture," said Dewey, "cannot be kept in irons on this fleet."

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 186).

BIBLE CLOCK.

Make a circle to represent a clock, mark off the hours from one to twelve, and taking the word TRUTH for one o'clock, find texts in which this word occurs, having two, three, four to twelve words to represent the hours. Chapter and verse must be given.

(Children under ten do any four; under thirteen any seven.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 185).

1. "They shall be called the children of God" (Matt. v. 9).
2. Barnabas (Acts ix. 27).
3. Naaman's (2 Kings v. 13).
4. Isaiah (ix. 6).
5. Jesus Christ (John xiv. 27).
6. "For He is our peace" (Eph. ii. 14).
7. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee: because he trusteth in Thee" (Isa. xxvi. 3).
8. "Seek peace, and pursue it" (Ps. xxxiv. 14).
9. "Peace be unto you" (John xx. 19).
10. "There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked" (Isa. xlviii. 22).

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Violet Ashworth*.

B—Leslie Bell, Florence and Lily Blackman, Gertrude Bush, Emily Bridgewater*, Ella Berryman*, Rose Butler, Edith and James Barker, Phyllis Boyd, Rachel and Esther Blumenthal, Violet Braun, William Berwick, Dorothy Batcher.

C—Daisy R. Clarke, Carl and Kitty* Cope, Anna Chanyen, Sophie Cohen, Susie Cumbers, G. Clarke, David* and John Colville, Mabel*, Edith* and Ida* Cole, Eleanor Chance, Lydia Cleary, K. Carey-Brenton, Mary Coward, Daisy M. Clarke, Rhoda Constantinides, Grace Charik.

D Lucy Davidson, Violet Dodsworth, Violet and Mai Davidson, Elsie, Catherine and Agnes Darke, Stanley Drew,* Ernest Davies*, Pelognia Daws*, Dorothy Daintree, Violet*, Ivy and Kitty Donaldson-Selby.

F—Fay Fausset, Mabel and Vincent Fleet, Sarah Finkelstein.

G—Bertie* and Clarice* Gale, Mary Gover, Alice Goad, Irene* and Kathleen* Gough, Constance Gabbett, Rose* and Esther Goodman, Elizabeth Gerechter, David Gardiner.*

H—M. Hill*, James Henderson, Willie Hooper, Jennie Holmes*, Muriel Hare, Beatrice Harland*, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewer, Lottie K. Hamilton, Ruth Hinder, Beatrice Hastings, Nellie Hatchett, Hetty Hill*, Betsy Holik.

I—Alice Ingberg.

J—Betty Jacobs, Emily Jones.

K—Eva, Stanley and Max Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Lily Kinvig*.

L—Cecilia* and Georgina Lichtenstein, Rosie Langton, Irene and Arthur Llewellyn, Blanche Lindup*, Sidney, May, Henry and Edward Law, Annie Lipschitz, Mary and Annie Levine.

M—Leslie Morris*, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, Hedley Meader, Lewis, O.L., Grace, and Arthur Morice, Kathleen* and Gracie McClure, Frances Munce, Mabel Morris*, Arabella Mainwaring, G.E.O., Winifred Marshall, Mildred Morgan, Emily Maddox*, Marie Meek.

N—Mary and H. Neligan, Eleanor and Valerie Noel, Amy and Maude Nottage, Dora and Leah Nicls.

P—Katie*, Walter and Leonard* Picknell, Lilian Pearson*, Mary Plumb*, Rhoda Partridge, Ethel* and Kathleen* Pasley, Ruth Pledger*, Kathleen Pincott, Hattie*, Mildred and Evelyn Peters, Daisy Pym, Laura Pratt, Gladys and Ethel Palmer, Hilda and Ernest Pearce*, Maxse and Gordon Pibel, Margherita Perlmann.

R—Gordon Remington, Kate Rosenbloom, Winifred Roberts, Maud* Rosenberg, Alice Reid. Marion Richards*.

S—Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Gertrude*, Constance and Mildred Scott, Douglas Stevens, Betty Stocks*, Eveline Steed*, Mary Sowden, Mary Seed*, Flora* and Esther Simmons, Solomon Stockfish, Fanny Stileman, Alan, D. and Mary* Symon, Joseph Stephens, Herbert Stuart*, Ronald Studd, Mary Seton-Karr, Dryll, Amy* and Fred Stileman, Kathleen* and Douglas* Shepherd, Dora and Lizzie Simons, Edith* and Bessie Shepherd.

T—Theodora Thorn*, Olive Tritton, Naomi Torf, Rachel Tuskinsky.

V—May Vickers*, Kenneth Vining*.

W—Edward, William, and Edith Wheeler, Robert and Thomas Weddell, Winifred Wise*, Agatha Ward, Douglas Wilkinson, Phillis, Noel, and Cecile Wright, Mabel Wild, Dorothy White, Annie* and Sarah* Wood, Florence Wild, Joanna and Louise Wolnitzer, Annie and Lucy Willis.

Z—Sophia Zascitsky.

No. 184.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Percy Allen, Enderby Anderson, Violet Ashworth*, Irene Ashdown.

B—Lilian Butler, Charlie and Alan Banks, Dorothy Berry, Dorothy, Maud, and Evelyn Barrett, J. Corbet Browne, Dorothy Butcher, Leslie and Jasper Bell, Lucienne Brabandes, Mary* and Susette* Beck, Phyllis Boyd, Gordon Bligh*, Rose Butler, Hannah Bridgman, Lily and Gordon Boxer, Lindsay and Leonard Browne, Ernestine Buhl, Leonard Bentall*, Allen Baker, Eva Browne*, Ashley Bowker*, Dorothy Benson.

C—Cicely and Millicent Craven, Alice Crang, Duncan Campbell*, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, Dorothy Clarke, Walter Carter*, Janie and Nellie Crawford, Mary Coward, Bessie Cheale, Adelina and Gussie Clark, Carl Cope, Ida Cole*, David Colville*, Henry Curr, Isabel*, Mabel*, and Charles* Candlin, Susie Cumbers, Lydia Cleary.

D—Constance Devenish-Meares, J. Davison, Marie Denisot, A. E. Davis, Jean* and Esther Dickson, Harold Davis, Ernest Davies, Ralph Daintree, Constance Drayson, Nellie Dowsett,* Marjory and Dorothy Dyke, Agnes Darke.

E—Miriam and Muriel Ecroyd, Maud Eddey, Muriel Edwards*.

